Another such is the long Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," which Dr. Munch played in its entirety here, for the first time, in 1953 and repeated a year later, also recording the work. For this week's concerts, the next-to-last of the season, Dr. Munch has elected to give "Romeo and Juliet" complete again—and with the expected results.

The orchestra was alternately a source of tender, glowing sonority and a cauldron of tumult. The sound was exceedingly rich, and the response to Dr. Munch's demands, he sometimes jumping a little into the air when the music aroused him to prodigies of stress, scintillating. The percussion section, especially, with the added tympani and the effects of tambourine and finger cymbals, greatly distinguished itself.

"Romeo and Juliet" asks a great deal, not only of an orchestra, but of chorus and soloists. The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by its regular conductor, Lorna Cooke de Varon, was superb in its assignment. The gradations of tone, flexibility of rhythm were all that could be asked, and furthermore the words in French came over with remarkable clarity.

The trio of soloists was unquestionably the best this review ever has heard in the work. As it happened, they are all members of that other great organization which is visiting us this week—the Metropolitan Opera. Rosalind Elias with her silken contralto voice of dark color, sang most affectingly, and with utmost musical comprehension and sensibility.

Cesare Valletti, the tenor, is also a musician of the first rank, as we have known from a variety of performances in opera, art song and with symphonic orchestra. The lines of Romeo, as he sang them, were robust but always polished never exaggerated either in style or dynamic values.

So, too, with the Friar Laurence of Giorgio Tozzi, whose fine and ample baritone never sounded better. His lines, also came over with as much clear communication upon tones lustrous and powerful.

After the concert, the press was informed of the retirement of Dr. Munch, at the end of next season, a news story which will be found elsewhere in this morning's Globe. This review, accordingly, is written in full realization that but one season remains to enjoy the French artistic qualities of Dr. Munch. He will be succeeded by a very fine artist, Erich Leinsdorf, whose qualities are proved. But I do hope that next season will be a "Berlioz" year.

New week Dr. Munch will end the 80th season with Mozart's Adagio and Fugue in C minor (K. 546) and Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat (K. 297B) with first desk wind players Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt and Stagliano as soloists; Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin," and "La Mer" by Debussy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447

APR 23 1961

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

Last week, we were fortunate enough to be present at two musical programs of unusual interest. The first of these occurred last Sunday afternoon, in Symphony Hall, where we attended the final concert of the Boston Symphony's Sunday afternoon series.

At the end of a season, orchestras sometimes tend to become listless and somewhat jaded in their playing. Happily, this was not so in Boston. We have never seen director Charles Munch walk with a springier step or conduct with more enthusiasm, and the orchestra seemed to be affected by his contagious elan.

The program included Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings in E Flat Major, Opus 20," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4." Although Schumann unhappily lacked sufficient instinct for the theater, his opera, "Genoveva," the tale of the daughter of the 13th-Century Duke of Brabant—a woman falsely accused of infidelity—had numerous performances in European opera houses in the 1870s and '80s. It has, however, rarely been performed in our century. The overture, though, is typically romantic, filled with both brooding and lively themes, and more complex in orchestration than most of Schumann's works.

EARL J. DIAS

In any event, Dr. Munch and his musicians played the work to the hilt—its romantic sonorities filling Symphony Hall with grateful and elegant sound.

Mendelssohn's "Octet," composed when he was only 16, shows no traces of youth, for it is a remarkable example of integrated musical craftsmanship. Utilizing the entire string section of the orchestra for the work, Dr. Munch's reading was particularly effective in the skipping scherzo (reminiscent of the same composer's incidental music for "A Midsummer Night's Dream") and in the melodious andante.

As for Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4," it marks a moment of calm and serenity between the "Eroica" and the powerful "Fifth." Berlioz called the "Fourth" by these terms—"generally lively, nimble, joyous, or of a heavenly sweetness." These qualities were underlined in the orchestra's performance—certainly a happy ending to a series of concerts that have provided Symphony Hall music lovers with a season of rewarding listening.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

APR 16 1961

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony today at 3:00 p.m. in the final concert of the Orchestra's Sunday Afternoon Series. The last concert of the Cambridge series will be given Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. The programs at both the Symphony Hall and Sanders Theater concerts will consist of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti, Giorgio Tozzi and the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Charles Munch and the orchestra in an open rehearsal of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" at Symphony Hall on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. The complete work will be performed at the concerts on Friday, at 2:15, and Saturday, at 8:30.

The closing concerts of the Orchestra's winter season will be given next week on Tuesday, April 25, and Friday-Saturday, April 28-29. The weekend program will have an open rehearsal on Thursday, Apr. 27.

TODAY

HANDEL AND HAYDEN SOCIETY, Symphony Hall, Edward Gilday conducting Dvorak's "Stabat Mater," 8:00 p.m. Soloists, Nancy Carr, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Paul Knowles, tenor; Robert Patterson, bass. Tickets at box office.

CAMBRIDGE CIVIC SYMPHONY, Victor Manusevitch, conductor, Sanders Theater, 8:30 p.m. Mozart, Bavicchi premiere, Schumann, Barber.

DIANA BEVERIDGE, soprano, with Daniel Saporchetti, trumpet, assisted by choir, organ and string quintet, Second Church in Boston, Unitarian, 5:00 p.m. Bach Cantata, Mozart and early music.

BOSTON COLLEGE GLEE CLUB, C. Alexander Peloquin, director, concert sponsored by Sacred Heart Parish Committee to aid in establishing the Greg Kelly Memorial Scholarship Fund. 8:30 p.m.

A CAPPELLA CHOIR of the N. E. Conservatory, Richard Rosewall, director, 3:30 p.m. Purcell, Byrd, Schubert, Vaughan Williams, Thompson, Martinu. Admission free.

ROCKINGHAM CHORAL SOCIETY, John D. Wicks, conductor, Talbot Gymnasium, Exeter (N. H.) High School, 8:15 p.m. Karl Legge, soprano; Margery Johns and Marion Craig, duo-pianists.

MONDAY

FRANK KNEISEL, violinist, assisted by Myron Press, pianist, B.U. Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30 p.m. Varied program. Admission free.

TUESDAY

VOCAL CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Program of early Renaissance, Baroque, and recent contemporary music. Dorothy Renzi, soprano; Lee Steelman, flute; Louis Visco, clarinet; Laurance Lesser, cello; Roslyn Brogue Henning, harpsichord and piano. Works by Machaut, Wolkenstein, Monteverdi, Bach, Miss Brogue, Lester Trimble, Copland, Ravel. Tickets at box office.

MET OPERA STUDIO presents Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutti," under auspices of the Boston University Arts Center, Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue. Tickets at door, 2:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

CHAMBER MUSIC, Jordan Hall, works for wind instruments, directed by Sherman Friedland, by N. E. Conservatory students. Mozart, Jerome Rosen premiere, Fromm, Amin Schibler U. S. premiere. Admission free. 8:30 p.m.

THURSDAY

B. U. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Marvin Rabin, conductor, Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue. Guest student soloists chosen by competition. Admission free. 8:30 p.m.

FRIDAY

PRUDENCISCA BICKUS, soprano, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Presented by Baltic American Society of New England on Baltic Concert Series. Tickets at door.

SATURDAY

MANUEL ZYMELMAN, tenor, accompanied by William D. Brohn, Northeastern University Alumni Auditorium. Varied program. 8:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513

APR 15 1961

Munch to Conduct

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at 3 p. m. in the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Sunday afternoon series. The last concert of the Cambridge series will be given Tuesday at 8:30 p. m.

The program at both the Symphony Hall and Sanders Theater concerts will consist of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti, Giorgio Tozzi and the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Dr. Munch and the orchester in an open rehearsal of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" at Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p. m. The complete work will be performed at the orchestra's concerts on Friday, at 2:15 p. m., and Saturday, at 8:30.

The closing concerts of the orchestra's winter season will be given on Tuesday, April 25, and Friday-Saturday, April 28-29, and the weekend program will have an open rehearsal on Thursday, April 27.

210

Twenty-third Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 21, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 22, at 8:30 o'clock

BERLIOZ . . . . . *Roméo et Juliette, Dramatic Symphony, Op. 17

Introduction: Combats — Tumult — Intervention of the Prince
Prologue (Choral Recitative with Contralto Solo)
Strophes (Contralto and Chorus)
Recitative and Scherzetto (Tenor and Chorus)

Romeo Alone — Melancholy — Concert and Ball — Festivity at the Capulets

Calm Night (with Chorus) — The Capulets' Garden Silent and Deserted — Love Scene

Scherzo: Queen Mab, or the Fairy of Dreams

INTERMISSION

Juliet's Funeral Procession (with Chorus)
Romeo in the Tomb of the Capulets: Invocation — Juliet's Awakening — Delirium of Joy — Despair — Pangs of Death
Finale: Cemetery Throng — Brawl of the Capulets and Montagues — Recitative and Aria of Friar Laurence — Oath of Reconciliation

Soloists:

ROSALIND ELIAS, Contralto — CESARE VALLETTI, Tenor — GIORGIO TOZZI, Baritone

NEW ENGLAND CONSERVATORY CHORUS
LORNA COOKE DE VARON, Conductor

These concerts will end about 4:15 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:30 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
APR 22 1961

Munch Conducts Berlioz 'Romeo and Juliet'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 23rd program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted the entire Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," by Hector Berlioz. The soloists were Rosalind Elias, contralto; Cesare Valletti, tenor, and Giorgio Tozzi, baritone. The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by Lorna Cooke de Varon, assisted.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Of all the great conducting Dr. Charles Munch has accomplished in Boston—and there has been much of it — the music of Hector Berlioz, his countryman of a century and more ago, has aroused him to unparalleled brilliance. The vast and formidable Requiem, the "Fantastic" Symphony, "The Damnation of Faust," the Overtures and other works have in the last dozen years excited and profoundly satisfied the Boston public.

Another such is the long Dramatic Symphony, "Romeo and Juliet," which Dr. Munch played in its entirety here, for the first time, in 1953 and repeated a year later, also recording the work. For this week's concerts, the next-to-last of the season, Dr. Munch has elected to give "Romeo and Juliet" complete again—and with the expected results.

The orchestra was alternately a source of tender, glowing sonority and a cauldron of tumult. The sound was exceedingly rich, and the response to Dr. Munch's demands, he sometimes jumping a little into the air when the music aroused him to prodigies of stress, scintillating. The percussion section, especially, with the added tympani and the effects of tambourine and finger cymbals, greatly distinguished itself.

"Romeo and Juliet" asks a great deal, not only of an orchestra, but of chorus and soloists. The New England Conservatory Chorus, prepared by its regular conductor, Lorna Cooke de Varon, was superb in its assignment. The gradations of tone, flexibility of rhythm were all that could be asked, and furthermore the words in French came over with remarkable clarity.

The trio of soloists was unquestionably the best this review ever has heard in the work. As it happened, they are all members of that other great organization which is visiting us this week—the Metropolitan Opera. Rosalind Elias with her silken contralto voice of dark color, sang most affectingly, and with utmost musical comprehension and sensibility.

Cesare Valletti, the tenor, is also a musician of the firs rank, as we have known fron a variety of performances i opera, art song and with sym phonic orchestra. The lines o Romeo, as he sang them, wer robust but always polished never exaggerated either i style or dynamic values.

So, too, with the Friar Lau rence of Giorgio Tozzi, whos fine and ample baritone neve sounded better. His lines, alsc came over with as much clea communication upon tones lus trous and powerful.

After the concert, the pres was informed of the retire ment of Dr. Munch, at th end of next season, a new story which will be foun elsewhere in this morning' Globe. This review, accordingly, is written in full realization that but one season remains to enjoy the French artistic qualities of Dr. Munch He will be succeeded by a very fine artist, Erich Leinsdorf, whose qualities are proved. But I do hope that next season will be a "Berlioz" year.

New week Dr. Munch wil end the 80th season with Mo zart's Adagio and Fugue in minor (K. 546) and Sinfoni Concertante in E-flat (K. 297 B) with first desk wind player Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt ar Stagliano as soloists; Ravel' "Le Tombeau de Couperin, and "La Mer" by Debussy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447
APR 23 1961

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

Last week, we were fortunate enough to be present at two musical programs of unusual interest. The first of these occurred last Sunday afternoon, in Symphony Hall, where we attended the final concert of the Boston Symphony's Sunday afternoon series.

At the end of a season, orchestras sometimes tend to become listless and somewhat jaded in their playing. Happily, this was not so in Boston. We have never seen director Charles Munch walk with a springier step or conduct with more enthusiasm, and the orchestra seemed to be affected by his contagious elan.

The program included Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings in E Flat Major, Opus 20," and Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4." Although Schumann unhappily lacked sufficient instinct for the theater, his opera, "Genoveva," the tale of the daughter of the 13th-Century Duke of Brabant—a woman falsely accused of infidelity—had numerous performances in European opera houses in the 1870s and '80s. It has, however, rarely been performed in our century. The overture, though, is typically romantic, filled with both brooding and lively themes, and more complex in orchestration than most of Schumann's works.

EARL J. DIAZ

In any event, Dr. Munch and his musicians played the work to the hilt—its romantic sonorities filling Symphony Hall with grateful and elegant sound.

Mendelssohn's "Octet," composed when he was only 16, shows no trace of youth, for it is a remarkable example of integrated musical craftsmanship. Utilizing the entire string section of the orchestra for the work, Dr. Munch's reading was particularly effective in the skipping scherzo (reminiscent of the same composer's incidental music for "A Midsummer Night's Dream") and in the melodious andante.

As for Beethoven's "Symphony No. 4," it marks a moment of calm and serenity between the "Eroica" and the powerful "Fifth." Berlioz called the "Fourth" by these terms—"generally lively, nimble, joyous, or of a heavenly sweetness." These qualities were underlined in the orchestra's performance—certainly a happy ending to a series of concerts that have provided Symphony

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
APR 16 1961

Music Events This Week

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony today at 3:00 p.m. in the final concert of the Orchestra's Sunday Afternoon Series. The last concert of the Cambridge series will be given Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. The programs at both the Symphony Hall and Sanders Theater concerts will consist of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti, Giorgio Tozzi and the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Charles Munch and the orchestra in an open rehearsal of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" at Symphony Hall on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. The complete work will be performed at the concerts on Friday, at 2:15, and Saturday, at 8:30.

The closing concerts of the Orchestra's winter season will be given next week on Tuesday, April 25, and Friday-Saturday, April 28-29. The weekend program will have an open rehearsal on Thursday, Apr. 27.

TODAY

HANDEL AND HAYDEN SOCIETY, Symphony Hall, Edward Gilday conducting Dvorak's "Stabat Mater," 8:00 p.m. Soloists, Nancy Carr, soprano; Eunice Alberts, contralto; Paul Knowles, tenor; Robert Patterson, bass. Tickets at box office.

CAMBRIDGE CIVIC SYMPHONY, Victor Manusevitch, conductor, Sanders Theater, 8:30 p.m. Mozart, Bevicchi premiere, Schumann, Barber.

DIANA BEVERIDGE, soprano, with Daniel Sapochetti, trumpet, assisted by choir, organ and string quintet. Second Church in Boston, Unitarian, 5:00 p.m. Bach cantata, Mozart and early music.

BOSTON COLLEGE GLEE CLUB, C. Alexander Peloquin, director, concert sponsored by Sacred Heart Parish Committee to aid in establishing the Grace Kelly Memorial Scholarship Fund. 8:30 p.m.

A CAPPELLA CHOIR of the N. E. Conservatory, Richard Rosewall, director, 3:30 p.m. Purcell, Byrd, Schubert, Vaughan Williams, Thompson, Martinu. Admission free.

ROCKINGHAM CHORAL SOCIETY, John D. Wicks, conductor, Talbot Gymnasium, Exeter (N. H.) High School, 3:15 p.m. Karl Legge, soprano; Margery Johns and Marion Craig, duo-pianists.

MONDAY

FRANK KNEISEL, violinist, assisted by Myron Press, pianist, B.U. Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30 p.m. Varied program. Admission free.

TUESDAY

VOCAL CHAMBER MUSIC SOCIETY, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Program of early Renaissance, Baroque, and recent contemporary music. Dorothy Renzi, soprano; Lee Steelman, flute; Louis Visco, clarinet; Laurence Lesser, cello; Roslyn Brogue Henning, harpsichord and piano. Works by Machaut, Wolkenstein, Monteverdi, Bach, Miss Brogue, Lester Trimble, Copland, Ravel. Tickets at box office.

MET OPERA STUDIO presents Mozart's "Cosi Fan Tutti," under auspices of the Boston University Arts Center, Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue. Tickets at door, 2:30 p.m.

WEDNESDAY

CHAMBER MUSIC, Jordan Hall, works for wind instruments, directed by Sherman Friedland, by N. E. Conservatory students. Mozart, Jerome Rosen premiere, Fromm, Amin Schibler U. S. premiere. Admission free. 8:30 p.m.

THURSDAY

B. U. SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Maryn Rabin, conductor, Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue. Guest student soloists chosen by competition. Admission free. 8:30 p.m.

FRIDAY

PRUDENCISCA BICKUS, soprano, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Presented by Baltic American Society of New England on Baltic Concert Series. Tickets at door.

SATURDAY

MANUEL ZYMELMAN, tenor, accompanied by William D. Bronn, Northeastern University Alumni Auditorium. Varied program. 8:30 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
APR 15 1961

Munch to Conduct

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow at 3 p. m. in the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Sunday afternoon series. The last concert of the Cambridge series will be given Tuesday at 8:30 p. m.

The program at both the Symphony Hall and Sanders Theater concerts will consist of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti, Giorgio Tozzi and the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Dr. Munch and the orchester in an open rehearsal of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" at Symphony Hall, Thursday at 7:30, p. m. The complete work will be performed at the orchestra's concerts on Friday, at 2:15 p. m., and Saturday, at 8:30.

The closing concerts of the orchestra's winter season will be given on Tuesday, April 25, and Friday-Saturday, April 28-29, and the weekend program will have an open rehearsal on Thursday, April 27.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
APR 27 1961

MUSIC IN REVIEW

By GERALD A. BERLIN

BSO: BERLIOZ "ROMEO AND JULIET"

The impending retirement of Mr. Munch brings once again to mind the place of Berlioz here on Boston Symphony programs. Prior to Mr. Munch's coming, the name Berlioz signified little else but the Symphonie Fantastique, Harold in Italy, a few excerpts from the Damnation of Faust and the Roman Carnival Overture. Then in 1953 Mr. Munch both enchanted and moved the community with the first performance of Romeo and Juliet, which was followed in fairly short order by the Damnation of Faust, the Requiem, L'Enfance du Christ and even the Nuits d'Ete. I doubt it even yet, however, many here appreciate the richness of this legacy or will apprehend their loss in the likely event that it disappears with Mr. Munch.

In any case, these thoughts were very much in my mind when, for the third time he mounted Romeo and Juliet last week-end. The work is not so commonplace yet that a resume and commentary on its structure are superfluous. It is called a dramatic symphony, but, as Berlioz himself took pains to point out, "it is neither an opera in concert form nor a cantata, but a symphony with chorus". Its scheme, typically, is unprecedented and very personal — utterly unlike the choral symphony written by Beethoven to the classical pattern. There are four movements. In the first a symphonic introduction depicts the quarrels of the Montagues and the Capulets. Thereupon a small chorus narrates the tale of the tragedy while the orchestra states themes subsequently to the developed symphonically. This movement is completed by the "Fete" section depicting the ball at the Capulet palace.

The heart of this gigantic symphony is the magnificent Love Scene, which corresponds to the slow movement and the famous "Queen Mab" Scherzo. In the Love Scene the orchestra replaces the lover's voices in an unbroken song of ardor and desire that surely must constitute one of the most sublime evocations of the bittersweet of young love in the entire musical literature. The Scherzo finds Berlioz' orchestral virtuosity depicted at its very zenith. The last movement is the Finale, which comprises the second half of the piece. It is about half as long as the first three movements. Here there are three choruses, sometimes opposed, sometimes united; and the solo vocal line consists chiefly of long perorations by Friar Lawrence.

Like most of everything else that Berlioz wrote, Romeo and Juliet is extremely uneven. Despite the poignancy of the Funeral Music section, the second half is by no means the equal of the first. Friar Lawrence is nothing if not prolix; there must be five times as much for him to sing as for Romeo and Juliet combined. It is probably fair to say that had the Finale met the argument that preceded it, Romeo and Juliet would rest in the annals as one long paean to unrelieved genius. As with nearly all great prototypes — the debts to it of Wagner, Mahler and Gounod in general and specifically are unmistakable — it retains in essence unique unto itself which no subsequent emulation has ever quite succeeded in appropriating.

From the very beginning it was apparent that this was going to be a memorable occasion. The forces were superb and included the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lora Cooke de Varon, conductor, Rosalind Elias, contralto, Cesare Valletti, tenor, Giorgio Tozzi, baritone — the latter three all from the Metropolitan Opera Company. Purity of tone, clarity of diction and control of attacks and dynamics marked the singing of the Conservatory people. It was yet another in a long series of distinguished Symphony Hall appearances for this ensemble. Miss Elias and Mr. Valletti may have had a minimum amount of work to do but displayed unmistakable beauty of voice and impeccability of technique in carrying out their assignments. As for Mr. Tozzi, he succeeded in making Friar Lawrence over from a windy bore into a consistently interesting and sometimes even arresting figure, which is no mean alchemy. And finally there was Mr. Munch, who yet again demonstrated his mastery with Berlioz and who was the catalyst in bringing off a powerful and exciting performance.

This week-end's concert is the last of the season. Mr. Munch will conduct works of Mozart, Ravel and Debussy.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 22 1961

The Symphony

"Romeo and Juliet" A Notable Event

By ROBERT TAYLOR

It was not the dramatic secret of Charles Munch's retirement a year hence that made yesterday's Symphony concert an eloquent event. More simply, he conducts the music of Berlioz better than anyone in the world.

Dr. Munch knew that he was about to disclose his forthcoming retirement from his post, which casts a veil of sadness around the concert in retrospect. Yet this did not wholly account for the fire, passion and beauty with which he unfolded the complete "Romeo and Juliet." For the first time, too, in dealing with the colossal score he knows so intimately, he had real voices at his disposal.

They were Rosalind Elias, contralto, Cecare Valletti, tenor, and Giorgio Tozzi, baritone. On the previous two occasions in which the musical metaphor of Shakespeare's tragedy was mounted here, the soloists were musical, but lacking in the tessitura, the richness and expressivity of these artists from the Metropolitan Opera.

Less Extensive

Actually, the solo roles are less extensive in the vocal symphony than either the instrumental element (the BSO responded superbly) or the choral (the New England Conservatory Chorus, drilled to a point of keen lyric discipline by Lorna Cooke deVaron, showed a silver clarity of texture in its reduced scale during the first half, and an impressive sonority during the massed strength of the funeral music). But the solo voices are vital to the entire scheme.

Cesare Valletti, the tenor, has little to do, for instance, considering the total architecture. The Queen Mab aria, however, must be sung with extreme and fastidious artistry in order to convey the crystalline delicacy of its pictorial images. That Mr. Valletti was willing to undertake such a subordinate part, make a flawless cameo out of it, and contribute mightily to the refinement and grace of this pre-Impressionist segment, speaks volumes for his imaginative talents.

Sombre Grandeur

The work of Miss Elias and of Mr. Tozzi, who had more extensive opportunities, was no less compelling. The opulence of her tone and the crisp intelligence of her phrasing provided a thrilling vocal experience; and as for Mr. Tozzi I am easily persuaded he is the finest baritone we have. His Friar Laurence was resonant, soaring, and inspired by a complete knowledge of the textual demands; and one never lost a French vowel or ceased to admire his fluency, his projection, the sombre grandeur of his tonal weight and thrust.

I should like to commend the chorus at greater length for their precision and for their dynamic range as well as their texture. This, however, was Charles Munch's afternoon, his the conception, his the shaping force. To the instrumental balance he brought unerring precision, to the musical dimensions the vigor and logic of coherent proportions and tempos, and to the detail structure of the work, a wealth of inner voices and shadings. He endowed "Romeo and Juliet" with rare emotion—Cette poesie, elle - meme, Dont Shakespeare lui soul eut si secret supreme. Not only Shakespeare hold the supreme secret, but Dr. Munch yesterday — the secret of the transcendent Berlioz music.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting, offered the 23rd program of the 80th season at Symphony Hall yesterday. Rosalind Elias, contralto, Cesare Valletti, tenor, Giorgio Tozzi, baritone, were the soloists. The New England Conservatory Chorus was prepared under the direction of Lorna Cooke de Varon. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30:

Romeo et Juliette, Dramatic Symphony, Op. 17 ..... Berlioz

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
APR 16 1961

Berlioz 'Romeo And Juliet' By Symphony

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra today at 3 p.m. in the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Sunday afternoon series. The last concert of the Cambridge series will be given Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. The program for both will consist of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn, and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti, Giorgio Tozzi and the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Dr. Munch and the Orchestra in an Open Rehearsal of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" at Symphony Hall Thursday at 7:30 p.m. The complete work will be performed at the Orchestra's concerts Friday at 2:15, and Saturday at 8:30.

The closing concerts of the Orchestra's Winter season will be given Tuesday, Apr. 25, and Friday-Saturday, Apr. 28-29. The week-end program will have an Open Rehearsal Thursday, Apr. 27.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
APR 22 1961

Music

Need of Another Open Symphony Rehearsal

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — We can think of no better reason for the Boston Symphony orchestra adding an extra open rehearsal to the regular season list than that of Thursday evening, which brought to a near capacity house, Hector Berlioz's dramatic symphony "Romeo and Juliet."

Dr. Charles Munch and his artistically armed cohorts were superbly supported by three well-voiced members from the Metropolitan opera company and the New England Conservatory chorus. The singers who were the soloists included Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valetti, tenor, and Giorgio Tozzi, bass.

Giorgio Tozzi

One noted musicalogist claims that the Berlioz is a sadly neglected piece of music. Following Thursday's performance we feel that such a statement was far under emphasized. The Romeo and Juliet, if anything, is a masterpiece of both vocal and instrumental writing.

The orchestra was all to the good. The individual sections performed with yeoman service and if this were not enough, provided the assisting vocalists with an accompaniment of the highest order.

Miss Elias is well suited to this music. It rests within the contralto, a section of the voice register that actually favors her.

Mr. Valetti provided a sound musicianship and a pleasing vocal effect. His is one of the fine tenor voices of present day opera.

ACTUALLY, vocal honors went to Mr. Tozzi, who is not only a magnificent singer but a musician of remarkable gift. His singing of the Friar Laurence passages provided a performance of near brilliance.

The large chorus failed to enjoy its customary success. It would have been more in keeping if the ensemble had endeavored to provide the conductor not only with complete attention, but with sufficient musical basics to assure the presentation a full medium of expression. It was also unfortunate that the element of sound vocal structure was absent. This medium is fundamental and one that by this time every member of the chorus should adhere to by instinct.

The coming production of "Kiss Me Kate" to be presented in May at Lowell State college by the MENC should provide a real tops in light entertainment. The production is well under way and the affair has much promise.

However, as a final note, it seems that the music department at the college should encourage the performance of works of classic mein and those writings that produce musicians of delicate nature and gracious as well as authoritative understanding.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076
APR 13 1961

COOPERATION: Last summer, Charles Munch decided he wanted to do the complete Berlioz "Romeo and Juliet" with the Boston Symphony this season. He also decided that the singers he wanted were Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti and Giorgio Tozzi. They were willing to sing, but when the orchestra's management set about trying to engage them, it had difficulties getting them all at the same time.

Starting in October, there was one snag after another. But someone realized that in the week of April 16 all three would be in Boston, because that is when the Metropolitan Opera will be here for its annual spring visit. Rudolf Bing, when he heard of the orchestra's previous difficulties, agreed to help out. He will see that the three singers are not cast in operatic performances the nights of April 21 and 22, so they will be free to sing with the orchestra.

Pneum Theater

BSO Open Rehearsal Schedule Changed

The Boston Symphony Orchestra Open Rehearsal originally scheduled for this evening has been changed to Thursday evening April 20 at 7:30 p.m. Unreserved seats are available at the box office prior to the rehearsal.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
APR 13 1961

Open Rehearsal Thursday, Apr. 20

There will not be an Open Rehearsal by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Symphony Hall tonight. The next Open Rehearsal will be Thursday, Apr. 20, at 7:30 p.m. Dr. Charles Munch then will rehearse Berlioz' dramatic symphony, "Romeo and Juliet."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012
APR 14 1961

MUNCH TO CONDUCT FINAL CONCERTS

Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the final concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Sunday afternoon series, Sunday. The last concert of the Cambridge series will be given Tuesday (April 18) at 8:30 p. m. The programs at both the Symphony Hall and Sanders Theater concerts will consist of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti, Giorgio Tozzi and the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Charles Munch and the orchestra in an open rehearsal of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" at Symphony Hall Thursday (April 20, 1:30 p. m.).

...ding Best Picture, at last ...n's San Francisco Film Fes... Hannes Messemer, who co... with de Sica, received a ... homage award at Venice ...

...Boston Symphony today at 3:00 p.m. in the final concert of the Orchestra's Sunday Afternoon Series. The last concert of the Cambridge series will be given Tuesday at 8:30 p.m. The programs at both the Symphony Hall and Sanders Theater concerts will consist of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti, Giorgio Tozzi and the New England Conservatory Chorus will join Charles Munch and the orchestra in an Open Rehearsal of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" at Symphony Hall on Thursday at 7:30 p.m. The complete work will be performed at the concerts on Friday, at 2:15, and Saturday, at 8:30.

The closing concerts of the Orchestra's winter season will be given next week on Tuesday, April 25, and Friday-Saturday, April 28-29. The weekend program will have an open rehearsal on Thursday, Apr. 27.

...duct

...ston Symphony ...final concert ...

...winter season will ... Tuesday, April 25, ... Saturday, April 28-... weekend program ... an open rehearsal on April 27.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Cir. 256,267
APR 2 2 1961

212

Munch Condu

Elias, Valleti, and Tozzi Heard as Berlioz Soloists

By Harold Rogers

It would be difficult to imagine Charles Munch's state of mind as he conducted Berlioz' "Romeo et Juliette" yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. He knew, as almost all his listeners did not, that a press conference had been scheduled in the conductor's room immediately after the concert. He knew that his retirement —and his successor—would be announced at that time.

His reasons for desiring to retire at the end of next season, as later explained to Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, were due to his age and his feeling that he could no longer sustain the heavy schedule to which the music director of the Boston Symphony is committed. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf. Complete details will be found in the story on Page 2.

Now that we are in possession of these facts, we can more easily understand why the "Romeo et Juliette" of yesterday did not measure up to Dr. Munch's performance of 1953 and 1954. It was as if we were seeing it reflected in a pool over which a breeze was playing just lightly enough to blur the outlines from time to time. Even when the image became crystalline, as it often did, it was still a reflection.

The New England Conservatory Chorus, oddly enough, was not always the precise body of singers that we have enjoyed in the past. Insufficient rehearsal may be the answer here. But if the true reasons were known, they might well embrace the possibility that Dr. Munch's attention was deflected by the imminent announcement of his retirement.

Three superb singers appeared in the solo roles, however — Rosalind Elias (who first sang with the Boston Symphony while she was still a student at the New England Conservatory); Cesare Valletti (who had far too little to do in this Berlioz score); and Giorgio Tozzi (whose characterization of Friar Laurence was truly magnificent.)

Afterward in the conductor's room Dr. Munch, 69, and Mr. Leinsdorf, 49, embraced in wordless emotion. The news of Dr. Munch's retirement is mitigated only partly by the fact that we will have him with us at least one more year.

BLANK PAGE

Ninth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 25, at 8:30 o'clock

MENDELSSOHN ..... Octet for Strings, in E-flat, Op. 20

I. Allegro moderato ma con fuoco
II. Andante
III. Scherzo: Allegro leggierissimo
IV. Presto

PAGANINI ..... Violin Concerto in D major
(Transcribed by Fritz Kreisler)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN ..... Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

SOLOIST
NOAH BIELSKI

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246

APR 26 1961

Violin Soloist Bielski In Brilliant Performance

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under direction of Charles Munch, gave a concert last night at Symphony Hall. The program: Octet for Strings, in E-flat, Op. 20, Mendelssohn; Violin Concerto in D major (Transcribed by Fritz Kreisler), Paganini, with Noah Bielski as soloist; and the Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, Op. 60, Beethoven.

By KEVIN KELLY

With Dr. Munch on the podium and Noah Bielski as soloist, the Boston Symphony gave a brilliant performance last night of the Paganini Violin Concerto in D Major as transcribed by Fritz Kreisler.

Despite the textural exposition by the orchestra, the focus of attention in this difficult concerto belongs to the soloist and Bielski was no less than extraordinary. He played the concerto with an unrelenting belief in its worth, with a continuous display of musicianship that unravelled the complexities and projected the entire work with suave, unflurried bowing.

Bielski, a member of the orchestra since 1955, is an unerring musician. His tone has solidity and sweetness; his finger work is deft; and the intonation of his instrument is truly beautiful. The fiendish edge of Paganini, who seemed to hope that no musician ever would be able to match his own technical display as a violinist, gives no apparent trouble to Bielski. He went through the fearsome cadenza with stunning skill, untroubled by double stops and commanding everything before him in a note-perfect interpretation.

The orchestral accompaniment was clean, wtih considerable imagination in dynamic and phrasing. Dr. Munch gave it clarity and depth and the sound was big and impressive.

The concert opened with Mendelssohn's Octet for strings, which gave ample testimony to the finely-meshed playing of the orchestra's strings, and it closed with the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven in a strongly accented yet beautifully proportioned performance.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

APR 23 1961

Music Events This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 80th season will conclude this week. Concerts are scheduled for Tuesday evening at 8:30, Friday afternoon at 2:15, Saturday evening at 8:30. An open rehearsal will be held on Thursday evening at 7:30.

Charles Munch has invited Noah Bielski to be soloist at the Tuesday concert in a performance of Paganini's Violin Concerto in D major. Mr. Bielski, a member of the orchestra since 1955, studied at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, with Efrem Zimbalist, and has been soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra. The concert will also include Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings" and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven.

Doctor Munch will conduct Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin" rather than the originally announced "Printemps" by Debussy at the Friday-Saturday concerts. The concerts, which will have an open rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, will include Mozart's Adagio and Fugue for Strings and his Sinfonia Concertante in which Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano, all first desk men of the orchestra, will be soloists, plus Debussy's "La Mer."

TODAY

ANDRES SEGOVIA, guitar, Jordan Hall, 3:30 p.m., presented by Aaron Richmond. Program includes Milan, de Visee, Sor, Bach, Haydn Mendelssohn, Albeniz, folk arrangements. Remaining seats at box office.

FINE ARTS CHAMBER ORCHESTRA, Eleftherios Eleftheriakis, conductor, Cary Hall, Lexington, 8:30 p.m. On Boston Arts Festival Community Series. Admission free.

VESPER CONCERT with Wellesley College Choir and Yale University Apollo Glee Club, Houghton Memorial Chapel, Wellesley campus, 8:00 p.m. Mozart's Requiem Mass in D minor.

CHARLES MAGNANTE, accordionist, Somerset Hotel, 1:45 p.m. Followed by workshop for students and teachers.

TUESDAY

B.U. GLEE CLUB, James R. Houghton, conductor, with Seminary Singers of School of Theology, Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

DOWELL MCNEIL, organist, St. Mary's Church, Cambridge, 8:00 p.m. Assisted by brass and percussion for Kag-Elert Trilogy. Public invited.

WEDNESDAY

GREAT MUSIC SERIES continues with Allen Lannom, illustrated lecture, Brahms choral works. Room 12, B. U. College of Liberal Arts, 7:15 p.m. Public invited.

CLAUDE HILL, harpist, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Presented by N. E. Conservatory. Admission free.

LUDWIG BERGMANN directs vocal repertoire recital with B. U. School of Fine and Applied Arts students. Concert Hall, 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

THURSDAY

QUINCY SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Armand Vorce, conductor, North Quincy High School, 8:30 p.m. Mahler Ibert, Dvorak. Frances Trisorio, contralto soloist. Admission free.

BEAUX ARTS TRIO of New York, Newton High School auditorium, 8:30 p.m. Season's finale for Newton Community Concerts Association.

FRIDAY

HARVARD GLEE CLUB, RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY, Elliot Forbes, conductor, Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 8:30 p.m. Annual Spring concert, Tallis, Schutz, Stravinsky, Schumann, Forbes, Crawford, Sessions. Tickets Harvard Coop, or KI 7-4115.

SATURDAY

VIOLIN-PIANO RECITAL with Dorothy Bales and Gregory Tucker, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Brahms, Debussy and Mr. Tucker's Suite No. 1 in Boston premiere. Felix Viscuglia clarinet, assisting in Bartok "Contrasts." Tickets at box office.

Sternberg Named

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076

APR 26 1961

MUSIC

Amazing Pyrotechnics In Paganini Concerto

By JULES WOLFFERS

Once again Charles Munch threw the spotlight on one of his players when he brought Noah Bielski forward last night in the Paganini Violin Concerto for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's season finale of the Tuesday evening Series at Symphony Hall.

With pardonable pride and, no doubt, as a stimulus, Mr. Munch has frequently drawn soloists from his ranks for the Friday-Saturday series and the Berkshire concerts in addition to the Tuesday programs.

Mr. Bielski showed that he deserved the honor by his technical proficiency in Fritz Kreisler's reworking of the Concerto with which the composer was wont to beat his hearers into stupefied submission.

And perhaps by the very nature of the work Mr. Bielski approximated the same result. He negotiated the difficult leaps with ease, dazzled with the speed of his scales, double-stopped with gymnastic ability, and used his bow with the rapier-like speed and surety of a master technician. In other words it was a brilliant pyrotechnic display and who doesn't like some fireworks now and then?

Emerges Unscathed

Having chosen the Paganini, the soloist committed himself to exactly this type of performance and effect. It is greatly to his credit that he emerged comparatively unscathed on the other side bearing the even more difficult cadenza, so to speak, triumphantly in his teeth.

With so much physical effort and musical tightrope walking at play it is not surprising that the intonation was occasionally less than perfect or that a few notes became dispersed in the general din and bustle. Nor was it surprising that the tone became scratchy once or twice.

Actually, I suppose, we should look upon the Paganini as a piece of well-sounding musical juggiery with some slower parts mixed in for contrast. From this point of view it's fun to listen to and it must be fun to do—for those who can do it.

As usual, Mr. Munch, master accompanist that he is, provided encouraging and sympathetic orchestral assistance and the players responded in full measure.

Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and the Beethoven Symphony No. 4, both heard at recent Friday-Saturday concerts, provided the rest of the fare for a receptive audience.

THE PROGRAM

The ninth and final program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday Evening Series this season was presented at Symphony Hall last night. Noah Bielski was violin soloist. Charles Munch conducted the following program:

Octet for Strings, in E-flat, Op. 20 ..... Mendelssohn
Violin Concerto in D Major (Transcribed by Fritz Kreisler) ..... Paganini
Symphony No. 4 ..... Beethoven

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
APR 26 196

-Noel

Ninth Program

TUESDAY EVENING, APRIL 25, at 8:30 o'clock

MENDELSSOHN . . . . . Octet for Strings, in E-flat, Op. 20

I. Allegro moderato ma con fuoco
II. Andante
III. Scherzo: Allegro leggierissimo
IV. Presto

PAGANINI . . . . . Violin Concerto in D major
(Transcribed by Fritz Kreisler)

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN . . . . . Symphony No. 4, in B-flat major, Op. 60

I. Adagio; Allegro vivace
II. Adagio
III. Allegro vivace
IV. Allegro, ma non troppo

SOLOIST
NOAH BIELSKI

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076
APR 26 1961

MUSIC

Amazing Pyrotechnics In Paganini Concerto

By JULES WOLFFERS

Once again Charles Munch threw the spotlight on one of his players when he brought Noah Bielski forward last night in the Paganini Violin Concerto for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's season finale of the Tuesday evening Series at Symphony Hall.

With pardonable pride and, no doubt, as a stimulus, Mr. Munch has frequently drawn soloists from his ranks for the Friday-Saturday series and the Berkshire concerts in addition to the Tuesday programs.

Mr. Bielski showed that he deserved the honor by his technical proficiency in Fritz Kreisler's reworking of the Concerto with which the composer was wont to beat his hearers into stupefied submission.

And perhaps by the very nature of the work Mr. Bielski approximated the same result. He negotiated the difficult leaps with ease, dazzled with the speed of his scales, double-stopped with gymnastic ability, and used his bow with the rapier-like speed and surety of a master technician. In other words it was a brilliant pyrotechnic display and who doesn't like some fireworks now and then?

Emerges Unscathed

Having chosen the Paganini, the soloist committed himself to exactly this type of performance and effect. It is greatly to his credit that he emerged comparatively unscathed on the other side bearing the even more difficult cadenza, so to speak, triumphantly in his teeth.

With so much physical effort and musical tightrope walking at play it is not surprising that the intonation was occasionally less than perfect or that a few notes became dispersed in the general din and bustle. Nor was it surprising that the tone became scratchy once or twice.

Actually, I suppose, we should look upon the Paganini as a piece of well-sounding musical jugglery with some slower parts mixed in for contrast. From this point of view it's fun to listen to and it must be fun to do—for those who can do it.

As usual, Mr. Munch, master accompanist that he is, provided encouraging and sympathetic orchestral assistance and the players responded in full measure.

Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and the Beethoven Symphony No. 4, both heard at recent Friday-Saturday concerts, provided the rest of the fare for a receptive audience.

THE PROGRAM

The ninth and final program of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Tuesday Evening Series this season was presented at Symphony Hall last night. Noah Bielski was violin soloist. Charles Munch conducted the following program:

Octet for Strings, In E-flat, Op. 20 . . . . . Mendelssohn
Violin Concerto in D Major (Transcribed by Fritz Kreisler) . . . . . Paganini
Symphony No. 4 . . . . . Beethoven

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 190,246
APR 26 1961

Violin Soloist Bielski In Brilliant Performance

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, under direction of Charles Munch, gave a concert last night at Symphony Hall. The program: Octet for Strings, in E-flat, Op. 20, Mendelssohn; Violin Concerto, in D major (Transcribed by Fritz Kreisler), Paganini, with Noah Bielski as soloist; and the Symphony No. 4 in B-flat major, Op. 60, Beethoven.

By KEVIN KELLY

With Dr. Munch on the podium and Noah Bielski as soloist, the Boston Symphony gave a brilliant performance last night of the Paganini Violin Concerto in D Major as transcribed by Fritz Kreisler.

Despite the textural exposition by the orchestra, the focus of attention in this difficult concerto belongs to the soloist and Bielski was no less than extraordinary. He played the concerto with an unrelenting belief in its worth, with a continuous display of musicianship that unravelled the complexities and projected the entire work with suave, unflurried bowing.

Bielski, a member of the orchestra since 1955, is an unerring musician. His tone has solidity and sweetness; his finger work is deft; and the intonation of his instrument is truly beautiful. The fiendish edge of Paganini, who seemed to hope that no musician ever would be able to match his own technical display as a violinist, gives no apparent trouble to Bielski. He went through the fearsome cadenza with stunning skill, untroubled by double stops and commanding everything before him in a note-perfect interpretation.

The orchestral accompaniment was clean, wtih considerable imagination in dynamics and phrasing. Dr. Munch gave it clarity and depth and the sound was big and impressive.

The concert opened with Mendelssohn's Octet for strings, which gave ample testimony to the finely-meshed playing of the orchestra's strings, and it closed with the Fourth Symphony of Beethoven in a strongly accented yet beautifully proportioned performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
APR 23 1961

Music Events This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 80th season will conclude this week. Concerts are scheduled for Tuesday evening at 8:30, Friday afternoon at 2:15, Saturday evening at 8:30. An open rehearsal will be held on Thursday evening at 7:30.

Charles Munch has invited Noah Bielski to be soloist at the Tuesday concert in a performance of Paganini's Violin Concerto in D major. Mr. Bielski, a member of the orchestra since 1955, studied at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, with Efrem Zimbalist, and has been soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra. The concert will also include Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings" and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven.

Doctor Munch will conduct Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin" rather than the originally announced "Printemps" by Debussy at the Friday-Saturday concerts. The concerts, which will have an open rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, will include Mozart's Adagio and Fugue for Strings and his Sinfonia Concertante in which Ralph Gomberg, Gino Ciofi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano, all first desk men of the orchestra, will be soloists, plus Debussy's "La Mer."

TODAY

ANDRES SEGOVIA, guitar, Jordan Hall, 3:30 p.m., presented by Aaron Richmond. Program includes Milan, de Visee, Sor, Bach, Haydn, Mendelssohn, Albeniz, folk arrangements. Remaining seats at box office.

FINE ARTS CHAMBER ORCHESTRA, Eleftherios Eleftherakis, conductor, Cary Hall, Lexington, 8:30 p.m. On Boston Arts Festival Community Series. Admission free.

VESPER CONCERT with Wellesley College Choir and Yale University Apollo Glee Club, Houghton Memorial Chapel, Wellesley campus, 8:00 p.m. Mozart's Requiem Mass in D minor.

CHARLES MAGNANTE, accordionist, Somerset Hotel, 1:45 p.m. Followed by workshop for students and teachers.

TUESDAY

B.U. GLEE CLUB, James R. Houghton, conductor, with Seminary Singers of School of Theology, Concert Hall, 857 Commonwealth Avenue, 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

DOWELL McNEIL, organist, St. Mary's Church, Cambridge, 8:00 p.m., Assisted by brass and percussion for Kas-Elert Trilogy. Public invited.

WEDNESDAY

GREAT MUSIC SERIES continues with Allen Lannom, illustrated lecture, Brahms choral works. Room 12, B. U. College of Liberal Arts, 7:15 p.m. Public invited.

CLAUDE HILL, harpist, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Presented by N. E. Conservatory. Admission free.

LUDWIG BERGMANN directs vocal repertoire recital with B. U. School of Fine and Applied Arts students. Concert Hall, 8:30 p.m. Admission free.

THURSDAY

QUINCY SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, Armand Vorce, conductor, North Quincy High School, 8:30 p.m. Mahler Ibert, Dvorak. Frances Trisorio, contralto soloist. Admission free.

BEAUX ARTS TRIO of New York, Newton High School auditorium, 8:30 p.m. Season's finale for Newton Community Concerts Association.

FRIDAY

HARVARD GLEE CLUB, RADCLIFFE CHORAL SOCIETY, Elliot Forbes, conductor, Sanders Theater, Cambridge, 8:30 p.m. Annual Spring concert, Tallis, Schutz, Stravinsky, Schumann, Forbes, Crawford. Sessions. Tickets, Harvard Coop, or KI 7-4119.

SATURDAY

VIOLIN-PIANO RECITAL with Dorothy Bales and Gregory Tucker, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Brahms, Debussy and Mr. Tucker's Suite No. 1 in Boston premiere. Felix Viscuglia clarinet, assisting in Bartok "Contrasts." Tickets at box office.

Sternberg Named

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
APR 26 196

215

Noel Bielski Soloist at the Symphony

Violinist Displays Skill In Paganini Concerto

By Louis Chapin

The Paganini D major Violin Concerto serves as impressively to display its performer's technique as the 1812 Overture-cum-cannon to show off a high fidelity system, and with roughly the same musical result.

Noah Bielski played the Kreisler first-movement transcription with his colleagues of the Boston Symphony last night, and left no doubt in our minds as to his prodigious technical resources. The cadenza-festooned piece fell from his fingers like so much confetti. He seemed as much at home with Paganini's operatic cantabile theme as with his rippling and slithering passage-work, and his Symphony Hall audience was delighted to hear such virtuosity.

Near the beginning Mr. Bielski wavered slightly in intonation, and in one or two brief instances he and Charles Munch let go of their usual concurrence, but otherwise the performance came about on a high productive level.

If we can grade Mr. Bielski A for technique, his mark for musicianship must remain Incomplete. We would like to be able to answer for his interpretive insight, but Paganini's music simply doesn't ask him the right questions. Its slight stature was emphasized by being placed on the program between Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and Beethoven's Fourth Symphony, both of which were carried over from earlier weekend concerts. Mendelssohn's consummate taste and Beethoven's conceptual power make demanding company on any program, and as a piece of music the Paganini virtually disappeared in the spaces between.

Mr. Bielski's technical prowess distinctly qualifies him to return, when he can, to show us his skill as an interpreter.

BLANK PAGE

Σ14

BLANK PAGE

218

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Twenty-fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 28, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 29, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Adagio and Fugue for Strings, in C minor, K. 546

MOZART ..... Sinfonia Concertante, in E-flat, K. 297b

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Andantino con variazioni

Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG Bassoon: SHERMAN WALT
Clarinet: GINO CIOFFI Horn: JAMES STAGLIANO

INTERMISSION

RAVEL ..... "Le Tombeau de Couperin," Suite

I. Prélude
II. Forlane
III. Menuet
IV. Rigaudon

DEBUSSY ..... *La Mer (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches

I. De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The Play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

These concerts will end at about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 29 1961

Symphony Program Exceptionally Fine

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The poignance of the final Symphony concert of the season, that mingled occasion of regret and springtide spirits, seemed keener than ever yesterday afternoon as Charles Munch appeared and the audience stood in tribute to their great conductor, in the twilight of his career here.

He shall, fate willing, walk across Symphony Hall's stage only some 20 more afternoons in the course of the Friday-Saturday series. And as he acknowledged the public homage, the aura of a dozen years surrounding him, it brought back another Friday afternoon of the spring when Serge Koussevitzky laid down his baton. Thirty-seven years of musical history loomed in a moment, and memories of cherished performance and the men who made it possible passing in a kind of dynastic succession from Koussevitzky to Leinsdorf.

But there was Dr. Munch, belying his 69 years, and, as always reluctant to prolong the instant of emotion beyond its worth. He has never looked better and, as it turned out, given a more persuasive account of his powers. These are still at their height; he will be leaving us at the full crest, which, no doubt, should be the course of wisdom. Nevertheless, it did not avert a pang.

The program was an exceptionally fine one, featuring two of the lesser-played scores of Mozart, and the French Impressionist school where Dr. Munch is universally recognized as a master exponent. The former were beautifully-modelled, and the exquisite tints of Ravel's Suite and Debussy's tone poem again supplied evidence, if any was needed, of the area where the conductor excels.

The Adagio of Mozart is a singularly tragic utterance, it seems to me, foreshadowing the loss and sorrow of his final years with a noble grave cadence. The Fugue, undoubtedly written under the influence of Bach—one of the rare composers whom Mozart had anything to learn from—discloses his mastery of the polyphonic technique, yet does not entirely dispel the haunting mood of sadness. The lines were clearly stated in this performance of profound meditation.

The character of the limpid Sinfonia Concertante is lighter in texture and unutterably lovely. It brought forward a quartet of first-desk men, Harold Gomberg, James Stagliano, Gino Cioffi and Sherman Walt, each a virtuoso in his own right. Set in charming relief against the orchestral mass, the blended timbres of the quasi-solo instruments, their ideal balance and the brio of their playing provided a potently communicative experience.

Dr. Munch prefers to take the opening movement slower than usual, but not to the point of languor: his tempos had the effect of heightening the color. Aside from the musical values, the chamber quartet of winds informs the audience with a rare glimpse into the actual mechanics of performance—the careful paying-out of breath by the oboist, the phrasing of the bassoonist who is generally lost in a forest of instruments, the clarinetist's attack and tone, and the embouchure of the horn player. All were first-rate.

The Tomb of Couperin received a straightforward treatment. Here Dr. Munch prefers to let the music speak for itself, and he eschews the rubato of the inner movements remembered from Koussevitzky. It is wonderfully neat yet poetic, the evocation of the classical style in terms of Impressionism; but without the passion with which he approaches "La Mer."

His reading has the dramatic qualities that impart dynamism and fine-spun enchantment to this work. The orchestral integration is close and the tone sensuous, rippling with the pictorial yet misty imagery of the composer's palette. It is not lush; but in a thousand small details establishes brilliance, a mood of hushed mystery, and finally a firmly-construed climax of soaring tumultuous power.

Once again the impact of the conductor's imagination on the music brought the audience to its feet. It was, in fact, an ovation. Time after time Dr. Munch was called back. Then with a quick gesture, placing his hand over his heart, he bowed and retired and the hall emptied, with windrows of spirited listeners here and there, still cheering, still clapping.

And so the 80th season came to a close, the penultimate year of Charles Munch's reign as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Stage Plays

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting presented the 24th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Assisting in semi-solo capacity were Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Gino Cioffi, clarinet, Sherman Walt, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Adagio and Fugue for Strings, in C minor, K. 546 ..... Mozart
Sinfonia Concertante, in E-flat, K. 297b ..... Mozart
"Le Tombeau de Couperin," Suite ..... Ravel
"Le Mer," Three Symphonic Sketches ..... Debussy

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
APR 29 1961

Munch Ends Symphony Season With 'La Mer'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 24th and last program of the Friday-Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted Adagio and Fugue in C minor, for Strings (K. 546), Mozart; Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat (K. 297-B), Mozart —Messrs. Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt and Stagliano soloists; "Le Tombeau de Couperin", Ravel, and "La Mer", Debussy.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The magnolias are in full blossom, the trees in the Public Garden have greened out in the past two days, it is really Spring at last, and that signals the end of the Boston Symphony season.

When music director Dr. Charles Munch appeared no stage at Symphony Hall yesterday for the final Friday concert, the Orchestra rose in greeting, and the audience stood likewise. It is a charming courtesy for the public to do this, at season's beginning and end, an amenity which, I believe, began years ago during the regime of the late Serge Koussevitzky.

For his concluding program Dr. Munch had chosen a felicitous program of Mozart and the two French Impressionists Ravel and Debussy. None of the pieces was of extraordinary length or weight, those by Mozard were relatively unfamiliar, and the French music a ravishment of cunning and jewelled orchestration.

A fugue by Mozart is almost a curiosity, because he wrote so few of them compared with the large bulk of his work. The C minor for strings is a first-rate one, solidly fugal and based upon a melodic subject hard as a rock; much more severe and consequently less graceful and less "symphonic" than that marvel which is the finale of Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony.

The C minor is also a most impressively dramatic episode, with a certain mountainous grandeur, and a rhythmic pulse and a driving energy exceptionally powerful for Mozart. The adagio which precedes the fugue is as remarkable, with its chromaticism and touches of dissonance. As we can perceive this music now, from a point in time which was the distant future for Vienna of the 1780's, the Adagio and Fugue seem to have looked ahead to Bethoven and in a way even to Wagner.

Dr. Munch's performance yesterday was firm of outline, steady in pulse and passionate in feeling. Usually he does not give much of a loose rein to a bass line, but for once, most happily, the deepest and largest strings of the orchestra were permitted to sound the eloquence peculiar to them.

Mozart of the Sinfonia Concertante was equally captivating, both for the totatl ensemble and the extremely fine solo playing. Here is consistent symphonic interplay of the orchestral and the solo instruments, a beautiful sunlit musical texture animated and lighthearted; in the adagio, a weaving of supernal melody.

The oboe of Ralph Gomberg, the clarinet of Gino Cioffi; Sherman Walt's bassoon playing and that upon the horn by James Stagliano were virtuoso performances to remember, not alone for the individual mastery and deft grace of phrase, but for the most sensitive interaction of each solo part with the others. These first-desk gentlemen of their respective sections were most cordially applauded.

Ravel's "Tombeau" went very well, light and sparkling, and "La Mer" was even better. Those who find tone painting naive, old-fashioned, who deprecate musical suggestion of Nature in basic aspects, would do well to give a keen ear to this wonderful score.

There are both inner and outward aspects of "La Mer," the inner one of selective imagination and stylized imagery, and the outward depiction of the sea itself. Anyone with an eye and an ear, who has contemplated the surge of ocean, or the surface response in a bay, or the glitter of a calm and silent sea, will find it all in "La Mer." There was a great deal of it in Dr. Munch's performance.

218

EIGHTIETH SEASON • NINETEEN HUNDRED SIXTY-SIXTY-ONE

Twenty-fourth Program

FRIDAY AFTERNOON, APRIL 28, at 2:15 o'clock

SATURDAY EVENING, APRIL 29, at 8:30 o'clock

MOZART ..... Adagio and Fugue for Strings, in C minor, K. 546

MOZART ..... Sinfonia Concertante, in E-flat, K. 297b

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Andantino con variazioni

Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG Bassoon: SHERMAN WALT
Clarinet: GINO CIOFFI Horn: JAMES STAGLIANO

INTERMISSION

RAVEL ..... "Le Tombeau de Couperin," Suite

I. Prélude
II. Forlane
III. Menuet
IV. Rigaudon

DEBUSSY ..... *La Mer (The Sea), Three Symphonic Sketches

I. De l'aube à midi sur la mer (From Dawn to Noon on the Sea)
II. Jeux de vagues (The Play of the Waves)
III. Dialogue du vent et de la mer (Dialogue of the Wind and the Sea)

These concerts will end at about 4:10 o'clock on Friday Afternoon; 10:25 o'clock on Saturday Evening.

BALDWIN PIANO

*RCA VICTOR RECORDS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
APR 29 1961

Munch Ends Symphony Season With 'La Mer'

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA performed at Symphony Hall yesterday afternoon, and will repeat tonight at 8:30, the 24th and last program of the Friday–Saturday series. Dr. Charles Munch, music director, conducted Adagio and Fugue in C minor for Strings (K. 546), Mozart; Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat (K 297-B), Mozart —Messrs. Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt and Stagliano soloists; "Le Tombeau de Couperin", Ravel, and "La Mer", Debussy.

By CYRUS DURGIN

The magnolias are in full blossom, the trees in the Public Garden have greened out in the past two days, it is really Spring at last, and that signals the end of the Boston Symphony season.

When music director Dr. Charles Munch appeared on stage at Symphony Hall yesterday for the final Friday concert, the Orchestra rose in greeting, and the audience stood likewise. It is a charming courtesy for the public to do this, at season's beginning and end, an amenity which, I believe, began years ago during the regime of the late Serge Koussevitzky.

For his concluding program Dr. Munch had chosen a felicitous program of Mozart and the two French Impressionists Ravel and Debussy. None of the pieces was of extraordinary length or weight, those by Mozard were relatively unfamiliar, and the French music a ravishment of cunning and jewelled orchestration.

A fugue by Mozart is almost a curiosity, because he wrote so few of them compared with the large bulk of his work. The C minor for strings is a first-rate one, solidly fugal and based upon a melodic subject hard as a rock; much more severe and consequently less graceful and less "symphonic" than that marvel which is the finale of Mozart's "Jupiter" Symphony.

The C minor is also a most impressively dramatic episode, with a certain mountainous grandeur, and a rhythmic pulse and a driving energy exceptionally powerful for Mozart. The adagio which precedes the fugue is as remarkable, with its chromaticism and touches of dissonance. As we can perceive this music now, from a point in time which was the distant future for Vienna of the 1780's, the Adagio and Fugue seem to have looked ahead to Bethoven and in a way even to Wagner.

Dr. Munch's performance yesterday was firm of outline, steady in pulse and passionate in feeling. Usually he does not give much of a loose rein to a bass line, but for once, most happily, the deepest and largest strings of the orchestra were permitted to sound the eloquence peculiar to them.

Mozart of the Sinfonia Concertante was equally captivating, both for the totatl ensemble and the extremely fine solo playing. Here is consistent symphonic interplay of the orchestral and the solo instruments, a beautiful sunlit musical texture animated and lighthearted; in the adagio, a weaving of supernal melody.

The oboe of Ralph Gomberg, the clarinet of Gino Cioffi; Sherman Walt's bassoon playing and that upon the horn by James Stagliano were virtuoso performances to remember, not alone for the individual mastery and deft grace of phrase, but for the most sensitive interaction of each solo part with the others. These first-desk gentlemen of their respective sections were most cordially applauded.

Ravel's "Tombeau" went very well, light and sparkling, and "La Mer" was even better. Those who find tone painting naive, old-fashioned, who deprecate musical suggestion of Nature in basic aspects, would do well to give a keen ear to this wonderful score.

There are both inner and outward aspects of "La Mer," the inner one of selective imagination and stylized imagery, and the outward depiction of the sea itself. Anyone with an eye and an ear, who has contemplated the surge of ocean, or the surface response in a bay, or the glitter of a calm and silent sea, will find it all in "La Mer." There was a great deal [illegible] Dr. Munch's performance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 29 1961

Symphony Program Exceptionally Fine

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The poignance of the final Symphony concert of the season, that mingled occasion of regret and springtide spirits, seemed keener than ever yesterday afternoon as Charles Munch appeared and the audience stood in tribute to their great conductor, in the twilight of his career here.

He shall, fate willing, walk across Symphony Hall's stage only some 20 more afternoons in the course of the Friday-Saturday series. And as he acknowledged the public homage, the aura of a dozen years surrounding him, it brought back another Friday afternoon of the spring when Serge Koussevitzky laid down his baton. Thirty-seven years of musical history loomed in a moment, and memories of cherished performance and the men who made it possible passing in a kind of dynastic succession from Koussevitzky to Leinsdorf.

But there was Dr. Munch, belying his 69 years, and, as always reluctant to prolong the instant of emotion beyond its worth. He has never looked better and, as it turned out, given a more persuasive account of his powers. These are still at their height; he will be leaving us at the full crest, which, no doubt, should be the course of wisdom. Nevertheless, it did not avert a pang.

The program was an exceptionally fine one, featuring two of the lesser-played scores of Mozart, and the French Impressionist school where Dr. Munch is universally recognized as a master exponent. The former were beautifully-modelled, and the exquisite tints of Ravel's Suite and Debussy's tone poem again supplied evidence, if any was needed, of the area where the conductor excels.

The Adagio of Mozart is a singularly tragic utterance, it seems to me, foreshadowing the loss and sorrow of his final years with a noble grave cadence. The Fugue, undoubtedly written under the influence of Bach—one of the rare composers whom Mozart had anything to learn from—discloses his mastery of the polyphonic technique, yet does not entirely dispel the haunting mood of sadness. The lines were clearly stated in this performance of profound meditation.

The character of the limpid Sinfonia Concertante is lighter in texture and unutterably lovely. It brought forward a quartet of first-desk men, Harold Gomberg, James Stagliano, Gino Cioffi and Sherman Walt, each a virtuoso in his own right. Set in charming relief against the orchestral mass, the blended timbres of the quasi-solo instruments, their ideal balance and the brio of their playing provided a potently communicative experience.

The Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch conducting presented the 24th program of the 80th season yesterday in Symphony Hall. Assisting in semi-solo capacity were Ralph Gombers, oboe, Gino Cioffi, clarinet, Sherman Walt, bassoon, and James Stagliano, horn. The program will be repeated tonight at 8:30.

Adagio and Fugue for Strings, in C minor, K. 546 ..... Mozart
Sinfonia Concertante, in E-flat, K. 297b ..... Mozart
"Le Tombeau de Couperin," Suite ..... Ravel
"Le Mer," Three Symphonic Sketches ..... Debussy

Dr. Munch prefers to take the opening movement slower than usual, but not to the point of languor: his tempos had the effect of heightening the color. Aside from the musical values, the chamber quartet of winds informs the audience with a rare glimpse into the actual mechanics of performance—the careful paying-out of breath by the oboist, the phrasing of the bassoonist who is generally lost in a forest of instruments, the clarinetist's attack and tone, and the embouchure of the horn player. All were first-rate.

The Tomb of Couperin received a straightforward treatment. Here Dr. Munch prefers to let the music speak for itself, and he eschews the rubato of the inner movements remembered from Koussevitzky. It is wonderfully neat yet poetic, the evocation of the classical style in terms of Impressionism; but without the passion with which he approaches "La Mer."

His reading has the dramatic qualities that impart dynamism and fine-spun enchantment to this work. The orchestral integration is close and the tone sensuous, rippling with the pictorial yet misty imagery of the composer's palette. It is not lush; but in a thousand small details establishes brilliance, a mood of hushed mystery, and finally a firmly-construed climax of soaring tumultuous power.

Once again the impact of the conductor's imagination on the music brought the audience to its feet. It was, in fact, an ovation. Time after time Dr. Munch was called back. Then with a quick gesture, placing his hand over his heart, he bowed and retired and the hall emptied, with windrows of spirited listeners here and there, still cheering, still clapping.

And so the 80th season came to a close, the penultimate year of Charles Munch's reign as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Stage Play

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
APR 29 1961

Munch Sails Through 'La Mer'

4-61

Symphony Season Closing In Superlative Fashion

By Harold Rogers

When Charles Munch first mounted the podium yesterday afternoon, his Symphony Hall listeners rose to give him a warm welcome. After he conducted the final crashing chords of "La Mer," his cheering audience called him again and again to the stage. What happened between ovations was musically superlative. The Boston Symphony may have equaled this level of performance, but certainly has never exceeded it.

Dr. Munch was in rare form. The ordeal of announcing his retirement is already fading into the past, having occurred a week ago. He conducted as a man carefree, his vacation imminent, his heart singing. He made no attempt to close with a traditional program, a Beethoven Fifth or Ninth, or a Brahms First. He just played what he wanted to, what he enjoys—Mozart, Ravel, Debussy. No better way to close a season. Nobody wept. Neither Beethoven nor Brahms was missed.

And of Mozart? The magnificent Adagio and Fugue in C minor for Strings, with each voice biting into the theme as called upon. Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante, K. 297b, also brought four of the first-chair men forward for a dazzling individual and collective tour de force—Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Gino Cioffi, clarinet; Sherman Walt, bassoon; and James Stagliano, horn.

And of Ravel? The graceful dances of "Le Tombeau de Couperin," in which he poured his impressionistic mix into the moulds of antique forms—suave, shimmering, scintillating.

And he closed with Debussy's "La Mer," the masterpiece of all musical seascapes, its changeling moods as varied and as subtle as the sea itself.

Dr. Munch sailed through them all with baton flying, and many of us were doubtless comforted by the knowledge that he will steer the ship for at least one more year.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
APR 15 1961

BSO To Conclude

BOSTO N(UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will complete its 1960 - 1961 season with concerts April 21 - 22, it was announced Friday.

Arthur Fiedler will begin the 76th season of Pops concerts at Symphony Hall on May 2.

Bernard Lajarrige as Arnolphe.

Herald 4/25/61

Music Events This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 80th season will conclude this week. Concerts are scheduled for Tuesday evening at 8:30, Friday afternoon at 2:15, Saturday evening at 8:30. An open rehearsal will be held on Thursday evening at 7:30.

Charles Munch has invited Noah Bielski to be soloist at the Tuesday concert in a performance of Paganini's Violin Concerto in D major. Mr. Bielski, a member of the orchestra since 1955, studied at the Curtis Institute, Philadelphia, with Efrem Zimbalist, and has been soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra. The concert will also include Mendelssohn's "Octet for Strings" and the Symphony No. 4 by Beethoven.

Doctor Munch will conduct Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin" rather than the originally announced "Printemps" by Debussy at the Friday-Saturday concerts. The concerts, which will have an open rehearsal at 7:30 p.m. Thursday, will include Mozart's Adagio and Fugue for Strings and his Sinfonia Concertante in which Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano, all first desk men of the orchestra, will be soloists, plus Debussy's "La Mer."

TODAY

Somerset Hotel, 1:45 p.m. workshop for student

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
APR 20 1961

Last BSO Concerts Of Season This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's [illegible] season will conclude this week. Concerts are scheduled for tomorrow at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday evening at 8:30. An open rehearsal will be held tonight at 7:30.

Doctor Munch will conduct Ravel's "Le Tombeau de Couperin" rather than the originally announced "Printemps" by

Continued on Page Three

Last BSO Concert

Continued from Page One

Debussy at the Friday - Saturday concerts. The concerts, which will have an open rehearsal tonight, will include Mozart's Adagio and Fugue for Strings and his Sinfornia Concertante in which Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano all first desk men of the Orchestra, will be soloists, plus Debussy's "La Mer."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
MAY 4 1961

BSO in Final Concert of Season

By PETER DAVISON

Last Saturday night the Boston Symphony Orchestra gave its final concert of the 1960-61 season. It was an elegantly selected program — Mozart, Ravel and Debussy; and its execution showed both the best and the worst of the man who, once next season is completed, will step down as conductor after thirteen years.

Physically, Charles Munch, like most conductors, is muscular and vigorous. His conducting gestures often resemble those of a man pitching hay. He is, of course, noted for his interest in French music, and his performances of Berlioz and Debussy are his pride. I have always felt that he must be a person of strong tactile sensitivity, and this was borne out by the way he conducted last Saturday's concert.

In the opening piece, Mozart's C Minor Adagio and Fugue for Strings, Mr. Munch, as he so often does, sacrificed form to color. In the grave and pensive Adagio, as in the Fugue, the qualities he emphasized in the music were the grandeur and sensuousness of a Roman Bath rather than the proportion and wholeness of a Greek temple. In the Fugue, with its ornate piling up of strettos, its intricate interplay of countersubjects at the conclusion, the massive role of the basses in supporting the whole fugal design kept the music together despite Dr. Munch's occasional liberties with the tempo.

The Mozart Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat was not so successful. It is a dulcet and ingratiating piece, although the young Mozart here is still occasionally heavy-footed. It is written for solo oboe, clarinet, horn, bassoon and small orchestra. Unfortunately the solo wind instruments (first-chair musicians from the orchestra) did not play together well, nor were they helped by Dr. Munch's annoying habits of altering the tempo to suit his whim — or perhaps the demands of his tactile sense.

In the first movement the musicians played out of time. In the second, their intonation (particularly that of the horn) went sour as well. This was a pity — the elegiac quality of this movement is so lovely, with the strings as accompaniment for the lyric interchange of the soloists. By the third movement, the musicians had recovered their balance, for even Dr. Munch had by now become aware that the group was having trouble keeping time.

After the intermission, Dr. Munch returned to conduct French music of this century. A classical style more in keeping with Dr. Munch's temperament than Mozart's is that of Ravel. The conductor brought to Ravel's suite, Le Tombeau de Coupern, his palate for color, his taste for nuance, his penchant for rubato, his disregard of structural complexity, his reverence for the deliciousness of the present moment in music, his savor of the evanescence of color and tone. It was charmingly played.

And finally, in Debussy's La Mer, Dr. Munch was in his element — the dreamlike play of light and shadow. La Mer is an unconscionable feat of musical imagination — the attempt to recreate one of the elements — to see the sea unseen, a sea that had never floated a ship or nursed a fish; a sea of light and color and sound and sensation; a disembodied matrix of the senses. Such is Dr. Munch's tactile quality as a conductor that, in listening to his performance of La Mer, one felt as though he personally had modeled and sculptured every wave. I have heard La Mer better performed, but only by Dr. Munch himself.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763
APR 29 1961

Symphony Finale

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 80th season will conclude tonight with Charles Munch conducting a program of Mozart, Ravel and Debussy selections.

Mozart's Adagio and Fugue for Strings, in C minor, K. 546 and his Sinfonia Concertante, in E-flat, K. 297b, with soloists Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt and Stagliano, will be heard in the first half of the program.

Ravel's Le Tombeau de Couperin and Debussy's La Mer, Three Symphonic Sketches, will make up the latter half.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
MAY 7 1961

Last Week on the Aisle

THEATER: "Caligula," by Camus, at Harvard's Dunster House "surmounted the obstacles most creditably."

SCREEN: "The Fiercest Heart" at the Pilgrim was "handsome and colorful." The State Theater's experimental films, "The Savage Eye," and "Private Property," were interesting and stimulating. "Black Sunday" at the Paramount needed "complete suspension of disbelief."

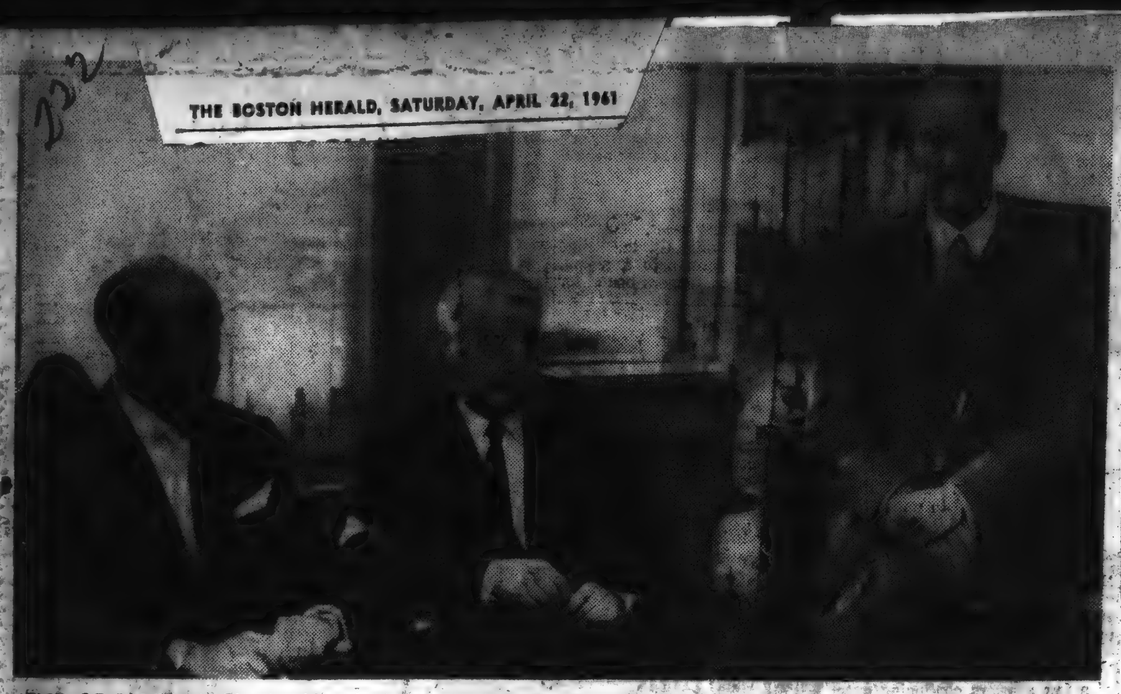
MUSIC: The Civic Symphony's premiere of "Alexander Nevsky" at Jordan Hall made the concert a "notable event." The Boston Symphony's season finale was "an exceptionally fine program." The Harvard Glee Club and Radcliffe Choral Society achieved artistic results at Sanders Theater. "Astonishing" was the verdict for the Jordan Hall program of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra. The same hall housed an "interesting" violin-piano program by Dorothy Bales and Gregory Tucker. And Arthur Fiedler opened Pops at Symphony Hall with customary eclat.

BLANK PAGE

220

BLANK PAGE

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1961



END OF AN ERA—Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday announced his retirement at the close of the 1961-62 season through Henry B. Cabot, president of the Orchestra Board of Trustees, right. Erich Leinsdorf, left, will be Dr. Munch's successor.

Dr. Munch to Retire in '62, Erich Leinsdorf Successor

By ROBERT TAYLOR

An era of the Boston Symphony Orchestra came to a close yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, the Orchestra's music director for 12 years, announced his retirement at the close of next season through Henry B. Cabot, the president of the Board of Trustees. His successor will be Erich Leinsdorf, now conductor and musical consultant with the Metropolitan Opera Association.

The announcement, which immediately followed yesterday's concert, took most observers of the Boston musical scene by surprise. Although reports of Dr. Munch's retirement had been rife for several seasons—he will turn 70 this year—he had repeatedly expressed satisfaction in his work here. The reason given for his decision, however, was advancing age.

Both Mr. Leinsdorf and Dr. Munch were present at the official announcement. Sitting side by side, they appeared grave yet composed. Dr. Munch, who had just finished the complete "Romeo and Juliet" of Berlioz minutes before, betrayed no sign of fatigue as he smoked a cigarette and waved at

(Continued on Page Three)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUN 4 1961

ERICH LEINSDORF

NEW YORK—One of the interesting considerations relating to the appointment of Erich Leinsdrof to replace Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fall of 1962 is this: would it have happened had he remained the director of the Rochester Philharmonic? (He was conductor from 1947 to 1955.) No one will ever know, of course, but my guess is no.

It was, paradoxically, by returning to the Metropolitan Opera (which he left in 1941 to become conductor of the Cleveland Symphony) that Leinsdorf acquired the "exposure" (also the buildup by RCA-Victor, of which his good friend George Marek is vice-president and general manager of the record division) to qualify. It need hardly be added that RCA has had a long and mutually profitable association with the Boston Symphony.

J. K.

Munch Retiring, Leinsdorf Named

(Continued from First Page)

acquaintances crowding into the conductor's dressing room.

As soon as platoons of photographers, sensing a significant statement, finished taking pictures, Henry Cabot rose and revealed the news he had guarded for more than a month.

"About six weeks ago," he said, "our great conductor, Charles Munch, came to me and stated that in view of his age and the vast responsibilities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he felt obliged to announce his retirement. I am sorry to say that next season will be his last here.

"His successor will be Erich Leinsdorf. At the end of next season Dr. Munch will finish the second-longest term in the history of the Boston Symphony. I hope and trust that Mr. Leinsdorf will be equally fortunate; and that Charles Munch will return to the orchestra many times as our guest."

FINAL PHASE

Thus did the distinguished reign of one of the world's supreme musical artists reach its final phase in Boston. Henry Cabot's tone was quiet as he made the statement, but no less conscious of its poignant implications. It was a hushed and emotion-packed scene.

Mr. Leinsdorf said that his immediate plans involved a journey to Europe to record in Rome during June. In July he will open the Hollywood Bowl concerts. This summer he plans to visit Tanglewood, and next March he will appear as guest conductor in Symphony Hall, besides conducting several of Wagner's Ring Cycles with the Metropolitan Opera in the winter.

He said that Rudolph Bing, the Metropolitan's general manager had been "most gracious" about the appointment. Mr. Leinsdorf's letter of acceptance of the Boston Symphony post lay on Mr. Cabot's desk.

DAZZLING EPOCH

Dr. Munch remained silent, and indeed there was little to add after the fact of his retirement and his congratulations to his successor. The last immediate link with the Koussevitzky epoch, one of the most dazzling in all symphony history, had been severed. Moreover, the conductor had undergone the severe strain of a massive concert on the grand scale prior to the important moment.

But he might have taken satisfaction in the distinctions he had brought to the Symphony in his own right. Five New York Critics Circle Awards for new music introduced by the Boston Symphony; nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde; 77 first Boston performances, 48 U.S. premieres, 32 world premieres.

He instituted the Orchestra's Open Rehearsals and took it twice to Europe and once to Russia—the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union—and to the Far East and Australia.

Most of all, he might well have taken pride in preserving the standards of the Boston Symphony, the world's finest. That, and the affection in which this shy, gentle personality who never resorted to personal flamboyance, is held by the people of Boston. He is, truly, a very great man, an artist.

NOT A STRANGER

In Mr. Leinsdorf, who is no stranger to the concert hall, (he directed both the Rochester Philharmonic and the Cleveland Orchestras) the Boston Symphony will be receiving one of the most brilliant young (49 years-old) talents of today's music. His success with the Orchestra during his guest appearances here in February was marked.

He has merited international renown for his recordings, operatic work and symphonic repertoire. His appointment comes in line with the Boston Symphony's past policy of choosing conductors who are relatively unknown to a popular public, and "musician's musicians."

But at that moment little could be added, for a master was stepping down and his successor waited in the wings. Mr. Leinsdorf and Dr. Munch rose and looked at each other. Suddenly both smiled, and without a word, embraced.

Then Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Cabot went into another room, trailed by a rout of reporters, to re-enact the announcement at the request of television. Dr. Munch, who had experienced an exhausting afternoon, did not join them. He walked down the corridor and slipped out a side door, unobserved and alone.

Dr. Munch's Retirement

Has it been 13 years since Dr. Charles Munch came among us? Surely the perfect choice to succeed Serge Koussevitzky, he proved it by assuming his role as if he had been there forever. Yet he completely changed the sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, giving it a French sonority as strong in character as he.

Now it is announced he will retire at the end of the 1961-62 season still in command of his considerable powers. The city can look forward to future guest appearances.

Boston has much to thank him for. Besides giving his all, he kept the orchestra at the top of form. The change-over to his successor is characteristic of the orderly methods of the orchestra's trustees. Viennese-born Erich Leinsdorf will bring a change again in style to the nation's most magnificent instrument which continues fortunate in its conductors.

Herald 4/24/61

End of an Era

Bostonians may differ about the Arts Festival or taxes or the parking problem. But they are completely agreed about one thing. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is without peer. It is the undimmed and undimmable glory of our city.

The announcement that Dr. Charles Munch will retire as the Orchestra's music director at the end of next season is therefore a cause of deep regret.

In his twelve seasons here Dr. Munch has maintained the Orchestra's high tradition and brought it many new honors. This shy but distinguished man has shaped the Orchestra to his own musical bent with impeccable taste and sure artistry. Not the least of his contributions has been to make the Orchestra available to more listeners by extending the concert schedule and introducing open rehearsals.

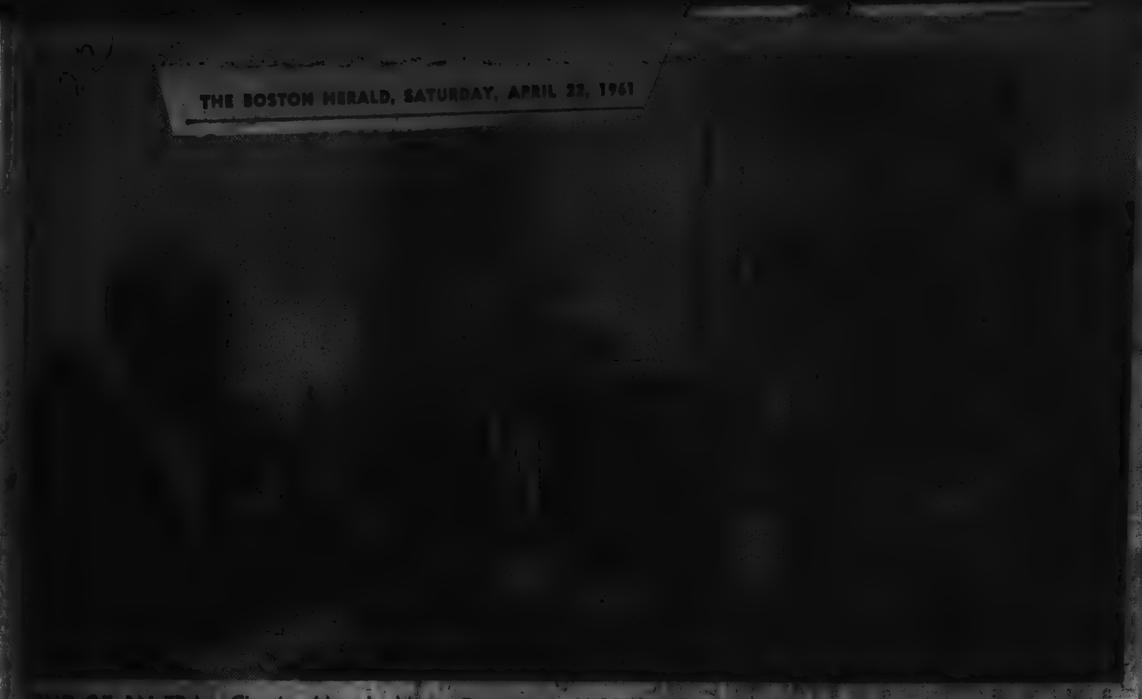
Neither Boston nor the Orchestra will be quite the same after he steps down. But thanks to his fine stewardship the B.S.O. is as vital today as it has ever been. The new director, Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, will inherit an instrument of rare power and beauty with which to start our next musical era.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUN 1961

New York.—Richard Korn, musical director of The Orchestra of America, will initiate two new policies next season. In addition to American music of the past and present, the repertoire will be expanded to include the music of Canada and the Latin American countries. In cooperation with the 600,000 members of the National Federation of Music Clubs, the orchestra will, each season, present as soloist a winner of the Federation's annual award. Among the soloists for the coming season are Maureen Forrester in a song cycle written for her by one of Canada's leading contemporary composers; Aldo Parisot in a work for cello and orchestra by Villa-Lobos; Whittemore and Lowe in the first New York performance of Spencer Norton's Partita for 2 Pianos; Robert Rudié, concertmaster of the orchestra, in the Violin Concerto of John Weinzweig, Canadian composer; and Claudette Sorel, who will play Harold Morris' Piano Concerto.

Boston.—Charles Munch will retire as the Boston Symphony's music director in August, 1962, at the conclusion of the Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Mr. Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

THE BOSTON HERALD, SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1961



END OF AN ERA—Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, yesterday announced his retirement at the close of the 1961-62 season through Henry B. Cabot, president of the Orchestra Board of Trustees, right. Erich Leinsdorf, left, will be Dr. Munch's successor.

Dr. Munch to Retire in '62, Erich Leinsdorf Successor

By ROBERT TAYLOR

An era of the Boston Symphony Orchestra came to a close yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, the Orchestra's music director for 13 years, announced his retirement at the close of next season through Henry B. Cabot, the president of the Board of Trustees. His successor will be Erich Leinsdorf, now conductor and musical consultant with the Metropolitan Opera Association.

The announcement, which immediately followed yesterday's concert, took most observers of the Boston musical scene by surprise. Although reports of Dr. Munch's retirement had been rife for several seasons—he will turn 70 this year—he had repeatedly expressed satisfaction in his work here. The reason given for his decision, however, was advancing age.

Both Mr. Leinsdorf and Dr. Munch were present at the official announcement. Sitting side by side, they appeared grave yet composed. Dr. Munch, who had just finished the complete "Romeo and Juliet" of Berlioz minutes before, betrayed no sign of fatigue as he smoked a cigarette and waved at

(Continued on Page Three)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUN 4 1961

ERICH LEINSDORF

NEW YORK—One of the interesting considerations relating to the appointment of Erich Leinsdrof to replace Charles Munch as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the fall of 1962 is this: would it have happened had he remained the director of the Rochester Philharmonic? (He was conductor from 1947 to 1955.) No one will ever know, of course, but my guess is no.

It was, paradoxically, by returning to the Metropolitan Opera (which he left in 1941 to become conductor of the Cleveland Symphony) that Leinsdorf acquired the "exposure" (also the buildup by RCA-Victor, of which his good friend George Marek is vice-president and general manager of the record division) to quality. It need hardly be added that RCA has had a long and mutually profitable association with the Boston acquaintances crowding into the conductor's dressing room.

E. K.

Munch Retiring, Leinsdorf Named

(Continued from First Page)

As soon as platoons of photographers, sensing a significant statement, finished taking pictures, Henry Cabot rose and revealed the news he had guarded for more than a month.

"About six weeks ago," he said, "our great conductor, Charles Munch, came to me and stated that in view of his age, and the vast responsibilities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he felt obliged to announce his retirement. I am sorry to say that next season will be his last here.

"His successor will be Erich Leinsdorf. At the end of next season Dr. Munch will finish the second-longest term in the history of the Boston Symphony. I hope and trust that Mr. Leinsdorf will be equally fortunate; and that Charles Munch will return to the orchestra many times as our guest."

FINAL PHASE

Thus did the distinguished reign of one of the world's supreme musical artists reach its final phase in Boston. Henry Cabot's tone was quiet as he made the statement, but no less conscious of its poignant implications. It was a hushed and emotion-packed scene.

Mr. Leinsdorf said that his immediate plans involved a journey to Europe to record in Rome during June. In July he will open the Hollywood Bowl concerts. This summer he plans to visit Tanglewood, and next March he will appear as guest conductor in Symphony Hall, besides conducting several of Wagner's Ring Cycles with the Metropolitan Opera in the winter.

He said that Rudolph Bing, the Metropolitan's general manager had been "most gracious" about the appointment. Mr. Leinsdorf's letter of acceptance of the Boston Symphony post lay on Mr. Cabot's desk.

DAZZLING EPOCH

Dr. Munch remained silent, and indeed there was little to add after the fact of his retirement and his congratulations to his successor. The last immediate link with the Koussevitzky epoch, one of the most dazzling in all symphony history, had been severed. Moreover, the conductor had undergone the severe strain of a massive concert on the grand scale prior to the important moment.

But he might have taken satisfaction in the distinctions he had brought to the Symphony in his own right. Five New York Critics Circle Awards for new music introduced by the Boston Symphony; nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde; 77 first Boston performances, 48 U.S. premieres, 32 world premieres.

He instituted the Orchestra's Open Rehearsals and took it twice to Europe and once to Russia—the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union—and to the Far East and Australia.

Most of all, he might well have taken pride in preserving the standards of the Boston Symphony, the world's finest. That, and the affection in which this shy, gentle personality who never resorted to personal flamboyance, is held by the people of Boston. He is, truly, a very great man, an artist.

NOT A STRANGER

In Mr. Leinsdorf, who is no stranger to the concert hall, (he directed both the Rochester Philharmonic and the Cleveland Orchestras) the Boston Symphony will be receiving one of the most brilliant young (43 years-old) talents of today's music. His success with the Orchestra during his guest appearances here in February was marked.

He has merited international renown for his recordings, operatic work and symphonic repertoire. His appointment comes in line with the Boston Symphony's past policy of choosing conductors who are relatively unknown to a popular public, and "musician's musicians."

But at that moment little could be added, for a master was stepping down and his successor waited in the wings. Mr. Leinsdorf and Dr. Munch rose and looked at each other. Suddenly both smiled, and without a word, embraced.

Then Mr. Leinsdorf and Mr. Cabot went into another room, trailed by a rout of reporters, to re-enact the announcement at the request of television. Dr. Munch, who had experienced an exhausting afternoon, did not join them. He walked down the corridor and slipped out a side door, unobserved and alone.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY-CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
JUN 1961

New York.—Richard Korn, musical director of The Orchestra of America, will initiate two new policies next season. In addition to American music of the past and present, the repertoire will be expanded to include the music of Canada and the Latin American countries. In cooperation with the 600,000 members of the National Federation of Music Clubs, the orchestra will, each season, present as soloist a winner of the Federation's annual award. Among the soloists for the coming season are Maureen Forrester in a song cycle written for her by one of Canada's leading contemporary composers; Aldo Parisot in a work for cello and orchestra by Villa-Lobos; Whittemore and Lowe in the first New York performance of Spencer Norton's Partita for 2 Pianos; Robert Rudié, concertmaster of the orchestra, in the Violin Concerto of John Weinzweig, Canadian composer; and Claudette Sorel, who will play Harold Morris' Piano Concerto.

Boston.—Charles Munch will retire as the Boston Symphony's music director in August, 1962, at the conclusion of the Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Mr. Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch's Retirement

Has it been 13 years since Dr. Charles Munch came among us? Surely the perfect choice to succeed Serge Koussevitzky, he proved it by assuming his role as if he had been there forever. Yet he completely changed the sound of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, giving it a French sonority as strong in character as he.

Now it is announced he will retire at the end of the 1961-62 season still in command of his considerable powers. The city can look forward to future guest appearances.

Boston has much to thank him for. Besides giving his all, he kept the orchestra at the top of form. The change-over to his successor is characteristic of the orderly methods of the orchestra's trustees. Viennese-born Erich Leinsdorf will bring a change again in style to the nation's most magnificent instrument which continues fortunate in its conductors.

Herald 4/24/61

End of an Era

Bostonians may differ about the Arts Festival or taxes or the parking problem. But they are completely agreed about one thing. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is without peer. It is the undimmed and undimmable glory of our city.

The announcement that Dr. Charles Munch will retire as the Orchestra's music director at the end of next season is therefore a cause of deep regret.

In his twelve seasons here Dr. Munch has maintained the Orchestra's high tradition and brought it many new honors. This shy but distinguished man has shaped the Orchestra to his own musical bent with impeccable taste and sure artistry. Not the least of his contributions has been to make the Orchestra available to more listeners by extending the concert schedule and introducing open rehearsals.

Neither Boston nor the Orchestra will be quite the same after he steps down. But thanks to his fine stewardship the B.S.O. is as vital today as it has ever been. The new director, Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, will inherit an instrument of rare power and beauty with which to start our next musical era.

TTYSBUR
IMES
7,167
MAY

Boston Baton To Change Hands

By Harold Rogers
Music Critic of The Christian Science Monitor

Erich Leinsdorf will be the new conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

After Charles Munch had conducted Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette" Friday afternoon at Symphony Hall, reporters and photographers were invited to his room, where they found him seated next to Mr. Leinsdorf. The faces of both men were animated with smiles.

Then Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, said that Dr. Munch first began to discuss the possibility of retiring several years ago, but that six weeks ago he reached the conclusion that he definitely wished to retire at the end of next season—1961-62.

Mr. Cabot explained that Serge Koussevitzky was head of the orchestra for 25 years, that Dr. Munch did not come to the orchestra young enough to fulfill a term of that length, but that with his 13-year tenure he now holds second place in length of service among the Boston Symphony's conductors.

As Mr. Cabot spoke, Dr. Munch's face lost its smile and was soon veiled in sadness. Mr. Cabot recommended that the reporters ask him no questions owing to the rigorous performance he had just completed. Mr. Leinsdorf and Dr. Munch then embraced, both too overcome with emotion to speak.

Guest in February

Mr. Leinsdorf first conducted the Boston Symphony as a guest in February of this year. After these concerts he went to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony, followed by engagements in Florence and Milan.

Next month he will return to Amsterdam to conduct the Concertgebouw in the final concerts of its Beethoven cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival. He will include appearances at the Hollywood Bowl, New Orleans, Boston, and at the Metropolitan Opera in New York (conducting several "Ring" cycles) before he comes to Boston permanently in the autumn of 1962.

A native of Vienna (Feb. 4, 1912), Mr. Leinsdorf received his early training at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934 he was chosen by Bruno Walter as his assistant at the Salzburg Festival; he was also chief assistant to Toscanini at the 1935, 1936, and 1937 festivals. In 1937, on Toscanini's recommendation, Mr. Leinsdorf joined the conducting staff of the Metropolitan Opera.

After six seasons at the Met, he signed a three-year contract, to begin in 1943, as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra. Almost immediately, however, he was drafted into the United States Army, and upon his discharge became director of the Rochester Philharmonic.

Nine years later he resigned from the Rochester post to become director of the New York City Opera, and in 1957 he rejoined the Metropolitan as a conductor and musical consultant to the general manager.

Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf reside in Larchmont, N.Y., with their five children: David, 18; Gregor, 16; Joshua, 15; Hester, 12, and Jenny, 9.

Many Honors Won

Dr. Munch has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony. Five New York Music Critics Awards were given to compositions introduced by him to New York. The orchestra received two American-International Music Fund Awards [illegible]

Dr. Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award, as well as nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. During the first 10 years of his tenure he presented works by 31 American composers, 77 first Boston performances, 48 United States premières, and 82 world premières.

Dr. Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours—to Europe in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; again to Europe in 1956, when the Boston Symphony was the first Western Orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union; and an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia, and New Zealand in 1960.

Dr. Munch's book, "I Am a Conductor," was published in Paris in 1954 and subsequently in translation in New York in 1955; London, 1956; Zurich, 1957; and Moscow, 1960. He was also responsible for inaugurating the open rehearsals in Boston 10 years ago.

Lyman W. Fisher, Staff Photographer

Erich Leinsdorf and Charles Munch

Munch to Retire; Leinsdorf Named

Erich Leinsdorf, noted Metropolitan Opera conductor, will succeed Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning with the season of 1962-63. Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, announced at Symphony Hall that Dr. Munch intends to retire at the end of next season.

Dr. Munch will have served 13 years as music director, thus chalking up the second longest tenure in the orchestra's history. Koussevitzky held the post for 25 years.

"We hope and pray," said Mr. Cabot, "that Mr. Leinsdorf will remain with us equally as long."

Story, Page 2.

End of an Era Approaching With Retirement of Munch

Accounting of Season Which Like 11 Before, Had French Quality

By CYRUS DURGIN

The Boston Symphony season recently concluded was, like its 11 predecessors during the regime of Charles Munch, prevailingly French in character. That is to say, the percentage of music of French origin has been substantial, and the nature of performance which has governed the repertory, has been French. This season we had 15 French works, all of them presented by Dr. Munch. They made a fraction over 19 percent of the total repertory of 78 compositions.

DURGIN

MUNCH

★ ★ ★

When Dr. Munch retires at the end of the 1961-62 season, an era in our musical life and the history of the orchestra will have been concluded. The incoming music director, Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, is a man of Central European background. His choice of repertory and his way of performance is bound to be different. To some extent, we have a notion of his musical personality, by virtue of his two weeks as guest conductor at Symphony Hall last February.

Credit to Trustees

Let it be said, and not merely as a parenthetical remark, that while the announcement of Dr. Munch's retirement, and the engagement of Mr. Leinsdorf, took the musical world by surprise, it followed the good form and most orderly procedure for which the orchestra's trustees have been noted.

The Boston Symphony trustees, indeed, deserve the utmost credit for their function in the continuing ministrations of this organization, and I, for one, hope that the general public recognizes the fact. It has been said, and I think correctly, that these trustees quite properly determine all the broad and basic policies of the Boston Symphony, without interferring in its operations of business or conduct of artistry.

If there is an ideal situation in this world, here surely is one. Not since the troubles of World War I and the strike of 1920 has the Boston Symphony been wracked by problems which have affected other orchestras of the country from time to time. Beyond question, this is a most remarkable record, aind musical Boston has been phenomenally fortunate.

Opinion Stands

We also have been fortunate in the trustees' choice of conductors since the board was established after the withdrawal of Maj. Higginson as the sole support of the orchestra. In 1948, when the news came that Charles Munch would succeed Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, this chronicler was firm in his belief that the French musician was at that time perhaps the one individual who could assume the post and not suffer by comparisons with the brilliance of Koussevitzky. That opinion still stands. We owe much to Dr. Munch for what he has given us ever since.

The season of 1960-61 was typical of his regime, and rather better in is overall level of playing, than the season preceding. Dr. Munch never has been a man to include a notably large amount of new music in his repertory here. For the most part he has inclined to the standard repertory and to revivals of neglected older music. At the same time, his programs have not lacked new works.

This season we have heard just six compositions in either first performance or first local presentation: Samuel Barber's "Die Natali;" Three New England Sketches by Walter Piston; the choral Gloria by Francis Poulenc; the late Florent Schmitt's Symphony No. 2; the Symphony No. 7 by William Schuman, and the Symphonic Prayer by Alexander Tcherepnin.

Three Best

The latter was a small score, not of the gifted composer's most impressive work. The outstanding new pieces, which in this writer's belief merit consistent re-hearing, were those of Piston, Poulenc and Schuman. Poulenc's Gloria, one may point out, was honored with the award of the New York Music Critics Circle.

The soloist new to Boston who proved most interesting was pianist Alexander Uninsky, with French pianist Monique Haas next in order. Both are musicians of extraordinary equipment and magnetism.

In the matter of soloists, let us not overlook the pleasure given us by various first desk men of the Orchestra—violist Joseph De Pasquale, in Bartok's Concerto; Messrs Gomberg, Cioffi, Walt and Stagliano in Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante at the season's final concerts. In the Tuesday series, luster was added by organist Berj Zamkochian, and violinists Roger Shermont, Joseph Silverstein and Noah Bielski.

Enjoy CYRUS DURGIN in the daily Globe, too. To have the morning or evening Globe home delivered, call AVenue 8-8000 any time.

THE BOSTON SUNDAY GLOBE—MAY 7, 1961

GETTYSBURG, PA.
TIMES
D. 7,167
MAY 23 1961

CHOSEN — Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, 49, has been named to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Charles Munch retires at the end of the group's 1962 season.

REDUCTION

RATIO

18x

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

2.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

1.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A5

A4

A3

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

4.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

3.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

3.0 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

Dr. Munch to Retire at End of Next Season; Met Opera's Erich Leinsdorf Will Take Over

(UPI Telephoto)

TALKING OVER THE BOSTON SYMPHONY — Music Director Charles Munch (right) chats with his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, after yesterday's concert. Other pictures on page 16.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Dr. Charles Munch will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera.

This news came yesterday afternoon from Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, at a conference in the conductor's room at Symphony Hall following the Boston Symphony concert.

"It is with great sorrow that I have to say that Dr. Munch has decided to retire at the end of the next Boston Symphony season," said Cabot. "He has done so in view of the burdens of rehearsals and concert-giving and of his age. He will be 70 next September.

DR. MUNCH

Page Sixteen

GUIDE TO FEATURES

Bridge	10	Obituaries	17
Churches	8-9	Port	7
Classified	17-26	Radio-TV	11
Comics	10	Society	9
Cross-Word	9	Sports	13-16
Deaths	17	Star Gazer	16
Dr. Crane	10	Theaters	12
Editorials	4	Twistagram	9
Financial	6-7	Women	9

DR. MUNCH LISTENS to the announcement of his retirement as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Shadow of his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, shows at left.

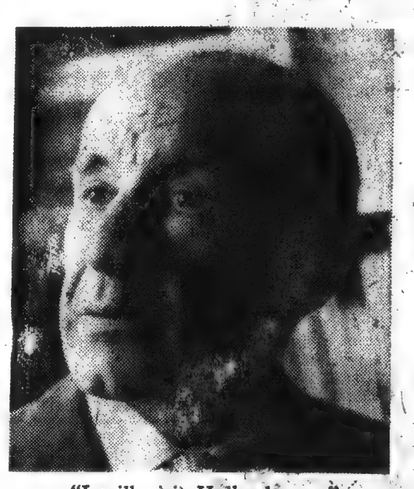
MUNCH RETIRES

Alternating moments of sadness and happiness on the faces of the leaders tell the story of the impending retirement of Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sadness is etched on the face of Munch as his 1962 retirement is announced. The pleasure of his new assignment lights up the face of Erich Leinsdorf as he is introduced to the Boston press and Friends of the Boston Symphony.

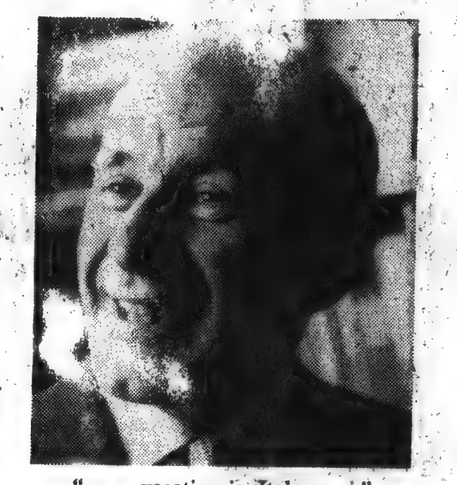
ARTISTS EMBRACE as Henry B. Cabot, president of Boston Symphony trustees, stands in background.

Globe-UPI Photo Essay by Ed Fitzgerald

The New Director--- Erich Leinsdorf



"I will visit Holland . . ."



" . . . vacation in Italy . . ."

" . . . and look forward to visiting Tanglewood . . ."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
APR 22 1961

Munch to Retire; Leinsdorf Named

Erich Leinsdorf, noted Metropolitan Opera conductor, will succeed Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning with the season of 1962-63. Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, announced at Symphony Hall that Dr. Munch intends to retire at the end of next season.

Dr. Munch will have served 13 years as music director, thus chalking up the second longest tenure in the orchestra's history. Koussevitzky held the post for 25 years.

"We hope and pray," said Mr. Cabot, "that Mr. Leinsdorf will remain with us equally as long."

Story: Page 2.

Dr. Munch, 70 Next September, Retiring After One More Season

DR. MUNCH

Continued from the First Page

"Some years ago Dr. Munch first came to me and spoke of his wish to retire. About six weeks ago he mentioned it again. The coming season, therefore, will be the last under Charles Munch.

"Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, whom Dr. Munch succeeded in the season of 1949-50, was with us for 25 years. Fortunately Dr. Munch's decision to begin here young enough to spend 25 years at the head of our orchestra. I wish it could be. But his term of 12 years will be the second longest in the history of the Boston Symphony.

"At the same time I have the great pleasure to tell you that Dr. Munch has agreed to be with us by May 1, 1962, as principal guest conductor for the season of 1962-63, and as honorary conductor for life.

He first appeared in Boston as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dec. 27, 1946. He returned in 1947 and 1948, and in October, 1948, brought the French Orchestre Nationale to Symphony Hall.

His appointment to succeed Dr. Koussevitzky was made in the Spring of 1948, and he became music director at the beginning of the 1949-50 season.

He suffered a severe illness, said to have been a heart attack, in November, 1951, and was absent from the orchestra for several months.

Pierre Monteux came from Switzerland to conduct during that period. In April, 1953, Dr. Munch was said to be suffering from excessive fatigue, and returned to France to rest. The season was completed by Richard Burgin.

Born in Vienna

[illegible] "Lohengrin" with the Metropolitan at the old Boston Opera House. He returned here with the Met in the following years.

In 1943, Leinsdorf succeeded the late Artur Rodzinski as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, but after a few months he entered the U.S. Army.

A year later he returned to civilian life. In April, 1947, he became conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

In 1956 Leinsdorf was appointed general manager of the New York City Opera Co. About three years ago he went back to the Metropolitan Opera as leading conductor and musical consultant.

Leinsdorf has been guest conductor of many orchestras in Europe, including the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam and the Berlin Philharmonic. He has appeared with the Israel Philharmonic, NBC Symphony, Chicago and Philadelphia Orchestras.

[illegible] last symphonic concerts here was as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last February.

Leinsdorf was present yesterday, sitting by Dr. Munch as the announcement was made. He said later that his plans for the coming months include conducting and recording in Europe, a vacation with his wife on the Italian island of Ischia and a Summer visit to Tanglewood.

In September he will begin the season of the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra and then will return to the Metropolitan Opera, where his duties will include revival, after several seasons, of the "Nibelungen Ring" by Wagner. He will return here next March to guest conduct the Boston Symphony.

Mrs. Leinsdorf also was present at the press conference. The Leinsdorfs with their five children, David, 18; Gregor, 16; Joshua, 15; Hester, 12 and Jenny, 9, live in Larchmont, N.Y.

REDUCTION

RATIO

14x

PM-MGP 13"x18"
METRIC GENERAL PURPOSE TARGET
PHOTOGRAPHIC

200 mm

150 mm

100 mm

A3

A4

A5

1.0 mm

1.5 mm

2.0 mm

2.5 mm

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

ABCDEFGHIJKLMNOPQRSTUVWXYZ
abcdefghijklmnopqrstuvwxyz
1234567890

1.0 1.1 1.25 1.4 1.6 1.8

PRECISION℠ RESOLUTION TARGETS

Century

A&P

1303 Geneva Avenue
St. Paul, MN 55119

Dr. Munch to Retire at End of Next Season; Met Opera's Erich Leinsdorf Will Take Over

(UPI Telephoto)

TALKING OVER THE BOSTON SYMPHONY — Music Director Charles Munch (right) chats with his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, after yesterday's concert. Other pictures on page 16.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Dr. Charles Munch will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera.

This news came yesterday afternoon from Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, at a conference in the conductor's room at Symphony Hall following the Boston Symphony concert.

"It is with great sorrow that I have to say that Dr. Munch has decided to retire at the end of the next Boston Symphony season," said Cabot. "He has done so in view of the burdens of rehearsals and concert-giving and of his age. He will be 70 next September.

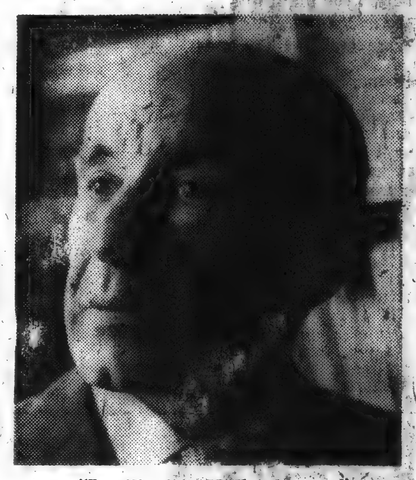
DR. MUNCH
Page Sixteen

GUIDE TO FEATURES

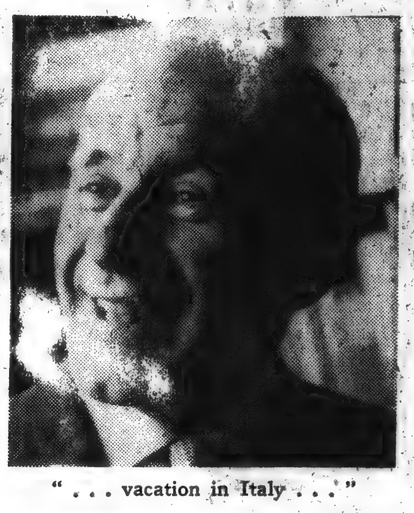
Bridge	10	Obituaries	17
Churches	8-9	Port	7
Classified	17-28	Radio-TV	11
Comics	10	Society	9
Cross-Word	9	Sports	13-16
Deaths	17	Star Gazer	16
Dr. Crane	10	Theaters	12
Editorials	4	Twistagram	9
Financial	6-7	Women	9

DR. MUNCH LISTENS to the announcement of his retirement as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Shadow of his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, shows at left.

The New Director--- Erich Leinsdorf



"I will visit Holland . . ."



". . . vacation in Italy . . ."

MUNCH RETIRES

Alternating moments of sadness and happiness on the faces of the leaders tell the story of the impending retirement of Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sadness is etched on the face of Munch as his 1962 retirement is announced. The pleasure of his new assignment lights up the face of Erich Leinsdorf as he is introduced to the Boston press and Friends of the Boston Symphony.

Globe-UPI

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
APR 22 1961

Munch to Retire; Leinsdorf Named

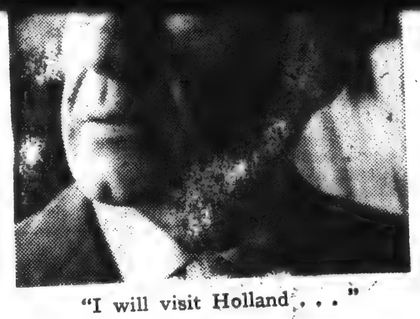
Erich Leinsdorf, noted Metropolitan Opera conductor, will succeed Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning with the season of 1962-63. Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, announced at Symphony Hall that Dr. Munch intends to retire at the end of next season.

Dr. Munch will have served 13 years as music director, thus chalking up the second longest tenure in the orchestra's history. Koussevitzky held the post for 25 years.

"We hope and pray," said Mr. Cabot, "that Mr. Leinsdorf will remain with us equally as long."

Story: Page 2.

DR. MUNCH LISTENS to the announcement of his retirement as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Shadow of his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, shows at left.



"I will visit Holland . . ."

" . . . vacation in Italy . . ."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

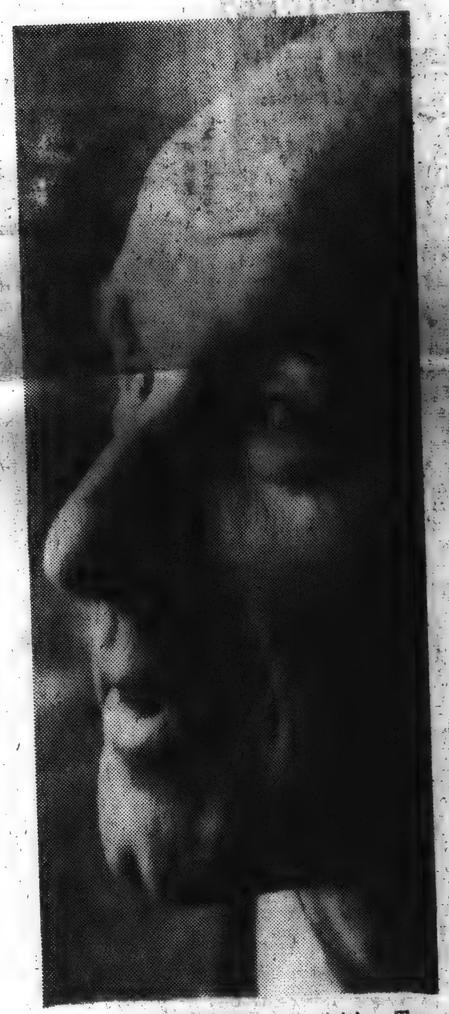
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
APR 22 1961

MUNCH RETIRES

Alternating moments of sadness and happiness on the faces of the leaders tell the story of the impending retirement of Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Sadness is etched on the face of Munch as his 1962 retirement is announced. The pleasure of his new assignment lights up the face of Erich Leinsdorf as he is introduced to the Boston press and Friends of the Boston Symphony.

ARTISTS EMBRACE as Henry B. Cabot, president of Boston Symphony trustees, stands in background.

Globe-UPI Photo Essay by Ed Fitzgerald



" . . . and look forward to visiting Tanglewood . . ."

Munch to Retire; Leinsdorf Named

Erich Leinsdorf, noted Metropolitan Opera conductor, will succeed Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra beginning with the season of 1962-63. Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, announced at Symphony Hall that Dr. Munch intends to retire at the end of next season.

Dr. Munch will have served 13 years as music director, thus chalking up the second longest tenure in the orchestra's history. Koussevitsky held the post for 25 years.

"We hope and pray," said Mr. Cabot, "that Mr. Leinsdorf will remain with us equally as long."

Story: Page 2.

Dr. Munch, 70 Next September, Retiring After One More Season

DR. MUNCH

Continued from the First Page

"Some years ago Dr. Munch first came to me and spoke of his wish to retire. About six weeks ago he mentioned it again. The coming season, therefore, will be the last under Charles Munch.

"Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, whom Dr. Munch succeeded in the season of 1949-50, was with us for 25 years. Unfortunately Dr. Munch did not begin here young enough to attend 25 years at the head of our orchestra. I wish he had. But his term of 13 years will be the second longest in the history of the Boston Symphony.

"At the same time I have the great joy to tell you that Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Mr. Erich Leinsdorf, who was guest conductor here this past Winter."

Dr. Munch, who began his conducting career in Paris in 1933, originally was a violinist and for some years was concertmaster of the Gewandhaus Orchestra in Leipzig.

He first appeared in Boston as guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Dec. 27, 1946. He returned in 1947 and 1948, and in October, 1948, brought the French Orchestre Nationale to Symphony Hall.

His appointment to succeed Dr. Koussevitzky was made in the Spring of 1948, and he became music director at the beginning of the 1949-50 season.

He suffered a severe illness, said to have been a heart attack, in November, 1951, and remained away from the orchestra for several months.

Ernest Ansermet came from Switzerland to conduct during that period. In April, 1958, Dr. Munch was said to be suffering from excessive fatigue, and returned to France to rest. The season was completed by Richard Burgin.

Born in Vienna

Leinsdorf, who will assume his post in October, 1962, was born in Vienna in 1912. The late Arturo Toscanini took an interest in his conducting career.

In the 1937-38 season, Leinsdorf became associated with the Metropolitan Opera Assn. of New York.

The following April he made his Boston debut, conducting "Lohengrin" with the Metropolitan at the old Boston Opera House. He returned here with the Met in the following years.

In 1943, Leinsdorf succeeded the late Artur Rodzinski as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, but after a few months he entered the U.S. Army.

A year later he returned to civilian life. In April, 1947, he became conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra.

In 1956 Leinsdorf was appointed general manager of the New York City Opera Co. About three years ago he went back to the Metropolitan Opera as leading conductor and musical consultant.

Leinsdorf has been guest conductor of many orchestras in Europe, including the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam and London Philharmonic. He has appeared with the Israel Philharmonic, the NBC Symphony, the Los Angeles and Philadelphia Orchestras.

Leinsdorf's first symphonic conducting here was as guest of the Boston Symphony Orchestra last February.

Leinsdorf was present yesterday, sitting by Dr. Munch as the announcement was made. He said later that his plans for the coming months include conducting and recording in Europe, a vacation with his wife on the Italian island of Ischia and a Summer visit to Tanglewood.

In September he will begin the season of the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra and then will return to the Metropolitan Opera, where his duties will include revival, after several seasons, of the "Nibelungen Ring" by Wagner. He will return here next March to guest conduct the Boston Symphony.

Mrs. Leinsdorf also was present at the press conference. The Leinsdorfs with their five children, David, 18; Gregor, 16; Joshua, 15; Hester, 12 and Jenny, 9, live in Larchmont, N.Y.

Vintage Season For Conductors

By ROBERT TAYLOR

It is impossible to view the Boston Symphony season just past other than in the light of Charles Munch's projected retirement. But we should be doing both the music and Dr. Munch a disservice if we attempted to cram a survey of The Munch Years together with an appraisal of the 80th season. So let us, for now, merely salute the great conductor at the close of his penultimate year, and turn to the music he presented.

The statistics are in last Friday's program book: the total, 78 works by 41 composers. They contain a number of surprises. For example, criticism of Dr. Munch in the past has often hinged on the fact that he was presumed to push French composition at the expense of the classical favorites.

Cold integers, nevertheless, speak differently. The composer who was more popular at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 80th season than any other was Beethoven. No less than seven Beethoven scores were offered — and surely this is enough to satisfy even the staunchest traditionalist.

'Gloria' Tops

The second most-played composers are also hallowed by tradition: Mozart and Brahms (5 each). Bach comes next, with four compositions. Only when we reach the next rank do we discover a French name, Poulenc, who had two out of his three works played for the first time at the Friday-Saturday series, one being a world premiere.

In fact, 13 compositions were introduced at this series. Not all were "new" music, such as the 12 Beethoven Contra-Dances and the Verdi overture to "Forza del destino." There were seven works by contemporary or reasonably contemporary writers like Florent Schmitt. Three were world premiers (Barber's "Die Natali" Chorale Preludes, Poulenc's "Gloria," and Schuman's Symphony No. 7) while the Schmitt Symphony No. 2 was a U.S. "first."

Of the new music Poulenc's "Gloria" stood out clearly from the rest as a deeply-felt, haunting religious evocation, a synthesis of medieval modes and modern rhythms. It received the award recently of the Music Critics Circle of New York as the best choral piece of the season, and deservedly so.

I did not hear the Samuel Barber "Die Natali," but Jules Wolffers, reporting for The Herald, found it a jingly concotion of Yuletide folk tunes. Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra struck me as a finely-wrought dodecaphonic utterance. The Piston "Three New England Sketches" proved slight but charming and unpretentious — a series of local portraits in tone that did not seem without affinities to MacDowell. William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 was beautifully calibrated in its instrumentation — and lacked emotional urgency. Tcherepnin's Symphonic Prayer was equally adroit and more compelling yet minor in force and scale.

Of the solo artists I particularly liked Byron Janis whose treatment of both Liszt Piano Concertos was too steely-fingered for some tastes, but who lent the music a rare propulsive vitality. I also thought the Belgian duo-pianists, Henry Piette and Janine Reding, offered an exceptionally stylish reading of Martinu's Two Piano Concerto; that Alexander Uninsky caught the essential romantic spirit of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 3, and that Leonid Kogan, the Soviet virtuoso, gave a glowing account of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. Mr. Wolffers hailed Joseph DePasquale, the BSO violist, for his Bartok Concerto, another memorable performance.

Soloists, Guests

The local choruses were represented: Chorus Pro Musica, New England Conservatory and Harvard-Radcliffe, as properly they should be. I thought the Pro Musica shone unforgettably in the Poulenc as did soprano, Adele Addison. The other vocalist who was singularly impressive was the bass - baritone, Giorgio Tozzi, in the recent "Romeo and Juliet."

Of the four guest conductors, Burgin, Leinsdorf, Maazel and Schippers; the middle pair made a definitive impact; so did Mr. Burgin in the mighty Mahler "Lied von der Erde," but he is, after all, essentially a splendid concertmaster. Schippers was uneven, ranging from the sublime to the frenzied. Despite his undoubted youth the talent of Mr. Maazel was clearly illumined. As for the engagement of Erich Leinsdorf, it now turns out to be the most significent fortnight of the 60-61 season. It was not a bumper year for composers (Poulenc excepted); but a vintage one for conductors new and old.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

New Englander
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,558

JUN 1961

THE ARTS

Munch to Step Down

Superstition has no part in the life of Charles Munch, who has announced that he will retire as Music Director of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra in August, 1962, at the end of his 13th season as conductor. That is the longest tenure of any conductor in the orchestra's history except for Serge Koussevitzky, his predecessor, who served 25 years.

Munch will reach 71, retirement age, in September, 1962. He will wind up his career by piloting the orchestra through its annual Berkshire Festival performances at Tanglewood, Mass.

During his 13 seasons at the head of the group, he has taken it on three foreign tours, conducted extensive concert series in this country, introduced many new works, and won innumerable awards for himself and the Boston Symphony, including nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, who has been serving as conductor and musical consultant for the Metropolitan Opera, New York, and previously held music director posts with the New York City Opera, Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra and Cleveland Orchestra.

Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, as a guest, last February, following which he accepted engagements in London, Florence, Milan and Amsterdam.

Munch Retires; Name Leinsdorf Conductor of Boston Orchestra

Charles Munch retires as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra in August, 1962, at the end of the Berkshire Festival summer, and Erich Leinsdorf takes over the post when the 1962-63 season opens in Boston's Symphony hall. This was announced in Boston yesterday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the orchestra which will end its 80th season next week.

Mr. Leinsdorf

Mr. Leinsdorf, who was 49 in February, may find that his lucky month. He first conducted the Boston orchestra last February, the same month in which he returned for a second pinch-hitting success with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in Orchestra hall. The first had been last October when he stepped in for the ailing Fritz Reiner to rescue the concert and recording introducing Sviatoslav Richter, the Russian pianist, to America.

Born in Vienna, Leinsdorf at 22 was assistant conduetor at Salzburg festivals under the direction of Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini. He came to the United States in 1938 as a conductor for New York's Metropolitan Opera, and since then has been conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and director of the New York City Opera. In 1957 he rejoined the Metropolitan as conductor and musical consultant to Rudolf Bing, the general manager. He has had many guest engagements in this country and in Europe, where he returns next month to conduct the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam.

He will be the 11th man to hold the Boston post. Among his predecessors were Artur Nikisch, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux, and Serge Koussevitzky, whose 25 years in Boston gave the orchestra its characteristic elegance of style. At the time of his retirement Mr. Munch, now 69, will have been with the orchestra 13 years.

The way things are speeded up in this country, it won't be long before a person can have a two week vacation in four days.

CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE: SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1961

ORCHESTRAS:

New Man for the Boston

During the past 87 years the Boston Symphony has had only two permanent conductors: The late Serge Koussevitzky and Charles Munch, its present director. In stately Symphony Hall on Huntington Avenue one afternoon last week, the board of trustees announced that when Munch retires in August of 1962 the nation's second oldest orchestra (the New York Philharmonic predates it) will be headed by Vienna-born Erich Leinsdorf. At 49, he is one of the Metropolitan Opera's leading maestros and the New York company's music consultant.

Although the stocky, balding Leinsdorf has conducted most of the world's finest orchestras, he took over the Boston Symphony's podium for the first time only last February. He scored an immediate hit—and in so doing beat out four of five other world-famous conductors who were after what many people consider to be the country's top musical post.

* * *

After 11½ years with the prestigious Boston Symphony Orchestra, Music Director Charles Munch, 69, last week announced that he would retire following the 1962 Tanglewood season. Beamed his designated successor, Metropolitan Opera Conductor and Musical Consultant Erich Leinsdorf: "I have always considered the Boston the pinnacle of orchestras—it is very rare wine."

The Hartford Times
48
Saturday, Apr. 29, 1961

For Boston Symphony

Munch's Record Notable; Leinsdorf's Is Promising

CHARLES MUNCH, who will retire as music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August, 1962, has brought many honors to this orchestra which many persons consider the world's greatest.

At 71 when he retires he will have served 13 seasons, longer than any of his predecessors in the orchestra's 80 years except Serge Koussevitzky, who held the baton 25 years.

* * *

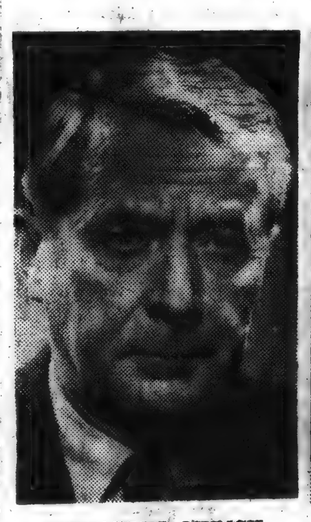
IN THOSE YEARS of Dr. Munch's service five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6, Piston's Viola Concerto, Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, Poulenc's Gloria and the Haieff Piano Concerto.

The orchestra has received two American-International Music Fund Awards, for Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2.

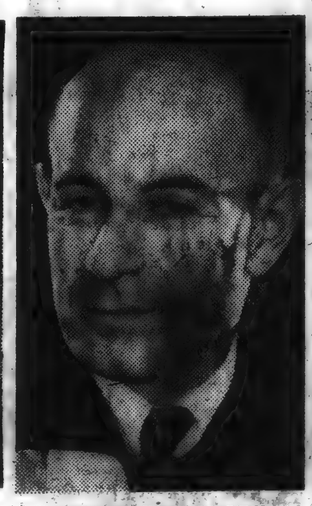
Dr. Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony of Debussy's Images. And during his tenure the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

HE LED the orchestra on three foreign tours—it was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union. Under his lead also the orchestra has commissioned works by 13 leading composers.

In addition to a distinguished record of introductions of new works, the orchestra under his leadership will be in his final year the first American orchestra to provide a full-time schedule of work for its members.



CHARLES MUNCH



ERICH LEINSDORF

* * *

HIS SUCCESSOR, Erich Leinsdorf, conducted the Boston Symphony for the first time last February. Ross Parmenter in the New York Times commented that the orchestra "besides retaining its own special richness of sonority that makes it so individual in sound [the orchestra] proved itself sufficiently responsive to the conductor to communicate his wishes, one sensed, almost exactly as he wanted them. Thus the concert fused two personalities, Mr. Leinsdorf's and the orchestra's." That fusion will become permanent in September, 1962.

Mr. Leinsdorf has had years of service with the Metropolitan Opera both as conductor and as musical consultant to the director. He has been conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester Orchestras and has conducted many others.

* * *

HIS ACTIVITIES following his work with the Boston Symphony in February give some idea of his standing: Six programs in London with the BBC Symphony, engagements in Florence and Milan; then next month in Amsterdam to conduct the Concertgebouw in the final concerts of their Beethoven Cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

Born in Vienna Feb. 4, 1912, he was trained at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934 he was chosen by Bruno Walter as his assistant at the Salzburg Festival and he was chief assistant to Arturo Toscanini at the 1935, '36 and '37 Festivals. He joined the Metropolitan Opera staff in 1937 at Toscanini's recommendation.

Herald 4/30/61

Vintage Season For Conductors

By ROBERT TAYLOR

It is impossible to view the Boston Symphony season just past other than in the light of Charles Munch's projected retirement. But we should be doing both the music and Dr. Munch a disservice if we attempted to cram a survey of The Munch Years together with an appraisal of the 80th season. So let us, for now, merely salute the great conductor at the close of his penultimate year, and turn to the music he presented.

The statistics are in last Friday's program book: the total, 78 works by 41 composers. They contain a number of surprises. For example, criticism of Dr. Munch in the past has often hinged on the fact that he was presumed to push French composition at the expense of the classical favorites.

Cold integers, nevertheless, speak differently. The composer who was more popular at the concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the 80th season than any other was Beethoven. No less than seven Beethoven scores were offered — and surely this is enough to satisfy even the staunchest traditionalist.

'Gloria' Tops

The second most-played composers are also hallowed by tradition: Mozart and Brahms (5 each). Bach comes next, with four compositions. Only when we reach the next rank do we discover a French name, Poulenc, who had two out of his three works played for the first time at the Friday-Saturday series, one being a world premiere.

In fact, 13 compositions were introduced at this series. Not all were "new" music, such as the 12 Beethoven Contra-Dances and the Verdi overture to "Forza del destino." There were seven works by contemporary or reasonably contemporary writers like Florent Schmitt. Three were world premiers (Barber's "Die Natali", Chorale Preludes, Poulenc's "Gloria," and Schuman's Symphony No. 7) while the Schmitt Symphony, No. 2 was a U.S. "first."

Of the new music Poulenc's "Gloria" stood out clearly from the rest as a deeply-felt, haunting religious evocation, a synthesis of medieval modes and modern rhythms. It received the award recently of the Music Critics Circle of New York as the best choral piece of the season, and deservedly so.

I did not hear the Samuel Barber "Die Natali," but Jules Wolffers, reporting for The Herald, found it a jingly concoction of Yuletide folk tunes. Dallapiccola's Variations for Orchestra struck me as a finely-wrought dodecaphonic utterance. The Pistin "Three New England Sketches" proved slight but charming and unpretentious — a series of local portraits in tone that did not seem without affinities to MacDowell. William Schuman's Symphony No. 7 was beautifully calibrated in its instrumentation — and lacked emotional urgency. Tcherepnin's Symphonic Prayer was equally adroit and more compelling yet unsure in force and scale.

Of the solo artists I particularly liked Byron Janis whose treatment of both Liszt Piano Concertos was too steely-fingered for some tastes, but who lent the music a rare propulsive vitality. I also thought the Belgian due-pianists, Henry Pieret and Janine Reding, offered an exceptionally stylish reading of Martinu's Two Piano Concerto; that Alexander Uninsky caught the essential romantic spirit of Prokofieff's Piano Concerto No. 3, and that Lepnid Kogan, the Soviet virtuoso, gave a glowing account of Beethoven's Violin Concerto. Mr. Wolffers hailed Joseph DePasquale, the BSO violist, for his Bartok Concerto, another memorable performance.

Soloists, Guests

The local choruses were represented: Chorus Pro Musica, New England Conservatory and Harvard-Radcliffe, as properly they should be. I thought the Pro Musica shone unforgettably in the Poulenc as did soprano, Adele Addison. The other vocalist who was singularly impressive was the bass - baritone, Giorgio Tozzi, in the recent "Romeo and Juliet."

Of the four guest conductors, Burgin, Leinsdorf, Maazel and Schippers; the middle pair made a definitive impact; so did Mr. Burgin in the mighty Mahler "Lied von der Erde," but he is, after all, essentially a splendid concertmaster. Schippers was uneven, ranging from the sublime to the frenzied. Despite his undoubted youth the talent of Mr. Maazel was clearly illumined. As for the engagement of Erich Leinsdorf, it now turns out to be the most significent fortnight of the 60-61 season. It was not a bumper year for composers (Poulenc excepted); but a vintage one for conductors new and old.

New Englander
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,558
1961

THE ARTS

Munch to Step Down

Superstition has no part in the life of Charles Munch, who has announced that he will retire as Music Director of the world-famous Boston Symphony Orchestra in August, 1962, at the end of his 13th season as conductor. That is the longest tenure of any conductor in the orchestra's history except for Serge Koussevitzky, his predecessor, who served 25 years.

Munch will reach 71, retirement age, in September, 1962. He will wind up his career by piloting the orchestra through its annual Berkshire Festival performances at Tanglewood, Mass.

During his 13 seasons at the head of the group, he has taken it on three foreign tours, conducted extensive concert series in this country, introduced many new works, and won innumerable awards for himself and the Boston Symphony, including nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, who has been serving as conductor and musical consultant for the Metropolitan Opera, New York, and previously held music director posts with the New York City Opera, Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra and Cleveland Orchestra.

Leinsdorf conducted the Boston Symphony, as a guest, last February, following which he accepted engagements in London, Florence, Milan and Amsterdam.

Munch Retires; Name Leinsdorf Conductor of Boston Orchestra

Mr. Leinsdorf

Charles Munch retires as conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra in August, 1962, at the end of the Berkshire Festival summer, and Erich Leinsdorf takes over the post when the 1962-63 season opens in Boston's Symphony hall. This was announced in Boston yesterday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the orchestra which will end its 80th season next week.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who was 49 in February, may find that his lucky month. He first conducted the Boston orchestra last February, the same month in which he returned for a second pinch-hitting success with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in Orchestra hall. The first had been last October when he stepped in for the ailing Fritz Reiner to rescue the concert and recording introducing Sviatoslav Richter, the Russian pianist, to America.

Born in Vienna, Leinsdorf at 22 was assistant conductor at Salzburg festivals under the direction of Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini. He came to the United States in 1938 as a conductor for New York's Met opera, and since then has been conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and director of the New York City Opera. In 1957 he rejoined the Metropolitan as conductor and musical consultant to Rudolf Bing, the general manager. He has had many guest engagements in this country and in Europe, where he returns next month to conduct the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam.

He will be the 11th man to hold the Boston post. Among his predecessors were Artur Nikisch, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux, and Serge Koussevitzky, whose 25 years in Boston gave the orchestra its characteristic elegance of style. At the time of his retirement Mr. Munch, now 69, will have been with the orchestra 13 years.

The way things are speeded up in this country, it won't be long before a person can have a two week vacation in four days.

CHICAGO DAILY TRIBUNE, SATURDAY, APRIL 22, 1961

225

The Hartford Times
48
Saturday, Apr. 29, 1961

For Boston Symphony

Munch's Record Notable; Leinsdorf's Is Promising

CHARLES MUNCH, who will retire as music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August, 1962, has brought many honors to this orchestra which many persons consider the world's greatest.

At 71 when he retires he will have served 13 seasons, longer than any of his predecessors in the orchestra's 80 years except Serge Koussevitzky, who held the baton 25 years.

IN THOSE YEARS of Dr. Munch's service five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6, Piston's Viola Concerto, Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, Poulenc's Gloria and the Haieff Piano Concerto.

The orchestra has received two American-International Music Fund Awards, for Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2.

Dr. Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony of Debussy's Images. And during his tenure the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

HE LED the orchestra on three foreign tours—it was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union. Under his lead also the orchestra has commissioned works by 13 leading composers.

In addition to a distinguished record of introductions of new works, the orchestra under his leadership will be in his final year the first American orchestra to provide a full-time schedule of work for its members.

CHARLES MUNCH

HIS SUCCESSOR, Erich Leinsdorf, conducted the Boston Symphony for the first time last February. Ross Parmenter in the New York Times commented that the orchestra "besides retaining its own special richness of sonority that makes it so individual in sound [the orchestra] proved itself sufficiently responsive to the conductor to communicate his wishes, one sensed, almost exactly as he wanted them. Thus the concert fused two personalities, Mr. Leinsdorf's and the orchestra's." That fusion will become permanent in September, 1962.

Mr. Leinsdorf has had years of service with the Metropolitan Opera both as conductor and as musical consultant to the director.

ERICH LEINSDORF

He has been conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester Orchestras and has conducted many others.

HIS ACTIVITIES following his work with the Boston Symphony in February give some idea of his standing: Six programs in London with the BBC Symphony, engagements in Florence and Milan; then next month in Amsterdam to conduct the Concertgebouw in the final concerts of their Beethoven Cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

Born in Vienna Feb. 4, 1912, he was trained at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934 he was chosen by Bruno Walter as his assistant at the Salzburg Festival and he was chief assistant to Arturo Toscanini at the 1936, '36 and '37 Festivals. He joined the Metropolitan Opera staff in 1937 at Toscanini's recommendation.

ORCHESTRAS

New Man for the Boston

During the past 67 years the Boston Symphony has had only two permanent conductors: The late Serge Koussevitsky and Charles Munch, its present director. In stately Symphony Hall on Huntington Avenue one afternoon last week, the board of trustees announced that when Munch retires in August of 1962 the nation's second oldest orchestra (the New York Philharmonic predates it) will be headed by Vienna-born Erich Leinsdorf. At 49, he is one of the Metropolitan Opera's leading maestros and the New York company's music consultant.

Although the stocky, balding Leinsdorf has conducted most of the world's finest orchestras, he took over the Boston Symphony podium for the first time only last February. He scored an immediate hit—and in so doing beat out four of five of the world-famous conductors who were often what many people consider to be the country's top musical post.

After 11½ years with the prestigious Boston Symphony Orchestra, Music Director Charles Munch, 69, last week announced that he would retire following the Tanglewood season. Beamed his distinguished successor, Metropolitan Opera conductor and Musical Consultant Erich Leinsdorf, who has also considered the [illegible] on the pinnacle of orchestras—it is very rare wine."

Munch Laying Down Baton in 1962; Will Be Succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf

BOSTON (UPI)—Charles Munch announced Friday he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August 1962 by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

[The change will become effective immediately following the Tanglewood season at Lenox.]

The announcement o fMunch's retirement came through an orchestra official during an emotional news conference at the conclusion of the Boston Symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

'Great Burden'

Leinsdorf, in Boston this week for the Met's annual tour, sat quietly beside the 70 - year - old Munch as Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the symphony, told newsmen that Munch had decided to retire because of the "great burden" imposed by one of the music world's most prestigious posts.

Munch, a handsome, tousle-haired man whose offstage shyness is in striking contrast to his energetic performance on the podium, took over as 10th conductor of the 80 - year - old Boston Symphony in October 1949. He succeeded the near - legendary Serge Koussevitzky, whose autocratic methods during his 25-year reign had built the orchestra to one of the world's finest.

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 49, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy, and Salzburg, Austria music festivals.

Married and the father of five, Leinsdorf made his first guest appearance with the Boston Symphony in February of this year. A graduate of the Austrian State Academy of Music, he has been conductor of opera and symphony at Bologna, Trieste and San Remo, Italy.

Leinsdorf first came to the United States in 1937, serving with the Met, then conducting in Cleveland, St. Louis, Los Angeles and at Rochester, N. Y. He was director of the New York City Opera Company in 1956 before moving to the Met.

He said he accepted the offer at Boston "36 hours after it was made." Asked about his plans for the Symphony, he said, "I accepted the appointment so recent-

Munch Retiring
Continued on Page 3

CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

Munch Retiring

Continued From First Page

ly I have not had enough time to absorb the emotional shock and haven't had time to make plans."

Hard To Get

Cabot said that Munch had approached the symphony's board of trustees about six weeks ago, asking that it begin a search for a successor in the arduous post. Munch had suffered a heart seizure a few years ago.

Cabot said that when the board had decided on Leinsdorf, members had to visit New York several times to persuade Met manager Rudolph Bing to release the conductor.

The change of conductors was expected to touch off a wholesale chain reaction of appointments and successions in the world of music. Met officials in New York gave no indication immediately who would take Leinsdorf's place.

Enervating Duties

When Munch steps down next year, he will have served as music director (his formal title) of the Boston Symphony for 13 years, longer than any other conductor except Koussevitzky.

During that time, the duties of the post have expanded until at present it is a year-round job. Besides having the longest concert season of any American orchestra, the Boston Symphony also operates the Berkshire Music School, the Berkshire Music Festival and the annual Tanglewood concerts at Lenox.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE
SUBSCRIPTION RATES
—BY CARRIER—

EAGLE - Apr 22, 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 371,393
APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf to Take Dr. Munch Baton

Dr. Charles Munch, 69, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for more than 11 years, yesterday announced he will retire in August, 1962. He is to be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor and musical consultant of the New York Metropolitan Opera, who first conducted the Boston Symphony as a guest last February.

Leinsdorf, born in Vienna, was only 23 when he became chief assistant to the great Arturo Toscanini. He served during World War II in the Army, giving up his post as conductor of the Cleveland Symphony Orchestra.

After the war he became conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Company. In both this country and in Europe, he has auditioned scores of young singers, many of whom became famous stars. He has recently conducted in London, Florence and Milan. He lives in Larchmont, L. I., with his wife and their five children.

Dr. Munch, an Alsatian, was of the Paris Conservatory Orchestra and the Paris Philharmonic when he was chosen by Boston Symphony Orchestra directors to succeed Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at the start of the 1949 season.

The tall, silver-haired conductor had been guest conductor of symphonies in New York, Chicago, Montreal, Cleveland,

Erich Leinsdorf

Charles Munch

in Texas and on the Pacific Coast.

Under Dr. Munch's leadership, the Boston Symphony's musical style was changed from the somber, sonorous interpretations of the Koussevitsky era to the bright, clear resonant tones preferred by the French conductor.

Always noted as one of the premier orchestras of the world, the Symphony enchanced even that sterling reputation when Munch took it on a tour of Europe in 1952 and Russia, in 1956, first time it had ever performed outside the U. S.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
APR 22 1961

MUNCH IS LEAVING BOSTON SYMPHONY

Leinsdorf to Succeed Him as Director in 1962

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 21—Charles Munch will retire as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1961-62 season. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Association.

The retirement of Dr. Munch was announced at the end of today's concert by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees. It will take effect in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox."

Dr. Munch will become 71 years old in September, 1962. He was appointed director of the Boston Symphony in 1949 at the retirement of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at the end of his twenty-fifth season.

Mr. Cabot said that Dr. Munch had first mentioned retirement several years ago. He said the resignation now was accepted with regret by the trustees. Noting that Dr. Munch's length of tenure was second only to Dr. Koussevitsky's, Mr. Cabot commented that "we are sorry he was not younger when he took over so that he, too, might be retiring after twenty-five years."

The announcement was made in Dr. Munch's dressing quarters. The Boston conductor remained silent throughout. He sat next to Mr. Leinsdorf during a brief press conference. Then he arose embraced Mr. Leinsdorf, shook hands silently with one veteran Boston music critic and with bowed head walked into an inner room.

Orchestra Won Awards

Under Dr. Munch the orchestra has received many awards. Among them were five New York Music Critics Circle awards and two American-International Music Fund awards and nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. Dr. Munch personally received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the orchestra of Debussy's "Images."

In addition to extensive concerts in this country, Dr. Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours—to Europe in 1952 to the Soviet Union in 1956 and to the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960. He is the author of "I Am a Conductor," published in Paris in 1954.

CHARLES MUNCH

Munch Here Next Season, Perhaps for Last Time

The announcement last week that Charles Munch will retire as musical director of the Boston Symphony in August, 1962, means that his appearance in next season's Bushnell Symphony Series will bring his final bow to a Hartford audience.

Munch, a favorite here through the numerous Boston Symphony concerts, has conducted on the Bushnell stage since he succeeded Serge Koussevitzky a dozen years ago.

He is stepping out a month before his 71st birthday. He will be succeeded in Boston by Erich Leinsdorf, who has performed here as conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic.

Maestro Munch is scheduled to direct his final Hartford concert next February 19, the fourth event in the 1961-62 Bushnell series by world-famous visiting orchestras. He will have as guest soloist in that concert the French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who is professor of the 'cello at the Paris Conservatory and who has performed with most of Europe's top-ranking orchestras.

Other concerts in the Bushnell series next season, for which ticket applications are now being accepted at the Bushnell box office, will be performed by:

The Detroit Symphony with Paul Paray conducting and the young American pianist Lorin Hollander as guest artist; the Boston Symphony in a December concert under the baton of Europe's celebrated Ernest Ansermet; the Cleveland Orchestra with George Szell conducting and Italy's 19-year-old Maurizio Pollini, winner of the International Chopin Piano Competition, as soloist; the Philadelphia Orchestra with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

Dr. Munch has brought many honors to his orchestra, at least have been given it by the New York Music Critics Circle for compositions it introduced to New York. The orchestra has received two American International Music Fund awards, and nine Grand Prix de Disques as well as the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde for outstanding recordings.

STARTS WED., MAY 17th

The Providence Sunday Journal, May 7, 1961

'Blankety-Blank' Leinsdorf

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK — (UPI) — In case the musicians of the Boston Symphony are not yet aware of what is in store for them when Erich Leinsdorf takes over as their music director and conductor, this will give them an idea.

When looking down upon rehearsing musicians from his conductorial podium, nothing reassures Leinsdorf more than torrents of musicianly sweat. These torrents show the boys are putting their hearts into their work, and he figures it is the conductor's job to stimulate the flow.

"I want musicians to go home from my rehearsals and say angrily but wearily to their wives, 'That Leinsdorf is a blank-blank blankety-blank,'" he once told this writer.

"Then, after they've relaxed over a bottle of beer, I want them to modify the characterization somewhat. I want them to say, 'Leinsdorf is a blank-blank blankety-blank but he is a musician.'"

The maestro was exaggerating, of course. This writer knows of no musician who has ever played under him who'd apply a blank-blank to him (he's truly a nice guy) — or who doesn't give him the full credit of being a musician to his very marrow, dedicated and even obsessed.

Great concerts, great performances, fully realized music — these so-called musical "miracles" — are never accidents compounded of inspiration and the states of musicianly digestions, in his opinion.

They're made — they're always made, said this man who believes solid, constructive work is the answer to just about any challenge. They're made by the toil and sweat of rehearsing when players and conductor get the feel of one another and unify their ideas of what their labors are all about.

ERICH LEINSDORF

Leinsdorf will succeed Charles Munch at the helm of one of the world's finest orchestras at the beginning of the 1962-1963 season. When Munch steps down he will be 71 years old and will have completed 13 glorious seasons with the Bostonians.

His successor will then be only 50 years old, with his energies not only bounding but increasing. No one quite understands how he manages to get all his work done since there is so much of it but the only possible answer is an incredible personal efficiency.

He is not the type of musician who exalts conversationally over music. His approach is matter-of-fact, entirely practical. He displays no more esthetic fervor orally than does a businessman over the day-by-day staples of his business.

As a conductor he straddles the musical field as few ever had. As an opera conductor, he is pre-eminent. Next season he will conduct the four operas of Wagner's "Ring" three times at the Metropolitan, for instance. But let no one say he is a "Wagnerian conductor" in his presence. Such a sayer gets sat upon. And justly. He conducts any opera with marvelous clarity and comprehension.

The repertoire of the symphony orchestra is no less fully at his command. You can be carried away by his realizations of the fine-spun esthetics of the Mozart scores and be quite persuaded that they represent his particular affinity, only to be amazed at his next concert by the sense and beauty which he draws from some contemporary atonalist who until then had always seemed on the turbid side.

228

BRUNO USSHER
Music - Drama Reviewer

Representing
EVENING TRIBUNE
San Diego, California

Los Angeles 26, Calif.
3446 Winslow Dr.
Phone NOrmandy 5-7916

MAY 1 1961
SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA
Monday, May 1, 1961

CURTAIN CALL

- Bowl to Mark Anniversary
- Hollywood 9-Week Season Due
- Leinsdorf to Conduct Opener

By BRUNO USSHER

LOS ANGELES—Major plans for the Hollywood Bowl season have been arranged. It will be the 40th series of "Symphonies Under the Stars" in succession and will open July 6 under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Association. Met soprano Inge Borkh will be soloist. The orchestra will be the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

USSHER

During the nine-week season, Tuesday and Thursday concerts, Saturday "pops" and outstanding Friday features will be presented, according to George A. Kuyper, general director of the Hollywood Bowl Association.

Kuyper announced that the symphony (Tuesday and Thursday nights) will be conducted, in addition to Leinsdorf, by William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein, former music director of the Los Angeles Philharmonic; Zubin Mehta, music director of the Montreal Symphony; Walter Hendl, associate conductor of the Chicago Symphony; Howard Mitchell, principal director, Washington, D.C. National Orchestra, and Andre Kostelanetz of the New York Philharmonic.

All the conductors except Mehta have had previous bowl experience. Mehta, a native of Bombay, India, made his Pacific Coast debut with the Los Angeles Philharmonic last winter. Details of Friday and Saturday programs, Kuyper promised, will be announced shortly.

CHANGE IN CONDUCTORS: Retirement of Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony has been announced. It will be effective in September, 1962, at the close of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch inaugurated the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last 10 years have increased from five to 10 during the winter season. It was announced recently that the orchestra, which already has the longest season of any in the country, will extend it to 50 weeks in 1961-62.

Leinsdorf has filled important conducting engagements in this country since the early 1930s. He made his debut with the Boston Symphony in February. Next month he will return to the Concertgebouw at Amsterdam to conduct the final concerts of the Beethoven cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland festival.

Today Leinsdorf ranks as one of the most versatile baton figures in this country and abroad. It is to be hoped that the Boston Symphony will share his genius with the country as a whole through radio, if not television.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

APR 22 1961

Munch News Surprises Music World

The retirement of Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the end of [illegible] season has taken the Boston music scene by surprise.

He will be replaced by Eric Leinsdorf, now conductor and musical consultant with the Metropolitan Opera Asso.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's board of trustees, made the announcement after yesterday's concert.

Munch, now 70, will have finished the second-longest term in the symphony's history next season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

MAY 3 1961

Leinsdorf Vice Munch at Boston

Boston, May 2.

Charles Munch is [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orch at the end of the 1961-62 season and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Assn.

Munch [illegible] his baton for the last time in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. He will be 71 in September, 1962. He was appointed director of the Boston Symphony in 1949 at the retirement of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the end of his 25th season.

The conductor's retirement was disclosed by Henry B. Cabot, prexy of the orch's trustees at the close of Friday (21) concert in Symphony Hall. Munch's length of tenure was second only to Koussevitzky's Cabot said: "We're sorry he was not younger when he took over so that he, too, might be retiring after 25 years.

Cabot [illegible] that Dr. Munch had first mentioned retiring several years ago. He said the resignation now was accepted with regret by the trustees.

Under Munch, the Boston Symphony has [illegible] New York Music Critics Circle awards and two American-International Music Fund awards, [illegible] Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Musikfreunde. Munch personally received the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences Award for his recording with the orch of Debussy's "Images."

THE GUARDIAN. FRIDAY. JUNE 2.

Bach-breaking

by Neville Cardus

CHARLES MUNCH was given small scope to show his gifts as a conductor at Thursday night's concert of the London Philharmonic Orchestra in the Royal Festival Hall, for the programme mainly consisted of the D minor Piano Concerto of Bach, his Fifth Brandenburg Concerto, and Roussel's Third Symphony. Rosalyn Tureck, soloist in the Bach music, could easily have set the tempi—quick and slow—without much risk of breakdown.

The performances were good enough, Miss Tureck's fingers are quick to respond to her finely musical mental promptings, though something of geniality was missing in the allegro finale of the Brandenburg piece. It is perhaps a pity that Miss Tureck is rather inclined to become obsessed by Anglo-Teutonic persistent uncritical obeisance to Bach. She recently played the E flat concerto of Beethoven in London with an imaginative range, technical strength, and sensibility, proving that she can cope with music of humane and manifold variety of expression. Criticism of Bach in this part of the world is, of course, regarded as blasphemy. In fact Samuel Butler cast the only critical stone thrown in a lifetime at Bach, when he wrote—"Bach wriggles (and Wagner writhes)." The persistent rosalia in Bach's instrumental music is certainly often more than tedious in my ears.

This concert was given as "a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky," and was opened with a performance of an "Elegy" to the famous conductor, composed by Howard Hanson—a pleasantly scored sequence of funerary musical platitudes—"poor fellow—but he's gone to a better place"—into which cheerfulness didn't really break for a moment. Koussevitzsky died ten years ago almost to the day. But are we to be given an "elegy" or "requiem" marking each decade after a famous musician's passing,—adding a new terror to death, and to existence in our concert halls?

MUNCH'S BOSTON PROGRAMME

DAILY TELEGRAPH FRI JUNE 2

PRECISION OF L.P.O.

Charles Munch, who was appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1948 in succession to Serge Koussevitsky, had the happy idea of presenting two works specifically connected with Boston and its orchestra in his concert with the London Philharmonic Orchestra at the Festival Hall last night.

These were Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Koussevitsky" and Roussel's third symphony.

Roussel's work is the sort that fits a crack American orchestra like a glove. Much credit is due, therefore, to the London Philharmonic Orchestra for playing it last night with an exhilarating precision and rhythmic verve.

Charles Munch directed the performance with a sure grasp of the music's style, pulse and continuity. He has a special feeling for Roussel that tends on occasion to emphasise its brash assertiveness at the expense of its line but in all other respects is hugely convincing.

A sense of musical continuity was precisely the quality lacking in Rosalyn Tureck's performance of Bach's D minor keyboard concerto earlier in the programme.—S. P.

TRIBUTE TO SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

TIMES 6/2/61

The London Philharmonic Orchestra dedicated their concert in the Festival Hall last night to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, who died 10 years ago.

The programme contained two works directly connected with Koussevitzky himself, the programme-book stated that Mrs. Koussevitzky was intending to be a member of the audience, and the evening's music-making was under the direction of Mr. Charles Munch, who succeeded Koussevitzky as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The most personal tribute came at the start of the programme in Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44, a work commissioned jointly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the orchestra's seventy-fifth birthday, and first performed under Mr. Munch in 1956.

As Hanson and Koussevitzky were close friends as well as colleagues, this music springs from human feeling first and foremost. Its idiom is tonal rather than experimental, at times (though not consistently) recalling Vaughan Williams in the spiritual vein of the fifth symphony. To end the programme there was Roussel's third symphony in G minor, which was written for the fiftieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and given its premiere under Koussevitzky in 1930.

Typically French in its impersonal, sophisticated emotion, this symphony is nevertheless a riot of rhythmic life and orchestral colour; it needs a virtuoso performance, and it certainly came as near to receiving one as was in Mr. Munch's power to solicit from his players. His vital, fluid beat and the elastic agility of his whole body in the bigger climaxes (at times he seemed about to become airborne at any minute) made it almost impossible to believe the programme-book's claim that he entered the world in 1891.

The presence of Bach's D minor piano concerto and fifth Brandenburg concerto in a concert of this kind seemed a little less relevant, nevertheless Miss Rosalyn Tureck lent her own individual kind of distinction to both performances. At times her restrained tempi and calculated approach (in terms of touch and accentuation) to every single note robbed the music of some of its natural vitality, and certainly the powerful, introspective intensity of her manner somewhat dwarfed the well-meaning contributions from Mr. Henry Datyner and Mr. David Sandeman in the fifth Brandenburg. Yet distinction always remains in whatever this remarkable artist chooses to do.

228

BRUNO USSHER
Music - Drama Reviewer

Representing
EVENING TRIBUNE
San Diego, California

Los Angeles 26, Calif.
3446 Winslow Dr.
Phone NOrmandy 5-7916

MAY 1 1961
a-18 EVENING TRIBUNE SAN DIEGO, CALIFORNIA Monday, May 1, 1961

Movies . . . Entertainment . . .

CURTAIN CALL

- Bowl to Mark Anniversary
- Hollywood 9-Week Season Due
- Leinsdorf to Conduct Opener

By BRUNO USSHER

LOS ANGELES—Major plans for the Hollywood Bowl season have been arranged. It will be the 40th series of "Symphonies Under the Stars" in succession and will open July 6 under the baton of Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Association. Met soprano Inge Borkh will be soloist. The orchestra will be the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

USSHER

During the nine-week season, Tuesday and Thursday concerts, Saturday "pops" and outstanding Friday features will be presented, according to George A. Kuyper, general director of the Hollywood Bowl Association.

Kuyper announced that the symphony (Tuesday and Thursday nights) will be conducted, in addition to Leinsdorf, by William Steinberg, music director of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, Alfred Wallenstein, former music director of the Los Angeles Philharmonic; Zubin Mehta, music director of the Montreal Symphony; Walter Hendl, associate conductor of the Chicago Symphony; Howard Mitchell, principal director, Washington, D.C. National Orchestra, and Andre Kostelanetz of the New York Philharmonic.

All the conductors except Mehta have had previous bowl experience. Mehta, a native of Bombay, India, made his Pacific Coast debut with the Los Angeles Philharmonic last winter. Details of Friday and Saturday programs, Kuyper promised, will be announced shortly.

CHANGE IN CONDUCTORS: Retirement of Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony has been announced. It will be effective in September, 1962, at the close of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch inaugurated the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last 10 years have increased from five to 10 during the winter season. It was announced recently that the orchestra, which already has the longest season of any in the country, will extend it to 50 weeks in 1961-62.

Leinsdorf has filled important conducting engagements in this country since the early 1930s. He made his debut with the Boston Symphony in February. Next month he will return to the Concertgebouw at Amsterdam to conduct the final concerts of the Beethoven cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland festival.

Today Leinsdorf ranks as one of the most versatile baton figures in this country and abroad. It is to be hoped that the Boston Symphony will share his genius with the country as a whole through radio, if not television.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

APR 28 1961

Munch News Surprises Music World

The retirement of Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, at the end of the season has taken the Boston music scene by surprise.

He will be replaced by Eric Leinsdorf, now conductor and musical consultant with the Metropolitan Opera Asso.

S. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, announcement after yesterday's concert.

Munch held the position for 12 years, succeeding Dr. Serge Koussevitsky.

Munch, now 70, will have finished the second-longest term in the symphony's history next season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Variety
NEW YORK, N. Y.
Weekly Amusements

MAY 3 1961

Leinsdorf Vice Munch at Boston

Boston, May 2.

Charles Munch is [illegible] the Boston Symphony Orch at the end of the 1961-62 season and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Assn.

Munch [illegible] his baton for the last time in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. He will be 71 in September, 1962. He was appointed director of the Boston Symphony in 1949 at the retirement of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the end of his 25th season.

The conductor's retirement was disclosed by Henry B. Cabot, prexy of the orch's trustees at the close of Friday (21) concert in Symphony Hall. Munch's length of tenure was second only to Koussevitzky's Cabot said: "We're sorry he was not younger when he took over so that he, too, might be retiring after 25 years."

Cabot [illegible] that Dr. Munch had [illegible] retiring several [illegible] the resignation [illegible] with regret by the [illegible]

[illegible] Boston Symphony [illegible] New York Metropolitan awards and [illegible] International Music Fund [illegible] Grand Prix du Disque [illegible] Medal of the Vienna [illegible] Gemeinde. Munch personally received the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences Award for his recording with the orch of Debussy's "Images."

THE GUARDIAN. FRIDAY. JUNE 2.

Bach-breaking

by Neville Cardus

CHARLES MUNCH was given small scope to show his gifts as a conductor at Thursday night's concert of the London Philharmonic Orchestra in the Royal Festival Hall, for the programme mainly consisted of the D minor Piano Concerto of Bach, his Fifth Brandenburg Concerto, and Roussel's Third Symphony. Rosalyn Tureck, soloist in the Bach music, could easily have set the tempi—quick and slow—without much risk of breakdown.

The performances were good enough. Miss Tureck's fingers are quick to respond to her finely musical mental promptings, though something of geniality was missing in the allegro finale of the Brandenburg piece. It is perhaps a pity that Miss Tureck is rather inclined to become obsessed by Anglo-Teutonic persistent uncritical obeisance to Bach. She recently played the E flat concerto of Beethoven in London with an imaginative range, technical strength, and sensibility, proving that she can cope with music of humane and manifold variety of expression. Criticism of Bach in this part of the world is, of course, regarded as blasphemy. In fact, Samuel Butler cast the only critical stone thrown in a lifetime at Bach when he wrote—"Bach wriggles (and Wagner writhes)." The persistent rosalia in Bach's instrumental music is certainly often more than tedious in my ears.

This concert was given as "a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky," and was opened with a performance of an "Elegy" to the famous conductor, composed by Howard Hanson—a pleasantly scored sequence of funerary musical platitudes—"poor fellow—but he's gone to a better place"—into which cheerfulness didn't really break for a moment. Koussevitzky died ten years ago almost to the day. But are we to be given an "elegy" or "requiem" marking each decade after a famous musician's passing,—adding a new terror to death, and to existence in our concert halls?

MUNCH'S BOSTON PROGRAMME

DAILY TELEGRAPH FRI June 2

PRECISION OF L.P.O.

Charles Munch, who was appointed conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1948 in succession to Serge Koussevitsky, had the happy idea of presenting two works specifically connected with Boston and its orchestra in his concert with the London Philharmonic Orchestra at the Festival Hall last night.

These were Howard Hanson's "Elegy in Memory of Koussevitsky" and Roussel's third symphony.

Roussel's work is the sort that fits a crack American orchestra like a glove. Much credit is due, therefore, to the London Philharmonic Orchestra for playing it last night with an exhilarating precision and rhythmic verve.

Charles Munch directed the performance with a sure grasp of the music's style, pulse and continuity. He has a special feeling for Roussel that tends on occasion to emphasise its brash assertiveness at the expense of its line but in all other respects is hugely convincing.

A sense of musical continuity was precisely the quality lacking in Rosalyn Tureck's performance of Bach's D minor keyboard concerto earlier in the programme.—S. P.

TRIBUTE TO SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY

TIMES 6/2/61

The London Philharmonic Orchestra dedicated their concert in the Festival Hall last night to the memory of Serge Koussevitzky, who died 10 years ago.

The programme contained two works directly connected with Koussevitzky himself, the programme-book stated that Mrs. Koussevitzky was intending to be a member of the audience, and the evening's music-making was under the direction of Mr. Charles Munch, who succeeded Koussevitzky as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The most personal tribute came at the start of the programme in Howard Hanson's Elegy in Memory of Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44, a work commissioned jointly by the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Koussevitzky Music Foundation for the orchestra's seventy-fifth birthday, and first performed under Mr. Munch in 1956.

As Hanson and Koussevitzky were close friends as well as colleagues, this music springs from human feeling first and foremost. Its idiom is tonal rather than experimental, at times (though not consistently) recalling Vaughan Williams in the spiritual vein of the fifth symphony. To end the programme there was Roussel's third symphony in G minor, which was written for the fiftieth anniversary of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and given its premiere under Koussevitzky in 1930.

Typically French in its impersonal, sophisticated emotion, this symphony is nevertheless a riot of rhythmic life and orchestral colour; it needs a virtuoso performance, and it certainly came as near to receiving one as was in Mr. Munch's power to solicit from his players. His vital, fluid beat and the elastic agility of his whole body in the bigger climaxes (at times he seemed about to become airborne at any minute) made it almost impossible to believe the programme-book's claim that he entered the world in 1891.

The presence of Bach's D minor piano concerto and fifth Brandenburg concerto in a concert of this kind seemed a little less relevant, nevertheless Miss Rosalyn Tureck lent her own individual kind of distinction to both performances. At times her restrained tempi and calculated approach (in terms of touch and accentuation) to every single note robbed the music of some of its natural vitality, and certainly the powerful, introspective intensity of her manner somewhat dwarfed the well-meaning contributions from Mr. Henry Datyner and Mr. David Sandeman in the fifth Brandenburg. Yet distinction always remains in whatever this remarkable artist chooses to do.

165 Church Street – New York

ROCHESTER, N.Y.
DEMOCRAT & CHRONICLE
D. 126,055 S. 184,493

APR 22 1961

229.0

Leinsdorf Tenure Here 'Maturing Period'

By HARVEY SOUTHGATE
Democrat and Chronicle Music Critic

A steady rise in prestige, which began in his early 20s, has brought Erich Leinsdorf to the leadership of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, one of the world's most important musical posts.

Along the way of a career that began under the influence of the great Toscanini, his eight-year service as conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic was, as he often said here, a "maturing period." Since he left here in December, 1955, to become general director of the New York City Opera Company, he has held one important post after another, leading to his recent assignment as conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

Leinsdorf took over the Rochester Philharmonic post in 1947, succeeding Jose Iturbi, who had also served an eight-year tenure. He was impressed at once, he said, by the quality of the Rochester orchestra, and he took pride in the spring tours which brought it to the attention of other cities. He took it to New York's Carnegie Hall a number of times, the last in March, 1954. He was credited with bringing about a marked development of the orchestra.

After leaving Rochester Leinsdorf was with the New York City Opera about a year, then filled numerous engagements as guest conductor here and abroad before settling down with the Metropolitan Opera conducting department. Many notable recordings of operatic and orchestral works have been made under his direction.

Born in Vienna in 1912, Leinsdorf came into national notice in 1937 when he stepped in at short notice to conduct a Metropolitan Opera performance as substitute for Artur Bodansky. He became chief conductor of the Wagnerian operas, the youngest ever to fill that post. He was conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra for two seasons until called for military srevice in 1943.

In Boston Leinsdorf succeeds some of the most illustrious figures in musical history, such as Munch, Serge Koussevitzky, Pierre Monteux and Artur Nikisch.

Recently the orchestra society decided to extend the symphony season to 50 weeks, of 221 concerts, thus making it virtually a year-round institution. This was done, according to President Henry B. Cabot, to permit the orchestra members to "concentrate on musical matters without the problems common to most symphony orchestra players of finding extra and sometimes non-musical means to support themselves."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

RED BANK, N.J.
REGISTER
D. 11,917

MAY 11 1961

CHOSEN — Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, 49, has been named to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Charles Munch retires at the end of the group's 1962 season.

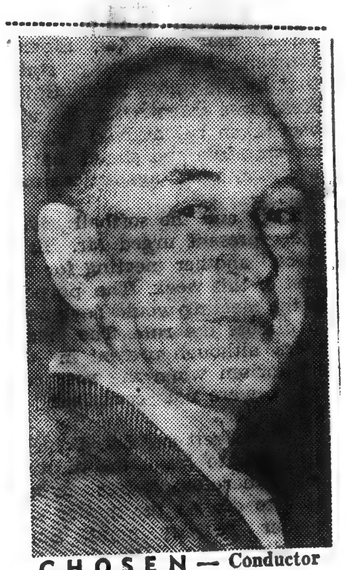
Hour (e)
NORWALK, Conn.
Circ. 18,407
MAY 4 1961

CHOSEN — Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, 49, has been named to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Charles Munch retires at the end of the group's 1962 season.

165 Church Street – New York

OGDENSBURG, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D. 5,460

MAY 8 1961



CHOSEN — Conductor Erich Leinsdorf, 49, has been named to lead the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Charles Munch retires at the end of the group's 1962 season.

at present it is a year round job. Besides having the longest concert season of an American orchestra, the Boston Symphony also operates the Berkshire Music School, the Berkshire Music Festival and the annual Tanglewood concerts at Lenox, Mass.

accused of operating under the influence of liquor, 2, and summonses issued, 14.

Statistics in Worcester: Cars stopped, 442; summonsed for speeding, 1; equipment tags, 3, and summonsed for driving without license or registration, 3.

Sgt. Halstead Taylor supervised a detail of 14 patrolmen in

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367

APR 22 1961

(AP Wirephoto)
ERICH LEINSDORF
Coming to Boston

Leinsdorf Heads Boston Symphony

BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

Both announcements were made late Friday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees at a news conference after the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Under Munch, who succeeded the famed [illegible] Koussevitzky, the symphony [illegible] its greatest heights. [illegible]

The [illegible]-haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium, took the 105-member orchestra on several globe girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960. It was the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The orchestra also visited Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Toscanini Protege

Leinsdorf, 50, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,322

MAY 7 1961

New Boston Maestro Likes To See Musicians Sweat

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—In case the musicians of the Boston Symphony are not yet aware of what is in store for them when Erich Leinsdorf takes over as their music director and conductor, this will give them an idea.

When looking down upon rehearsing musicians from his conductorial podium, nothing reassures Leinsdorf more than torrents of musicianly sweat. These torrents show the boys are putting their hearts into their work, and he figures it is the conductor's job to stimulate the flow.

"I want musicians to go home from my rehearsals and say angrily but wearily to their wives, 'that Leinsdorf is a blank-blank blankety-blank,'" he once told this writer.

"Then, after they've relaxed over a bottle of beer, I want them to modify the characterization somewhat. I want them to say, 'Leinsdorf is a blank-blank blankety-blank but he is a musician.'"

The maestro was exaggerating, of course. This writer knows of no musician who has ever played under him who'd apply a blank-blank to him (he's truly a nice guy)— or who doesn't give him the full credit of being a musician to his very marrow, dedicated and even obsessed.

Great concerts, great performances, fully realized music—these so-called musical "miracles" —are never accidents compounded of inspiration and the states of musicianly digestions, in his opinion.

They're made —they're always made, said this man who believes solid, constructive work is the answer to just about any challenge. They're made by the toil and sweat of rehearsing when players and conductor get the feel of one another and unify their ideas of what their labors are all about.

Leinsdorf will succeed Charles Munch at the helm of one of the world's finest and most respected orchestras at the beginning of the 1962-1963 season. When Munch steps down he will be 71 years old and will have completed 13 glorious seasons with the Bostonians.

His successor will then be only 50 years old, with his energies not only bounding but increasing. No one quite understands how he manages to get all his work done since there is so much of it but the only possible answer is an incredible personal efficiency.

He is not the type of musicinan who exalts conversationally over music. His approach is matter - of - fact, entirely practical. He displays no more aesthetic fervor verbally than does a business man over the day-by-day staples of his business.

As a conductor he straddles the musical field as few ever had. As an opera conductor, he is pre-eminent. Next season he will conduct the four operas of Wagner's "Ring" three times at the Metropolitan Opera, for instance But let no one say he is a "Wagnerian conductor" in his presence. Such a sayer gets sat upon. And justly. He conducts any opera with marvelous clarity and comprehension.

The repertoire of the symphony orchestra is no less fully at his command. You can be carried away by his realizations of the fine-spun aesthetics of the Mozart scores and be quite persuaded that they represent his particular affinity, only to be amazed at his next concert by the sense and beauty which he draws from some contemporary atonalist who until then had always seemed on the turbid side.

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D: 443,586 S: 557,767

APR 24 1961

ROGER DETTMER

San Francisco Opera Votes Cancelation

WHILE BARGAINING BETWEEN the Metropolitan opera and several [illegible] next season reportedly is dead-

229

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367

APR 22 1961

ERICH LEINSDORF
(AP Wirephoto)

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,322

MAY 7 1961

New Boston Maestro Likes To See Musicians Sweat

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI)—In case the musicians of the Boston Symphony are not yet aware of what is in store for them when Erich Leinsdorf takes over as their music director and conductor, this will give them an idea.

When looking down upon rehearsing musicians from his conductorial podium, nothing reassures Leinsdorf more than torrents of musicianly sweat. These torrents show the boys are putting their hearts into their work, and he figures it is the conductor's job to stimulate the flow.

"I want musicians to go home from my rehearsal and

CHICAGO, ILL.
CHICAGO'S AMERICAN
D: 443,586 S: 557,767

APR 24 1961

ROGER DETTMER

San Francisco Opera Votes Cancelation

WHILE BARGAINING BETWEEN the Metropolitan opera and several unions over an next season reportedly is deadocked, as reve he San Francisco opera has carried its threat eason. Negotiations between the com-

d A.G.M.A., re singers and own over loyment inon to a ion,

JUST IN CASE you missed the week-end announcement, Erich Leinsdorf will succeed Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra is September, 1962—a conductor not in the Russo-French tradition that has dominated Boston for 40 years, but in the earlier line of Gericke, Nikisch, Max Fiedler, and the revered Karl Muck.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
POST & TIMES HERALD
D. 393,718 S. 448,764
APR 22 1961

Maestro Munch to Quit Podium in August, 1962

By Paul Hume

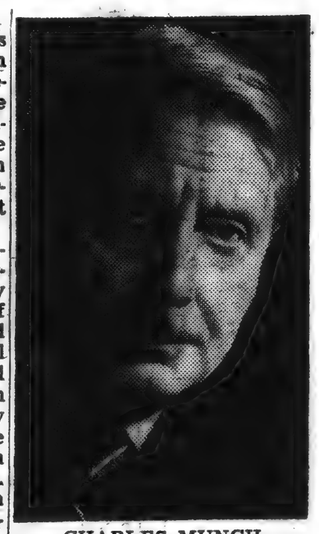
Charles Munch, for 12 years the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire in August, 1962, at the close of the Orchestra's summer season at Tanglewood. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, who appeared during the present season as guest conductor.

The announcement, long rumored, was made late yesterday afternoon in Boston by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Board of Trustees. Munch, who will be 71 when he retires, will have conducted the Boston Symphony longer than any other conductor except Serge Koussevitsky, whose term lasted from 1924 until 1949.

Leinsdorf is at present a conductor for the Metropolitan Opera and holds the title of musical adviser to Rudolf Bing, the [illegible] general director.

In taking [illegible] Munch's position, Leinsdorf will become conductor of the orchestra which has the longest contract of any symphony in the United States, one for [illegible] of the year. Its concert series in Boston and Cambridge have been sold out by subscription for several years.

The Orchestra's final concerts under Munch in Washington will take place during the forthcoming series of the National Symphony next Nov. 16 and April 5.



CHARLES MUNCH
. . . retirement set

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763

APR 22 1961

Dr. Munch Retirement Announced

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in August, 1962, will mark the last appearance of Charles Munch, 69, as the orchestra's musical director.

At the time of his retirement, Dr. Munch will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor in the orchestra's history with the exception of Serge Koussevitsky, who retired after 25 years.

In announcing Dr. Munch's retirement, Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, said his successor would be Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor and musical director of the New York Metropolitan Opera.

at present it is a year round job. Besides having the longest concert season of an American orchestra, the Boston Symphony also operates the Berkshire Music School, the Berkshire Music Festival and the annual Tanglewood concerts at Lenox, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Circ. 26,618
APR 22 1961
Charles Munch, 69-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will retire at the end of the 1962 season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said in Boston. Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 12,961
APR 22 1961
Symphony Orchestra
Leader To Retire
BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Charle
Munch, brilliant conductor o the world famed Boston Sym phony Orchestra, will retire a the conclusion of the 1961-62
season.
Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich
Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,342
APR 24 1961
LEINSDORF TO SUCCEED
MUNCH AS DIRECTOR
Charles Munch will retire as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1961-62 season. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Assn.
The retirement of Dr. Munch will take effect in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.
Dr. Munch will be 71 years old in September, 1962. He was appointed director of the Boston Sym-

Munch Conducts 'Romeo and Juliet'

Elias, Valleti, and Tozzi Heard as Berlioz Soloists

By Harold Rogers

It would be difficult to imagine Charles Munch's state of mind as he conducted Berlioz' "Romeo et Juliette" yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. He knew, as almost all his listeners did not, that a press conference had been scheduled in the conductor's room immediately after the concert. He knew that his retirement —and his successor— would be announced at that time.

His reasons for desiring to retire at the end of next season, as later explained by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, were due to his age and his feeling that he could no longer sustain the heavy schedule to which the music director of the Boston Symphony is committed. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf. Complete details will be found in the story on Page 2.

Now that we are in possession of these facts, we can more easily understand why the "Romeo et Juliette" of yesterday did not measure up to Dr. Munch's performance of 1953 and 1954. It was as if we were seeing it reflected in a pool over which a breeze was playing just lightly enough to blur the outlines from time to time. Even when the image became crystalline, as it often did, it was still a reflection.

The New England Conservatory Chorus, oddly enough, was not always the precise body of singers that we have enjoyed in the past. Insufficient rehearsal may be the answer here. But if the true reasons were known, they might well embrace the possibility that Dr. Munch's attention was deflected by the imminent announcement of his retirement.

Three superb singers appeared in the solo roles, however — Rosalind Elias (who first sang with the Boston Symphony while she was still a student at the New England Conservatory); Cesare Valletti (who had far too little to do in this Berlioz score); and Giorgio Tozzi (whose characterization of Friar Laurence was truly magnificent.)

Afterward in the conductor's room Dr. Munch, 69, and Mr. Leinsdorf, 49, embraced in wordless emotion. The news of Dr. Munch's retirement is mitigated only partly by the fact that we will have him with us at least one more year.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street — New York
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 869,958 S. 1,186,625
APR 22 1961

Munch Retires; Name Leinsdorf Conductor of Boston Orchestra

Charles Munch retires as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August, 1962, at the end of the Berkshire Festival summer, and Erich Leinsdorf takes over the post when the 1962-63 season opens in Boston's Symphony hall. This was announced in Boston yesterday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the orchestra which will end its 80th season next week.

Mr. Leinsdorf

Mr. Leinsdorf, who was 49 in February, may find that his lucky month. He first conducted the Boston orchestra last February, the same month in which he returned for a second pinch-hitting success with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in Orchestra hall. The first had been last October when he stepped in for the ailing Fritz Reiner to rescue the concert and recording introducing Sviatoslav Richter, the Russian pianist, to America.

Born in Vienna, Leinsdorf at 22 was assistant conductor at Salzburg festivals under the direction of Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini. He came to the United States in 1938 as a conductor for New York's Metropolitan Opera, and since then has been conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, and director of the New York City Opera. In 1957 he rejoined the Metropolitan as conductor and musical consultant to Rudolf Bing, the general manager. He has had many guest engagements in this country and in Europe, where he returns next month to conduct the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam.

He will be the 11th man to hold the Boston post. Among his predecessors were Artur Nikisch, Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux, and Serge Koussevitzky, whose 25 years in Boston gave the orchestra its characteristic elegance of style. At the time of his retirement Mr. Munch, now 69, will have been with the orchestra 13 years.

Leinsdorf, [illegible] of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

Clipping Bureau
ESTABLISHED 1888
Berkeley 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York
CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 869,958 S. 1,186,625
APR 22 1961

Munch Conducts 'Romeo and Juliet'

Elias, Valletti, and Tozzi Heard as Berlioz Soloists

By Harold Rogers

It would be difficult to imagine Charles Munch's state of mind as he conducted Berlioz' "Romeo et Juliette" yesterday afternoon at Symphony Hall. He knew, as almost all his listeners did not, that a press conference had been scheduled in the conductor's room immediately after the concert. He knew that his retirement—and his successor—would be announced at that time.

His reasons for [illegible] to retire at the end of [illegible] season, as later explained [illegible] Henry B. Cabot, president [illegible] trustees, were [illegible] age when the image became crystalline, as it often did, it was still a reflection.

The New England Conservatory Chorus, oddly enough, was not always the precise body of singers that we have enjoyed in the past. Insufficient rehearsal may be the answer here. But if the true reasons were known, they might well embrace the possibility that Dr. Munch's attention was deflected by the imminent announcement of his retirement.

Three superb singers appeared in the solo roles, however — Recollect Elias (the first cond

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (m)
NORWICH, Conn.
Circ. 26,618
APR 22 1961

Charles Mench, 69-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will retire at the end of the 1962 season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said in Boston. Mench was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 12,961
APR 22 1961

Symphony Orchestra Leader To Retire

BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Charle Munch, brilliant conductor o the world famed Boston Sym phony Orchestra, will retire a the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,342
APR 24 1961

LEINSDORF TO SUCCEED MUNCH AS DIRECTOR

Charles Munch will retire as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1961-62 season. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Assn.

The retirement of Dr. Munch will take effect in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Dr. Munch will be 71 years old in September, 1962. He was appointed director of the Boston Symphony in -1949 at the retirement of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky at the end of his 25th season.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Free Press (m)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 31,793
APR 22 1961

Munch To Retire As Conductor Of Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP)—Charles Munch, 69-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the end of the 1962 season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said Friday.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Erich Leinsdorf, [illegible], conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, was named to succeed Munch. Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children.

Munch's retirement will be effective at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Festival.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,538
APR 22 1961

Charles Munch to Retire As Symphony Conductor

BOSTON (UPI)—Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, [illegible] music cons[illegible] Metropolitan [illegible] Munch is almost 70 y[illegible]

Both anno[illegible] were made late Friday by Henry B. Cabot, [illegible] the board of t[illegible] a news conference [illegible] the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Under Munch, who succeeded the famed Serge Kousevitsky, the symphony rose to its greatest heights.

The handsome, tousel-haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium, took the 105-member orchestra on several globe girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960.

It was the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The orchestra also visited Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 59, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini.

of the post have expanded until at present it is a year round job. Besides having the longest concert season of an American orchestra, the Boston Symphony also operates the Berkshire Music School, the Berkshire Music Festival and the annual Tanglewood concerts at Lenox, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,000
APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf To Succeed Munch As BSO Music Director In '62

Dr. Munch To Retire After Conducting Here For 13 Seasons

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced that Charles Munch will retire as the Orchestra's music director in August, 1962, at the conclusion of the Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Doctor Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

Doctor Munch, who will be 71 years of age in September 1962, was appointed Music Director in 1949 upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky. At the time of his retirement, Doctor Munch will have conducted the Orchestra for thirteen seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor in the Orchestra's history except for Serge Koussevitzky who retired at the end of his 25th season.

Charles Munch has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which were introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6, Piston's Viola Concerto, Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, Poulenc's Gloria and the Haieff Piano Concerto. The Orchestra has received two American-International Music Awards, for Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2. Doctor Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Debussy's Images. During his tenure the Orchestra has received 9 Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

For the Orchestra's 75th anniversary season (1955-1956) Charles Munch and the Orchestra commissioned works from Barber, Bernstein, Copland, Dutilleux, von Einem, Hanson, Ibert, Martinu, Milhaud, Petrassi, Schuman, Sessions, and Villa-Lobos. In the first 10 years of Doctor Munch's tenure his programs presented works by 31 American composers, 77 first Boston performances, 48 U.S. premieres and 32 world premieres.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Doctor Munch has taken the Orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; a second European tour in 1956 when the Boston Symphony Orches-

Continued on Page Eight

13

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Enterprise & Times (e)
BROCKTON, Mass.
Circ. 42,413
APR 22 1961

Dr. Munch, Boston Symphony Leader, To Retire in '62

BOSTON. — (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consulant of the Metropolitan Opera.

Both announcements were made late yesterday, by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees at a news conference after the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Under Munch, who succeeded the famed Serge Koussevitzky, the symphony rose to its greatest heights.

The handsome, tousel-haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium, took the 105-member orchestra on several globe girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960.

Leinsdorf, 59, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the MET for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N. Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 69,258
APR 23 1961

MET CONDUCTOR GETS MUNCH'S POSITION

BOSTON, (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed the announcement that Charles Munch, 69, wil retire as conductor of the famed Boston Orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 10,547
APR 22 1961

Munch To Leave Boston Symphony

BOSTON —UPI— Charles Munch announced today he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August, 1962, by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of New York's Metropolitan Opera.

Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 45,338
APR 22 1961

Munch To Retire As Conductor Of Symphony

BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Monitor & News
Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,228
APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf Is Named Orchestra Conductor

BOSTON, April 22 (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed an-

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Circ. 30,482
APR 22 1961

Boston Symphony Leader Retiring

BOSTON (UPI) —Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 12,500

Leinsdorf To Succeed Munch As BSO Music Director In '62

Dr. Munch To Retire After Conducting Here For 13 Seasons

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced yesterday that Charles Munch, 70, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of the 1961-62 season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N. Y.

Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Beloff Symphony No. [illegible] Tuesday was announced by Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise & Journal (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 42,413
APR 28 1961

Dr. Munch, Boston Symphony Leader, To Retire in '62

BOSTON, — (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

The symphony rose to its greatest heights.

The handsome, tousel-haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium,

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 45,338
APR 22 1961

Munch To Retire As Conductor Of Symphony

BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Decided To Retire

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

Both announcements were made late yesterday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees at a news conference after the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

"It is with great sorrow that I have to say that Dr. Munch has decided to retire at the end of the next Boston symphony season," Cabot said. "He has done so in view of the burdens of rehearsals and concert giving and of his age. He will be 70 next September."

Under Munch, who succeeded the famed Serge Koussevitzky, the symphony rose to its greatest heights.

The handsome, tousel-haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium, took the 105-member orchestra on several globe-girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960. It was the first time any Western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The orchestra also visited Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Came To U.S.

Leinsdorf, 59, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzberg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

A father of five, Leindorf first came to the United States in 1937, serving with the Met, then conducting in Cleveland, St. Louis, Los Angeles and at Rochester, N.Y. He was director of the New York City Opera Company in 1956 before moving to the Met.

Cabot said Munch asked that a successor be found about six months ago. He suffered a heart seizure a few years ago and decided to retire soon after that.

When he steps down next year, he will have served as music director for 13 years, longer than any other conductor except Koussevitzky who held the post 25 years.

During Munch's time, the duties of the post have expanded until at present it is a year round job. Besides having the longest concert season of an American orchestra, the Boston Symphony also operates the Berkshire Music School, the Berkshire Music Festival and the annual Tanglewood concerts at Lenox, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Monitor & New Hampshire Patriot (e)
CONCORD, N. H.
Circ. 12,228
APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf Is Named Orchestra Conductor

BOSTON, April 22 (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N. Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,273
APR 22 1961

Munch Retiring From Symphony

By JOHN F. McDONOUGH

BOSTON (UPI)—Charles Munch announced Friday he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August 1962 by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

The announcement of Munch's retirement came through an orchestra official during an emotional news conference at the conclusion of the Boston Symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Leinsdorf, in Boston this week for the Met's annual tour, sat quietly beside the 70 - year - old Munch as Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the symphony, told newsmen that Munch had decided to retire because of the "great burden" imposed by one of the music world's most prestigious posts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Circ. 30,482
APR 22 1961

Boston Symphony Leader Retiring

BOSTON (UPI) —Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

Both announcements were made late Friday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees at a news conference after the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Rose to Great Heights

Under Munch, who succeeded the famed Serge Koussevitzky, the symphony rose to its grreatest heights.

The handsome, tousel - haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium, took the 105-member orchestra on several globe girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960. It was the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The orchestra also visited Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 59, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

Morning Union Leader
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Circ. 46,510
APR 24 1961

Munch To Retire

BOSTON — UPI — Charles Munch announced yesterday he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August, 1962, by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of New York's Metropolitan Opera.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026

APR 22 1961

Munch Retiring, Leinsdorf To Lead Boston Symphony

The Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, will have a new director next year.

Charles Munch announced in Boston yesterday that he is retiring as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra because of the "great burden" of his duties.

He will be succeeded in August, 1962, by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of New York's Metropolitan Opera.

Plans Announced

Munch announced his retirement through a symphony official at an emotional news conference in Boston after he conducted the regular Friday afternoon concert of one of the nation's most famous orchestras.

Leinsdorf, sitting quietly beside the tall, white-haired, 70-year-old Munch, heard symphony president Henry B. Cabot announce:

"The board of trustees has regretfully accepted Mr. Munch's resignation which will take affect at the close of next season. We also are glad to announce that Mr. Leinsdorf will succeed Mr. Munch as musical director."

Munch succeeded the near-legendary Serge Koussevitzky when he became 10th conductor of the prestigious Boston Symphony in October, 1949.

A native of Alsace-Lorraine, Munch took the Boston Symphony on several globe-girdling tours, including a precedent-shattering and triumphal trip to Japan and Russia. He also presided as the 105-member orchestra's season was steadily expanded until now it performs 50 weeks a year.

Toscanini Protege

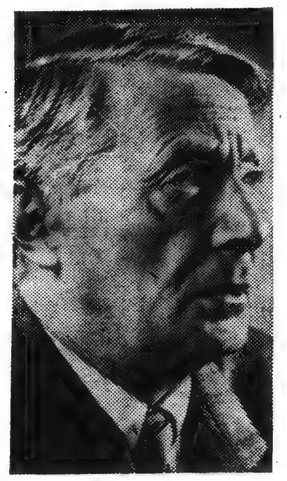
Leinsdorf, a protege of Toscanini who has been with the Met the past three seasons, was in Boston as the group's conductor for its annual tour.

He is a native of Vienna and a graduate of Austrian State Academy of Music. He has served as conductor or assistant conductor at the Florence, Italy, and Salzburg, Austria, festivals and was conductor of opera and symphony at Bologna, Trieste and San Remo in Italy.

He first came to the United States in 1937, serving with the Met, and then conducted in Cleveland, St. Louis, Los Angeles and at Rochester, N. Y.

He was director of the New York City Opera Co. in 1956 before moving to the Met.

The change was expected to touch off a wholesale chain reaction of appointments and successions in the musical world. Met officials in New York were surprised at the change and there was no indication who would take Leinsdorf's place there.



CHARLES MUNCH

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
ESS CLIPPING BUREAU
Church Street – New York

VSWEEK
V YORK, N.Y.
1,391,21

MAY 1 1961

Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

CHESTRAS:

w Man for the Boston

uring the past 37 years the Boston hony has had only two permanent ictors: The late Serge Koussevitzky harles Munch, its present director. ly Symphony Hall on Huntington one afternoon last week, the of trustees announced that when retires in August of 1962, the second oldest orchestra (the ork Philharmonic predates it) will aded by Vienna-born Erich rf. At 49, he is one of the Metro- Opera's leading maestros and the ork company's music consultant. ugh the stocky, balding Leinsdorf ducted most of the world's finest as he took over the Boston Sym- podium for the first time only ruary. He scored an immediate in so doing, beat out four or r world-famous conductors who ter what many people consider he country's top musical post.

Arnold Eagle

BUY DIRECT FROM
● All Sizes and Desig
● Over 65 Years

A FITT

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983

MAY 14 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026

APR 22 1961

Munch Retiring, Leinsdorf To Lead Boston Symphony

The Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, will have a new director next year.

Charles Munch announced in Boston yesterday that he is retiring as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra because of the "great burden" of his duties.

He will be succeeded in August, 1962, by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of New York's Metropolitan Opera era.

Plans Announced

Munch announced his retirement through a symphony official at a Boston musical news conference in Boston after he conducted the regular Friday afternoon concert of the nation's most famous orchestra.

The conductor, sitting quietly beside the taxi, white-haired, 70-year-old Munch, heard symphony president Henry B. Cabot announce:

"The board of trustees has reluctantly accepted Mr. Munch's resignation which will take affect at the close of next season. We also are glad to announce that Mr. Leinsdorf will succeed Mr. Munch as musical director."

Munch succeeded the near-legendary Serge Koussevitzky when he became 10th conductor of the

CHARLES MUNCH

Vice President Johnson Got Him Into This Country

Symphony's New Conductor First "U.S. Trained"

By CYRUS DURGIN

NEW YORK—When Erich Leinsdorf assumes command of the Boston Symphony in the Autumn of 1962, our city will experience something new.

Though a Vienna-born (in 1912) and bred, Leinsdorf will be the first conductor in the history of the orchestra whose career has developed principally in the United States.

To be sure, his musical orientation originally was Central European, but he was only 26 when in 1938 he arrived in New York to assist Artur Bodanzky in conducting the Wagner operas at the Metropoltian.

Even then there was something particularly American about the circumstances of his coming.

His visa had been fouled up, and there was difficulty about his entering the United States. That something peculiarly American lay in the fact that Leinsdorf had a friend who was a Texan. The friend appealed to a freshman congressman from the Lone Star State, whose efforts promptly smoothed the difficulties, and after a trip to Havana, Erich Leinsdorf was welcomed in his country.

The freshman congressman's name was Lyndon Baines Johnson.

Over the years that followed —at the Metropolitan Opera, as conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester symphonies, as general director of the New York City Opera and lately back at the Metropolitan as both conductor and musical consultant, Leinsdorf's musical ministrations were based in the Unted States.

Of no other man who has been at the head of Boston's musical glory can that be said. While an Austrian is several hundred miles from being a German, both are Teutonic. In that light, Leinsdorf belongs to the numerical majority in the matter of ancestral blood.

Georg (later Sir George) Henschel, the first conductor in 1881, was a German. So were Karl Muck (who served two terms) and Max Fiedler. Wilhelm Gericke (also two terms) and Emil Paur were Austrian, the latter from Bukovina; Henri Rabaud, Pierre Monteux and Charles Munch were/are French. Arthur Nikisch was Hungarian and Serge Koussevitzky Russian.

★ ★ ★

It is only natural that 23 years of living in this country, the majority of them as a citizen and many as a resident of New York's suburb of Larchmont, should considerably have Americanized Erich Leinsdorf.

He speaks English like a native, and knows American slang. As the father of five American children — whose mother was born in New York City of a mother from Albany and a father out of Frankfort, Germ., many years before — Erich Leinsdorf would not look puzzled if you mentioned hot dogs and cereal shot out of a gun.

In consequence, Boston will receive, 18 months hence, a musician grounded in the European tradition (he was a protege of both Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini); of international fame (he has guest-conducted operas and concerts all over the place), but in many aspects, including his ready and bubbling humor, virtually an American.

★ ★ ★

"I tell you right now," Leinsdorf quipped during a conversation in the Manhattan apartment of his personal representative, Walter Surovy, "you will know who runs the Leinsdorf household when you find out where we have decided to live in Boston.

"My wife leans to a house in the suburbs, so it may be a corner in Brookline. But I don't want to live too far from Symphony Hall, because I think that too many people waste too much time nowadays getting to work and home again. Frankly, I'd like to live right in Boston. We'll see."

The declaration, half serious, half joking, did more than reveal the essential thoughtfulness which obviously is an important of the Leinsdorf character.

He has both high intelligence and intellect. A lengthy talk with him yields numerous impressions which, though varied, seems to draw the outline of a whole and consistent man.

★ ★ ★

At three months over 49, Leinsdorf is small, thin, balding, with a face which suddenly can light in a smile of enthusiasm or settle into contemplation. He will tell you frankly that there is time in life only for things which are important to a person; not a minute to waste on trivialities.

Music is his passion and his life. But he does not carry his job with him every waking hour. He can and does relax and he is sociable up to a degree.

"Erich likes small dinner parties," said George Marek, R.C.A.-Victor vice-president, who has been associated with Leinsdorf in a half-dozen major operatic recordings.

"My wife and I have gone to his house, and he and his wife have come to our house. I think my wife is an admirable hostess, but Mrs. Leinsdorf is an even more resourceful and interesting one. They have a real family life, too, and Leinsdorf youngsters pitch in and help at their parties," Marek adds.

★ ★ ★

Another impression which this writer gained of Leinsdorf when he was Boston Symphony guest conductor last February, was of the deepest dedication to music, and an exceedingly strong will.

This was borne out by Marek's testimony.

"Erich has the strongest will of any man I know," Marek continued. "No one can make him do what he does not want to do. Musically I think he is not opinionated but if you suggest something which he does not consider correct, he will firmly tell you so. On the other hand, if he agrees with your idea, he will pick it up just like that.

"He is among all the conductors the one I most like to work with. I have more enjoyment working with him than anyone else. He is tireless, and extremely patient. Just once have I seen him lose his temper, and that was when we were recording "Don Giovanni" in Vienna.

"That was because, after 37 tries the mandolin player couldn't get the notes right in the accompaniment to "Deh Dieni Alla Fenestra." In Vienna, everybody is a "Herr Professor," and she, being a woman, was a "Frau Professor," in some official position or other.

"The Vienna Philharmonie is a tough orchestra to deal with, but Erich had them cooperating like lambs after a few hours of work. The Rome Opera House Orchestra is not the best in the world — they are inclined to play sloppily— but Erich soon had them in fine shape.

"Here is something else you may quote me on," added Marek with emphasis. "If I were to cease in my position here, I think that out of the 100-odd artists to whom I have been of service, Erich would continue to be my friend."

LEINSDORF as opera conductor, immaculate in tails and white tie, holding the baton he uses in theater pit, but not at symphony concerts.

★ ★ ★

Leinsdorf by no means will be a stranger to Boston artistically, for we have known him as an operatic conductor with the Met ever since the Spring of 1938, as well as for his fortnight of guesting this past Winter. The Symphony men I chanced to speak with all commented on how much they liked the direct, forceful, no-nonsense way he worked with them.

If he is all work upon the stand, Leinsdorf does not confine himself solely to his art. "He has an extraordinary joy in living," said Marek, "and intellectual curiosity about many things. One of his interests, and you may not have heard about it, is American government. He can be fascinated in smaller things as well. I remember during a trip we took in Holland how he inquired minutely about the process of cheese-making."

"Erich is one man who really knows about wines," declared Walter Surovy. "He does not have to consult the label on the bottle to tell you what the wine is."

Somehow, with all his work, the conductor also has time to read.

"First, I read a number of literary magazines and I decide that way what books I want to read," said Leinsdorf. "Then I read the book. History is very rewarding to me. History and the great battles of the past. Not the strategy of battles, but the effects upon persons and society and civilization by battles.

"I have read a great deal about World War I and I am now getting into the Civil War. Another thing is the effect of history and battles upon music of the times. Among my favorite authors is Goethe," he adds.

★ ★ ★

Leinsdorf used to play tennis frequently; he still loves the game but doesn't get to it more than half a dozen times a year now. He likes swimming, too, and walks as much as he can.

He believes that our modern conveniences are actually taking too much of our time.

"Once I suggested to my family that we stop using the telephone for a month, to see what it would be like. Unfortunately," this with a rueful grin, "they didn't go along with the idea.

"But just think—men like Goethe and Beethoven and Bach could not have created all that they did if they had spent so much time on what we consider our 'conveniences.'

"And as for TV—but I wish I did look at it occasionally, because never looking at it whatever, I miss all the good things on it.

"I couldn't tell you whether we have two or three receivers in our home—but the younger children even do their studying while TV is on. I couldn't do that."

The younger Leinsdorfs are David, going on 19, and in college; Gregor, 16, and the only one, says his father, who has shown notable talent for music, (he plays the violin, but has no thought of a professional career), Joshua, 16; Hester, 12, and Jenny, 9.

David used to be a jazz buff but now his tastes are all in the direction of serious music.

★ ★ ★

This was to be primarily a personal history of Leinsdorf, but there were two musical questions I had to ask him. One, has he stopped using a baton altogether?

"Only at concerts," he replied. "But in opera, where there are backstage complications, a baton is really necessary.

"It was odd how I happened to give up that baton for symphonic work—it was really an accident.

"About 10 years ago I began to feel pain around the nail of my right forefinger, and the doctor who operated on it said the trouble probably had been caused by my holding the stick too tight.

"So I went back to concert conducting without a stick, and the feeling of freedom that gave me was simply enormous," he added.

The other question—did he remember how he spent that fateful Wednesday in Holy Week of 1951 when Artur Bodanzky was sick, and on short notice Leinsdorf had to take over Wagner's "Parsifal" at the Metropolitan, a work he had never conducted before?

Leinsdorf smiled reminiscently.

"All I can remember is going out in a daze and conducting as if mesmerized, but I do recall that in one place three trombones came in a measure too soon. But it all straightened out quickly. The things you do in your 20's! You probably wouldn't dare attempt them in your 40's! But I will say, I knew the scores of all the operas I might have to conduct. I didn't go on without having music in my head."

Suffolk Names 2 Industrial

PASTE OVER

230

165 Church Street — New York

DAVENPORT, IOWA
TIMES-DEMOCRAT
SAT. 51,223 SUN. 60,820
APR 30 1961

Catching The Beat In The Music World

CHARLES MUNCH, will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra in August 1962, at the conclusion of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. His successor will be Erich Leinsdorf. This announcement was made by Henry B. Cabot president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees. Dr. Munch will be 71 years of age in September 1962. He was appointed music director in 1949. upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitsky. At the time of his retirement, Dr. Munch will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor in the orchestra's history except that of Koussevitsky who retired at the end of his 25th season.

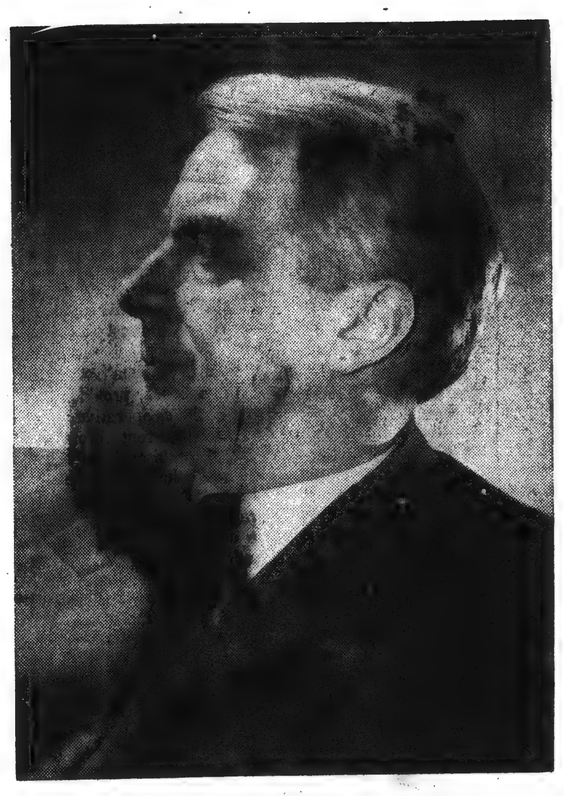
* * *

ERICH LEINSDORF first conducted the Boston Symphony as guest in February 1961. After his Boston concerts he went to London for six concerts, followed by engagements in Florence and Milan. He will now return to Amsterdam to conduct the Concertgebouw orchestra. In 1937 Mr. Leinsdorf joined the musical staff of the Metropolitan Opera Association in New York. After six years at the Metropolitan, he accepted a three year contract to begin in 1943, as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra. However he was drafted into the U. S. Army almost immediately. He later served as music director of the Rochester Philharmonic and resigned after nine years to become director of the New York City Opera and in 1957 rejoined the Metropolitan

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
D. 147,162 S. 125,819
MAY 14 1961

Erich Leinsdorf succeeds Charles Munch as director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 148,332
APR 30 1961



CHARLES MUNCH

Munch Here Next Season, Perhaps for Last Time

The announcement last week that Charles Munch will retire as musical director of the Boston Symphony in August, 1962, means that his appearance in next season's Bushnell Symphony Series will bring his final bow to a Hartford audience.

Munch, a favorite here through the numerous Boston Symphony concerts, has conducted on the Bushnell stage since he succeeded Serge Koussevitzky a dozen years ago.

He is stepping out a month before his 71st birthday. He will be succeeded in Boston by Erich Leinsdorf, who has performed here as conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic.

Maestro Munch is scheduled to direct his final Hartford concert next February 19, the fourth event in the 1961-62 Bushnell series by world-famous visiting orchestras. He will have as guest soloist in that concert the French 'cellist, Andre Navarra, who is professor of the 'cello at the Paris Conservatory and who has performed with most of Europe's top-ranking orchestras.

Other concerts in the Bushnell series next season, for which ticket applications are now being accepted at the Bushnell box, office, will be performed by:

The Detroit Symphony with Paul Paray conducting and the young American pianist Lorin Hollander as guest artist; the Boston Symphony in a December concert under the baton of Europe's celebrated Ernest Ansermet; the Cleveland Orchestra with George Szell conducting and Italy' 19-year-old Maurizio Pollini, winner of the International Chopin Piano Competition, as soloist; the Philadelphia Orchestra with Eugene Ormandy conducting.

Dr. Munch has brought many honors to his orchestra, at least have been given it by the New York Music Critics Circle for compositions it introduced to New York. The orchestra has received two American-International Music Fund awards, and nine Grand Prix de Disques as well as the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde for outstanding recordings.

tra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; a second European tour in 1956 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union; and an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

Charles Munch's book, "I Am a Conductor' was published in' Paris in 1954 and subsequently in translation in New Yorl, 1956; London, 1956; Zurich, 1957; Moscow, 1960.

Doctor Munch was responsible

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia

Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf now reside in Larchmont, New York, with their five children: David, 18; Gregor, 16; Joshua, 15; Hester, 12; and Jenny 9.

CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

News (e)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,222

MAY 1 1961

Charles Munch to Retire As Orchestra's Director

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced Charles Munch will retire as the Orchestra's Music Director in August, 1962, at the conclusion of the Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Doctor Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

Doctor Munch, who will be 71 years of age in September, 1962, was appointed Music Director in 1949 upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky. At the time of his retirement, Doctor Munch will have conducted the Orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor in the Orchestra's history except for Serge Koussevitzky who retired the end of his 25th season.

Charles Munch has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which were for the inauguration of the Orchestra's Open Rehearsals in Boston, which, in the last ten years have increased from five to ten per winter season. It was recently announced that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in this country, will in 1961-62, extend its season to 50 weeks.

Mr. Leinsdorf first conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest in February 1961. After his Boston concert, Mr. Leinsdorf went to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony and engagements in Florence and Milan. In May (next month) he returns to Amsterdam to conduct the Concergebouw in the final concerts of their Beethoven Cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

Born in Vienna, Feb. 4, 1912, Mr. Leinsdorf received his early training at the Vienna Gymnasium.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.

165 Church Street – New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D. 836,760 S. 1,185,553
APR 22 1961

Munch Retires

BOSTON, April 21 (UPI). — Charles Munch retired today as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he held for more than 11 years. He was succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

165 Church Street – New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861
APR 22 1961

Munch Retires

Charles Munch retired yesterday as conductor of the Boston Symphony, a post he held for 11 years. He was succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, one of the Met's conductors.

230

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447
MAY 7 1961

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

The announcement of [illegible] Charles Munch will retire as music [illegible] the Boston Symphony at the end of the 1961-62 season (he will be 71 in September 1962) has made us realize once more that time has an unhappy way of passing rapidly and inexorably.

Personally, we will miss the tall, white-haired conductor with the commendably straight back and benign smile, and we shall miss Dr. Munch's expert interpretations, particularly of such French masters as Faure, Berlioz and Debussy. When he retires, Dr. Munch will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure in the orchestra's history except for that of Serge Koussevitsky, who retired at the end of his 25th season.

EARL J. DIAS

That Dr. Munch has been popular with his musicians is evidenced by the remark made to us not long ago by a veteran Boston Symphony player, "Munch is the best and kindest man for whom I have ever worked."

Under Dr. Munch the orchestra has made much musical history—including performances of 31 new works by American composers, 77 first Boston performances, 48 U. S. premieres and 32 world premieres.

And if anyone doubts Dr. Munch's dedication to the art of music, we advise him to read Dr. Munch's eloquent book, "I Am a Conductor," a volume that underlines the high musical integrity of its author.

As everyone knows, Erich Leinsdorf will succeed Dr. Munch. Mr. Leinsdorf first conducted the Boston Symphony in February 1961, after which he went to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony and engagements in Florence and Milan. This month he goes to Amsterdam to conduct the famous Concergebouw Orchestra in a Beethoven cycle and then to his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

Born in Vienna in 1912, Mr. Leinsdorf received his early training at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934, he became Bruno Walter's assistant at the Salzburg Festival and in the following three years assistant to Arturo Toscanini. In 1937, he joined the staff of the Metropolitan Opera.

After six seasons at the Met, Mr. Leinsdorf was drafted into the U. S. Army. After his discharge, he became music director of the Rochester Philharmonic. After nine years, he was appointed director of the New York City Opera, and in 1957 rejoined the Met as conductor and musical consultant to the general manager.

Mr. Leinsdorf also has conducted the NBC and Philadelphia Orchestra in this country and, overseas, such groups as the London Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic.

He now resides in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children. Certainly, all of us wish him well when he takes over the baton of what may well be the world's best symphonic ensemble.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
APR 22 1961

Back JFK's Program

URUGUAIANA, BRAZIL — Brazil and Argentine, South America's two biggest nations, have pledged themselves to fight Communist penetration in the western hemisphere and backed President Kennedy's "Alliance for Progress" program for Latin America.

BOSTON—Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Dr. Munch, who will be 70 in September, has directed the symphony for 12 seasons. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, 59, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

Dr. Charles Munch

WASHINGTON—Atty. Gen. Robert F. Kennedy said today he lacks grounds to investigate the militantly conservative, semi-secret John Birch society in the absence of any apparent violation of federal law.

AUGUSTA, ME. — Mitch Miller eliminated all references to Maine in the Stein song on his TV show last night, but few Down Easters seemed genuinely annoyed. The song is as much a part of Maine as potatoes.

GOODBYE

shattering tours also included tr[illegible] triumphal trips to Japan, Australia [illegible]litan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for [illegible] den" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
APR 22 1961

230

Back JFK's Program

A Look At the Arts

By E.J.D.

The announcement of ... Charles Munch will retire as music ... the Boston Symphony at the end of the 1961-62 season (he will be 71 in September 1962) has made us realize once more that time has an unhappy way of passing rapidly and inexorably.

Personally, we will miss the tall, white-haired conductor with the commendably straight back and benign smile, and we shall miss Dr. Munch's expert interpretations, particularly of such French masters as Faure, Berlioz and Debussy. When he retires, Dr. Munch will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure in the orchestra's history except for that of Serge Koussevitzky.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447
MAY 7 1961

Box 2078,
News (e)
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,222
MAY 1 1961

Charles Munch to Retire As Orchestra's Director

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, has announced Charles Munch will retire as the Orchestra's Music Director in August, 1962, at the conclusion of the Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Doctor Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

Doctor Munch, who will be 71 years of age in September, 1962, was appointed Music Director in 1949 upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky. At the time of his retirement, Doctor Munch will have conducted the Orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor in the Orchestra's history except for Serge Koussevitzky who retired the end of his 25th season.

Charles Munch has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which were introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6, Piston's Viola Concerto, Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, Poulencs Glori'a and the Haieff Piano Concerto. The Orchestra has received two American - International Music Fund Awards, for Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2. Doctor Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Debussy's Images. During his tenure the Orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

For the Orchestra's 75th anniversary season (1955)1956) Charles Munch and the Orchestra commissioned works from Barber, Bernstein, Copland, Dutilleux, von Einem, Hanson, Ibert, Martinu, Milhaud, Petrassi, Schuman, Sessions and Villa-Lobos. In the first ten years of Doctor Munch's tenure his programs presented works by 31 American composers 77 first Boston performances, 48 U. S. premieres and 32 world premieres.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Doctor Munch has taken the Orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; a second European tour in 1956 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union; and an eight-week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

Charles Munch's book, "I Am a Conductor" was published in Paris in 1954 and subsequently in translation in New Yorl, 1956; London, 1956; Zurich, 1957; Moscow, 1960.

Doctor Munch was responsible for the inauguration of the Orchestra's Open Rehearsals in Boston, which in the last ten years have increased from five to ten per winter season. It was recently announced that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in this country, will in 1961-62, extend its season to 50 weeks.

Mr. Leinsdorf first conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest in February 1961. After his Boston concerts, Mr. Leinsdorf went to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony which were followed by engagements in Florence and Milan. In May (next month) he returns to Amsterdam to conduct the Concergebouw in the final concerts of their Beethoven Cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

Born in Vienna, Feb. 4, 1912, Mr. Leinsdorf received his early training at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934 he was chosen by Bruno Walter to be his assistant at the Salzburg Festival and he as chief assistant to Arturo Toscanini, at the 1935, 1936, and 1937 Festivals. In 1937 Mr. Leinsdorf, at Toscanini's recommendation joined the musical staff of the Metropolitan Opera Association in New York.

After six seasons at the Metropolitan, Mr. Leinsdorf accepted a three year contract, to begin in 1943, as conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra. Almost immediately, however, he was drafted into the United States Army. Upon his discharge, from service Mr. Leinsdorf was appointed Music Director of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. He resigned from the Rochester post, after nine years, to become director of the New York City Opera and, in 1957, he rejoined the Metropolitan as Conductor and Musical Consultant to the General Manager.

In addition to his terms as conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras, Mr. Leinsdorf has conducted the Los Angles, the NBC and Philadelphia Orchestra in this country and, among others, the Amsterdam Concertgebouw, the London Philharmonic and the Israel Philharmonic.

Mr. and Mrs. Leinsdorf now reside in Larchmont, New York, with their five children: David, 18; Gregor, 16; Joshua, 15; Hester, 12; and Jenny 9.

...Lorraine, ...panded the ...eason until ...eks a year. ...aph was in ...ber orches... ...girdling ...to Moscow ...any west... ...formed in ...precedent... ...cluded tri... ...to Japan, Australia

165 Church Street – New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MIRROR
D: 836,760 S 1,195,553
APR 22 1961

Munch Retires

BOSTON, April 21 (UPI). — Charles Munch retired today as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a post he held for more than 11 years. He was succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

165 Church Street – New York
NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861
APR 22 1961

Munch Retires

Charles Munch retired yesterday as conductor of the Boston Symphony, a post he held for 11 years. He was succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, one of the Met's conductors.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (m)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 31,271
APR 22 1961

CONDUCTOR MUNCH TO RETIRE IN '62

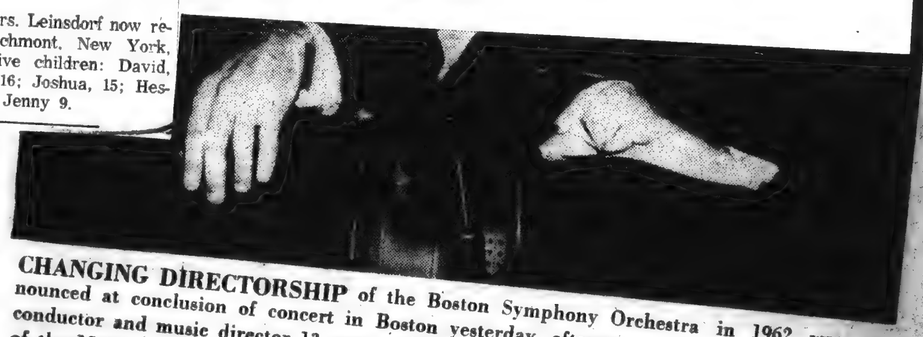
Final Appearance at Berkshire; Leinsdorf Named

BOSTON (AP)—Charles Munch, 69-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will retire at the end of the 1962 season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said Friday.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, was named to succeed Munch. Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children.

Munch's retirement will be effective at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Festival.



CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

230

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208

APR 22 1961

Boston Maestro Munch to Retire

BOSTON, April 22 (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 13,908

APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf To become Conductor Of Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

He succeeds Charles Munch, 49, who plans to retire.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Brooklyn Kings Courier
N. Y.
W. 15,370

APR 29 1961

165 Church Street — New York

Charles Munch To Retire After Tanglewood Festival

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustee, announced that Charles Munch will retire as the Orchestra's Musical Director in August 1962 at the conclusion of the Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf, who is 49. Dr. Munch is 70

GARDEN CITY, N.Y.
NEWSDAY
D. 318,875
APR 22 1961

Munch Will Leave Boston Symphony

Boston (UPI) — Charles Munch announced yesterday he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August, 1962, by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of New York's Metropolitan Opera.

Munch, who will be 70 in September, succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as the 10th conductor of the Boston Symphony in October, 1949.

Leinsdorf, 59, a protege of Toscanini, has been with the Met the past three seasons.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783

APR 22 1961

MUNCH TO RETIRE

BOSTON (AP) — Charles Munch, 69-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the end of the 1962 season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said yesterday.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera [redacted] was named to succeed [redacted] Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, has [redacted] Cleveland and [redacted]

Leinsdorf lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children.

Munch's retirement will be effective at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, Cabot said.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,460

APR 23 1961

Leinsdorf To Succeed Munch With Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

He succeeds Charles Munch, 69, who plans to retire.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664

APR 30 1961

The Boston Symphony

Formal announcement of the retirement of Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the selection of Erich Leinsdorf as his successor having been made more than a year before the actual event, an ample period of transition has been provided for all concerned. This includes the public, for such changes are not to be taken lightly and nowhere else in this country, unless in Philadelphia, is an orchestra so traditionally important in the community.

In assuming one of the most coveted and influential positions of the kind anywhere Mr. Leinsdorf comes to Boston as a familiar figure, having for many years conducted Metropolitan Opera groups on their annual visits there. In fact, his new appointment suggests a close connection with the prospect of civic auditorium in the Prudential Center, where opera and ballet would be presented; the old Boston Opera House was torn down several years ago.

What effect his induction will have on summer policies at Tanglewood is of special concern in Western Massachusetts. Since Dr. Munch is to remain at the helm until the start of the regular 1962-63 season he may be expected to lead the orchestra at Lenox for two more summers, perhaps with more relief next year than this, programs for which have already been announced. The Berkshire Festival, extended to seven weeks this season, will have an eighth week in 1962.

A full schedule of 50 weeks, and 221 concerts, has been arranged for the Bostonians next fall and winter, longer than that of any other American symphony orchestra; those of New York and Philadelphia usually average 36 or 38 weeks. The advantages of steady employment are obvious, and, as pointed out by the trustees, the musicians can "concentrate on musical matters" without worrying about outside means of support during a slack period.

The season starting Sept. 29 will include 70 Symphony Hall concerts, an increase of seven, with a new series on Monday nights. With nine weeks of "Pops" concerts next spring, plus three weeks outdoors on the Esplanade, in addition to Tanglewood and some touring and recording engagements, not to mention rehearsals, the season will be the fullest ever booked for members of the orchestra.

Such a schedule puts a heavy burden on Dr. Munch, under whose leadership the orchestra has earned many honors and made three foreign tours since he took over in 1949. Certain changes in style and interpretation have been noted under his direction, as there were under Karl Muck, Pierre Monteux and Serge Koussevitsky before him, and as there will be again. But in view of Mr. Leinsdorf's deep background as permanent and guest conductor here and abroad, the Boston Symphony will surely continue to be one of New England's, and America's proudest cultural possessions.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 52,135

APR 22 1961

Symphony Leader To Retire In '62

BOSTON (AP) — Charles Munch, 69-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the end of the 1962 season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said Friday.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, was named to succeed Munch. Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N. Y.

Leinsdorf lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children.

Munch's retirement will be effective at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Festival, Cabot said.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,460

APR 23 1961

Leinsdorf Leaves 'Met' To Succeed Munch In Boston

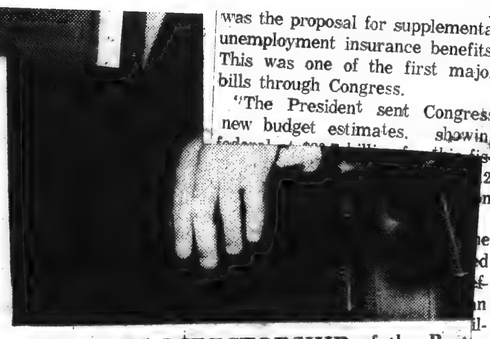
BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

Both announcements were made late Friday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees at a news conference after the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Leinsdorf, 59, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

GOODBYE



of the 80 - year - old Boston Symphony in October 1949. He succeeded the near - legendary Serge Koussevitzky, whose autocratic methods during his 25-year reign had built the orchestra to one of the world's finest.

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia was the proposal for supplemental unemployment insurance benefits. This was one of the first major bills through Congress.

"The President sent Congress new budget estimates, showing CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Bost[on] nounced at conclusion of concert in Boston yes[terday] conductor and music director 13 years, will be su[ccessor] of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gav[e up] den" of the post. (Associ[ated Press])

62 was an-unch, right, t, conductor
e "great bur-

GARDEN CITY, N.Y.
NEWSDAY
D. 318,875
APR 22 1961

Munch Will Leave Boston Symphony

Boston (UPI) — Charles Munch announced yesterday he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August, 1962, by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of New York's Metropolitan Opera.

Munich, who will be 70 in September, succeeded Serge Koussevitzky as the 10th conductor of the Boston Symphony in October, 1949.

Leinsdorf, 59, a protege of Toscanini, has been with the Met the

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
APR 22 1961

MUNCH TO RETIRE

BOSTON (AP) — Charles Munch, 69-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the end of the 1962 season, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra trustees, said yesterday.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,460
APR 23 1961

Leinsdorf To Succeed Munch With Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

He succeeds Charles Munch, 69, who plans to retire.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
APR 30 1961

The Boston Symphony

Formal announcement of the retirement of Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and of the selection of Erich Leinsdorf as his successor having been made more than a year before the actual event, an ample period of transition has been provided for all concerned. This includes the public, for such changes are not to be taken lightly and nowhere else in this country, unless in Philadelphia, is an or-

165 Church Street — New York

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370
APR 29 1961

Charles Munch To Retire After Tanglewood Festival

Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustee, announced that Charles Munch will retire as the Orchestra's Musical Director in August 1962 at the conclusion of the Orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch, who is 70 years of age was appointed Music Director in 1949 upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky. Dr. Munch, at his retirement, will have conducted the Orchestra for 13 years, longer than anyone except Koussevitzky who retired after 25 years.

Under Dr. Munch's leadership the Boston Symphony has won many honors. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions which were introduced by him in New York, 9 Grand Prix du Disque at the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgeneinde.

Mr. Leinsdorf has a very distinguished background in music. He has worked with Bruno Walter at the Dalzburg Festival and was assistant to Arthur Toscanini at the 1935, and 37 Festivals. In 1937 Mr. Leinsdorf joined the staff of the Metropolitan Operal Association.

He has since then conducted the Cleveland and Rochester Orchestras. And more recently has conducted the Los Angeles the N.B.C. and the Philadelphia orchestra among others.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 13,908
APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf To Become Conductor Of Boston Symphony

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

He succeeds Charles Munch, 69, who plans to retire.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Courant (m)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 101,883
APR 22 1961

Munch Retires in '62 From Boston Symphony

BOSTON, (AP) — Charles Munch, 69-year-old conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the end of the 1962 season the orchestra trustees said Friday. Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky. Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, was named to succeed Munch. Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N. Y.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Day (e)
NEW LONDON, Conn.
Circ. 27,132
APR 22 1961

LEINSDORF NAMED

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

He succeeds Charles Munch, 69, who plans to retire.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,006
APR 22 1961

NEW CONDUCTOR

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

He succeeds Charles Munch, 69, who plans to retire.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Standard-Times (e)
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 62,208
APR 22 1961

Boston Maestro Munch to Retire

BOSTON, April 22 (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season. Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N. Y.

NewEnglandNewsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
NEWPORT, R. I.
Circ. 11,946
APR 22 1961

Boston Symphony Has New Conductor

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

cratic methods during his 25-year reign had built the orchestra to one of the world's finest.

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia

CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

230

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R. I.
Circ. 37,868
APR 22 1961

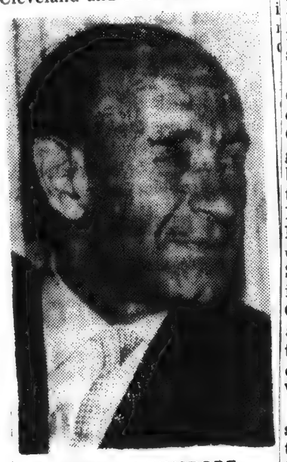
Munch Retiring; Baton To Leinsdorf

BOSTON (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N. Y.



ERICH LEINSDORF

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,861
APR 24 1961

Charles Munch To Leave Post With Symphony

Charles Munch will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August 1962 at the conclusion of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Dr. Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch, who will be 71 years old September 1962, was appointed music director in 1949 upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky. At the time of his retirement, Dr. Munch will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor in the orchestra's history except for Koussevitzky who retired at the end of his 25th season.

Munch has brought many honors to the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions introduced by him to New York; the orchestra has received two American-International Music Fund Awards; Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Debussy's "Images," and during his tenure, the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

In addition to extensive concert series in this country, Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours: to Europe in 1952 at the invitation of the Congress for Cultural Freedom; a second European tour in 1956 when the Boston Symphony Orchestra was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union; and an eight week tour of the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960.

Munch's book, "I Am a Conductor," was published in Paris in 1954 and subsequently in translation in New York, 1955; London, 1956; Zurich, 1957; and Moscow, 1960.

Munch was responsible for the inauguration of the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last 10 years have increased from five to ten per winter season. It was recently announced that the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in this country, will, in 1961-62, extend its season to 50 weeks.

Leinsdorf first conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as guest in February 1961. After his Boston concerts Leinsdorf went to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony which were followed by engagements in Florence and Milan. In May he returns to Amsterdam to conduct the Concertgebouw in the final concerts of their Beethoven Cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Sun
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,797
APR 23 1961

NEW CONDUCTOR

BOSTON (AP). — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement Friday night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,181
APR 22 1961

* * * *

BOSTON SYMPHONY CONDUCTOR RETIRES

BOSTON April 22 (UPI)—Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

* * * *

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 11,602
APR 22 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Reformer &
Vermont Phoenix (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Circ. 7,211
APR 22 1961

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

Boston Symphony to Have New Conductor

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Time - Argus (e)
BARRE-MONTPELIER
Vt.
Circ. 10,000
APR 22 1961

BOSTON (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

Boston Symphony Conductor To Lay Down Baton

BOSTON (UPI)—Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season. Dr. Munch has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

APR 22 1961

GOODBYE

...now it performs 50 w...
But his greatest triu... taking the 105 - me...
tra on several globe...
tours, including one ... in 1960 the first tim...
ern orchestra had p...
the Soviet capital. The... shattering tours also ...
triumphal trips to Japan.

DIREC...
...lusion of ...
...usic director 13 years, will be succe...
...an Opera orchestra. Munch gave an ...
...den" of the post. (Associate...

...was the proposal for supplemental unemployment insurance benefits. This was one of the first major bills through Congress.

"The President sent Congress new budget estimates, showing ...

...adjust farm production to the market.

"The administration bill would authorize the secretary of agriculture, working with farmer committees, to develop new commodity control and price support programs on a crop-by-crop basis. The plans would go to Congress for review. Those which did not involve controls could go into effect unless vetoed by either House within 60 days. Control plans could go into effect only if they won further approval by two-thirds of the farmers voting in a referendum.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,487

APR 22 1961

BostonSymphony Conductor To Lay Down Baton

BOSTON (UPI)—Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

Munch

Both announcements were made late Friday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees at a news conference after the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Under Munch, who succeeded the famed Serge Koussevitzky, the symphony rose to its greatest heights.

The handsome, tousel-haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium, took the 105-member orchestra on several globe girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960. It was the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The orchestra also visited Japan, Australia and New Zealand, [illegible] the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 59, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N. Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times - Argus (e)
BARRE-MONTPELIER
Vt.
Circ. 10,000

APR 22 1961

BOSTON (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
TAUNTON, Mass.
Circ. 11,802

APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf To Direct Hub Group

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Reformer &
Vermont Phoenix (e)
BRATTLEBORO, Vt.
Circ. 7,211

APR 22 1961

Boston Symphony to Have New Conductor

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Pawtuxet Valley
Times (e)
W. WARWICK, R. I.
Circ. 7,919

APR 22 1961

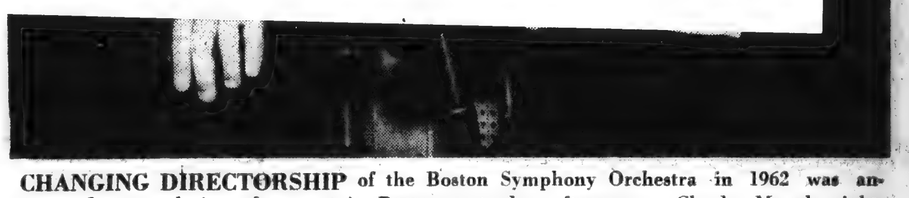
Munch Retiring

Boston — (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of the world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera. Munch is almost 70 years old.

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia



CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
PAWTUCKET-
CENTRAL FALLS, R.I.
Circ. 37,868

APR 22 1961

Munch Retiring; Baton To Leinsdorf

BOSTON (AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,861

APR 24 1961

Charles Munch To Leave Post With Symphony

Charles Munch will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August 1962 at the conclusion of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Mass. Dr. Munch's successor will be Erich Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch, who will be 71 years old September 1962, was appointed music director in 1949 upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitzky. At the time of his retirement, Dr. Munch will have

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Sun
WESTERLY, R. I.
Republican
Circ. 7,797

APR 23 1961

NEW CONDUCTOR

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement Friday night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

POOR RENTALS

230

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088

APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf to Conduct Boston Symphony

Boston—(AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Mr. Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
GARDNER, Mass.
Circ. 7,249

APR 22 1961

Conductor Appointed In Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N. Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
NAUGATUCK, Conn.
Circ. 5,255

APR 22 1961

Charles Munch, Famed Conductor, To Retire

BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of th world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Munch is almost 70 years old.

Both annoucements were made late Friday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees at a news conference after the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Under Munch, who succeeded the famed Serge Koussevitzky, the symphony rose to its greatest heights.

The handsome, tousel - haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium, took the 105-member orchestra on several globe girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960. It was the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The orchestra also visited Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 49, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscaninf. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,847

APR 22 1961

Munch Retires Late In 1962

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 25,163

APR 22 1961

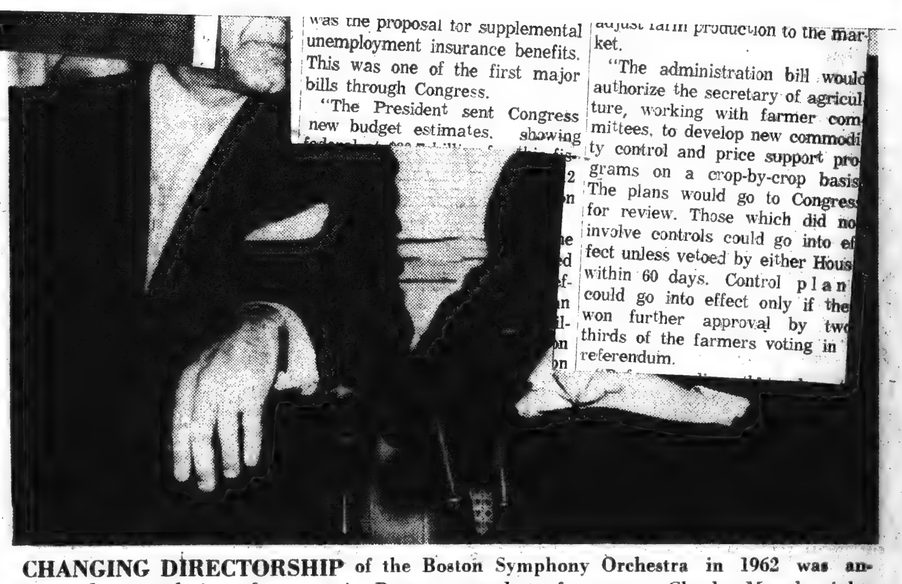
Leinsdorf To Succeed Munch, Retiring In '62

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.



dent of the board of trustees of the symphony, told newsmen that Munch had decided to retire because of the "great burden" imposed by one of the music world's most prestigious posts.

Munch, a handsome, tousle-haired man whose offstage shyness is in striking contrast to his energetic performance on the podium, took over as 10th conductor of the 80 - year - old Boston Symphony in October 1949. He succeeded the near - legendary Serge Koussevitzky, whose autocratic methods during his 25-year reign had built the orchestra to one of the world's finest.

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia was the proposal for supplemental unemployment insurance benefits. This was one of the first major bills through Congress.

"The President sent Congress new budget estimates, showing adjust farm production to the market.

"The administration bill would authorize the secretary of agriculture, working with farmer committees, to develop new commodity control and price support programs on a crop-by-crop basis. The plans would go to Congress for review. Those which did not involve controls could go into effect unless vetoed by either House within 60 days. Control plan could go into effect only if they won further approval by two-thirds of the farmers voting in a referendum.

CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

230

165 Church Street – New York

DAVENPORT, IOWA
TIMES-DEMOCRAT
SAT. 51,223 SUN. 60,828
APR 30 1961

Catching The Beat In The Music World

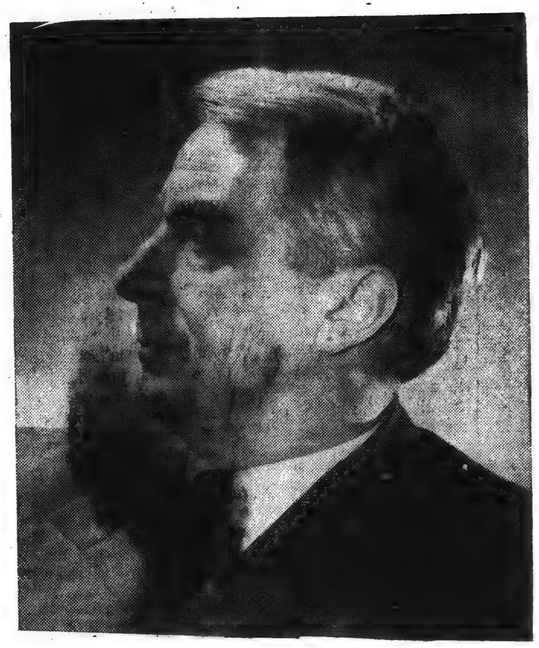
CHARLES MUNCH, will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra in August 1962, at the conclusion of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. His successor will be Erich Leinsdorf. This announcement was made by Henry B. Cabot president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees. Dr. Munch will be 71 years of age in September 1962. He was appointed music director in 1949, upon the retirement of Serge Koussevitsky. At the time of his retirement, Dr. Munch will have conducted the orchestra for 13 seasons, the longest tenure of any conductor in the

[illegible] favorite with [illegible] will pre-

165 Church Street – New York

MIAMI, FLA.
NEWS
D. 147,162 S. 125,019
MAY 14 1961

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 146,332
APR 30 1961



NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
APR 22 1961

Munch Laying Down Baton in 1962; Will Be Succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf

BOSTON (UPI)—Charles Munch announced Friday he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August 1962 by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

[The change will become effective immediately following the Tanglewood season at Lenox.]

The announcement o fMunch's retirement came through an orchestra official during an emotional news conference at the conclusion of the Boston Symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

'Great Burden'

Leinsdorf, in Boston this week for the Met's annual tour, sat quietly beside the 70 - year - old Munch as Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the symphony, told newsmen that Munch had decided to retire because of the "great burden" imposed by one of the music world's most prestigious posts.

Munch, a handsome, tousle-haired man whose offstage shyness is in striking contrast to his energetic performance on the podium, took over as 10th conductor of the 80 - year - old Boston Symphony in October 1949. He succeeded the near - legendary Serge Koussevitzky, whose autocratic methods during his 25-year reign had built the orchestra to one of the world's finest.

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 49, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy, and Salzburg, Austria music festivals.

Married and the father of five, Leinsdorf made his first guest appearance with the Boston Symphony in February of this year. A graduate of the Austrian State Academy of Music, he has been conductor of opera and symphony at Bologna, Trieste and San Remo, Italy.

Leinsdorf first came to the United States in 1937, serving with the Met, then conducting in Cleveland, St. Louis, Los Angeles and at Rochester, N. Y. He was director of the New York City Opera Company in 1956 before moving to the Met.

He said he accepted the offer at Boston "36 hours after it was made." Asked about his plans for the Symphony, he said, "I accepted the appointment so recent-

Munch Retiring
Continued on Page 3

CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

230

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088

APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf to Conduct Boston Symphony

Boston—(AP)—Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Mr. Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky. Mr. Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
GARDNER, Mass.
Circ. 7,249

APR 22 1961

Conductor Appointed In Boston

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N. Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
NAUGATUCK, Conn.
Circ. 5,255

APR 22 1961

Charles Munch, Famed Conductor, To Retire

BOSTON (UPI) — Dr. Charles Munch, brilliant conductor of th world famed Boston Symphony Orchestra, will retire at the conclusion of the 1961-62 season.

Dr. Munch, who has directed the symphony for 12 seasons, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Munch is almost 70 years old.

Both annoucements were made late Friday by Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees at a news conference after the symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Under Munch, who succeeded the famed Serge Koussevitzky, the symphony rose to its greatest heights.

The handsome, tousel - haired conductor whose offstage shyness is a striking contrast to his energetic direction from the podium, took the 105-member orchestra on several globe girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960. It was the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The orchestra also visited Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 49, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy and Salzburg, Austria music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,847

APR 22 1961

Munch Retires Late In 1962

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Call (e)
WOONSOCKET, R. I.
Circ. 25,163

APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf To Succeed Munch, Retiring In '62

BOSTON (AP) — Erich Leinsdorf, 49-year-old conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season.

His appointment followed announcement last night that Charles Munch, 69, will retire as conductor of the famed Boston orchestra at the end of next season.

Munch was appointed conductor in 1949, succeeding the late Serge Koussevitzky.

Leinsdorf, a native of Vienna, Austria, lives in Larchmont, N.Y., with his wife and five children. He has conducted in Cleveland and Rochester, N.Y.

GOODBYE

most prestigious posts.

Munch, a handsome, tousle-haired man whose offstage shyness is in striking contrast to his energetic performance on the podium, took over as 10th conductor of the 80 - year - old Boston Symphony in October 1949. He succeeded the near - legendary Serge Koussevitzky, whose autocratic methods during his 25-year reign had built the orchestra to one of the world's finest.

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia was the proposal for supplemental unemployment insurance benefits. This was one of the first major bills through Congress.

"The President sent Congress new budget estimates, showing adjust farm production to the market.

"The administration bill would authorize the secretary of agriculture, working with farmer committees, to develop new commodity control and price support programs on a crop-by-crop basis. The plans would go to Congress for review. Those which did not involve controls could go into effect unless vetoed by either House within 60 days. Control plan could go into effect only if they won further approval by two-thirds of the farmers voting in referendum.

CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

230

165 Church Street – New York

DAVENPORT, IOWA
TIMES-DEMOCRAT
SAT. 51,223 SUN. 60,828

APR 30 1961

Catching The Beat In The Music World

CHARLES MUNCH, will retire as music director of the Boston Symphony orchestra in August 1962, at the conclusion of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. His successor will be Erich Leinsdorf. This announcement was made by Henry B. Cabot president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trus-

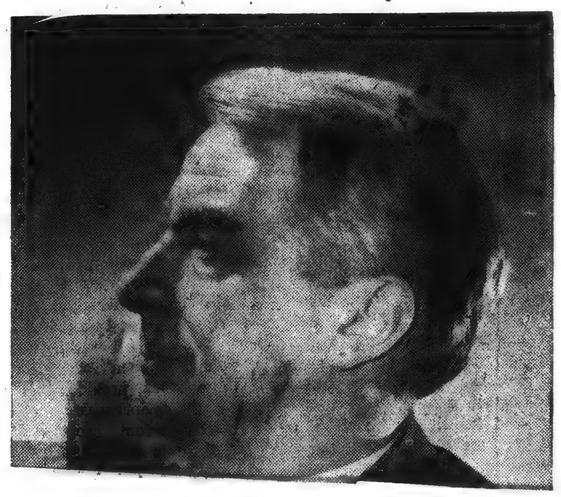
KHAM

...ep to think
...s magic link
...e peace of prayer —
...h the weight of care
...y, race or creed,
...g to his need"

favorite with

...ill be 71.

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 148,332
APR 30 1961



NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

APR 22 1961

Munch Laying Down Baton in 1962; Will Be Succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf

BOSTON (UPI)—Charles Munch announced Friday he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August 1962 by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera.

[The change will become effective immediately following the Tanglewood season at Lenox.]

The announcement o fMunch's retirement came through an orchestra official during an emotional news conference at the conclusion of the Boston Symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

'Great Burden'

Leinsdorf, in Boston this week for the Met's annual tour, sat quietly beside the 70 - year - old Munch as Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the symphony, told newsmen that Munch had decided to retire because of the "great burden" imposed by one of the music world's most prestigious posts.

Munch, a handsome, tousle-haired man whose offstage shyness is in striking contrast to his energetic performance on the podium, took over as 10th conductor of the 80 - year - old Boston Symphony in October 1949. He succeeded the near - legendary Serge Koussevitzky, whose autocratic methods during his 25-year reign had built the orchestra to one of the world's finest.

Global Tours

A native of Alsace - Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony's season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105 - member orchestra on several globe - girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960 the first time any western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours also included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 49, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the past three seasons and has also served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy, and Salzburg, Austria music festivals.

Married and the father of five, Leinsdorf made his first guest appearance with the Boston Symphony in February of this year. A graduate of the Austrian State Academy of Music, he has been conductor of opera and symphony at Bologna, Trieste and San Remo, Italy.

Leinsdorf first came to the United States in 1937, serving with the Met, then conducting in Cleveland, St. Louis, Los Angeles and at Rochester, N. Y. He was director of the New York City Opera Company in 1956 before moving to the Met.

He said he accepted the offer at Boston "36 hours after it was made." Asked about his plans for the Symphony, he said, "I accepted the appointment so recent-

Munch Retiring
Continued on Page 3

CHANGING DIRECTORSHIP of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1962 was announced at conclusion of concert in Boston yesterday afternoon. Charles Munch, right, conductor and music director 13 years, will be succeeded by Eric Leinsdorf, left, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera orchestra. Munch gave as his reason for leaving, the "great burden" of the post. (Associated Press Photo)

DIAL 3
BRADY
STOR INSURED
★ Free Pickup and L
★ Clothes Returned
★ Top Value Stamps
★ Every orders, or on West Housatoni plus – cleaning and pressing!
our Thrifty "Dry-Clean-Or it is important that you sp
"steaming" (to remove mo only professionals can give move dirt even the big m
Bundle" we do give every i
While your dry cleaning is 8 lbs.
"DRY-CLE
THRIFTY
BRA

MULLEN
MAYFLOWER
Call 3-8550
USO
Mayflower
Family Counseling
Assembled family counsel are taken, via New Yor every citizen, his city
Nothing. All services to make your move happier!

MOVING
WISE FAMILIES

BROS.
3-9157
We're ready to demonstrate the "terrific" international T-340 an.
demanding for international T-340 has just scheduled to be Stevedoring for international T-340
TD-340 crawlers has just scheduled to be factory drive-away caravan has just scheduled to be
New England construction and logging industries.
Our share of the shipment has just arrived—we're ready to demonstrate! See why pleased owners have been amazed at the sensational 47 hp* tractors outwork anything on tracks. Try the hymountain-moving push of the big, 85-inch Four-in-one Bulldozer. Test the way size on tracks. Try the Bulldozer. Test the sensational Four-in-one bucket, builds, scrapes, rears, loads all in the bucket. Just set a date—and they're yours at standard conditions.

JUST ARRIVED!
T-340 Crawler Tractors from New England's largest CRAWLER CARAVAN

Lee—Laundercenter, 56 Main St. (Opening soon)
Outer locations will appear at a later date.
Thank you,
"CAROLY"

Consulate in Zanzibar

DAR ES SALAAM, Tanganyika (AP)—The United States is setting up a consulate in the British protectorate of Zanzibar where about 40 Americans are running a Project Mercury station under a British-American agreement for tracking flights of man in space.

ACCRA, Ghana — Ghana's government reports $7 million by credited under a trade-technical co-operation agreement.

...n retiring

Continued From First Page

ly I have not had enough time to absorb the [illegible] shock and haven't had [illegible] to make plans."

Hard To Get

Cabot said that Munch had approached the symphony's board of trustees about six weeks ago, asking that it begin a search for a successor in the arduous post. Munch had suffered a heart seizure a few years ago.

Cabot said that when the board had decided on Leinsdorf, members had to visit New York several times to persuade Met manager Rudolph Bing to release the conductor.

The change of conductors was expected to touch off a wholesale chain reaction of appointments and successions in the world of music. Met officials in New York gave no indication immediately who would take Leinsdorf's place.

Enervating Duties

When Munch steps down next year, he will have served as music director (his formal title) of the Boston Symphony for 13 years, longer than any other conductor except Koussevitzky.

During that time, the duties of the post have expanded until at present it is a year-round job. Besides having the longest concert season of any American orchestra, the Boston Symphony also operates the Berkshire Music School, the Berkshire Music Festival and the annual Tanglewood concerts at Lenox.

230

Leinsdorf To Conduct Bostonians

Munch to Retire At

APR 22 1961

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161

certs in this country, Dr. Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours—to Europe in 1952, to the Soviet Union in 1956 and to the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960. He is the author of "I Am a Conductor," published in Paris in 1954.

Dr. Munch was responsible for the inauguration of the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last ten years have increased from five to ten during the winter season. It was announced recently that the orchestra, which already has the longest season of any in the country, will extend its season to fifty weeks in 1961-62.

Mr. Leinsdorf was born in

MUNCH IS LEAVING BOSTON SYMPHONY

Leinsdorf to Succeed Him as Director in 1962

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 21—Charles Munch will retire as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1961-62 season. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Association.

The retirement of Dr. Munch was announced at the end of today's concert by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees. It will take effect in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Dr. Munch will become 71 years old in September, 1962. He was appointed director of the Boston Symphony in 1949 at the retirement of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the end of his twenty-fifth season.

Mr. Cabot said that Dr. Munch had first mentioned retiring several years ago. He said the resignation now was accepted with regret by the trustees. Noting that Dr. Munch's length of tenure was second only to Dr. Koussevitzky's, Mr. Cabot commented that "we are sorry he was not younger when he took over so that he, too, might be retiring after twenty-five years."

The announcement was made in Dr. Munch's dressing quarters. The Boston conductor remained silent throughout. He sat next to Mr. Leinsdorf during a brief press conference. Then he arose embraced Mr. Leinsdorf, shook hands silently with one veteran Boston music critic and with [illegible]

Retiring Director and Successor

Karsh, Ottawa

Dr. Charles Munch — Erich Leinsdorf

APR 22 1961

D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,460

APR 30 1961

MUSIC:

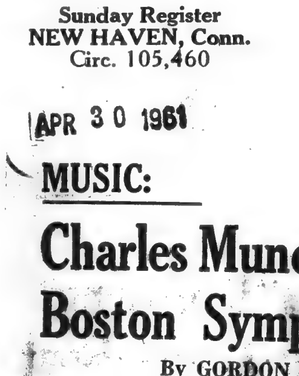
Charles Munch To Retire As Boston Symphony [illegible]

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The announcement last week that Charles Munch will retire as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival signals the approaching end of another significant era in the orchestra's long and illustrious history. Since Dr. Munch will be 71 at the time of his retirement next year, perhaps the news was not surprising though it nevertheless comes as something of a shock to music devotees here and elsewhere. Tempus fugit!

To many patrons of the Woolsey series, surely the Munch tenure will seem to be a comparatively short one. Compared to that of his predecessor, Serge Koussevitzky, whose reign extended for 25 years, it is. Dr. Munch took over the conductor's post in 1949 and will have completed 13 years with the Boston Symphony on his retirement. However, this will be the longest tenure of any conductor, except Koussevitzky, in the history of the orchestra.

The present conductor has made an impressive record with the Bos[illegible] Sym[illegible] while maintaining its prestige and artistic standa[illegible] long s[illegible]ding. Many new works were commissioned since [illegible] first occupied the orchestra's podium. Some 13 works were commissioned during the Boston Symphony's 75th anniversary season alone (1955-56). In the first 10 years of Munch's tenure, the orchestra presented works by 31 American composers, 77 first Boston performances, 48 U. S. premieres, and 32 world premieres.



CHARLES MUNCH

Many honors have come to the orchestra under Dr. Munch's baton. Five New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to works which he introduced to New York audiences. Other awards include two from the American-International Music Fund and one from the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences. Then there are nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde to add to the list. Incidentally, two of the award winning works were by Alexei Haieff, whose Symphony No. 3 was commissioned and premiered by the New Haven [illegible]ony in its final concert this season.

The Bos[illegible]hony's reputation as one of the world's great orchestras h[illegible] enhanced and strengthened by three foreign tours during [illegible] tenure. On the second of these tours in 1956, the orchestra gained the distinction of being the first western orchestra to get a hearing in the Soviet Union.

Erich Leinsdorf, a conductor who is a familiar figure in the world's music centers, has been appointed to succeed Dr. Munch. He first came to international attention as assistant to both Bruno Walter and Arturo Toscanini at the Salzburg Festivals from 1934 to 1937. In fact it was Toscanini who was largely instrumental in bringing about Leinsdorf's appointment as a conductor at the Metropolitan Opera in 1937. Leinsdorf left the "Met" in 1943 and since then he has been at various times the regular conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras as well as a guest with leading orchestras here and abroad. In 1957, he rejoined the "Met" after an association with the New York City Opera for several years.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

APR 22 1961

MUNCH PLANS TO RETIRE AS HUB DIRECTOR

Leinsdorf Will Conduct Boston Symphony After August, 1962

BOSTON (UPI)—Charles Munch announced Friday he is retiring because of the "great burden" of his duties as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August 1962 by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of New York's Metropolitan Opera.

Conference Emotional

Munch anounced his retirement through a symphony official at an emotional news conference after he conducted the regular Friday afternoon concert of one of the nation's most famous orchestras.

Leinsdorf, sitting quietly beside the tall, white - haired, 70-year-old Munch, heard symphony president Henry B. Cabot anounce:

"The board of trustees has regretfully accepted Mr. Munch's resignation which will take affect at the close of next season. We also are glad to announce that

See MUNCH PLANS
Page Nine

Symphony Director, Successor

(United Press International Telephoto)

Music Director Charles Munch, right, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra chats with his successor, Erich Leinsdorf, following conclusion of Friday's concert. Munch will retire in 1962. Leinsdorf has been conductor at the Metropolitan Opera in New York.

230

...insdorf ...p Conduct ...stonians

...ch to Retire At

APR 22 1961

...16,647 S. 488,161

...LD-TRIBUNE

YORK, N.Y.

...Erich Leinsdorf

...Successor

The funeral of Peter Klutch of 35 Norway St., Longmeadow, was held at the Byron funeral home Friday with services in St. John the Divine Armenian an Apostolic Church with Rev. Gueegh Kalfayon officiating. Bearers were Assadour Peltekian, Vincent Talevi, Krachig Konjilian, Hagop, George and Zareh Kludgian. Burial was in Oak Grove Cemetery.

* * *

The funeral of Giovanni Albano of 8 Arlington Ct. was held Friday at the F. M. Forastiere and Son funeral home, with a solemn requiem high mass in Our Lady of Mount Carmel Church. Rev. Donald Farrell, C.P.S., was celebrant; Rev. Anthony Nuc-

Mr. Leinsdorf was born in ...

In 1961-62.

...ing a brief press conference, ...tend its season to May ...

Then he arose embraced Mr. Leinsdorf, shook hands silently with one veteran Boston music critic and with ...

MUNCH IS LEAVING BOSTON SYMPHONY

Leinsdorf to Succeed Him as Director

Special to The ... Times.

BOSTON, April 21 — Charles Munch will retire as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the season, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., president of the board of trustees, announced today.

Dr. Munch, who is 71 years old, will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera, Mr. Perry said.

Mr. Leinsdorf will be 60 years old next June 4. He has been with the Metropolitan Opera for the past three seasons.

Dr. Munch has been with the Boston Symphony since 1949. He succeeded Serge Koussevitzky, who had been with the orchestra for 25 years.

Dr. Munch's contract was to run through the 1962 season. He has been in poor health for the past year.

Mr. Perry said that Dr. Munch had been "urged by his colleagues on the board of trustees to continue as conductor for another year, but he felt that he should not undertake the responsibilities of the position."

"Dr. Munch has been a great conductor and a great friend of the orchestra," Mr. Perry said. "We are grateful that he will be with us for another year."

Mr. Perry said that Dr. Munch had accepted the invitation of the trustees to become honorary president of the orchestra.

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,460

APR 30 1961

MUSIC:

Charles Munch To Retire As Boston Symphony [illegible]

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The announcement last week that Charles Munch will retire as conductor of the Boston Symphony at the conclusion of the 1962 Berkshire Music Festival signals the approaching end of another significant era in the orchestra's long and illustrious history. Since Dr. Munch will be 71 at the time of his retirement next year, perhaps the news was not surprising though it nevertheless comes as something of a shock to music devotees here and elsewhere. Tempus fugit!

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

APR 22 1961

MUNCH PLANS TO RETIRE AS HUB DIRECTOR

Leinsdorf Will Conduct Boston Symphony After August, 1962

BOSTON (UPI)—Charles Munch announced Friday he is retiring because of the "great burden" of his duties as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August 1962 by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of New York's Metropolitan Opera.

Conference Emotional
[illegible] his retirement

D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
APR 22 1961

MUNCH IS LEAVING BOSTON SYMPHONY

Leinsdorf to Succeed Him as Director in 1962

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 21 — Charles Munch will retire as musical director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1961-62 season. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Association.

The retirement of Dr. Munch was announced at the end of today's concert by Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees. It will take effect in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Dr. Munch will become 71 years old in September, 1962. He was appointed director of the Boston Symphony in 1949 at the retirement of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the end of his twenty-fifth season.

Mr. Cabot said that Dr. Munch had first mentioned retiring several years ago. He said the resignation now was accepted with regret by the trustees. Noting that Dr. Munch's length of tenure was second only to Dr. Koussevitzky's, Mr. Cabot commented that "we are sorry he was not younger when he took over so that he, too, might be retiring after twenty-five years."

The announcement was made in Dr. Munch's dressing quarters. The Boston conductor remained silent throughout. He sat next to Mr. Leinsdorf during a brief press conference. Then he arose embraced Mr. Leinsdorf, shook hands silently with one veteran Boston music critic and with bowed head walked into an inner room.

Orchestra Won Awards

Under Dr. Munch the orchestra has received many awards. Among them were five New York Music Critics Circle awards and two American-International Critics Fund awards and nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Ring of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. Dr. Munch personally received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the orchestra of Debussy's "Images."

In addition to extensive concerts in this country, Dr. Munch has taken the orchestra on three foreign tours—to Europe in 1952, to the Soviet Union in 1956 and to the Far East, Australia and New Zealand in 1960. He is the author of "I Am a Conductor," published in Paris in 1954.

Dr. Munch was responsible for the inauguration of the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last ten years have increased from five to ten during the winter season. It was announced recently that the orchestra, which already has the longest season of any in the country, will extend its season to fifty weeks in 1961-62.

Mr. Leinsdorf was born in Vienna forty-nine years ago. After early training at the Vienna Gymnasium, he served with the Salzburg Festival. Mr. Leinsdorf came to the United States to conduct at the Metropolitan in 1938.

He has twice been with the Cleveland Orchestra and the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. He first conducted the Boston Symphony as a guest last February. His second term with the Metropolitan started in 1957. He was director of the New York City Opera in 1956.

Mr. Leinsdorf lives in Larchmont, N. Y., with his wife and five children.

Retiring Director and Successor

Karsh, Ottawa
Dr. Charles Munch

Erich Leinsdorf

London, 1956; Zurich, 1957; Moscow, 1960.

Doctor Munch was responsible

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 22 1961

Leinsdorf To Conduct Bostonians

Munch to Retire At End of Next Season

Special to the Herald Tribune

BOSTON, Apr. 21.—Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera, will become music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra after Charles Munch retires at the end of next season. Henry B. Cabot, the orchestra's president announced today that Mr. Munch would make a farewell appearance at the end of the 1962 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, when he will have completed thirteen years in the present position. His last concert, on Aug. 26 of that year, will be a month before his seventy-first birthday.

Mr. Leinsdorf, who was born in Vienna in 1912, came to the United States in 1937 and became an American citizen in 1942. He conducted the Boston Symphony for the first time as a guest for three weeks last February. Taking charge in September, 1962, he will be its eleventh regular conductor. Joining the Metropolitan as an assistant conductor, he made his American debut when he substituted for the late Artur Bodanzky in a performance of "Die Walkuere" in January, 1938. He was chief conductor of the Metropolitan's German reperotry until 1943, when he joined the Cleveland Orchestra.

His Cleveland conductorship was interrupted by a year's service in the United States Army. After nine years as conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, he became general director of the New York City Opera in 1956 and returned to the Metropolitan in 1957.

Mr. Munch, born in Strasbourg in September, 1891, was one of France's best known conductors when he made his American debut as a guest leader of the Boston Symphony in 1946. He succeeded the late Serge Koussevitzky as its music director in the fall of 1949.

Herald Tribune—UPI telephoto
Maestro Leinsdorf (left) with conductor Munch yesterday.

PASTE OVER

230

165 Church

DAVENPORT
TIMES-DEM
SAT. 51,223

AP

Ca
In

MIAMI,
NEWS
D. 147,16

Women's Advertising
Providence

SAVI SMOKE

LADIES $1.93 Pair
SHOES
WE RESERVE TH
OPEN DAILY 9
DULGA

Boston Symphon

Hub Symphony L

Boston — (UPI) — Charles Munch announced yesterday that he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August, 1962, by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera in New York City.

The announcement of Munch's retirement came through an orchestra official during a news conference at the conclusion of the Boston Symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Leinsdorf, in Boston this week for the Met's annual tour, sat beside the 69-year-old Munch as Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Symphony, told newsmen that Munch had decided to retire because of the "great burden" imposed by one of the music world's most esteemed posts.

Munch, a handsome, tousle-haired man whose offstage shyness is in striking contrast with his energetic performance on the podium, took over as 10th conductor of the 80-year-old Boston Symphony in October, 1949. He succeeded the near-legendary Serge Koussevitzky, whose autocratic methods during his 25-year reign had built Boston Symphony

A native of Alsa
Munch graduall
the orchestra to world's finest.

Erich Leinsdorf,

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R.I.
Circ. 18,872
APR 22 1961

Buffelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,764 S. 655,759
MAY 7 1961

ll S. Backed

Boston Symphony trustees headed by Henry B. Cabot, president, announce that Charles Munch will retire as conductor of the Boston orchestra after the 1962 Tanglewood season. He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, Metropolitan Opera conductor, who formerly led the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras and in 1945 was guest conductor with the Minneapolis Symphony . . .

College of St. Catherine, St. Paul, is looking forward to having pianist Ruth Slenczynska on the campus for two recitals and a master class next November. Miss Slenczynska has been a guest artist with the Minneapolis Symphony . . .

The talk, "Recipe for Grand Opera," given recently at Walker Art center by Robert Herman, Metropolitan Opera artistic administrator and stage director, will be broadcast at 1:30 p.m. Monday by KUOM, university radio station.

Buffelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229 764 S. 655,759
APR 22 1961

CHARLES MUNCH, 69, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra for more than 11 years, announced he will retire in August 1962. He will be succeeded by ERICH LEINSDORF, conductor and musical consultant for the Metropolitan Opera of New York.

Munch

ATLANTA, GA.
JOURNAL-CONSTITUTION
SUN. 502,157
MAY 7 1961

Charles Munch Retiring From Boston Symphony

Charles Munch will retire as the Boston Symphony Music Director in August, 1962, according to Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Trustees.

Erich Leinsdorf, Dr. Munch's successor, Doctor Munch, who will be 72 years of age in September, has conducted the orchestra for 12 seasons, the longest tenure of the orchestra's history except for Serge Koussevitzky, retired at the end of his season.

Mr. Leinsdorf first conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a guest in February, 1961. After his Boston concerts he went to London for six programs with the BBC Symphony which were followed by engagements in Florence and Milan.

Born in Vienna, Feb. 4, 1912, Mr. Leinsdorf received his early training at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934 he was chosen by Bruno Walter to be his assistant at the Salzburg Festival and he was chief assistant to Arturo Toscanini at the 1935, 1936 and 1937 Festivals. In 1937 he joined the musical staff at the Metropolitan Opera.

He has, since, conducted the Cleveland Orchestra, the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra, the Los Angeles, the NBC and Philadelphia orchestras in this country.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAY 3 1961

Leinsdorf Vice Munch at Boston

Boston, May 2.

Charles Munch is ankling the Boston Symphony Orch at the end of the 1961-62 season and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Assn.

Munch waves his baton for the last time in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. He will be 71 in September, 1962. He was appointed director of the Boston Symphony in 1949 at the retirement of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the end of his 25th season.

The conductor's retirement was disclosed by Henry B. Cabot, proxy of the orch's trustees at the close of Friday (21) concert in Symphony Hall. Munch's length of tenure was second only to Koussevitzky's Cabot said: "We're sorry he was not younger when he took over so that he, too, might be retiring after 25 years.

Cabot revealed that Dr. Munch had first mentioned retiring several years ago. He said the resignation now was accepted with regret by the trustees.

Under Munch, the Boston Symphony has won five New York Music Critics Circle awards and two American-International Music Fund awards, nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde. Munch personally received the National Academy of Recording Arts & Sciences Award for his recording with the orch of Debussy's "Images."

CURTAIN CALL

MAY 1 1961

- Bowl to Mark Anniversary
- Hollywood 9-Week Season Due
- Leinsdorf to Conduct Opener

By BRUNO USSHER

LOS ANGELES—Major plans for the Hollywood Bowl season have been arranged [illegible] series of "Symphon[illegible] sion [illegible]

CHANGE IN CONDUCTORS: Retirement of Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony has been announced. It will be effective in September, 1962, at the close of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch inaugurated the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last 10 years have increased from five to 10 during the winter season. It was announced recently that the orchestra, which already has the longest season of any in the country, will extend it to 50 weeks in 1961-62.

Leinsdorf has filled important conducting engagements in this country since the early 1930s. He made his debut with the Boston Symphony in February. Next month he will return to the Concertgebouw at Amsterdam to conduct the final concerts of the Beethoven cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland festival.

Today Leinsdorf ranks as one of the most versatile baton figures in this country and abroad. It is

TRIBUNE
SAN DIEGO, CALIF.
D. 121,778
MAY 1 1961

Bulletin
ESTABLISHED 1888
Barclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,764 S. 655,759
MAY 7 1961

Boston Symphony trustees headed by Henry B.
Cabot, president, announce that Charles Munch will retire as conductor of the Boston Orchestra at the 1962 Tanglewood season.
He will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor, politan Opera Company, who formerly led the Cleveland and Rochester orchestras and in 1943 was guest conductor with U.S. Ranked

Bulletin
ESTABLISHED 1888
Barclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York
MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D 229,764 S. 655,759
APR 22 1961

CHARLES MUNCH, 69, conductor of the Boston Symphony orchestra for more than 11 years, announced he will retire in August 1962. He will be succeeded by ERICH LEINSDORF, conductor and musical consultant for the Metropolitan Opera of New York.

Munch

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 58,872
APR 22 1961

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAY 3 1961

Leinsdorf Vice Munch at Boston

Boston, May 2.

Charles Munch is ending the Boston Symphony Orch at the end of the 1961-62 season and will be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and musical consultant of the Metropolitan Opera Assn.

Munch waves his baton for the last time in August, 1962, at the close of the annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. He will be 71 in September, 1962.

He was appointed director of the Boston Symphony in 1949 at the retirement of Dr. Serge Koussevitzky at the end of his 25th season.

The conductor's retirement was disclosed by Henry B. Cabot, prexy of the orch's trustees at the close of Friday (21) concert in Symphony Hall. Munch's length of tenure was second only to Koussevitzky's Cabot said: "We're sorry he was not younger when he took over so that he, too, might be re-

SAN
TRIBUNE
D, 121,778
MAY 1 1961

CURTAIN CALL

- Bowl to Mark Anniversary
- Hollywood 9-Week Season Due
- Leinsdorf to Conduct Opener

By BRUNO USSHER

LOS ANGELES—Major plans for the Hollywood Bowl season have been arranged [illegible] series of "Symphon[illegible] sion [illegible]

CHANGE IN CONDUCTORS: Retirement of Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony has been announced. It will be effective in September, 1962, at the close of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch inaugurated the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last 10 years have increased from five to 10 during the winter season. It was announced recently that the orchestra, which already has the longest season of any in the country, will extend it to 50 weeks in 1961-62.

Leinsdorf has filled important conducting engagements in this country since the early 1930s. He made his debut with the Boston Symphony in February. Next month he will return to the Concertgebouw at Amsterdam to conduct the final concerts of the Beethoven cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland festival.

Today Leinsdorf ranks as one of the most versatile baton figures in this country and abroad. It is to be hoped that the Boston Symphony will share his genius with the country as a whole through radio, if not television.

Hub Symphony Leader Retiring

Boston — (UPI) — Charles Munch announced yesterday that he is retiring as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. He will be succeeded in August, 1962, by Erich Leinsdorf, conductor and music consultant of the Metropolitan Opera in New York City.

The announcement of Munch's retirement came through an orchestra official during a news conference at the conclusion of the Boston Symphony's regular Friday afternoon concert.

Leinsdorf, in Boston this week for the Met's annual tour, sat beside the 69-year-old Munch as Henry B. Cabot, president of the board of trustees of the Symphony, told newsmen that Munch had decided to retire because of the "great burden" imposed by one of the music world's most esteemed posts.

Munch, a handsome, tousle-haired man whose offstage shyness is in striking contrast with his energetic performance on the podium, took over as 10th conductor of the 80-year-old Boston Symphony in October, 1949. He succeeded the near-legendary Serge Koussevitzky, whose autocratic methods during his 25-year reign had built the orchestra to one of the world's finest.

A native of Alsace-Lorraine, Munch gradually expanded the Boston Symphony season until now it performs 50 weeks a year. But his greatest triumph was in taking the 105-member orchestra on several globe-

Boston Symphony Director Charles Munch (right) and Erich Leinsdorf, who will succeed him. —UPI Telephoto

Continued on Page 13, Col. 3

[illegible] Angeles and at Rochester, N.Y.

He was director of the New York City Opera Company in 1956 before moving to the Met.

Met Manager an Obstacle

He said he accepted the offer at Boston "36 hours after it was made.' Asked about his plans for the symphony, he said, "I accepted the appointment so recently I have not had enough time to absorb the emotional shock and haven't had time to make plans."

Mr. Cabot said that Munch had approached the symphony's board of trustees about six weeks ago, asking that it begin a search for a successor in the arduous post. Munch suffered a heart seizure a few years ago.

Mr. Cabot said that when the board had decided on Leinsdorf, the members had to visit New York several times to persuade the Met manager, Rudolph Bing, to release the conductor.

Met officials in New York gave no indication immediately who would take Leinsdorf's place.

When Munch steps down next year, he will have served as music director, his formal title, of the Boston Symphony for 13 years, longer than any other conductor except Koussevitzky.

During that time, the duties of the post have expanded until it is a year-round job. Besides having the longest concert season of any American orchestra, the Boston Symphony operates the Berkshire Music School, the Berkshire Music Festival and the annual Tanglewood concerts at Lenox, Mass.

[illegible] Polini, winner
[illegible]ional Chopin Piano
[illegible]s soloist; the Phila-
[illegible]stra with Eugene
[illegible]ducting. has brought many orchestra, at least [illegible]ven it by the New [illegible]ritics Circle for com-introduced to New chestra has received
[illegible]-International Music
, and nine Grand
[illegible]ques as well as the Vienna Mozartgemestanding recordings.

TRI
D. 121,778
MAY 1 1961

CURTAIN CALL

- Bowl to Mark Anniversary
- Hollywood 9-Week Season Due
- Leinsdorf to Conduct Opener

By BRUNO USSHER

LOS ANGELES—Major plans for the Hollywood Bowl season have been arranged [illegible] series of "Symphon[illegible] sion and

CHANGE IN CONDUCTORS: Retirement of Charles Munch as music director of the Boston Symphony has been announced. It will be effective in September, 1962, at the close of the orchestra's annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Dr. Munch will be succeeded by Leinsdorf.

Dr. Munch inaugurated the orchestra's open rehearsals in Boston, which in the last 10 years have increased from five to 10 during the winter season. It was announced recently that the orchestra, which already has the longest season of any in the country, will extend it to 50 weeks in 1961-62.

Leinsdorf has filled important conducting engagements in this country since the early 1930s. He made his debut with the Boston Symphony in February. Next month he will return to the Concertgebouw at Amsterdam to conduct the final concerts of the Beethoven cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland festival.

Today Leinsdorf ranks as one of the most versatile baton figures in this country and abroad. It is to be hoped that the Boston Symphony will share his genius with the country as a whole through radio, if not television.

Continued From Page One

girdling tours, including one to Moscow in 1960, the first time any Western orchestra had performed in the Soviet capital. The precedent-shattering tours included triumphal trips to Japan, Australia and New Zealand and most of the nations outside the Iron Curtain in Europe.

Leinsdorf, 49, is a native of Vienna and a protege of Arturo Toscanini. He has been with the Met for the last three seasons and has served as conductor or assistant conductor of the Florence, Italy, and Salzburg, Austria, music festivals. He lives in Larchmont, N.Y.

Married and the father of five, Leinsdorf made his first guest appearance with the Boston Symphony in February of this year. A graduate of the Austrian State Academy of Music, he has been conductor of opera and symphony at Bologna, Trieste and San Remo, Italy.

Leinsdorf first came to the United States in 1937, serving with the Met, then conducting in Cleveland, St. Louis, Los Angeles and at Rochester, N.Y. He was director of the New York City Opera Company in 1956 before moving to the Met.

Met Manager an Obstacle

He said he accepted the offer at Boston "36 hours after it was made.' Asked about his plans for the symphony, he said, "I accepted the appointment so recently I have not had enough time to absorb the emotional shock and haven't had time to make plans."

Mr. Cabot said that Munch had approached the symphony's board of trustees about six weeks ago, asking that it begin a search for a successor in the arduous post. Munch suffered a heart seizure a few years ago.

Mr. Cabot said that when the board had decided on Leinsdorf, the members had to visit New York several times to persuade the Met manager, Rudolph Bing, to release the conductor.

Met officials in New York gave no indication immediately who would take Leinsdorf's place.

When Munch steps down next year, he will have served as music director, his formal title, of the Boston Symphony for 13 years, longer than any other conductor except Koussevitzky.

During that time, the duties of the post have expanded until it is a year-round job. Besides having the longest concert season of any American orchestra, the Boston Symphony operates the Berkshire Music School, the Berkshire Music Festival and the annual Tanglewood concerts at Lenox, Mass.

London, 1956; Zurich, 1957; Moscow, 1960.

Doctor Munch was responsible

230

Munch's Record Notable; Leinsdorf's Is Promising

For Boston Symphony

CHARLES MUNCH, who will retire as music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August, has brought many honors to this orchestra which many persons consider the world's greatest.

At 71 [illegible] he will have served 13 seasons. His predecessor [illegible] lasted 25 years.

[illegible] of his legacy [illegible] on discs that is both far-ranging and deep-going. It adds up to a distillation of [illegible] a philosophy of conducting, if one wants to regard it that way. It also adds up to extended listening pleasure, of companionship with great music under the guidance of a great conductor. Included in the legacy are three new RCA VICTOR stereo releases, courses there will be others to keep his memory and [illegible] green. The current [illegible]

Munch

By F. A. KLEIN
Globe-Democrat Music Editor

CHARLES MUNCH, distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who [illegible] retire when the Tanglewood activity [illegible] are completed this summer, will leave a legacy on discs that is both far-ranging and deep-going. It adds up to a distillation of

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,083
APR [illegible]

CONCERT NO[illegible]

GLOBE-DEMOCRAT
St. Louis, Mo.
D. 339,129 S. 345,079
MAY 7 1961

LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
D. 172,597

APR 22 1961

NAMES in the NEWS

Strictly Personal

Pope John XXIII will send his personal blessings to gravely ill actor Gary Cooper if asked, according to Vatican sources. . . . The Duke and Duchess of Windsor left Palm Beach, Fla., their winter home for the past 20 years, on their way to New York and then to their home in Paris. Of Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, the Duchess said: "She is absolutely lovely. The 'Jackie' look is good style."

The Entertainers

Rita Moreno, fiery Puerto Rican actress, apparently has recovered from the overdose of sleeping tablets she took at the home of actor Marlon Brando. She has been released from hospital. . . . Zsa Zsa Gabor asks $6,000,000 from the men's magazine "Cavalier," claiming an article depicted her as a middle-aged gold-digger. . . . Richard Long, 33, television actor, was arrested after his wife, actress Mara Corday, told police he got drunk and beat her. She later said she would not press charges. . . . Elizabeth Taylor, now recuperating from a near fatal bout of pneumonia, will probably be strong enough in September to continue her lead role in the movie "Cleopatra." . . . Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season. Charles Munch, the present conductor, has announced his retirement.

Charles Munch

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS AND NEWS
D. 381,987

APR 22 1961

This Busy WORLD

People: The Career World

When Greek Prime Minister Constantine Karamanlis goes back to Athens, he will take with him a certificate designating him an honorary citizen of the state of Florida. The certificate was presented on behalf of Florida Gov. C. Farris Bryant at a New York City banquet last night.

Karamanlis

A descendant of George Washington, Mrs. Robert V. H. Duncan of Alexandria, announced she would seek the top office in the Daughters of the American Revolution. This at the conclusion of the DAR convention in Washington.

Erich Leinsdorf, once conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra, will go to the helm of the Boston Symphony Orchestra when Conductor Charles Munch retires at the end of the 1961-62 season.

Munch, who has led the Boston orchestra for 12 seasons, succeeded the late Serge Koussevitzky. Leinsdorf is conductor and musical consultant for the Metropolitan Opera.

Burrelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

INDIANAPOLIS, IND.
NEWS
D. 167,160

APR 22 1961

PEOPLE IN THE NEWS

Goldwater 'Bomb' Beauty in Bronze

By NICK JONES

Man, everybody knew that BARRY GOLDWATER fella was fast, but—like—wow!

The April 24 issue of Sports Illustrated has a story about "The Car Cult From Anaheim-ville" by Robert H[illegible]. The article gives a close look at the cult of hot-rodding in America and you'd be surprised at some of the motor fanatics lurking—or is it dragging—around us.

Grand Masters award–Ellery Queen. Mystery reader of the year–Ilka Chase. Special awards–Elizabeth Daly, Charles Addams, Philip Wittenberg.

ERICH LEINSDORF, 49 conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1961-62 season. CHARLES MUNCH, 69, will retire then; he succeeded the late SERGE KOUSSEVITZKY in 1949.

Mountain climber NOR-

LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
D. 172,587
APR 22 1961

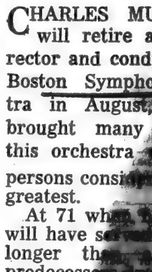
NAMES in the NEWS

Strictly Personal

Pope John XXIII will send his personal blessings to gravely ill actor Gary Cooper if asked, according to Vatican sources. . . . The Duke and Duchess of Windsor left Palm Beach, Fla., their winter home for the past 20 years, on their way to New York and then to their home in France. . . . Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, the hostess said: "She is absolutely lovely. The dress is good style."

The Entertainers

Rita Moreno, fiery Puerto Rican actress, apparently has recovered from the overdose of sleeping tablets she took at the home of actor Marlon Brando. She has been released from hospital. . . . Zsa Zsa Gabor asks $6,000,000 from the men's magazine "Cavalier," claiming an article depicted her as a middle-aged gold-digger. . . . Richard Long, 33, television actor, was arrested after his wife, actress Mara Corday, told police he got drunk and beat her. She later said she would not press charges. . . . Elizabeth Taylor, now recuperating from a near fatal bout of pneumonia, will probably be strong enough in September to continue her lead role in the movie "Cleopatra." . . . Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season. Charles Munch, the present conductor, has announced his retirement.



Charles Munch

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS AND NEWS
D. 381,887
APR 22 1961

Clippings
ESTABLISHED 1888
Barclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT
D. 339,129 S. 345,079
MAY 7 1961

CONCERT NO

By F. A. KLEIN
Globe-Democrat Music Editor

CHARLES MUNCH, distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will retire when the Tanglewood activities are completed this summer, will leave a legacy on discs that is both far-ranging and deep-going. It adds up to a distillation of a philosophy of conducting, if one wants to regard it that way. It also adds up to extended listening pleasure, of companionship with great music under the guidance of a great conductor. Included in the legacy are three new RCA VICTOR stereo releases; doubtless there will be others to keep his memory and his records green. The current ones are the Mendelssohn "Scotch" Symphony, with the scherzo from the Octet in E-flat as bonus; the Schumann "Spring" Symphony, together with the "Manfred" overture, and a collection of Berlioz Overtures, including "Roman Carnival," "Royal Hunt and Storm," "Beatrice and Benedict." Here is music, all the more challenging because it is standard fare, to try the talents of any conductor. Mr. Munch illuminates it anew with his genius. He uses his magnificent orchestra, of great tonal range and depth, with consummate skill, giving to the Mendelssohn its clean and graceful lines; to the Schumann, its romantic aura free of sticky sentiment, and to the Berlioz its burly swirl and color. A superlative musician and interpreter is leaving the active podium, but he never will be far out of reach, thanks to discs like these.

Munch

Throughout, the discret of Dalton Ba BELA BA in 1945, is more into most c
His " wh

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
APR 29 1961

For Boston Symphony

Munch's Record Notable; Leinsdorf's Is Promising

CHARLES MUNCH, who will retire as music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August, 1962, has brought many honors to this orchestra which many persons consider the world's greatest.

At 71 when he retires he will have served 18 seasons, longer than any of his predecessors in the orchestra's 80 years, except Serge Koussevitzky, who held the baton 25 years.

IN THOSE YEARS Dr. Munch's service given New York Music Critics Circle Awards have been given to compositions introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6, Piston's Viola Concerto, Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, Poulenc's Gloria and the Haieff Piano Concerto.

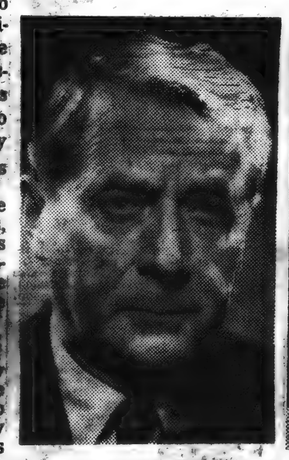
The orchestra has received two American-International Music Fund Awards, for Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2.

Dr. Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony of Debussy's Images. And during his tenure the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

* * *

HE LED the orchestra on three foreign tours. It was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union. Under his lead also the orchestra has commissioned works by 13 leading composers.

In addition to a distinguished record of introductions of new works, the orchestra under his leadership will be in his final year the first American orchestra to provide a full-time schedule of work for its members.



CHARLES MUNCH

ERICH LEINSDORF

* * *

HIS SUCCESSOR, Erich Leinsdorf, conducted the Boston Symphony for the first time last February. Ross Parmenter in the New York Times commented that the orchestra "besides retaining its own special richness of sonority that makes it so individual in sound [the orchestra] proved itself sufficiently responsive to the conductor to communicate his wishes, one sensed, almost exactly as he wanted them. Thus the concert fused two personalities, Mr. Leinsdorf's and the orchestra's." That fusion will become permanent in September, 1962.

Mr. Leinsdorf has had years of service with the Metropolitan Opera both as conductor and as musical consultant to the director.

* * *

HIS ACTIVITIES following his work with the Boston Symphony in February give some idea of his standing: Six programs in London with the BBC Symphony, engagements in Florence and Milan; then next month in Amsterdam to conduct the Concertgebouw in the final concerts of their Beethoven Cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

Born in Vienna Feb. 4, 1912, he was trained at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934 he was chosen by Bruno Walter as his assistant at the Salzburg Festival and he was chief assistant to Arturo Toscanini at the 1935, '36 and '37 Festivals. He joined the Metropolitan Opera staff in 1937 at Toscanini's recommendation.

LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
D. 172,587
APR 22 1961

NAMES in the NEWS

Strictly Personal

Pope John XXIII will send his personal blessings to gravely ill actor Gary Cooper if asked, according to Vatican sources. . . . The Duke and Duchess of Windsor left Palm Beach, Fla., their winter home for the past 20 years, on their way to New York and then to their home in Paris. Of Mrs. Jacqueline Kennedy, the Duchess said: "She is absolutely lovely. The whole look is good style."

The Entertainers

Rita Moreno, fiery Puerto Rican actress, apparently has recovered from the overdose of sleeping tablets she took at the home of actor Marlon Brando. She has been released from hospital. . . . Zsa Zsa Gabor asks $6,000,000 from the men's magazine "Cavalier," claiming an article depicted her as a middle-aged gold-digger. . . . Richard Long, 33, television actor, was arrested after his wife, actress Mara Corday, told police he got drunk and beat her. She later said she would not press charges. . . . Elizabeth Taylor, now recuperating from a near fatal bout of pneumonia, will probably be strong enough in September to continue her lead role in the movie "Cleopatra." . . .

Charles Munch

Erich Leinsdorf, 49, conductor of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, will become conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the end of the 1962 season. Charles Munch, the present conductor, has announced his retirement.

CLEVELAND, OHIO
PRESS AND NEWS
D. 381,987
APR 22 1961
This Week
Bachelli's
ESTABLISHED 1888
Barclay 7-5371

ST. LOUIS, MO.
GLOBE-DEMOCRAT
D. 339 129 S. 345,079
MAY 7 1961

CONCERT NOTES

By F. A. KLEIN
Globe-Democrat Music Editor

CHARLES MUNCH, distinguished conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will retire when the Tanglewood activities are completed this summer, will leave a legacy on discs that is both far-ranging and deep-going. It adds up to a distillation of a philosophy of conducting, if one wants to regard it that way. It also adds up to extended listening pleasure, of companionship with great music under the guidance of a great conductor. Included in the legacy are three new RCA VICTOR stereo releases; doubtless there will be others to keep his memory and his records green. The current ones are the Mendelssohn "Scotch" Symphony, with the scherzo from the Octet in E-flat as bonus; the Schumann "Spring" Symphony, together with the "Manfred" overture, and a collection of Berlioz Overtures, including "Roman Carnival," "Royal Hunt and Storm," "Beatrice and Benedict." Here is music, all the more challenging because it is standard fare, to try the talents of any conductor. Mr. Munch illuminates it anew with his genius. He uses his magnificent orchestra, of great tonal range and depth, with consummate skill, giving to the Mendelssohn its clean and graceful lines; to the Schumann, its romantic aura free of sticky sentiment, and to the Berlioz its burly swirl and color. A superlative musician and interpreter is leaving the active podium, but he never will be far out of reach, thanks to discs like these.

Munch

Throughout, Mr. Sou
the discret but adro of Dalton Baldwin

BELA BART in 1945, is more into most His " wh

Boston Symphony

Munch's Record Notable; Leinsdorf's Is Promising

CHARLES MUNCH, who will retire as music director and conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in August, 1962, has brought many honors to this orchestra which many persons consider the world's greatest.

At 71 when he retires he will have served eight seasons, longer than any of his predecessors in the orchestra's 80 years (Pierre Monteux, Serge Koussevitzky preceded him). His baton 25 years.

* * *

IN THOSE years Dr. Munch's service five New York Music Critics' Circle Awards have been given to compositions introduced by him to New York: Martinu's Symphony No. 6, Piston's Viola Concerto, Leo Smit's Symphony No. 1, Poulenc's Gloria and the Haieff Piano Concerto.

The orchestra has received two American-International Music Fund Awards, for Blackwood's Symphony No. 1 and the Haieff Symphony No. 2.

Dr. Munch received the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences Award for his recording with the Boston Symphony of Debussy's Images. And during his tenure the orchestra has received nine Grand Prix du Disques and the Medal of the Vienna Mozartgemeinde.

* * *

HE LED the orchestra on three foreign tours. It was the first western orchestra to be heard in the Soviet Union. Under his lead also the orchestra has commissioned works by 13 leading composers.

In addition to a distinguished record of introductions of new works, the orchestra under his leadership will be in his final year the first American orchestra to provide a full-time schedule of work for its members.

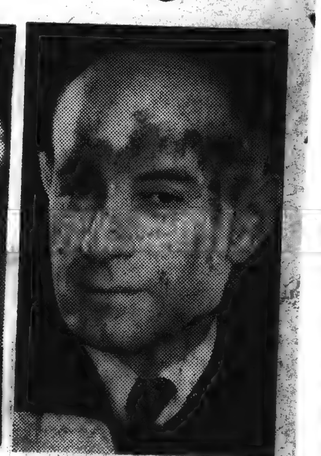
CHARLES MUNCH



ERICH LEINSDORF

* * *

HIS SUCCESSOR, Erich Leinsdorf, conducted the Boston Symphony for the first time last February. Ross Parmenter in the New York Times commented that the orchestra "besides retaining its own special richness of sonority that makes it so individual in sound [the orchestra] proved itself sufficiently responsive to the conductor to communicate his wishes, one sensed, almost exactly as he wanted them. Thus the concert fused two personalities, Mr. Leinsdorf's and the orchestra's." That fusion will become permanent in September, 1962.

Mr. Leinsdorf has had years of service with the Metropolitan Opera both as conductor and as musical consultant to the director. He has been conductor of the Cleveland and Rochester Orchestras and has conducted many others.

* * *

HIS ACTIVITIES following his work with the Boston Symphony in February give some idea of his standing: Six programs in London with the BBC Symphony, engagements in Florence and Milan; then next month in Amsterdam to conduct the Concertgebouw in the final concerts of their Beethoven Cycle and for his fourth engagement at the Holland Festival.

Born in Vienna Feb. 4, 1912, he was trained at the Vienna Gymnasium. In 1934 he was chosen by Bruno Walter as his assistant at the Salzburg Festival and he was chief assistant to Arturo Toscanini at the 1935, '36 and '37 Festivals. He joined the Metropolitan Opera staff in 1937 at Toscanini's recommendation.

Boston Won't Be the Same Without Munch

Handsome, Aristocratic Conductor Who Will Lay Down His Baton in the Summer of 1962, Regards His Work as a Sacred Calling and Keeps in Shape With Daily Gymnastics

THERE are some Milwaukeeans who vow to this day that the most thrilling concert they have ever heard was that played by the National Orchestra of France at the Pabst theater Oct. 29, 1948. It was an all-French program, except for a brief American number, and it went off with whiplash impact and electrifying effect.

The Chicago symphony orchestra had an off night that Friday and most of the members came up for the event and occupied a section of the balcony. Afterward one of them was asked how his Chicago colleagues were impressed. His answer offered eloquent testimony:

"They had never imagined anything like it. They were so excited they almost fell out of the balcony."

Mainly as a result of that American tour with his Paris musicians, Charles Munch was shortly appointed conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra, which his predecessor, Serge Koussevitzky, had raised to exalted status.

Although many American music followers were startled by the choice of the relatively unknown Alsatian for the Boston podium, Virgil Thomson was not. In 1935 this composer-critic from Kansas City, then working in Paris, had predicted that someday Munch would succeed Koussevitzky in Boston. That forecast was made a dozen years before Munch's first visit to America.

Rewarding Years Spent in Boston

How could Thomson have seen ahead so accurately? He now explains that, early in his career as conductor, Munch was demonstrating those assets which would appeal to the fastidious Boston audiences: A handsome appearance and an aristocratic bearing in addition to marked musicianship—qualities which Koussevitzky had in abundance.

Munch has now finished a dozen seasons in Boston. His numerous recordings and broadcasts and the prizes awarded him have made him known to millions in both hemispheres.

In September he will be 70 and he will call it a career in Boston the following summer. Erich Leinsdorf, 49, the Viennese born conductor who has been active in the United States since 1937, will succeed him.

A man of wealth and world acclaim, Munch has always impressed everyone by his modesty and gentle, courteous manner. Shortly after he began his Boston duties, a reporter accompanied him from his hotel room to a near-by bar. "After you," was Munch's request at every elevator and door. In the tavern he was asked whether he wished a cocktail or wine.

"A cola, please," he replied. "It picks me up and tastes even better here than in France. I do not like cocktails. And just a glass of wine is too expensive."

He Celebrates by Buying

During his Boston seasons Munch and his wife, Genevieve, occupy a pleasant simple home in the wooded hills 12 miles outside the city. On the spacious lawn he practices his golf strokes and on winter nights he enjoys watching the deer scamper in the distance.

The Munch Paris residence is a luxurious apartment, with paintings by Brueghel, Monet, Delacroix and many other masters. The musician is an avid collector of rare prints, old violins and valuable art objects. As his manic background. Strasbourg, Alsace, was German held Strass-colleague and translator, Leon Burkat, says, he is an "impulse" and "occasion" buyer. If a concert has gone to his satisfaction he will pick up a piece of silverware to celebrate it. If he is disappointed by the performance, he will buy something else as a consolation. After recovering from a long illness he rewarded himself by acquiring an old master's painting and a stack of costly prints and drawings.

A decidedly French musician, he likewise has a decidedly Ger-

In France he was known as "le beau Charles" burg when he was born there in 1891. He is descended of a long line of Protestant pastors, teachers and organists. His father, Ernest, and his uncle, Eugene, were outstanding musicians. Eugene taught the organ not only to his nephew, Charles, but to a particularly brilliant youth named Albert Schweitzer, who was to become great as musician, theologian, philosopher and African medical missionary. The Munches and Schweitzer have been lifelong friends.

His Conducting Life Began at 41

Charles, the future conductor, showed aptitude for the violin and was sent to Paris to study with the best teacher there, Louis Capet. At 21 he made his debut as a fiddler in a duo recital with his brother Fritz, a cellist, who has become an eminent chorus conductor.

Charles was on vacation in Strasbourg in the summer of 1914 when Alsace was engulfed by World War I. He was drafted into the German army and spent four years on the western front, being gassed at Peronne and wounded at Verdun.

Still considering himself a violinist, he played in German symphony orchestras through the 1920's. For several years he was concertmaster (first violinist) of the famed Leipzig Gewandhaus orchestra which was conducted by the foremost German conductor of his time, Wilhelm Furtwaengler. This was immensely valuable experience.

Not until he was 41—older than any other conductor of comparable stature—did Munch decide to take up the baton. His fiancee, Genevieve Maury, proved quite helpful. As heiress to part of the Nestle chocolate fortune, she enabled him to rent a hall in Paris and hire an orchestra, which he named the Paris Philharmonic.

This money facilitated Munch's rise to eminence, but he undoubtedly would have reached it on his own. His talent and personality were quickly revealed and appreciated. He went from one orchestra to another, reviving the moribund ones and stimulating the others to their best efforts. He soon was rated as the best and most appealing conductor of Paris (and, naturally, of all France).

His good looks and attitude of gentle melancholy entranced the women in particular. Hundreds of them formed a fan club known at "les muenchettes" ("the Munch girls") and bought season tickets to cheer their idol, who became known throughout France as "le beau Charles."

Six years after he began conducting, he was appointed to the best orchestral post in the nation, that of the great Paris Conservatory concerts. He held this job throughout the dismal years of the German occupation in World War II and turned over his fees to the resistance movement.

Humble About His 'Priesthood'

Munch has always been a loyal upholder of the new and unfamiliar music. He programed so much of it that, in 1946, his board of directors ordered him to desist. Munch immediately resigned, turned to guest conducting in Europe and America, and then took over the National orchestra (primarily a radio organization), which he took on its historic 1948 tour of the United States.

Munch regards conducting as a sacred calling, a priesthood, and he has always been humble about it. He has never stopped learning. In his sixties, he has spent vacations as a student in percussion and trumpet classes of the Paris conservatory.

He was an established conductor when the incomparable Toscanini came to Paris to lead a series of concerts. Always eager to learn, Munch grabbed a fiddle and filled an extra chair behind the last stand. Unfortunately his sheet music did not have the bowing marks of the other violinists and the imperious Italian noticed that his bow was not in unison with the others.

Years later the two conductors met in New York, and Toscanini reminded Munch of his errors with a perfect recollection.

Munch eschews some of the virtuoso conductor's show tricks. He uses a baton and insists that his students do. "Conducting without a baton has, unhappily, become fashionable," he remarked several years ago, "but it is a bad habit, in my opinion, that creates difficulties for the musicians."

'Memory Acrobats' Disturb Him

Nor does he force his pupils to memorize their scores. "People go to concerts to admire the music, not the conductor's feats of memory," he insists. "I have seen some of the greatest 'memory acrobats' make catastrophic mistakes."

Like a priest, Munch believes that a conductor's day must be rigorously disciplined and dedicated. He advises daily gymnastics to combat fatigue and insure graceful co-ordination on the stage.

"In the morning my mind is still fresh; that is the best time to rehearse," he says. "Afternoons are the time to advise young composers, to counsel with soloists, to read new scores and make programs.

"For careful study of scores I prefer the silence of the night, when I get my second wind and the music engraves itself more quickly on my memory. The senses are sharpened by the day's excitement. Nothing disturbs the solitude, peace and silence which are so rare and precious these days."

And in such hours, he finds, a bottle of pop is a better stimulus than a glass of expensive wine.

WALTER MONFRIED.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAR 25 1961

The Boston Symphony Flexes Its Muscles

More Work, More Music

By Harold Rogers

Boston

When music critics and radio program directors receive a formal invitation to a press conference at Symphony Hall, typed on the Boston Symphony's letterhead, then it can be assumed that something important is in the wind. Run-of-the-mill press conferences are arranged by telephone or by a visit from a representative of the orchestra's publicity department.

What happened to be in the wind was of some interest—no doubt about that—but of less interest than what most of us were anticipating: the announcement, perhaps, of Charles Munch's retirement as music director, and possibly some news of his successor.

But it was no such thing. We learned at the outset that Dr. Munch will continue in his post for at least one more season, and knowing this, none of us dared broach this delicate subject that has filled Boston with rumors for the past two or three years. Such rumors have ranged wildly from Herbert von Karajan to Robert Shaw, from Igor Markevitch to Thomas Schippers, from William Steinberg to . . . well, one can easily commiserate with trustees who must search the world for a man great enough—and available enough—to stand before this great orchestra.

Flash-Fire Rumors

Could the new man be Carlo Maria Giulini, the Italian conductor whose face filled an entire page recently in an advertisement by Angel Records in the Boston Symphony's concert bulletin? Rumors start easily from such innocent sources. Several players in the orchestra once confessed that they often invent rumors just for the fun of it. These burst out backstage in a flash fire, only to be stamped out by the management when smoke reaches the upper offices.

No, this press conference had nothing to do with conductors, present or future, though guest conductors will be involved in the Boston Symphony's new plan. And the plan is this—more concerts: more work for the musicians, more music for the public.

For the first time since 1925 the orchestra will extend its season by giving 221 concerts instead of 212. Six of these added concerts will make up a new Monday Evening Series. This means that at least 2,631 more people (the seating capacity of Symphony Hall) will be able to hear the Boston Symphony without resorting to FM broadcasts.

(This new Monday series goes on sale March 27 at Symphony Hall.)

The Boston Symphony already has the longest season of any orchestra in the United States. It has offered its musicians 48 pay weeks in the year, plus recording fees. The new schedule will offer them 50 pay weeks. Their actual playing time, however, will cover only 48 weeks, thus giving them a month of vacation.

(The Philadelphia Orchestra gives its players 38 weeks; the New York Philharmonic 32 plus, depending on current tours.)

Question of Quality

One might logically ask at this point if the Boston Symphony musicians can maintain this frequency of performance without some disintegration of quality.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, is of the opinion that there will be no sacrifice of quality. The trustees, he said, "believe the orchestra exists as a public institution, supported by the public with a responsibility to perform before the public as often as possible without impairing its musical standards."

Yet there are some long-term subscribers who are of the opinion that the standards have long since been impaired, that the disintegration began when Koussevitzky, a stern disciplinarian, vacated his post in 1949. Others say that they feel the orchestra plays as well as ever, even though Dr. Munch does not care to discipline as Koussevitzky did. Granted that the orchestra under Dr. Munch sounds different, it is still, they maintain, a precision instrument and one of the great orchestras of the world.

Mr. Cabot said that the trustees also "feel a responsibility for the welfare of the orchestra members." Through steady employment the musicians "can concentrate on musical matters without the problems common to most symphony orchestra players of finding extra and sometimes non-musical means to support themselves and their families."

Backstage Feeling

When Thomas D. Perry, Jr., the orchestra's manager, was asked if the new plan appealed to the men, he said, "Yes."

But backstage scuttlebut has it that not all the musicians find the new plan appealing. The reasons are not hard to understand. Most symphony musicians are frustrated soloists. Some of these, when their frustrations become intense enough, let off steam by forming their own small chamber ensembles and giving their own concerts. Some of these small ensembles have been given homes at Boston educational institutions as musicians-in-residence. Some of these groups may now be compelled to disband.

Management, of course, sees the reverse side of the coin. If the musicians have time to play on their own, why shouldn't they give this time to the orchestra, thus augmenting their income through the orchestra and helping to augment the orchestra's income through the increase of concerts given?

But regardless of the arguments — whether the musicians are happy or not, or whether the orchestra's quality will be sacrificed or not—the fact remains that the demand for tickets to the Boston Symphony's concerts has been on the increase for the past 10 years. This, too, in spite of the fact that most of the orchestra's concerts are available to the public in monaural and stereo broadcasts over two leading FM stations.

"I would be very happy if someone could tell me why this is so," Mr. Cabot remarked. "I have observed this increase in the demand for tickets, but I don't understand what causes it."

Perhaps because the Boston Symphony "is still top dog," as Mr. Cabot once said after the conductorship had changed from Koussevitzky to Munch. And when tickets are sold out—as Boston Symphony tickets nearly always are—the public cannot resist storming the box office.

N-34 The Providence Journal
Sunday, March 26, 1961

Boston Symphony Plans to Work 50-Week Year

Boston — (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform on a 50-week-a-year basis beginning next fall, it was announced yesterday.

The orchestra, now the busiest in the nation, will add a new Monday series in Boston, extend the Tuesday night series and expand the Berkshire Festival Concerts to eight weeks in 1962.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, said the season would be expanded to allow more persons to hear the orchestra. He noted that all Boston and Cambridge concert series were sold out by subscription in advance.

Cabot said the expanded season will give players full-time employment, "without the problems common to most symphony orchestra players of finding extra and sometimes non-musical means to support themselves and their families," he said.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
MAR 25 1961

BSO Adding Concerts At Tanglewood, Boston

By John G. W. Mahanna

By JOHN G. W. MAHANNA

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, will extend its activities, beginning with the 1961-62 season, to a 50-week season, including seven weeks this year at Tanglewood and eight in 1962. In all, the BSO will give 221 concerts.

The announcement was made this week at a press conference in Symphony Hall, Boston, by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the BSO and Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees.

No Increase in Price

The extended season, including the seven and eight weeks at the Berkshire Festival, will not mean any increase in the price of tickets, Mr. Perry said.

This season, he explained there will be five weeks of major concerts by the full orchestra and two weeks of the customary Bach-Mozart series. In 1962 the BSO will continue with five weeks of major concerts and three weeks of the Bach-Mozart series.

At present the orchestra gives 63 Symphony Hall concerts in Boston, in the winter season. These concerts, BSO officials said, divided into four series, are sold out by season subscription. Next season, the number of Symphony Hall concerts will be increased to 70 by the addition of a new series of six Monday evening concerts, plus an increase from 9 to 10 programs in the present Tuesday evening series.

Center Opens July 2

The Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood will open on Sunday, July 2 and the first two weekends will be devoted to the works of Bach-Mozart, with chamber music on Wednesday evenings. The first major concert by the full orchestra in the Music Shed will be Friday, July 21, with Dr. Charles Munch conducting.

Saturday morning rehearsals for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund will be continued as usual in the Music Shed.

In addition to the new, expanded series, the orchestra will continue in Boston's Symphony Hall its 10 rehearsals open to the public as a pension fund benefit; the annual pension fund concert in Symphony Hall; the Boston Pops pension fund concert in Symphony Hall; the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, and the regular series of concerts given each year in Cambridge (6), Providence (5), Brooklyn (5) and New York (10), plus about 20 tour concerts.

The orchestra also presents the Boston Pops with Arthur Fiedler each spring in Symphony Hall, covering nine weeks, and the free three-week Esplanade concerts with Mr. Fiedler conducting at the Hatch Memorial Shell on the banks of the Charles River in Boston.

Gives Steady Employment

Mr. Cabot said the BSO trustees feel that by steady employment through most of the year, the men and women who make up the orchestra can concentrate on musical matters without the problems common to most symphony orchestra players of finding extra and sometimes nonmusical means to support themselves and their families.

He added that the trustees believe the orchestra exists as a public institution, supported by the public with a responsibility to perform before the public as often as possible without impairing its musical standards.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
MAY 1 1961

Symphony Series

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, reports that more than 2300 season subscriptions have been sold for the new Monday concerts next season.

About 300 subscriptions at $20 and $24 for the six new Monday night concerts are still available at Symphony Hall box office.

The concerts will be given Nov. 6, Dec. 18, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, March 19 and April 23 at Symphony Hall.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
FEB 5 - 1961

New Symphony Series Added

WCRB-AM & FM adds a new series of Boston Symphony concerts in stereophonic sound Sundays beginning tonight, at 8:05. The series will feature specially-recorded concerts on tape, from the concert season and highlight events from the past summer's Berkshire Festival.

February's programs will include two concerts conducted by Pierre Monteux and two conducted by Dr. Charles Munch, the Orchestra's Music Director; three of the four concerts are from the Berkshire Music Festival.

WCRB also broadcasts the Saturday evening concerts of The Boston Symphony in "live" stereophonic sound, direct from Symphony Hall, beginning at 8:25 PM.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1961

Brooklyn

Under Brooklyn (p. 327), substitute the following complete listing: (Except where otherwise noted, the following events take place at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Director: Wm. McKelvy Martin.)

Boston Symphony Orchestra. Music Director: Charles Munch. Five Friday evening concerts: Dec. 2, Jan. 6, Feb. 17, Mar. 10, April 7. Charles Munch conducts all concerts except Feb. 17, when Erich Leinsdorf is guest conductor.

New York Philharmonic. Music Director: Leonard Bernstein. Two Tuesday and five Saturday evening concerts: Oct. 18, Nov. 8, Dec. 17, Jan. 14, Jan. 28, Feb. 25, April 15. Three conducted by Bernstein; others by Boehm, Paray, Wallenstein, Golschmann.

Brooklyn Opera Company. Director: Guido G. Salmaggi. Fall season: Sept. 24, Gianni Schicchi; Oct. 1, Madama Butterfly; Oct. 8, Rigoletto; Oct. 15, La Traviata; Oct. 22, La Bohème; Oct. 29, Aida; Nov. 5, Carmen; Dec. 18, Hansel and Gretel. Spring season, 1961: April 8, Il Trovatore; April 14, Tosca; April 22, Carmen; April 29, Madama Butterfly; May 6, La Bohème; May 13, Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci.

Brooklyn Philharmonia. Conductor Siegfried Landau. Soloists: Jean Casadesus, Nov. 12; Milstein, Dec. 10; Firkusny, Feb. 11; Verdi Requiem, Mar. 18. Three youth concerts.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
APR 1961

Advance news from the orchestras include the appointment of Michael Charry, assistant conductor of the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra as apprentice conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra for the 1961-62 season. He will be the orchestra's pianist, assist Mr. Szell in the preparation of performances and observe all operations of the orchestra. . . . The Cleveland Orchestra also announces that applications are now accepted for the final year of Kulas fellowship in conducting. Musicians who have not reached their 40th birthday may apply. . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, will extend its activities during 1961-62 to a fifty week season in which 221 concerts will be given. At present the Orchestra gives 63 Symphony Hall concerts in the winter season, next season the number will be increased to 70. The Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extended from six to seven weeks this summer. In addition to this, the Orchestra will continue its rehearsal programs open to the public, the Boston pops and pension fund concerts and its regular series of concerts given in Cambridge, Providence, Brooklyn and Manhattan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 7 1961

Monday Evening Concerts

SOMETHING NEW will be added to the Boston scene next season. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is having a new series of six Monday evening concerts, beginning Nov. 6. The orchestra's subscription office reports that in the seven days of public sale, 1502 new subscribers purchased season ticket for this series. The remaining seats in Symphony Hall are still available at Symphony Hall subscription office, which is open Monday through Friday, from 9 to 5. Subscriptions are priced at $16, $20 and $24 for the six concerts. The $8 and $12 subscriptions are sold out.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
MAY 4 1961

New BSO Series Ticket Sale Over 2300 Mark Now

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager reports that more than 2300 season subscriptions have been sold for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new series of six Monday evening concerts which will begin next season. Approximately 300 subscriptions, at $20 and $24 for the six concerts, are still available at the Symphony Hall Subscription Office.

The new Monday evening concerts, the first significant extension of the Orchestra's concert activity in Boston since 1925, will be given at Symphony Hall on November 6, December 18, January 15, February 12, March 19 and April 23. Charles Munch who next season begins his final year as the Orchestra's Music Director, has invited several guest conductors and soloists to appear at these concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,847
MAR 22 1961

Symphony Plans Longer Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, will extend its activities, beginning with the 1961-62 season, to a 50-week season in which 221 concerts will be given.

At present the orchestra gives 63 Symphony Hall (Boston) concerts in the winter season; these concerts divided into four series, are sold out by season subscription. Next season the number of Symphony Hall concerts will be increased to 70 by the addition of a new series of six Monday evening concerts plus an increase from nine to 10 programs in the present Tuesday evening series.

The Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood which is to be extended from six to seven weeks this summer (1961) will be increased to an eight week summer season in 1962.

In addition to the new or expanded series, the orchestra will continue its 10 rehearsals opened to the public as a benefit for the Orchestra's Pension Fund, the annual Pension Fund concert in Symphony Hall, the Boston Pops Pension Fund concert in Symphony Hall, the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, and the regular series of concerts given each year in Cambridge (6), Providence (5), Brooklyn (5), and Manhattan (10) plus approximately 20 tour concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
MAR 27 1961

...doubly by a neurotic old ...ionship is doomed.

New Monday Series Is Announced By Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced a new series of concerts for next season, to be given on six Monday evenings in Symphony Hall.

The orchestra will continue to present its Friday, Saturday and Sunday series in Symphony Hall and the Tuesday evening series in Cambridge. The Tuesday evening Boston series will also be continued but extended from nine to 10 concerts.

In his announcement of the new series, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, stated, "The public shows a continuing interest to hear the orchestra.

"For several years more people have applied for subscriptions than Symphony Hall will hold. The orchestra's Boston and Cambridge concerts have been sold out by subscription and many who would like to hear the orchestra have been unable to do so except by radio and television.

"Now, for the first time since 1925, we are able to offer more concerts. 2631 seats—the Symphony Hall capacity—are now available to new subscribers to the new Monday evening series of concerts by the orchestra."

The Monday evening concerts will be given Nov. 6, Dec. 18, Jan. 15 (1962), Feb. 12, March 19 and April 23. The orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, plans to invite several guest conductors and distinguished soloists to appear during the season at these concerts.

Subscriptions to the new series of concerts according to Thomas D. Perry, Jr., orchestra manager, were put on sale today at Symphony Hall Season Subscription Offices. Seat order of reservation.

This extends the activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, to fifty locations will be assigned in weeks. During these 221 concerts will be given.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
MAR 26 1961

Hub Symphony Adds Concerts

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform on a 60 weeks - a - year basis beginning next fall, it was announced Saturday.

The orchestra, now the busiest in the nation, will add a new Monday series in Boston, extend the Tuesday night series and expand the Berkshire Festival concerts to eight weeks in 1962.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, said the season would be expanded to allow more persons to hear the orchestra. He noted that all Boston and Cambridge concert series were sold out by subscription in advance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAY 27 1961

Monday Evening Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Monday evening series of concerts, announced for Nov. 6, Dec. 18, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, March 19, and April 23, have already garnered more than 2,300 season subscriptions. There are still available some 300 subscriptions at $20 and $24 for the six concerts.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
MAY 7 1961

Musigrams

Clarion Concerts will give four Town Hall programs next season on Tuesday nights, Nov. 14, Dec. 5, Jan. 23 and Feb. 27, with a repertory devoted mainly to unfamiliar early works. . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Monday evening series in Boston's Symphony Hall is already nearly sold out for next season. . . . In its Contemporary Music Symposium in Washington May 24 to 27, the American University will present more than forty works chosen from 206 submitted by composers in the United States and Canada.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 29 1961

New Symphony Series Close to Sellout

Thomas D. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, today reported more than 2300 season subscriptions sold for the new series of six Monday evening concerts to begin next season. Approximately 300 subscriptions, at $20 and $24 for the six events, are still available at the Symphony Hall subscription office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
APR 29 1961

New Symphony Series Close to Sellout

Thomas D. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, today reported more than 2300 season subscriptions sold for the new series of six Monday evening concerts to begin next season. Approximately 300 subscriptions, at $20 and $24 for the six events, are still available at the Symphony Hall subscription office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
APR 8 1961

Seats Still Available

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Subscription Office reports that in the first seven days of public sale, 1,502 new subscribers have purchased season tickets for the new Monday evening series of six concerts which will begin in November, 1961.

The remaining 1,129 seats in Symphony Hall (capacity 2,631) are still available at Symphony Hall Subscription Office—CO 6-1492—which is open Monday through Friday from 9 to 5. The remaining subscriptions are priced at $16, $20, and $24 for the six concerts. The $8 and $12 subscriptions are sold out.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 371,393
MAY 1 1961

MONDAY SYMPHONY

More than 2300 season subscriptions have been sold for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new series of six Monday evening concerts which begin next season.

Musigrams

Clarion Concerts will give four Town Hall programs next season on Tuesday nights, Nov. 14, Dec. 5, Jan. 23 and Feb. 27, with a repertory devoted mainly to unfamiliar early works. . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Monday evening series in Boston's Symphony Hall is already nearly sold out for next season. . . . In its Contemporary Music Symposium in Washington May 24 to 27, the American University will present more than forty works chosen from 206 submitted by composers in the United States and Canada.

MUSICAL AMERICA
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
MAR 1961

Brooklyn

Under Brooklyn (p. 327), substitute the following complete listing: (Except where otherwise noted, the following events take place at the Brooklyn Academy of Music, 30 Lafayette Ave. Director: Wm. McKelvy Martin.)

Boston Symphony Orchestra. Music Director: Charles Munch. Five Friday evening concerts: Dec. 2, Jan. 6, Feb. 17, Mar. 10, April 7. Charles Munch conducts all concerts except Feb. 17, when Erich Leinsdorf is guest conductor.

New York Philharmonic. Music Director: Leonard Bernstein. Two Tuesday and five Saturday evening concerts: Oct. 18, Nov. 8, Dec. 17, Jan. 14, Jan. 28, Feb. 25, April 15. Three conducted by Bernstein; others by Boehm, Paray, Wallenstein, Golschmann.

Brooklyn Opera Company. Director: Guido G. Salmaggi. Fall season: Sept. 24, Gianni Schicchi; Oct. 1, Madama Butterfly; Oct. 8, Rigoletto; Oct. 15, La Traviata; Oct. 22, La Bohème; Oct. 29, Aida; Nov. 5, Carmen; Dec. 18, Hansel and Gretel. Spring season, 1961: April 8, Il Trovatore; April 14, Tosca; April 22, Carmen; April 29, Madama Butterfly; May 6, La Bohème; May 13, Cavalleria Rusticana and Pagliacci.

Brooklyn Philharmonia. Conductor Siegfried Landau. Soloists: Jean Casadesus, Nov. 12; Milstein, Dec. 10; Firkusny, Feb. 11; Verdi Requiem, Mar. 18. Three youth concerts.

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
APR 1961

Advance news from the orchestras include the appointment of Michael Charry, assistant conductor of the Rhode Island Philharmonic Orchestra as apprentice conductor of the Cleveland Orchestra for the 1961-62 season. He will be the orchestra's pianist, assist Mr. Szell in the preparation of performances and observe all operations of the orchestra. . . . The Cleveland Orchestra also announces that applications are now accepted for the final year of Kulas fellowship in conducting. Musicians who have not reached their 40th birthday may apply. . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, will extend its activities during 1961-62 to a fifty week season in which 221 concerts will be given. At present the Orchestra gives 63 Symphony Hall concerts in the winter season, next season the number will be increased to 70. The Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be extended from six to seven weeks this summer. In addition to this, the Orchestra will continue its rehearsal programs open to the public, the Boston pops and pension fund concerts and its regular series of concerts given in Cambridge, Providence, Brooklyn and Manhattan.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 7 1961

Monday Evening Concerts

SOMETHING NEW will be added to the Boston scene next season. The Boston Symphony Orchestra is having a new series of six Monday evening concerts, beginning Nov. 6. The orchestra's subscription office reports that in the seven days of public sale, 1502 new subscribers purchased season ticket for this series. The remaining seats in Symphony Hall are still available at Symphony Hall subscription office, which is open Monday through Friday from 9 to 5. Subscriptions are priced at $16, $20 and $24 for the six concerts. The $8 and $12 subscriptions are sold out.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
MAR 27 1961

...by a neurotic old ...lonship is doomed.

Book Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
MAY 4 1961

New BSO Series Ticket Sale Over 2300 Mark Now

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager reports that more than 2300 season subscriptions have been sold for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new series of six Monday evening concerts which will begin next season. Approximately 300 subscriptions, at $20 and $24 for the six concerts, are still available at the Symphony Hall Subscription Office.

The new Monday evening concerts, the first significant extension of the Orchestra's concert activity in Boston since 1925, will be given at Symphony Hall on November 6, December 18, January 15, February 12, March 19 and April 23. Charles Munch, who next season begins his final year as the Orchestra's Music Director, has invited several guest conductors and soloists to appear at these concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,847
MAR 22 1961

Symphony Plans Longer Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, will extend its activities, beginning with the 1961-62 season, to a 50-week season in which 221 concerts will be given.

At present the orchestra gives 63 Symphony Hall (Boston) concerts in the winter season; these concerts divided into four series, are sold out by season subscription. Next season the number of Symphony Hall concerts will be increased to 70 by the addition of a new series of six Monday evening concerts plus an increase from nine to 10 programs in the present Tuesday evening series.

The Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood which is to be extended from six to seven weeks this summer (1961) will be increased to an eight week summer season in 1962.

In addition to the new or expanded series, the orchestra will continue its 10 rehearsals opened to the public as a benefit for the Orchestra's Pension Fund, the annual Pension Fund concert in Symphony Hall, the Boston Pops Pension Fund concert in Symphony Hall, the Boston Pops at Tanglewood, and the regular series of concerts given each year in Cambridge (6), Providence (5), Brooklyn (5), and Manhattan (10) plus approximately 20 tour concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
APR 29 1961

New Symphony Series Close to Sellout

Thomas D. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, today reported more than 2300 season subscriptions sold for the new series of six Monday evening concerts to begin next season. Approximately 300 subscriptions, at $20 and $24 for the six events, are still available at the Symphony Hall subscription office.

New Monday Series Is Announced By Symphony

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced a new series of concerts for next season, to be given on six Monday evenings in Symphony Hall.

The orchestra will continue to present its Friday, Saturday and Sunday series in Symphony Hall and the Tuesday evening series in Cambridge. The Tuesday evening Boston series will also be continued but extended from nine to 10 concerts.

In his announcement of the new series, Henry B. Cabot, president of the orchestra's trustees, stated, "The public shows a continuing interest to hear the orchestra.

"For several years more people have applied for subscriptions than Symphony Hall will hold. The orchestra's Boston and Cambridge concerts have been sold out by subscription and many who would like to hear the orchestra have been unable to do so except by radio and television.

"Now, for the first time since 1925, we are able to offer more concerts. 2631 seats—the Symphony Hall capacity—are now available to new subscribers to the new Monday evening series of concerts by the orchestra."

The Monday evening concerts will be given Nov. 6, Dec. 18, Jan. 15 (1962), Feb. 12, March 19 and April 23. The orchestra's music director, Charles Munch, plans to invite several guest conductors and distinguished soloists to appear during the season at these concerts.

Subscriptions to the new series of concerts according to Thomas D. Perry, Jr., orchestra manager, were put on sale today at Symphony Hall Season Subscription Offices. Seat order of reservation

This extends the activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which already has the longest season of any orchestra in the United States, to fifty weeks. During these 221 concerts will be given.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
MAY 27 1961

Monday Evening Series

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Monday evening series of concerts, announced for Nov. 6, Dec. 18, Jan. 15, Feb. 12, March 19, and April 23, have already garnered more than 2,300 season subscriptions. There are still available some 300 subscriptions at $20 and $24 for the six concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
APR 29 1961

New Symphony Series Close to Sellout

Thomas D. Perry Jr., Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, today reported more than 2300 season subscriptions sold for the new series of six Monday evening concerts to begin next season. Approximately 300 subscriptions, at $20 and $24 for the six events, are still available at the Symphony Hall subscription office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
MAR 26 1961

Hub Symphony Adds Concerts

BOSTON (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform on [illegible] weeks a year basis beginning next fall, it was announced Saturday.

The orchestra, now the busiest in the nation, will add a new Monday series in Boston, extend the Tuesday night series and expand the Berkshire Festival concerts to eight weeks in 1962.

Henry B. Cabot, president of the trustees, said the season would be expanded to allow more persons to hear the orchestra. He noted that all Boston and Cambridge concert series were sold out by subscription in advance.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,847 S. 488,161
MAY 7 1961

Musigrams

Clarion Concerts will give four Town Hall programs next season on Tuesday nights, Nov. 14, Dec. 5, Jan. 23 and Feb. 27, with a repertory devoted mainly to unfamiliar early works. . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Monday evening series in Boston's Symphony Hall is already nearly sold out for next season. . . . In its Contemporary Music Symposium in Washington May 24 to 27, the American University will present more than forty works chosen from 206 submitted by composers in the United States and Canada.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
APR 8 1961

Seats Still Available

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Subscription Office reports that in the first seven days of public sale, 1,502 new subscribers have purchased season tickets for the new Monday evening series of six concerts which will begin in November, 1961.

The remaining 1,129 seats in Symphony Hall (capacity 2,631) are still available at Symphony Hall Subscription Office—CO 6-1492—which is open Monday through Friday from 9 to 5. The remaining subscriptions are priced at $16, $20, and $24 for the six concerts. The $8 and $12 subscriptions are sold out.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 371,393
MAY 1 1961

MONDAY SYMPHONY

More than 2300 season subscriptions have been sold for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's new series of six Monday evening concerts which begin next season.

Musigrams

Clarion Concerts will give four Town Hall programs next season on Tuesday nights, Nov. 14, Dec. 5, Jan. 23 and Feb. 27, with a repertory devoted mainly to unfamiliar early works. . . . The Boston Symphony Orchestra's new Monday evening series in Boston's Symphony Hall is already nearly sold out for next season. . . . In its Contemporary Music Symposium in Washington May 24 to 27, the American University will present more than forty works chosen from 206 submitted by composers in the United States and Canada.

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

234

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

740

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

342

BLANK PAGE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

JAN 1 - 1961

Organs, Promptness Both Recommended

By JULES WOLFFERS

All power to Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, for his initiative in encouraging the orchestra to start a series of organ concerts with distinguished performers and at a very low admission fee.

First word of the new venture was contained in the orchestra's program book for the concerts of Dec. 23-24. The accompanying press release quoted Mr. Cabot as follows:

"My feeling is that the Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. This is a denial both to the remarkable instrument and to the musical public. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it. The Boston Symphony Orchestra exists to serve the public and with this new series of organ concerts our service can be expanded."

I sought Mr. Cabot out for more information and found him earnestly communicative on the project. This is unusual since he usually prefers to leave the discussion of musical matters to experts. He repeated his belief in the need for the project and went on to say that he hoped the series would continue indefinitely. Somewhat wryly he added that even if the concerts run at a deficit he would expect them to continue for some years at least, but he hoped that public response would not make it necessary to draw too heavily from the budget.

At the same time the concerts will be done in fine style. Mr. Cabot informed me that in addition to solo works there will also be organ ensemble works involving players from the orchestra although this will add materially to the expenses.

Cost $100,000

The Symphony Hall organ is the third in the orchestra's history. The famous 1858 Walcker instrument was moved from the old Boston Music Hall to Methuen where it is still used. When the orchestra moved to Symphony Hall in 1900, the Hutchings Organ Company built the organ which saw service for half a century. The present instrument was completed in 1949 at a cost of $100,000 by the Aeolian-Skinner Company with the advice of E. Power Biggs, at that time Symphony's official organist.

The problems of building an all - purpose instrument were many. It is really a half-dozen organs in one, able to play music in all styles and from all periods. It must unobstrusively take its place with the orchestra, it must take the lead in concertos, it must answer the needs of other groups giving concerts in the hall, and it must be a satisfactory solo instrument.

Not every person will agree that it has met all these requirements in ideal fashion but on the whole it is a responsive and flexible instrument which deserves to be heard and which is fully worthy of the talents of the organists using it.

Donald Willing, of the New England Conservatory, starts the series on Jan. 15 to be followed by John Ferris of Harvard on Feb. 19, Mr. Biggs on March 19 and Berj Zamkochian on April 9. Series tickets may now be had for the unbelievably low price of $3.00 with tickets for the individual concerts set at $1.00.

All concerts will be held on Sundays at 6:00 p.m.

And it is very much to be hoped that the concerts will start exactly at 6:00 p.m. and not 6:05 or 6:10 or even 6:01. Symphony should take the lead in getting back to the good old-fahioned virtue of punctuality. The orchestra's afternoon concerts are scheduled for 2:15 but start after 2:20 and the same situation exists at the evening concerts.

If radio or television commentary makes the lapse of a few minutes necessary then let these media start at 2:15 or 8:30, but let the concert starting hours be set for the time when the concerts will actually begin.

Admittedly, the traffic situation in Boston is bad but nevertheless the great majority of hearers get to the concerts on time. They should not be penalized by the latecomers.

Unfortunately, the orchestra's lead in this matter has been followed and worsened by others. It is intensely annoying to those persons making the effort to arrive on time to find that they must wait fifteen minutes or longer until the proceedings start.

There is an important principle at stake here, a principle that apparently only the Boston Morning Musicales is observing. The Musicales are scheduled for 11:00 a.m., and that is the exact hour they begin.

Globe 1/6/61

Symphony Hall Organ Recitals

Four concerts will be given on the organ in Symphony Hall during the remainder of the season. The artists and programs will be as follows:

Sunday, Jan. 15, at 6 p.m. Donald Willing. Bach: Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Canonic Variations on "Von Himmel Hoch," Sonata No. 4, Prelude and Fugue in D major; Frank Martin: Sonata di Chiesa (with Albert Bernard, viola d'amore); Martin: Passacaille.

John Ferris, Sunday, Feb. 19, at 6 p.m. Gabrieli: Canzon Noni Toni (brass players of Boston Symphony assisting); Bach: Three Choral Preludes, Prelude and Fugue in A minor; Alain: Premiere Fantasy; works by Brahms and Lockwood.

E. Power Biggs, Sunday, Mar. 19, at 6. Handel: Concerto No. 2, in B-flat; Valente: La Romanesca; Soler: Concerto No. 3, in G major; works by Sweelinck, Bach and others.

Berj Zamkochian, Sunday, Apr. 9, at 6 p.m. Handel: Concerto in F major, Op. 4, No. 5. Bach: Choral Variations, Chorale Prelude and Toccata in F major; music by Franck, Liszt and Vierne.

Times 1/1/61

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: Two young Americans, David Epstein and Jerome Rosen, and a Yugoslav, Vladimir Benić, will conduct the Cleveland Orchestra this afternoon in a special twilight concert sponsored by the [illegible] Foundation. . . . The Boston Symphony will sponsor four Symphony Hall organ programs that will make use of the hall's relatively new organ, rarely heard in recital. . . . The Honolulu Symphony Society will branch out into operatic production this March with performances of "Madama Butterfly." . . . Efrem Zimbalist Jr. will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy on Jan. 21 at a special Academy of Music Anniversary Concert and Ball.

Herald 1/1/61

Organs, Promptness Both Recommended

By JULES WOLFFERS

All power to Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony trustees, for his initiative in encouraging the orchestra to start a series of organ concerts with distinguished performers and at a very low admission fee.

First word of the new venture was contained in the orchestra's program book for the concerts of Dec. 23-24. The accompanying press release quoted Mr. Cabot as follows:

"My feeling is that the Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. This is a denial both to the remarkable instrument and to the musical public. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it. The Boston Symphony Orchestra exists to serve the public and with this new series of organ concerts our service can be expanded."

I sought Mr. Cabot out for more information and found him earnestly communicative on the project. This is unusual since he usually prefers to leave the discussion of musical matters to experts. He repeated his belief in the need for the project and went on to say that he hoped the series would continue indefinitely. Somewhat wryly he added that even if the concerts run at a deficit he would expect them to continue for some years at least, but he hoped that public response would not make it necessary to draw too heavily from the budget.

At the same time the concerts will be done in fine style. Mr. Cabot informed me that in addition to solo works there will also be organ ensemble works involving players from the orchestra although this will add materially to the expenses.

Cost $100,000

The Symphony Hall organ is the third in the orchestra's history. The famous 1858 Walcker instrument was moved from the old Boston Music Hall to Methuen where it is still used. When the orchestra moved to Symphony Hall in 1900, the Hutchings Organ Company built the organ which saw service for half a century. The present instrument was completed in 1949 at a cost of $100,000 by the Aeolian-Skinner Company with the advice of E. Power Biggs, at that time Symphony's official organist.

The problems of building an all - purpose instrument were many. It is really a half-dozen organs in one, able to play music in all styles and from all periods. It must unobstrusively take its place with the orchestra, it must take the lead in concertos, it must answer the needs of other groups giving concerts in the hall, and it must be a satisfactory solo instrument.

Not every person will agree that it has met all these requirements in ideal fashion but on the whole it is a responsive and flexible instrument which deserves to be heard and which is fully worthy of the talents of the organists using it.

Donald Willing, of the New England Conservatory, starts the series on Jan. 15 to be followed by John Ferris of Harvard on Feb. 19, Mr. Biggs on March 19 and Berj Zamkochian on April 9. Series tickets may now be had for the unbelievably low price of $3.00 with tickets for the individual concerts set at $1.00.

All concerts will be held on Sundays at 6:00 p.m.

And it is very much to be hoped that the concerts will start exactly at 6:00 p.m. and not 6:05 or 6:10 or even 6:01. Symphony should take the lead in getting back to the good old-fahioned virtue of punctuality. The orchestra's afternoon concerts are scheduled for 2:15 but start after 2:20 and the same situation exists at the evening concerts.

If radio or television commentary makes the lapse of a few minutes necessary then let these media start at 2:15 or 8:30, but let the concert starting hours be set for the time when the concerts will actually begin.

Admittedly, the traffic situation in Boston is bad but nevertheless the great majority of hearers get to the concerts on time. They should not be penalized by the latecomers.

Unfortunately, the orchestra's lead in this matter has been followed and worsened by others. It is intensely annoying to those persons making the effort to arrive on time to find that they must wait fifteen minutes or longer until the proceedings start.

There is an important principle at stake here, a principle that apparently only the Boston Morning Musicales is observing. The Musicales are scheduled for 11:00 a.m., and that is the exact hour they begin.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

JAN 1 1961

Symphony Hall Organ Concerts

By the initiative of Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, a new series of Symphony Hall concerts will begin Jan. 15 on the Great Organ. Programs will include works from the classical to the contemporary organ repertoire.

"My feeling," Mr. Cabot stated, "is that the Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. This is a denial both to the remarkable instrument and to the musical public. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra exists to serve the public and with this new series of organ concerts our service can be expanded.."

The concerts will be Sundays at 8 p.m. Each program will last approximately one hour, and there will be no intermission. All seats are unreserved.

cmwyp cmfwyp cmfwyp mfw

Globe 1/1/61

Symphony Hall Organ Concerts

By the initiative of Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, a new series of Symphony Hall concerts will begin Jan. 15 on the Great Organ. Programs will include works from the classical to the contemporary organ repertoire.

"My feeling," Mr. Cabot stated, "is that the Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. This is a denial both to the remarkable instrument and to the musical public. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra exists to serve the public and with this new series of organ concerts our service can be expanded.."

The concerts will be Sundays at 8 p.m. Each program will last approximately one hour, and there will be no intermission. All seats are unreserved.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
JAN 1 1961

MUSIC WORLD: NEW YEAR SHORT ON BIRTHDAYS

By ERIC SALZMAN

THERE'S a hard year coming for music editors and festival managers. Few musicians of real importance managed to get themselves born or leave this world in the year 1861. A single illustrious name lights up the register for 1811, and 1761 was a black year for musical vital statistics, unable to offer us a single bicentennial celebration.

This distressing lack of occasions for special concerts, exhaustive re-evaluations and analyses of neglected late, great works is in sharp contrast to the year just passed away; 1960 had a bumper crop of birthdays alone. It almost seemed as if everybody who was anybody managed to get born in a year ending with a 10 or a 60.

Chopin and Schumann were up for 150th-birthday celebrations. Mahler and Albéniz first saw the light and heard the sounds of this world in 1860. For lovers of old music, there were sesquibicentennials (if there is such a word to indicate 250-year anniversaries) for Pergolesi and Thomas Arne. Even American composers got into the act. Varèse and Riegger were 75, Copland turned 60, Barber and William Schuman marked their fiftieth years.

Liszt Year

The big attraction of 1961 will be the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt, and Franz will almost have the whole year to himself. This country, though, ought to honor Edward MacDowell's 100th birthday. Similar celebrations for Charles Martin Loeffler and Anton Arensky are likely to be small. Ambrose Thomas and Ferdinand Hiller were the same age as Liszt, but this fact does not seem likely to stir up much enthusiasm. Sic transit gloria mundi.

Really important historical figures from the past might stand a slim chance of getting some attention. It will be 350 years since the death of Tomás Luis de Victoria, the great Spanish polyphonic composer. Jacopo Peri ought to be honored by the world's lyric theatres on his 400th birthday, for he helped to invent opera. And, who knows, perhaps somewhere some musicologists will remember that Philippe de Vitry, author of the great revolutionary musical treatise of the fourteenth century, died in 1361. That would be a sexcentenary.

FAREWELL: Shortly before leaving for Russia, the Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, was host at a press conference. He spoke about American orchestras (which he likes), American music (which he wants to study and perform) and New York (which he did not like at first, but which he came to adore). He dislikes teaching (he does not do any) and making records (he makes many). He likes opera more than any other musical form—but as an ideal, not as it usually turns out in reality. In Chicago he studied paintings by Mondrian at the Art Institute. He was entranced by them. In New York, he visited the Museum of Modern Art and the Guggenheim Museum. About abstract painting he said: "An artist must express himself. If he is a good artist, his work will be good, whatever form it takes."

NEW MUSIC: "Music in the Making" embarks on its ninth year of new music concerts this Friday in its traditional location, the Great Hall of The Cooper Union. The orchestral series, devoted entirely to contemporary music, will again be directed by Howard Shanet. Each of this year's four concerts will feature a work by a foreign composer as well as modern American music. The last three dates for this year will be Jan. 27, Feb. 17 and March 17. All concerts are free.

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: Two young Americans, David Epstein and Jerome Rosen, and a Yugoslav, Vladimir Benić, will conduct the Cleveland Orchestra this afternoon in a special twilight concert sponsored by the Kulas Foundation. . . . The Boston Symphony will sponsor four Symphony Hall organ programs that will make use of the hall's relatively new organ, rarely heard in recital. . . . The Honolulu Symphony Society will branch out into operatic production this March with performances of "Madama Butterfly." . . . Efrem Zimbalist Jr. will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy on Jan. 21 at a special Academy of Music Anniversary Concert and Ball.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 5- 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
JAN 5- 1961

Symphony Sets New Program Of Organ Concerts

On the initiative of Henry B. Cabot, President of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, a new series of Symphony Hall concerts will begin on January 15. Four concerts will be given on the Great Organ by distinguished soloists. The programs will include works from the classical to the contemporary pipe organ repertoire.

"My feeling," Mr. Cabot stated, "is that the Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season. This is a denial both to the remarkable instrument and to the musical

Continued on Page Six

...known concert organist, E. Power Biggs. The series will conclude on April 9 with a recital given by Berj Zamkochian.

The concerts will be held on Sundays at 6 p.m. Each program will last approximately one hour. There will be no intermission.

Tickets for the Symphony Hall organ concerts, now available at the Hall's subscription ticket office, are $3.00 for the series of four programs. Tickets for individual concerts are available at $1.00 per concert. All seats are unreserved.

Symphony Organist Champions Instrument

Zamkochian Sees Organ Revival

"The time is coming, when the organ will be right in the center of the musical picture—where it belongs."

The speaker was Berj Zamkochian, organist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, interrupting practice in his studio just outside Boston to talk about the forthcoming series of organ recitals inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Historically," Mr. Zimkochian added with a faint impishness, "the symphony orchestra is a newcomer.

"The organ, as the earliest keyboard instrument, is over 2,000 years old. With his two two hands and feet the organist commands a phenomenal pitch range and a pallet of colors as varied as the voices of a 104-man symphony orchestra. The organist must be as sensitive to tone colors and their blending as a symphony conductor.

Mr. Zamkochian continued his championing: "The organ is capable of expressing as much fire and poetry as the piano, violin, or symphony orchestra. It has an abundant concert repertory exclusive of church music. Bach's great toccatas and fantasies were written as virtuoso concert pieces. At Symphony Hall on April 9 I'll be playing works which are seldom, if ever, heard in church, such as Liszt's Variations on 'Weinen, Klagen' and the finale from Widor's Symphonie Romaine.

"We four recitalists who will perform in this series have penchants for different periods and styles," Mr. Zamkochian noted. "The audience will have the opportunity to get acquainted with every facet of organ literature."

* * *

The other organists who will be presented Jan. 15, Feb. 19, and March 19 respectively, include Donald Willing, chairman of the Organ and Church Music Departments at the New England Conservatory of Music; John Ferris, university organist and choirmaster at Harvard; and E. Power Biggs.

Fabian Bachrach

Berj Zamkochian, organist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will be taking part in the series of four organ recitals beginning in Symphony Hall this month.

Mr. Zamkochian is a native of Boston who earned his bachelor's and master's degrees at the New England Conservatory, where he studied with George Faxon. In 1957 he represented United States organists at the Third World Congress of Sacred Music in Paris, and in 1958 he played for President Eisenhower at the White House. He performs with the Boston Symphony Orchestra whenever the organ is called for, and with that orchestra has recorded Saint-Saëns Organ Symphony and Poulenc's Organ Concerto—the latter soon to be released.

"The Symphony Hall organ," he reports, "meets every demand for recording and broadcasting. Its resources faithfully set forth the music of every age. It's a composite of many organs, really. The discreet tones of the Positiv Organ clearly define the polyphony of baroque music; the expressive Swell and Choir Organs bring to life the music of the romantic period; and the fiery reeds of the Bombarde Organ dominate the resources of the full symphony orchestra."

* * *

The present Symphony Hall organ was installed in 1949, in time for the 200th anniversary of the death of Bach and the 50th anniversary of Symphony Hall. It was designed by G. Donald Harrison of the Aeolian-Skinner Organ Co., after consultations with Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, Wallace Goodrich and G. Wallace Woodworth.

Albert Schweitzer inspected the organ during its construction and autographed a plaque which is fastened to the back of the console.

"There's a definite revival of interest in the organ," Mr. Zamkochian asserted. "All the major organ builders are working at full capacity. Today, the auditoriums of the leading symphony orchestras all contain fine organs, but our Symphony Hall organ led the way."

Mr. Zamkochian reminisced enthusiastically about European classic organs with their sensitive "tracker" actions which provide direct mechanical connections between keys and pipes. He pointed out that the theater organ exerted a harmful influence on the taste of American organists and builders and suggested that the current interest in baroque organs is a natural reaction.

"Differences of opinion on interpretation and organ construction are healthy," he decided.

"I'd like to see a revival of interest in the harmonium, too" he concluded. "Not the kind in your grandmother's parlor, but the beautifully voiced harmoniums made in France a century ago. No less a composer than Franck wrote two volumes of compositions for the harmonium."

W. S.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 453,664
JAN 8 1961

New Organ Concerts Begin Soon

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, deserves a big vote of thanks for the new series of concerts to begin January 15. Four concerts will be given on the Great Organ by distinguished soloists. The program will include works from the classical to the contemporary pipe organ repertoire.

Donald Willing, chairman of the Organ and Church Music Dept. at the New England Conservatory of Music, will give the first recital. John Ferris, University Organist and Choirmaster at Harvard, will be heard on February 19. On March 19, a recital will be given by the internationally known concert organist, E. Power Biggs. The series will conclude on April 9 with a concert by Berj Zamkochian.

Beginning at 6 p. m. without intermission, each program will last approximately an hour. Tickets are available at Symphony Hall ticket office, $3 for the series of four programs. Individual tickets are $1 per concert and all seats unreserved.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
JAN 1 1961

MUSIC WORLD: NEW YEAR SHORT ON BIRTHDAYS

By ERIC SALZMAN

THERE'S a hard year coming for music editors and festival managers. Few musicians of real importance managed to get themselves born or leave this world in the year 1861. A single illustrious name lights up the register for 1811, and 1761 was a black year for musical vital statistics, unable to offer us a single bicentennial celebration.

This distressing lack of occasions for special concerts, exhaustive re-evaluations and analyses of neglected late, great works is in sharp contrast to the year just passed away; 1960 had a bumper crop of birthdays alone. It almost seemed as if everybody who was anybody managed to get born in a year ending with a 10 or a 60.

Chopin and Schumann were up for 150th-birthday celebrations. Mahler and Albéniz first saw the light and heard the sounds of this world in 1860. For lovers of old music, there were sesquibicentennials (if there is such a word to indicate 250-year anniversaries) for Pergolesi and Thomas Arne. Even American composers got into the act. Varèse and Riegger were 75, Copland turned 60, Barber and William Schuman marked their fiftieth years.

Liszt Year

The big attraction of 1961 will be the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt, and Franz will almost have the whole year to himself. This country, though, ought to honor Edward MacDowell's 100th birthday. Similar celebrations for Charles Martin Loeffler and Anton Arensky are likely to be small. Ambrose Thomas and Ferdinand Hiller were the same age as Liszt, but this fact does not seem likely to stir up much enthusiasm. Sic transit gloria mundi.

Really important historical figures from the past might stand a slim chance of getting some attention. It will be 350 years since the death of Tomás Luis de Victoria, the great Spanish polyphonic composer. Jacopo Peri ought to be honored by the world's lyric theatres on his 400th birthday, for he helped to invent opera. And, who knows, perhaps somewhere some musicologists will remember that Philippe de Vitry, author of the great revolutionary musical treatise of the fourteenth century, died in 1361. That would be a sexcentenary.

FAREWELL: Shortly before leaving for Russia, the Soviet pianist, Sviatoslav Richter, was host at a press conference. He spoke about American orchestras (which he likes), American music (which he wants to study and perform) and New York (which he did not like at first, but which he came to adore). He dislikes teaching (he does not do any) and making records (he makes many). He likes opera more than any other musical form—but as an ideal, not as it usually turns out in reality. In Chicago he studied paintings by Mondrian at the Art Institute. He was entranced by them. In New York, he visited the Museum of Modern Art and the Guggenheim Museum. About abstract painting he said: "An artist must express himself. If he is a good artist, his work will be good, whatever form it takes."

NEW MUSIC: "Music in the Making" embarks on its ninth year of new music concerts this Friday in its traditional location, the Great Hall of The Cooper Union. The orchestral series, devoted entirely to contemporary music, will again be directed by Howard Shanet. Each of this year's four concerts will feature a work by a foreign composer as well as modern American music. The last three dates for this year will be Jan. 27, Feb. 17 and March 17. All concerts are free.

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: Two young Americans, David Epstein and Jerome Rosen, and a Yugoslav, Vladimir Benić, will conduct the Cleveland Orchestra this afternoon in a special twilight concert sponsored by the Kulas Foundation. . . . The Boston Symphony will sponsor four Symphony Hall organ programs that will make use of the hall's relatively new organ, rarely heard in recital. . . . The Honolulu Symphony Society will branch out into operatic production this March with performances of "Madama Butterfly." . . . Efrem Zimbalist Jr. will narrate Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" with the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy on Jan. 21 at a special Academy of Music Anniversary Concert and Ball.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 5- 1961

New Program

Continued from Page One

public. I am sure that we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it.

"The Boston Symphony Orchestra exists to serve the public and with this new series of organ concerts our service can be expanded," Mr. Cabot concluded.

Donald Willing, chairman of the Organ and Church Music Department at the New England Conservatory of Music, will give the first recital on January 15. John Ferris, University Organist and Choirmaster at Harvard, will be heard on February 19. On March 19, a recital will be given by the internationally known concert organist, E. Power Biggs. The series will conclude on April 9 with a recital given by Berj Zamkochian.

The concerts will be held on Sundays at 6 p.m. Each program will last approximately one hour. There will be no intermission.

Tickets for the Symphony Hall organ concerts, now available at the Hall's subscription ticket office, are $3.00 for the series of four programs. Tickets for individual concerts are available at $1.00 per concert. All seats are unreserved.

Symphony Organist Champions Instrument

Zamkochian Sees Organ Revival

"The time is coming, when the organ will be right in the center of the musical picture—where it belongs."

The speaker was Berj Zamkochian, organist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, interrupting practice in his studio just outside Boston to talk about the forthcoming series of organ recitals inaugurated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

"Historically," Mr. Zimkochian added with a faint impishness, "the symphony orchestra is a newcomer.

"The organ, as the earliest keyboard instrument, is over 2,000 years old. With his two two hands and feet the organist commands a phenomenal pitch range and a pallet of colors as varied as the voices of a 104-man symphony orchestra. The organist must be as sensitive to tone colors and their blending as a symphony conductor.

Mr. Zamkochian continued his championing: "The organ is capable of expressing as much fire and poetry as the piano, violin, or symphony orchestra. It has an abundant concert repertory exclusive of church music. Bach's great toccatas and fantasies were written as virtuoso concert pieces. At Symphony Hall on April 9 I'll be playing works which are seldom, if ever, heard in church, such as Liszt's Variations on 'Weinen, Klagen' and the finale from Widor's Symphonie Romaine.

"We four recitalists who will perform in this series have penchants for different periods and styles," Mr. Zamkochian noted. "The audience will have the opportunity to get acquainted with every facet of organ literature."

* * *

The other organists who will be presented Jan. 15, Feb. 19, and March 19 respectively, include Donald Willing, chairman of the Organ and Church Music Departments at the New England Conservatory of Music; John Ferris, university organist and choirmaster at Harvard; and E. Power Biggs.

Fabian Bachrach

Berj Zamkochian, organist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who will be taking part in the series of four organ recitals beginning in Symphony Hall this month.

Mr. Zamkochian is a native of Boston who earned his bachelor's and master's degrees at the New England Conservatory, where he studied with George Faxon. In 1957 he represented United States organists at the Third World Congress of Sacred Music in Paris, and in 1958 he played for President Eisenhower at the White House. He performs with the Boston Symphony Orchestra whenever the organ is called for, and with that orchestra has recorded Saint-Saëns Organ Symphony and Poulenc's Organ Concerto—the latter soon to be released.

"The Symphony Hall organ," he reports, "meets every demand for recording and broadcasting. Its resources faithfully set forth the music of every age. It's a composite of many organs, really. The discreet tones of the Positiv Organ clearly define the polyphony of baroque music; the expressive Swell and Choir Organs bring to life the music of the romantic period; and the fiery reeds of the Bombarde Organ dominate the resources of the full symphony orchestra."

* * *

The present Symphony Hall organ was installed in 1949, in time for the 200th anniversary of the death of Bach and the 50th anniversary of Symphony Hall. It was designed by G. Donald Harrison of the Aeolian-Skinner Organ Co., after consultations with Serge Koussevitzky, Charles Munch, Wallace Goodrich and G. Wallace Woodworth.

Albert Schweitzer inspected the organ during its construction and autographed a plaque which is fastened to the back of the console.

"There's a definite revival of interest in the organ," Mr. Zamkochian asserted. "All the major organ builders are working at full capacity. Today, the auditoriums of the leading symphony orchestras all contain fine organs, but our Symphony Hall organ led the way."

Mr. Zamkochian reminisced enthusiastically about European classic organs with their sensitive "tracker" actions which provide direct mechanical connections between keys and pipes. He pointed out that the theater organ exerted a harmful influence on the taste of American organists and builders and suggested that the current interest in baroque organs is a natural reaction.

"Differences of opinion on interpretation and organ construction are healthy," he decided.

"I'd like to see a revival of interest in the harmonium, too" he concluded. "Not the kind in your grandmother's parlor, but the beautifully voiced harmoniums made in France a century ago. No less a composer than Franck wrote two volumes of compositions for the harmonium."

W. S.

NewEngland Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 453,664
JAN 8 1961

New Organ Concerts Begin Soon

Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Trustees, deserves a big vote of thanks for the new series of concerts to begin January 15. Four concerts will be given on the Great Organ by distinguished soloists. The program will include works from the classical to the contemporary pipe organ repertoire.

Donald Willing, chairman of the Organ and Church Music Dept. at the New England Conservatory of Music, will give the first recital. John Ferris, University Organist and Choirmaster at Harvard, will be heard on February 19. On March 19, a recital will be given by the internationally known concert organist, E. Power Biggs. The series will conclude on April 9 with a concert by Berj Zamkochian.

Beginning at 6 p. m. without intermission, each program will last approximately an hour. Tickets are available at Symphony Hall ticket office, $3 for the series of four programs. Individual tickets are $1 per concert and all seats unreserved.

3416

Herald 1/8/61

BSO Organ Series Debut

Donald Willing will open the new Symphony Hall Organ Series next Sunday, Jan. 15, at 6:00 P. M. The New England Conservatory organist will perform works by Bach and, in contrast, two compositions by the contemporary Swiss composer, Martin, with Albert Bernard, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisting on the viola d'amore.

Other concerts in the series will take place on Feb. 19, March 19 and April 9. Series tickets at $3 are available at Symphony Hall box office. Tickets for single concerts may be purchased at $1.00. All seats are unreserved for the hour-length programs.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 10 1961

Willing Program Se

Donald Willing, inaugurating the new Boston Symphony organ series, has announced his program for Jan. 15 at 6 o'clock.

From Bach's works Mr. Willing has chosen the Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, the Canonic Variations on "Von Himmel Hoch," and the Trio Sonata No. 4. The contemporary Swiss composer Frank Martin will be represented by his "Sonata da Chiesa" (with Albert Bernard's viola d'amore), and Passacaille."

Seats are available at the Symphony Hall box office.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
JAN 12 1961

Donald Willing, faculty member at the New England Conservatory, will give the first Boston Symphony organ recital Sunday at 6 o'clock.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
JAN 15 1961

Music Events This Week

Donald Willing will give an organ recital at Symphony Hall today at 6 p.m. His concert is the first of a new series of four organ recitals, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given this winter at the Hall.

The orchestra has inaugurated the new series of organ concerts because, according to Henry B. Cabot, the orchestra's president, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season and we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it."

Mr. Willing's program will include Mach's Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, the Canonic Variations on "Von Himmel hoch," Sonata No. 4 and his Prelude and Fugue in D major. Albert Bernard, of the orchestra, will join Mr. Willing for Frank Martin's Sonata di Chiesa, with viola d'amore. The one-hour program will conclude with the same composer's "Passacaille."

Tickets for today's concert are unreserved and are available at Symphony for $1.00. Future concerts in this series, for which subscriptions are available at $3.00 for the four programs, will be given by John Ferris, E. Power Biggs and Berj Zamkochian.

The third concert in the orchestra's Sunday afternoon seies is at Symphony Hall today at 3 p.m. The program, conducted by Charles Munch, will include Smetana's "The Moldau," Dvorak's Symphony No. 4, and Eugene Istomin will be soloist in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahams.

The world-premiere of Francis Poulenc's "Gloria" will be presented by Charles Munch and the orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday, at 2:15, and Saturday, at 8:30. In addition to the "Gloria," in which soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate, the concerts will include Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos with Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet as soloists.

Violinist Roger Shermont will be Doctor Munch's guest artist at the orchestra's concert on Tuesday Jan. 24 and pianist Alexander Uninsky will be heard at the concerts on Jan. 27 and 28.

TODAY

DIMITRI BASHKIROV, Soviet pianist, Jordan Hall, 3:30 p.m. B. U. Celebrity Series. Schubert Fantasie; Prokofieff "Romeo at Juliet's," 6 Visions Fugitives, Sonata, Op. 29; Brahms F minor Sonata. Tickets at box office: opens at 2:00 p.m.

COMBINED CHOIRS of First and Second Churches in Boston, at the First Church, Berkeley at Marlborough Streets, 4:30 p.m. Melville Smith conducts two Bach Cantatas in honor of the eighty-sixth birthday of Albert Schweitzer. James Anliker at the Harpsichord. Public invited.

TUESDAY

LUDWIG OLSHANSKY, young American pianist, first Jordan Hall recital, 8:30 p.m. Schubert Impromptu; Copland Sonata; Beethoven Sonata in E; Schumann Fantasia. Tickets at box office.

CHROMATIC CLUB concert, Dolores Johnson, soprano; Leonid Milk, pianist. 11:00 a.m. Varied program of vocal and piano works.

ROBERT PETTITT, organist, with Richard Conrad, tenor, on Boston Conservatory Series at its Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street 8:30 p.m. Boyce Pachelbel, Bach, Brahms, Langlais, Boulanger, Petrassi. Admission free.

COMPOSERS WORKSHOP, Brookline Public Library, 8:30 p.m. Works by Holevas, Henning, Brogue, Perkins, Procter, Lewis, variously for piano, voice, violin and cello. Public invited.

WEDNESDAY

WOODWIND CONCERT of solos and ensembles, Jordan Hall, 8:30 presented by New England Conservatory. Beethoven, Mozart, Head, Weber, Creston. Admission free.

FRIDAY

NAAN POLD, tenor, with Dagmar Kokker at the piano, Baltic Concert Series, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Songs and arias by Caldara, Caccini, Durante, Mozart, Schubert, Richard Strauss, Respighi, Mart Saar.

PAUL JACOBS, pianist, in Contemporary Music Society Series, Institute of Contemporary Art, Soldiers Field Road, Brighton, 8:30 p.m. Works by Debussy, Busoni, Messiaen, Boulez, Karlheinz Stockhausen, Stravinsky. Program includes several Boston premieres. Reservations, AL 4-0614.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
JAN 15 1961

Organist Willing At Symphony Hall

Donald Willing, chairman of the organ and church music department at the New England Conservatory and organist at the First Congregational Church in Wellesley, will give an organ recital at Symphony Hall today at 6 p.m. Mr. Willing's concert is the first of a new series of four sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Willing's program will include Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, the Canonic Variations on "Von Himmel hoch," Sonata No. 4 and Prelude and Fugue in D major. Albert Bernard, of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join Mr. Willing in Frank Martin's Sonata di Chiesa, with viola d'amore. The one-hour program will conclude with the same composer's Passacaille.

Herald 1/15/61

Music Events This Week

Donald Willing will give an organ recital at Symphony Hall today at 6 p.m. His concert is the first of a new series of four organ recitals, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, to be given this winter at the Hall.

The orchestra has inaugurated the new series of organ concerts because, according to Henry B. Cabot, the orchestra's president, "The Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season and we should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it."

Mr. Willing's program will include Mach's Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, the Canonic Variations on "Von Himmel hoch," Sonata No. 4 and his Prelude and Fugue in D major. Albert Bernard, of the orchestra, will join Mr. Willing for Frank Martin's Sonata di Chiesa, with viola d'amore. The one-hour program will conclude with the same composer's "Passacaille."

Tickets for today's concert are unreserved and are available at Symphony for $1.00. Future concerts in this series, for which subscriptions are available at $3.00 for the four programs, will be given by John Ferris, E. Power Biggs and Berj Zamkochian.

The third concert in the orchestra's Sunday afternoon seies is at Symphony Hall today at 3 p.m. The program, conducted by Charles Munch, will include Smetana's "The Moldau," Dvorak's Symphony No. 4, and Eugene Istomin will be soloist in a performance of the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Brahams.

The world-premiere of Francis Poulenc's "Gloria" will be presented by Charles Munch and the orchestra at the Symphony Hall concerts Friday, at 2:15, and Saturday, at 8:30. In addition to the "Gloria," in which soprano Adele Addison and the Chorus pro Musica, Alfred Nash Patterson, conductor, will participate, the concerts will include Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and Poulenc's Concerto for Two Pianos with Mr. Poulenc and Evelyne Crochet as soloists.

Violinist Roger Shermont will be Doctor Munch's guest artist at the orchestra's concert on Tuesday Jan. 24 and pianist Alexander Uninsky will be heard at the concerts on Jan. 27 and 28.

TODAY

DIMITRI BASHKIROV, Soviet pianist, Jordan Hall, 3:30 p.m. B. U. Celebrity Series. Schubert Fantasie; Prokofieff "Romeo at Juliet's," 6 Visions Fugitives, Sonata, Op. 29; Brahms F minor Sonata. Tickets at box office: opens at 2:00 p.m.

COMBINED CHOIRS of First and Second Churches in Boston, at the First Church, Berkeley at Marlborough Streets, 4:30 p.m. Melville Smith conducts two Bach Cantatas in honor of the eighty-sixth birthday of Albert Schweitzer. James Anliker at the Harpsichord. Public invited.

TUESDAY

LUDWIG OLSHANSKY, young American pianist, first Jordan Hall recital, 8:30 p.m. Schubert Impromptu; Copland Sonata; Beethoven Sonata in E; Schumann Fantasia. Tickets at box office.

CHROMATIC CLUB concert, Dolores Johnson, soprano; Leonid Milk, pianist. 11:00 a.m. Varied program of vocal and piano works.

ROBERT PETTITT, organist, with Richard Conrad, tenor, on Boston Conservatory Series at its Auditorium, 31 Hemenway Street 8:30 p.m. Boyce Pachelbel, Bach, Brahms, Langlais, Boulanger, Petrassi. Admission free.

COMPOSERS WORKSHOP, Brookline Public Library, 8:30 p.m. Works by Holevas, Henning, Brogue, Perkins, Procter, Lewis, variously for piano, voice, violin and cello. Public invited.

WEDNESDAY

WOODWIND CONCERT of solos and ensembles, Jordan Hall, 8:30 presented by New England Conservatory. Beethoven, Mozart, Head, Weber, Creston. Admission free.

FRIDAY

NAAN POLD, tenor, with Dagmar Kokker at the piano, Baltic Concert Series, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Songs and arias by Caldara, Caccini, Durante, Mozart, Schubert, Richard Strauss, Respighi, Mart Saar.

PAUL JACOBS, pianist, in Contemporary Music Society Series, Institute of Contemporary Art, Soldiers Field Road, Brighton, 8:30 p.m. Works by Debussy, Busoni, Messiaen, Boulez, Karlheinz Stockhausen, Stravinsky. Program includes several Boston premieres. Reservations, AL 4-0614.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
JAN 16 1961

MUSIC

Excellent Start For Organ Series

Bach's summary of the richest developments of his age and Frank Martin's synthesis of the best efforts of our day provided Donald Willing with appropriate material to open a new series of organ recitals at Symphony Hall last night. A significant venture by the Boston Symphony Trustees and management began with two groups of compositions separated by two hundred years but basically similar.

A common ground was the delightful interweaving of several melodic lines that suits the organ so well. The four compositions of Bach used this style in four contrasting moods.

Admirably Met

The interpretive demands of a composer who could write a grand Fantasia and Fugue, an intellectual exercise in the Canonis Variations on "From Heaven on High," a charming Trio Sonata, and a brilliant Prelude and Fugue in D were admirably met by Mr. Willing. Tempi, registration, touch and nuance were well chosen and controlled.

Forms familiar to Bach were used by contemporary Swiss composer Frank Martin in his combining [illegible]. The Sonata da Chiesa for organ and viola d'amore [illegible] two fugues and [illegible] composition [illegible] music between [illegible] and closing slow sections, in the capable hands of Boston Symphony violist, Albert Bernard, the seldom heard, silvery toned viola d'amore proved an excellent companion for the soft voices of the organ.

Martin's Passacaille, which closed the program, received the same expert treatment accorded earlier works on the program.

The success of the recital could be measured by the audience's attention and obvious appreciation for fine organ music presented under excellent recital conditions.

J.R.B.

The Program

Fantasia and Fugue in C minor	Bach
Canonic Variations on "From Heaven on High"	Bach
Trio Sonata No. 4	Bach
Prelude and Fugue in D	Bach
Sonata da Chiesa (with viola d'amore)	Martin
Passacaille	Martin

Monitor 1/16/61

Willing Opens Organ Series

By Allan Sly

Music in America has come a long way since the once-popular organ recital went into eclipse in the [illegible]. Perhaps the arrival of radio and the talkies took away some of its following, the pre-depression spate of orchestral music the remainder. In any event, a new generation of organists has been maturing, conversant with new developments in musical composition, and in league with an entirely reconstituted organ-building industry.

Long percolating, here and abroad, this seething activity spouted up again yesterday at Symphony Hall, where Donald Willing was presented in recital by the trustees of the Boston Symphony, wise in their choice of this moment to invite public attention to their resplendent 1949 organ by Donald Harrison. (The Philadelphia Orchestra unveiled its new organ, built in Boston by the successors of Donald Harrison, a few weeks ago, and the New York Philharmonic will be emulating it when the new Lincoln Center is completed within a year or two.)

This occasion, then, was much more than an organ recital, it was significant of a powerful trend of the times. Symphony Hall was substantially filled with attentive and knowledgeable listeners to a program crammed with musical excitement.

Mr. Willing first played a powerful succession of Bach works—the C-Minor Fantasie and Fugue, broad and strong at first, later dynamic and fiery; the Vom Himmel Hoch canonic variations (a work much favored by Stravinsky), sparkling like a frosty Christmas night, joyful, prophetic, triumphant; the fourth Trio Sonata, articulated like chamber music but sending its felicitous sounds to every corner of the hall, and the tremendous D-Major Prelude and Fugue. Throughout this group one could revel in the performer's fastidiousness of touch and exquisite sense of tone color, his way of building a strong rhythmic drive to ultimate fulfillment, his unerring instinct for style. One also marveled at the instrumental riches provided by Donald Harrison: all of them within the legitimate province of the organ's own noble tradition as reinterpreted for this age by Schweitzer, but so vital, varied, and beautifully proportioned, singly or in combination, as to conjure for us some of the mystery and exaltation that must have been the portion of Bach's own auditors.

After a pause Mr. Willing and Mr. Albert Bernard together unfolded for us Frank Martin's Sonata di Chiesa for viola d'amore and organ. It is difficult to capture in words the effect of uncompromising individuality that pervades this composer's works. This particular sonata makes of a plaintive instrument the vehicle for many brave flights of fancy. The organ part as played by Mr. Willing was the ideal consort for this beautiful-toned instrument—one might so regard a bird of rare plumage in its own exotic landscape — and one gained insights into Martin's unique world of imaginative feeling and speculation.

Next came Martin's Passacaille, which Mr. Willing has made very much his own, a monumental work of great passion and beauty, fashioning its mode of expression in logical development from simple beginnings, not hesitating to explore passages of extreme dissonance, yet concluding with its own air of achievement and self-knowledge.

The series continues on February 19, when John Ferris will be heard.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037
JAN 13 1961

Organ Series

The first of a new series of four organ recitals, sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will be at Symphony Hall Sunday at 6 p.m.

The recital will be given by Donald Willing, chairman of the organ and church music department at the New England Conservatory. He is also organist at the First Congregational Church in Wellesley.

The series was planned, according to Henry B. Cabot, the orchestra's president, because "the Boston Symphony Orchestra possesses a notable concert organ which, unfortunately, is heard but a few times each season.

"We should let the public share to a greater degree in the enjoyment of the wealth of organ music and the capacity of our instrument to present it."

Unreserved tickets for the single concert and for the series are on sale at Symphony Hall box office.

nesday at 130 theaters throughout New England.

Globe 1/16/61

Donald Willing Opens Organ Series at Symphony Hall

DONALD WILLING, organist, opened the first of a series of four organ concerts at Symphony Hall last night. The program: Bach: Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, Canon Variations on "Von Himmel noch," Sonata No. 4, Prelude and Fugue in D major; Martin: Sonata di Chiesa (with viola d'amore), Albert Bernard, accompanist, and Passacaille.

Last night Donald Willing opened the first of a series of four concerts to be given at Symphony Hall on the Aeolian-Skinner organ. In the succeeding months John Ferris, E. Power Biggs and Berj Zamkochian will be the soloists.

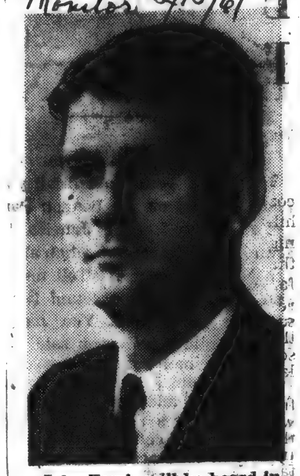
Mr. Willing began the hour-long program, presented without intermission, with four works by J. S. Bach. The Fantasia and Fugue in C minor, the first selection, was somewhat blurred in the selection of registrations. But the Canonic Variations on "Von Himmel hoch," which followed, were set forth with the clear, pungent, and simple registration most aptly suited to Bach.

In the Sonata No. 4 Mr. Willing played with a light, imaginative touch which brought the piece to life. The Sonata was incisively and beautifully played; the modulation was impressive, and the sonority and clarity of the organ were cleanly achieved. Without question, however, the Prelude and Fugue in D major was the high point of the program. Mr. Willing's flexible pedal technique was excellent, and the variant chords from the instrument were neatly handled.

The concert concluded with two works by Martin, Sonata di Chiesa, performed with viola d'amore, nicely played by Albert Bernard, and a Passacaille. The Martin works were dry, harsh, and almost unmusical, but the performance was earnest.—K.K.

JOHN FERRIS, organist and choir master at Harvard, will present the second of the Symphony Hall organ concerts at 6 p.m. Sunday.

Monitor 2/15/61



John Ferris will be heard in the second recital in the organ series at Symphony Hall on Sunday evening at 6 o'clock.

Herald 2/16/61

JOHN FERRIS, Harvard organist and choirmaster, who presents the second concert in the Symphony Hall Organ Series on Sunday Feb. 19, at 6:00 p.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
HAVERHILL, Mass.
Circ. 10,547

FEB 3 1961

Organ Recital Set at Church

An organ recital will be held at Trinity Episcopal Church, 26 White St., corner of William Street, by John Ferris, organist and choirmaster of Harvard University.

Ferris, a graduate of Michigan State University with a bachelor of music degree, was organist and choirmaster of the First Methodist Church of Red Bank, N. J. from 1950 to 1958. He then began his work at Harvard. He is also a lecturer in liturgical music at Harvard Divinity School.

He will be assisted by Kari Legge, soprano.

Ferris will appear as second recitalist at Symphony Hall in a newly-inaugurated series of organ concerts sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The program will be as follows: Voluntary on Old Hundredth by Purcell; Two Choral Preludes by Bach; Benedictus by Reger; 'Meine Seelo Hoert in Sehan' by Handel; 'Pie Jesu,' from the Requiem by Feure with Karl Legge, soprano, and Ronald Coons, organ; Fantasy I by Alain; Three chorale preludes by Brahms; and Prelude and Fugue in A minor by Bach.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000
FEB 18 1961

Organ Recital

Sunday, Feb. 19 at 6 is the time for the second Symphony Hall Organ recital, this one by John Ferris of Harvard. Admission is one dollar. The series sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra through its Trustees, offers rare opportunity to hear an organ approved by the great Dr. Albert Schweitzer, and one which all too seldom is heard as a solo instrument.

—Paul St. George.

Back Bay Ledger 2/16/61

Sunday Recital

HARVARD ORGANIST TO GIVE CONCERT AT SYMPHONY HALL

Four Members Of Boston Symphony Orch. To Join In Sunday Performance

John Ferris, Harvard University's Organist and Choirmaster, has invited four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to join him in two of the works scheduled for the one-hour organ concert which Mr. Ferris will give Sunday at 6:00 p.m. in Symphony Hall.

The Orchestra's principal trumpet, Roger Voisin and Andre' Come, trumpet, with William Gibson, principal trombone, and William Moyer, trombone, will join Mr. Ferris in Giovannni Gabrieli's "Canzon Noni Toni" and in Norman Lockwood's Concerto for Brass and Organ. Mr. Ferris performing on Symphony Hall's four-manual Aeolian-Skinner pipe organ, will also be heard in three chorale preludes from "Achzehn Chorale von verschiedener Art" by Bach, Bach's Prelude in Fugue in A minor, "Premiere Fantaisie" by Jehan Alain, and two settings of "Herzlich thut mich verlangen" by Brahms plus Brahms' "O Welt, ich muss dich lassen."

Before his appointment to Harvard in 1958 where, in addition to his duties at Memorial Church, he is Lecturer on Liturgical Music in the Harvard Divinity School, John Ferris was musically active in New York. Organist and choirmaster from 1950 to 1958 at the First Methodist Church of Red Bank, New Jersey, Mr. Ferris was also assistant to Vernon deTar at New York's Church of the Ascension. Mr. Ferris received his Master of Sacred Music degree at Union Theological Seminary. His undergraduate work was at Michigan State University and at the University of Chicago where he studied with Marcel Dupre.

Tickets for Sunday's organ concert,, all $1.00 and unreserved, are available at the Symphony Hall Box office.

Charles Munch returns to the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week for an Open Rehearsal on Thursday (February 23 7:30 p.m.) plus the regular weekend concerts on Friday (Feb. 24, 2:15) and Saturday (Feb. 25, 8:30). The rehearsal and concert program will in-

Continued on Page Three

Herald 2/16/61

Ferris Organ Recital On Symphony Series

By JULES WOLFFERS

The worth of the Symphony Hall Organ Concerts was given added reassurance yesterday evening when John Ferris presented the second of these programs before a large and appreciative audience.

A native of Michigan, Mr. Ferris is presently university organist and choirmaster at Harvard University. Yesterday he had the assistance of Roger Voisin and Andre Come, trumpets, and William Gibson with William Moyer, trombones, in two works for brass and organ.

Giovanni Gabrieli had rather more success in mixing brass with the pipes some 350 years ago than Norman Lockwood achieved with his Concerto for Brass and Organ written for E. Power Biggs' tenth year of CBS broadcasting. The early work makes the ensemble sound convincing and integrated. The 20th-century work, after a promising opening, becomes dull in the second movement. Only in the last section of the third movement does it regain momentum.

But there were no problems at all with the remainder of the list. Mr. Ferris is much at home with Bach as shown by his sensitive and moving performances of the chorale preludes and the Prelude and Fugue in A-minor. His playing was quiet, persuasive and underladen with emotion and meaning. The player's personality never obtruded on the composer although there was always enough individuality to add distinction.

Alain's challenging Premiere Fantaisie obtruded its bitter and sceptical mood on the tenor of the program. Here the organist lightened the tone for more assertive results.

The beautiful Brahms settings of "Herzlich thut," and the bittersweet solace of "Oh World, I must leave thee," the last work Brahms wrote, gave further proof of the performer's dignified and musicianly style.

These six o'clock one-hour programs are delightful events and it is pleasant to know that E. Power Biggs, on March 19, and Berj Zamkochian, on April 9, still remain to us.

The Program

John Ferris gave the second program in the Symphony Hall Concert Series yesterday evening at Symphony Hall. He was assisted by four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Roger Voisin and Andre Come, trumpets; William Gibson and William Moyers, trombones.

The program:

Canzoni Noni Toni, for Brass and Organ	Gabrieli
Three Chorale Preludes from "18 Chorales"	Bach
Prelude and Fugue in A minor	Bach
Premiere Fantaisie	Alain
Two settings of "Herzlich thut"	Brahms
"O welt, ich muss dich lassen," op. 122	Brahms
Concerto for Brass and Organ	Lockwood

Globe 2/20/61

Ferris Gives Second Organ Concert in Symphony Hall

JOHN FERRIS was organ soloist last night in the Second Concert in the series on the Symphony Hall organ. The program: Canzon Noni Toni, Gabrieli, with Boston Symphony Brass Players; Three Chorale Preludes from "Achtzehn Chorale von verschiedener Art" (Jesu Christus, unser Heiland; Von Gott will ich nicht lassen; Herr Jesu Christ, dich zu uns wend); Prelude and Fugue in A minor, Bach. Premiere Fantaisie, Alain; Two settings of Herzlich thut mich verlangen," Op. 122; "O Welt, ich muss dich lassen, Op. 122, Brahms; Concerto for Brass and Organ, Lockwood.

By KEVIN KELLY

John Ferris, organist and choirmaster at Harvard University, gave the second concert last night in the current series on the Symphony Hall organ. He presented an unusual program, an odd and satisfying merger of the classic and the contemporary, or, as one rather irate purist in the audience had it: "a mixture of the sacred and profane."

He underscored the music of Gabrieli, Bach and Brahms with the work of Jehan Alain and Norman Lockwood.

Since Ferris is an excellent musician, keenly disciplined and with an ample technique, he gave each selection the particular style required. For example, he was able to communicate the harmonic and contrapuntal relationships often latent in a single melodic line from the Bach Prelude and Fugue, and he was equally proficient at fashioning a meaningful musical statement from the clashing sonorities of Alain's Premiere Fantaisie.

The program opened with Giovanni Gabrieli's Canzon Noni Toni. Ferris was assisted by brass players from the Boston Symphony in this rousing introduction which clearly set forth the tone for the remainder of the performance. Ferris achieved notable effects in the three chorale preludes from Bach's "Achtzehn Chorale von verschiedener Art." His registrations were aptly chosen to keep the voice distinct. The Brahms was equally well played, animated, intelligent, flexible, and beautifully carried off.

The Premiere Fantasisie of Alain, presumably the "profane" work on the program, was described as "a skeptical composition, based upon a passage from the "Rubiyat" in which the author looks to Heaven for guidance, receives no solace, and is told to pursue blind instinct.

It was boldly scaled, heavy with slashing chords, and it rose to a frenzied climax. It was not totally convincing within its framework, thus its urgency became an irritant before the final wispish resolution. Ferris, however, played it with driving power and musical discernment.

The Lockwood Concerto, which closed the hour-long program, was another matter, a vibrant, dramatic piece in the angular modern idiom, which engages interest at the outset and maintained it through the end. The brass playing (a pair of trumpets and a pair of trombones) had a hard finish which seemed perfectly suited to the work. Ferris brought the organ through the turbulent score with virtuosic ease.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

FEB 20 1961

John Ferris at the Console

Boston Symphony Players Assist in Lockwood Concerto

By William Saunders

For the second organ concert in the series at Symphony Hall, John Ferris and a brass ensemble of Boston Symphony musicians executed a demanding program thoughtfully devised to interest both musician and layman. Mr. Ferris, organist and choirmaster at Harvard, was assisted by trumpeters Roger Voisin and André Come and trombonists William Gibson and William Moyer.

Giovanni Gabrieli's "Canzon Noni Toni" opened the program with a ceremonial flourish, recalling the pomp and splendor of 17th-century Venice. While Gabrieli did not call for specific instruments in his score, the rich sonorities of brass and organ admirably set forth this jubilant, expansive music with its abrupt contrasts in tempo and rhythm. The symphony musicians played sensitively and flawlessly, evoking a remarkable palette of colors and nuances.

Mr. Ferris then offered poetic traversals of three Bach chorale preludes. In the somber and chromatic "Jesus Christ, Our Redeemer" he showed a gift for imaginative registrations. In the quietly joyful "From God Naught Shall Divide Me" Mr. Ferris demonstrated a feeling for melodic suppleness and the contour of phrases. And in the tuneful "Lord Jesus Christ, Turn Thou to Us"—an extended fugal trie—he revealed his control over a wide variety of touches, from pure legato to peppery staccato.

♪ ♪ ♪

Mr. Ferris played with poise and deliberation, allowing none of the mechanics of execution to interfere with the communication of the music's fire and poetry. He performed Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor —so reminiscent of Buxtehude in its majestic architecture — with facility and verve.

The Bach group was followed by Jehans Alain's incisive and rhythmically powerful "Première Fantaisie." Inspired by a quatrain from Omar Khayaam's "Rubáiyát," it is by turns anguished, sparkling, and ecstatic, diminishing abruptly to a mystical and spellbinding conclusion.

Mr. Ferris then projected the deep emotions of three Brahms chorale preludes, written during the composer's last year in a mood of brooding resignation. Mr. Ferris's moving conception of "My Heart Is Full of Longing" prompted the sizable audience to interrupt with their applause.

♪ ♪ ♪

The brass ensemble rejoined Mr. Ferris to conclude the concert with Normand Lockwood's Concerto for Brass and Organ. This work, of baroque design, showed its composer to be a distinct, forward-looking musical personality who communicates a wealth of musical ideas succinctly.

The Concerto is dissonant and aggressive, but likeable at first hearing. Mr. Lockwood exploits the concerto form by giving the organ and brass distinctive melodic and rhythmic material, while preserving tonal balance and unity of mood in each movement.

In the first movement rugged angular passages of great rhythmic tension alternate with contemplative moods in which the brasses intone a chorale-like theme. In the slow movement they weave a poignant and wistful melody over a quietly moving organ pedal part.

The final movement begins with a fugal passage whose subject is an arrangement of the 12-tone row; it proceeds boldly to a triumphant conclusion. This refined and spontaneous work is not a bravura concerto; but it is obviously difficult, in the way that Mozart's concertos are.

With Mr. Ferris conducting from the console, the ensemble played with unity of purpose and mutual understanding. The results were hearty, blended sonorities and a precise execution. After they had repeated the first movement of the concerto in response to continued applause, many listeners may have been more aware of the riches the organ can bring to the concert hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

FEB 15 1961

Symphony Organ Concert

The Boston Symphony, under guest conductor Erich Leinsdorf, is on tour this week in Connecticut, Washington, D.C., and New York City.

Meanwhile, the second Symphony Hall organ concert will be given this Sunday, Feb. 19, by John Ferris of Harvard University. Mr. Ferris will program solo works by Bach, Brahms, and Alain, and will be joined by Boston Symphony brass players for concerted works by Gabrieli and Lockwood.

The concert is at 6 o'clock.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

FEB 12 1961

Music Events This Week

The Boston Symphony Orchestra with guest conductor Erich Leinsdorf will be on tour this week. Mr. Leinsdorf will conduct at the University of Connecticut, Storrs; the Connecticut College for Women at New London; and in Washington, D. C. plus concerts in the orchestra's annual series in Brooklyn and at Carnegie Hall.

John Ferris, Harvard University's organist and chairmaster, will give an organ concert in Symphony Hall next Sunday, Feb. 19 at 6:00 p.m. Second in the new series of organ concerts sponsored by the orchestra, Mr. Ferris' one - hour program will include Gabrieli's Canzon Noni Toni, for Brass and Organ; Three Chorale Preludes from "Achtzehn Chorale von vershiedener Art" by Bach; the Prelude and Fugue in A minor by Bach; Alain's Premiere Fantaisie; Two settings of "Herzlich thut mich verlangen," Op. 122 of Brahms; "O Welt, ich muss dich lassen," Op. 12 of Brahms; and Lochwood's Concerto for Brass and Organ. Members of the orchestra will participate in the first and last numbers. All seats for the concert, now on sale at Symphony Hall, are $2.00 and unreserved.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

FEB 19 1961

Music Events This Week

John Ferris, Harvard University's Organist and Choirmaster, has invited four members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to join him in two of the works scheduled for the one-hour organ concert which Mr. Ferris will give today at 6:00 p.m. in Symphony Hall.

Roger Voisin, and Andre Come, trumpet, with William Gibson, and William Moyer, trombone, will join Mr. Ferris in Giovanni Gabrieli's "Conzon Noni Toni" and in Norman Lockwood's Concerto for Brass and Organ. Mr. Ferris, performing on Symphony Hall's four-manual Aeolian-Skinner pipe organ, will also be heard in Bach three chorale preludes Bach's Prelude and Fugue in A minor, "Premiere Fantaisie" by Alain, and two settings of "Herzlich thut" and "O Welt, ich muss dich lassen," by Brahms.

Tickets for today's organ concert, all $1.00 and unreserved, are available at the Symphony Hall Box Office.

Charles Munch returns to the Boston Symphony Orchestra this week for an Open Rehearsal on Thursday at 7:30 p.m., plus the regular weekend concerts on Friday and Saturday. The programs will include Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" in which the New England Conservatory Chorus, Lorna Cooke de Varon, conductor, will participate. The Friday-Saturday concerts will open with Milhaud's "La Creation du Monde."

Joseph Silverstein has been invited by Charles Munch to be soloist at the Orchestra's concert on Tuesday, Feb. 28. Mr. Silverstein, a member of the Orchestra since 1955, will be heard in Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2. Henryk Szeryng will be guest at the Orchestra's concerts on March 3 and 4, which will be preceded by an Open Rehearsal on March 2.

TODAY

RALPH KIRKPATRICK, harpsichord, Kresge Auditorium, M.I.T. Humanities Series, 3 p.m. Chambonnieres, Couperin, Rameau, Scarlatti.

ALFRED NASH PATTERSON, organist and choirmaster, leads performance and discussion, "Contemporary Music for the Church." Church of the Advent, 30 Brimmer St., 8 p.m. Public invited.

MUSICA SACRA, Victor H. Mattfield, director, Lenten music, University Lutheran Church, Dunster and Winthrop streets, Cambridge, 7 p.m.

MONDAY

RAFAEL PUYANA, harpsichord, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. [illegible] Program includes Freschobaldi, Bull, Bach, Rameau, Fischer. Admission free, by ticket.

FACULTY CONCERT, Longy School, Cambridge, 8:30 p.m. Eleftherois Eleftherakis, viola, Kate Friscia, piano, guest artist Felix Viscuglia, clarinet. Brahms, Mozart, Hindemith, Weinert. Admission free.

TUESDAY

GLORIA LeCLAIR, soprano, with Robert Ewing, piano, in all-American program sponsored by Chromatic Club, at College Club, 40 Commonwealth Ave., 11 a.m. Thompson, Spross, piano works by Mr. Ewing, Shaw arr., Barber, Copland, Hovhaness.

VIRGINIA THARRINGTON, soprano, Reginald Boardman at the piano, Boston conservatory Fenway Series, Concert Room, 26 Fenway, 8:30 p.m. Wolf, Debussy, Ives, Carlisle Floyd. Admission free.

N.E. CONSERVATORY STUDENT PROGRAM, Jordan Hall, 8:30 p.m. Vocal and chamber music. Admission free.

FRIDAY

AMERICAN YOUTH CONCERTS, organized by Robert E. Wheeler. N.E. Mutual Hall Gives young talents opportunity to be heard. 8 p.m. David Franco, violin, Brussels World Fair, First Prize Winner, 1958, born in Belgian Congo; Elizabeth Coofs, soprano and Priscilla Gagnon, piano, both from New England.

Buffelle's
ESTABLISHED 1888
BArclay 7-5371
PRESS CLIPPING BUREAU
165 Church Street – New York

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700

FEB 1961

Boston Hails Abundance Of Keyboard Programs

■ The Winter solstice always brings a just-perceptible slackening of concert life in Boston. One rather welcomes the lull, for hibernation makes one hungry for music.

Not that nights by the fire need be soundless, with any one of eight fine FM music stations to choose from! Even insomniacs and incurable night-owls are included in the new 24-hour programming policy of WCOP-FM. The schedule, fashioned out West on the advice of Alfred Wallenstein, fills the small hours with Baroque, Flamenco, and off-beat modern, and none of it the usual.

When people again began donning caps and mittens of a dark night, there seemed to be plenty of keyboard music to be heard. There was the beginning of the series of recitals planned by the Trustees of the Boston Symphony to demonstrate the organ at Symphony Hall, which was acquired in 1949 and seldom is heard by itself. Donald Willing led off in the first program, which included Frank Martin's "Sonata Da Chiesa" for organ and viola d'amore, played by Albert Bernard. Other organists invited for the same series are John Ferris, E. Power Biggs, and Berj Zamkochian, regular organist for the Symphony.

Another sign of widespread interest in organ music and organ building came with the dedication of a new organ for [illegible] Church by Virgil Fox. The program, centered in the French school, and showed many sides of the instrument's capacity, especially in Franck's colossal E Major Chorale and Duruflé's Toccata. But Bach's sixth Trio Sonata revealed that somewhere high in the chancel was perched a Baroque organ, ready to trace the music of that era with a clean grillwork of woody tones.

As for organ out of the chancel, Robert Pettitt played an interesting recital on the Boston Conservatory Fenway Series, assisted by Richard Conrad, tenor. One of the highpoints of the evening came in their collaboration for the "Pie Jesu", by Lili Boulanger, one of that small body of startlingly original works which led her sister, Nadia, to undertake the lifelong memorial duty of nurturing like talents.

■ Among pianists, we heard Eugene Istomin with the Symphony, playing Brahms' Second Concerto, with a vigor and articulation that marks still another advance in the growth of this artist . . . At the Boston Morning Musicals, Byron Janis, fresh from a resounding tour of the Soviet Union, showed, in his Bauer arrangement of a Franck Chorale, and in certain portions of Kabalevsky's Second Sonata, a subdued introspection that we had not heard from him as yet. He was warmly applauded.

West-to-East and East-to-West the concert world pivots, and Dmitri Bashkirov, Soviet pianist, appeared soon after his senior colleague, Richter. He possesses strong individuality and stunning virtuosity; about communication, we will wait for our final judgment. It seems to be a trait of the young that they like to stun their audiences before they begin to consider how to raise them up. . . .

Mieczslaw Horszowski, appearing on the M.I.T. Humanities Series, opened his recital with Mozart's romantically choral, overly-neglected Sonata in F Major, K. 533 and 494. Exquisite as was the artist's interpretation of it, its dizzy gyrations seemed to spin along a fine tangent to that of true realization. The pianist seemed entirely at home in his next group, Brahms' "Fantaisies," Op. 116, refining his rich colorism by the reflective screening moods of the slow pieces. After intermission, came Dallapiccola's "Sonatina Canonica," remarkably well-mannered considering its 20th-century origin, followed by Beethoven's Opus 111, beyond all manner in its tone of ultimate affirmations.

At the New England Conservatory, David Barnett gave a considered performance of Beethoven's "Diabelli" Variations, with guiding comments . . . Among private recitals, that of Serge Conus before the annual assembly of New England members of the French Légion d'Honnuer was outstanding for its capacity and sincerity.

■ Most notable among recent soloists with the Boston Symphony was its own first violist, Joseph de Pasquale, in Bartok's Concerto for Viola. His performance met in every way the composer's demand for strong line and unnerving rhythm, and his vibrant tone enabled his line to soar out easily over the orchestral flood of sound.

During this report period, opera is represented by entirely [illegible] promises. Most exciting, probably, [illegible] forthcoming production of Massenet's seldom-heard "Le Jongleur de Notre Dame," to be given by Boris Goldovsky's New England Opera Theater, with Tommy Rall in the [illegible]-headed lead [illegible] of singing-actor. At the end of January, Sarah [illegible]dell's Opera [illegible] gave "Falstaff" with James [illegible] in the title role, [illegible] Leigh as [illegible] Ford, [illegible] the same [illegible] Hastings' [illegible] Festival Orchestra joined with [illegible] singers in a concert performance of the [illegible]-year-old Wolfgang's opera "La Finta Semplice," or in Mr. Hastings' own apt rendering, "The Clever Flirt." More of both next month.

ROSA DUMM

BLANK PAGE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

MAR 19 1961

Music Events This Week

E. Power biggs will give an organ recital at 6 p.m. today in Symphony Hall, the third in the new organ concert series sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give the public additional opportunity to hear the Symphony Hall four-manual Aeolian-Skinner organ. Mr. Biggs assisted in the design of this instrument and he was soloist with the Orchestra, November 1949, when the organ was heard for the first time.

Handel's Concerto No. 2, in B-flat, will open the one-hour concert followed by "La Romanesca" by Valente and Soler's Concerto No. 3 in G major. Compositions by Sweelinck, Bach, Alain and Franck will be heard in addition to the Finale from the First Organ Symphony by Vierne.

Tickets for Mr. Biggs' organ recital, all $1.00 and unreserved, will be available at the Symphony Hall box office today.

Thomas Schippers concludes his engagement as Symphony guest conductor Tuesday evening with the overture to Verdi's "La Forza del destino," the Symphony No. 4 by Schubert and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Charles Munch will conduct Friday, Saturday, and Sunday March 26, with pianist Byron Janis as his guest. The program, in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt, will include his Piano Concertos Nos. 1 and 2 plus the "Siegfried Idyll" by Wagner and Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet."

Herald 3/12/61

Biggs Next in Organ Series

The Symphony Hall Organ Concerts on the orchestra's organ, continue on Sunday evening Mar. 19, at six o'clock, with E. Power Biggs at the console. Mr. Biggs was a consultant in the design of the instrument.

The organ was planned to meet the requirements of music both of the past and the present. His forthcoming program will illustrate works of Sweelinck, Bach, and Handel, to Franck, Vierne, and Alain.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

The Pilot
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 87,000

MAR 25 1961

MUSIC

E. Power Biggs, Organist, in the third of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Organ Recital series, Sunday, March 19, 6:05 P. M., Symphony Hall: Handel: Concerto 2, Bb; Valente: La Romanesca, with Five Varieties; Soler: Concerto 3, G; Sweelinck: Balletto del Granduca (Five Varieties); Bach: Fantasia and Fugue, g; Alain: Litanies; Franck: Pastorale, E; Vierne: Finale, First Organ Symphony.

After an afternoon with Biggs' antipode, Virgil Fox (All Saints, Brookline, new Casavant organ) and Robert Shaw at Symphony Hall, music-minded Boston turned out to fill Symphony Hall to hear the organist who has probably done more than any other to plead the cause of the 'true classic' organ.

Mr. Biggs has an eager and inquiring mind, a restless one, one not readily satisfied with an answer just because it is at hand or commonly accepted. His broadcasts on the famous Aeolian-Skinner in the Germanic (now Busch-Reisinger) Museum for years over CBS told countless millions that a new era of organ tone had dawned. Even over the limited tonal and dynamic range of AM and of typical home radios, the 'clarified ensemble,' the 'American Classic' tone designed by the late, great G. Donald Harrison came through keenly and persuasively.

Then there was the turn to Schlicker, whose voicing of pipes followed traditional European standards in that the tone (except of course in the reeds) starts with a neat little 'tchk' or 't' rather than a 'w' or 'wh.' This percussive attack delineates the notes and the rhythm, especially in the inner voices, and, if not carried to excess as a reaction against most over-mild and muddily-voiced organs, or in too dead and therefore non-mellowing an acoustic, can add zest, life, brio and charm to music which on other organs sounds simply studious, antiquarian, musty or muddled.

The difficulty is that one can be so carried away by a new experience that for a while it supplants all others. The new Flentrop organ of Mr. Biggs in the Busch-Reisinger records superlatively well; but it is not always easy to simulate a legato, singing line on a percussively voiced instrument. Perhaps improperly designed expression (or 'swell') boxes can hamper tone; but so can front or case pipes too closely spaced —much more so.

The other night Mr. Biggs gave us a perfectly magnificent Sweelinck, a delightful Handel (which he has recorded, by the way, together with all the others, in their full organ-cum-orchestra form, on Columbia), a pleasantly diverting Soler, but a Bach lacking, to these ears, in graceful phrasing or clear entrances and departures of voices. But in the Franck and Vierne, late-nineteenth-century French Romantic works, we were given the same mf to ff registrations, devoid of even a tiny touch of celeste or, horrors, slightest closing of a swell box (lest the tone be impaired, I suppose).

Always exercised by Mr. Biggs' tireless and honest pursuit of perfection, I am sincerely sorry that he has given a recital to such a large and obviously highly enthusiastic audience before correlating his musicianship, his past experience, the style of the latter works, and measuring these against his honest, understandable and definitely laudable desire to project the clearest and cleanest of unimpeded organ tone into the listening ear.

For early music, simplicity, yes; for baroque, ornamentation and brilliance; for contemporary, directness and even severity. But for Romantic, there is nothing wrong, truly, when properly used, of course with the celestes, the swell box and even that ordinarily much-overused love of too many church organists—the tremulant.

* * * *

On Sunday, April 9, Berj Zamkochian, Organist for the Boston Symphony and of St. Theresa Church, West Roxbury, will offer the closing recital of this enormously popular Series. Tickets are one dollar, at the Box Office.

—Paul St. George.

Herald - 3/19

Music Events

E. Power Briggs will give an organ recital at 6 p.m. today in Symphony Hall, the third in the new organ concert series sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra to give the public additional opportunity to hear the Symphony Hall four-manual Aeolian-Skinner organ. Mr. Biggs assisted in the design of this instrument and he was soloist with the Orchestra, November 1949, when the organ was heard for the first time.

Handel's Concerto No. 2, in B-flat, will open the one-hour concert followed by "La Romanesca" by Valente and Soler's Concerto No. 3 in G major. Compositions by Sweelinck, Bach, Alain and Franck will be heard in addition to the Finale from the First Organ Symphony by Vierne.

Tickets for Mr. Biggs' organ recital, all $1.00 and unreserved, will be available at the Symphony Hall box office today.

Thomas Schippers concludes his engagement as Symphony guest conductor Tuesday evening with the overture to Verdi's "La Forza del destino," the Symphony No. 4 by Schubert and Bartok's Concerto for Orchestra.

Charles Munch will conduct Friday, Saturday, and Sunday March 26, with pianist Byron Janis as his guest. The program, in commemoration of the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt, will include his Piano Concertos Nos. 1 and 2 plus the "Siegfried Idyll" by Wagner and Tchaikovsky's "Romeo and Juliet."

TODAY

Monitor 3/16

Biggs at Symphony Organ

The March 19 Symphony Hall organ recital will be given by E. Power Biggs, whose program will consist of Handel's Concerto No. 2; Valente's "La Romanesca"; Soler's Concerto No. 3; Sweelinck's "Balletto del Granducca"; Bach's Fantasia and Fugue in G minor; Alain's Litanies; Franck's Pastorale in E major; and the Finale from Vierne's First Organ Symphony.

The recital will begin at 6 o'clock.

253

Symphony Organ Series Concluded

Many Brilliances in Zamkochian Recital

By Louis Chapin

From time to time the Boston Symphony plays a piece whose climax calls for the kind of starch which is peculiar to the full organ—the most conspicuous such occasion this season was in Strauss's "Thus Spake Zarathustra." When this happens, Berj Zamkochian will be found down at the left corner of the Symphony Hall stage, practically hidden behind the immense Aeolian-Skinner console.

This first season of Symphony Hall organ concerts has given Boston audiences the opportunity of hearing the range of the instrument as four outstanding recitalists have chosen to exercise it. And yesterday afternoon, as the last of these, Mr. Zamkochian came out of his corner brandishing organ color and dynamics in each fist.

* * *

Color in music may be obtained by variations in tonal sonority (as from reed to string), and it may occur, as chromaticism, in the composer's liberal use of half-steps, which tend to blur the relations between chords, to draw attention to their tonal rather than their structural character. Mr. Zamkochian, in his programing and in his interpretation, showed himself partial to both aspects of color. There are corrosive dangers in such partiality, which in this organist's case are considerably offset by his delight in contrasting tonal sizes and by his general good taste.

His opening Handel, the F major Concerto, began with a sedate, almost stodgy Larghetto, but the brightnesses of the organ and of its player's attack broke through with the central Siciliana and the closing Presto. Handel had an infectious, almost vaudevillian way with a jig.

* * *

Mr. Zamkochian's warm feeling for Bach became immediately evident as he dealt with the set of variations, or Partita, on the Chorale "Christ, der du bist der helle Tag." The reappearance of the hymn-tune in the pedals, after its four unpedaled disguises, was dramatically underlined in this clean performance. The familiar Chorale-Prelude "Herzlich Tut Mich Verlangen" was gently and affectionately colored, freely breathed in its phrasing. Applause sounded particularly foreign to this hymn of prayer.

The brilliances of the F major Tocatta were generated by Mr. Zamkochian with impressive ease. It is not one of Bach's profoundest works, but its forward drive demands authority of the performer, which it received.

From here on it was chromaticism all the way. The soft colors of César Franck's Cantabile were amply, perhaps thickly, spread but Liszt's variations on the descending bass used by Bach in the Crucifixus of his B minor Mass fairly reveled in the capacities of this instrument. The great gulf fixed between Bach and Liszt was never more magnificently described. Louis Vierne's two Fantasy Pieces were pleasing, too, with the characteristic fabrics he drops behind his melodies.

In sum, Boston's first series of Symphony Hall organ concerts closed at less than its greatest depth, but with a tonal phosphorescence to invite our ears to a second season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
APR 9 1961

Music Events This Week

Berj Zamkochian will give an organ concert at 6 p.m. today in Symphony Hall, the last recital of the season in the new series of organ concerts sponsired by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The one-hour program will include compositions by Handel, Bach, Franck, Liszt and Vierne. Tickets, all $1.00 and unreserved, are available at the Symphony Hall box office.

Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra Friday and Saturday in Haydn's Symphony No. 88 followed by "Das Lied von der Erde" by Mahler, in which Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd will participate.

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the orchestra's Sunday afternoon series in Symphony Hall next Sunday, April 16, at 3 p.m. and the final concert of the annual Cambridge series in Sanders Theater Tuesday, April 18. The program for these two concerts will be Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo et Juliette," with Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti and Giorgio Tozzi as soloists, will have an open rehearsal in Symphony Hall on April 20 in preparation for concert performances on April 21 and 22.

Herald 4/9/61

Music Events This Week

Berj Zamkochian will give an organ concert at 6 p.m. today in Symphony Hall, the last recital of the season in the new series of organ concerts sponsired by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The one-hour program will include compositions by Handel, Bach, Franck, Liszt and Vierne. Tickets, all $1.00 and unreserved, are available at the Symphony Hall box office.

Richard Burgin will conduct the orchestra Friday and Saturday in Haydn's Symphony No. 88 followed by "Das Lied von der Erde" by Mahler, in which Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd will participate.

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the orchestra's Sunday afternoon series in Symphony Hall next Sunday, April 16, at 3 p.m. and the final concert of the annual Cambridge series in Sanders Theater Tuesday, April 18. The program for these two concerts will be Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo et Juliette," with Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti and Giorgio Tozzi as soloists, will have an open rehearsal in Symphony Hall on April 20 in preparation for concert performances on April 21 and 22.

TODAY

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
APR 8 1961

Final Organ Recital

Berj Zamkochian will give an organ concert at [illegible] p. m. tomorrow in Symphony Hall. Mr. Zamkochian's recital is the last recital of the season in the new series of organ concerts sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The one-hour program will include compositions by Handel, Bach, Franck, Liszt and Vierne. Tickets, all $1.00 and unreserved, are available at the Symphony Hall box office.

Richard Burgin will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra next Friday at 2:15 p.m. and Saturday at 8:30 p.m. The concerts will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 88 followed by [illegible] "Das Lied von der Erde" by [illegible] in which Eunice Alberts and David Lloyd will participate.

Charles Munch will conduct the final concert of the orchestra's Sunday afternoon series in Symphony Hall next Sunday, April 16, at 3 p.m. and the final concert of the annual Cambridge series in Sanders Theater Tuesday, April 18. The program for these two concerts will consist of Schumann's Overture to "Genoveva," the Octet for Strings by Mendelssohn and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4.

Hector Berlioz' Dramatic Symphony "Romeo et Juliette," with Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti and Giorgio Tozzi as soloists, will have an open rehearsal in Symphony Hall on April 20 in preparation for concert performances on April 21 and 22.

BOSTON EVE. AMERICAN

Herald 4/10/61

MUSIC

Last Half Saves BSO Organ Finale

By JULES WOLFFERS

Prospects for a successful conclusion to Symphony Hall's Organ Concert Series seemed bleak indeed through the first half of Berj Zamkochian's recital yesterday evening

Opening with the Handel Concerto in F Major, Op. 4, No. 5, the organist paid his respects to the Baroque composer by an exaggerated deference shown mainly by inordinately slow tempos in the slow sections and an extremely dubious choice of registration for the faster movements.

Nor did matters improve in the succeeding Chorale Variations, Chorale Prelude, and Toccata in F major by Bach. Again the choice of tempi was capricious and the registration robbed the more spirited sections of clarity. Added to this were noticeable slips and lack of coordination.

Too Personalized

Bach's organ works from the very foundation of good organ practice and style. It is unfortunate that Mr. Zamkochian's ideas regarding the composer appear to be so highly personalized.

It is, of course, unfair to come to premature judgement on such a relatively small sampling especially so early in the program. The slips can be dismissed as possibly due to nervousness. But it may be that the performer is not really at ease with Bach's restrained dignity of expression which relies less on outward variety of timbre or color than it does on inward meaning, balance and clarity.

The recital took a sharp turn for the better when Mr. Zamkochian came to later composers with whom he apparently is on much better terms. Franck's Cantabile was beautifully expressed with that unique combination of richness and reverence that the French composer imparted to almost everything he wrote.

Liszt's skilled if somewhat showy Variations on a Bach ground bass were expertly and lavishly realized. I have never heard a better version of the piece and what were imperfection earlier in the program became positive virtues in the Liszt. The organist's control also became sure, certain, accurate and confident.

It is regrettable that so much skill had to be wasted on the odd exercise that Vierne wrote on the Westminster chimes. I got heartily sick of the motives long before the end and even sicker of the constantly reiterated rolling figure that remorselessly accompanied the chimes motives almost from beginning to end.

But the dubiou work was nevertheless splendidly played and the large audience rewarded Mr. Zamkochian with the hearty applause his dexterity, dash and vigor clearly called for.

It is good news that the series is to be continued next season. All four of this year's recitals were well attended and Symphony Hall is to be congrateulated on the success of this venture with special thanks to Henry B. Cabot, president of Symphony's trustees, on his foresight in pressing forward with the idea. The time will come when these concerts will be sold out as they nearly were once or twice this season.

Program

Berj Zamkochian, presented the last recital of the series of Symphony Hall Organ Concerts yesterday evening. The program:

Concerto in F major, Op. 4, No. 5. Handel oChrale Variations; Partita on "Christ, der du bist" ..... Bach
Chorale Prelude, "Wenn wir in Hochstein" ..... Bach
Toccata in F major ..... Bach
Cantible ..... Franck
Variations on Bach basso continuos ..... Liszt
Impromptu and Carillon de Westminster, from Pieces de Fantasie, Op. 54 .. Vierne

BLANK PAGE

BLANK PAGE

ATLANTIC
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 268,257
JUL 1960

Mahler: Songs of a Wayfarer; Songs on the Death of Children

Maureen Forrester, contralto; Charles Munch conducting Boston Symphony Orchestra; RCA Victor LSC-2371 (stereo) and LM-2371

Maureen Forrester seems to me the long-sought successor to Schumann-Heink, a true and natural dramatic contralto with boundless flexibility and a real thrilling quality in her voice. Mahler is a good composer to bring this out, and he does. The two cycles of longing and grief come beautifully to life, assisted by the gorgeous sonic glint of the Boston Symphony. Munch distinguishes himself too; I won't say he is as good as Bruno Walter at Mahler because nobody is, but he can make a threnody throb when he has a mind to. This record is mainly an exercise in the beauty of pathos, and as such it is a success.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 150,779
JUL 30 1960

summer.

ARRAU PLAYS BEETHOVEN—Claudio Arrau, appearing as soloist with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood this weekend, is represented in a summer Angel release by a recording of Beethoven's First Piano Concerto, with the Philharmonia Orchestra under Alceo Galliera (35723 mono, S-35723 stereo). Arrau is at his best in the introspective slow movement, which he plays with quiet solemnity, but he is a little too decorous in the outer movements to suit my taste. The recording, while good, is unexceptional.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 150,779

GUEST REVIEW

EILEEN FARRELL SINGS WAGNER (Reviewed by Charles H. Frank of Brooklyn.)—That Eileen Farrell is one of the finest sopranos on the current operatic scene is proven beyond doubt in her recording of Brünnhilde's Immolation from "Götterdämmerung" and the "Liebestod" from "Tristan" (Victor LM-2255 mono, LSC-2255 stereo). The size of her voice and the range and warmth of tone it possesses ultimately necessitates a comparison with Kirsten Flagstad. Farrell's voice is richer and very slightly lighter than Flagstad's, while the latter has the fuller bottom tones. Although I feel Farrell's "Liebestod" falls short of Flagstad's singing of it in the complete "Tristan" conducted by Furtwängler, it is a completely credible job. Her vocal instrument is immense and is shown to good advantage in the "Götterdämmerung" excerpt. The accompaniment by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony is lively but does not have the fire that Furtwängler and Toscanini have given it.

(CUE readers are invited to submit guest reviews, which will be published in this space from time to time. Your opinions may be pro or con, but the recording(s) you elect to comment on must be currently available. Please limit each review to roughly 200 words and address: Disc Data, Cue Magazine, 20 West 43rd Street, New York 36.)

—CHRISTIE BARTER

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
DEC 11 1960

Award to Munch

Charles Munch has been awarded the Grand Prix National du Disque by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording of the Requiem by Hector Berlioz. The recording was made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Leopold Simoneau and the New England Conservatory chorus, and was released by RCA Victor.

This award for the Berlioz Requiem is the eighth time Dr. Munch has been honored by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording activity.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 218 939
JUL 30 1960

RECORDINGS REPORTS I: ORCHESTRAL

WORK, PERFORMER, DATA	REPORT
Bloch: Concerti Grossi Nos. 1 and 2. Howard Hanson conducting the Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra. Mercury SR 90223, $5.98.	The first impression would be that the coupling of these two works is a singular[ly] ing the listener ready access to the composer's treatment of a similar plan sepa[rated] twenty-five years. When the second appeared in 1952, it was welcomed for the even though less individual than its predecessor of 1924-25. In these performa[nces] works sound blander, less rewarding than memory suggested. This may mean th[at] some of their attention-commanding power, or that the performances are softer cisive than they might be. Till further evidence is available, the second suggestion Highly satisfactory recording. (Monaural: MG 50223, $4.98.)
Copland: "Appalachian Spring," "Tender Land" Suite. Composer conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LM-2401, $5.98.	The Copland "vocabulary" is put to much better use in "A.S." than in the excerp[ts] which have a degree of charm but no such compulsion to the listening attention. other hand, has a well-varied sequence of sections, contrasting in mood and ten[sion] practiced use of some devices which originally served Copland well in "Billy the Ki[d]" offbeat accents, stepwise melodies, modal harmonies, etc. He is highly useful to his conductor, and the orchestral sound is faithfully transmitted. (Monaural: LM 2401 monophonic form, deservedly won a number of awards as the year's outstanding orchestral performance. At last it is available in stereo, and if anything it is more impressive than ever. Though it does not have the range of the best 1960 engineering, it nevertheless has a clarity, even in the loudest passages, and a healthy sound that are more pleasing than the average recordings one has encountered during the past season. Munch's view of this score has always seemed to me to strike an admirable balance between the cool and authoritative detachment of Ansermet and Monteux and the personal volatility of Koussevitzky, of whose magical performance Ravel once commented: "It's beautiful, but it's not my music." The responsiveness of the Boston musicians to his vision is something rare and memorable. Indeed, in many ways, this remains Munch's finest recording effort since he came to the United States something over a decade ago. —C.J.L.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
AUG 1960

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloé (Complete); Boston Symphony Orchestra and New England Conservatory Chorus conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victor Stereo LSC-1893, $5.98.

Ⓢ IN 1955 this recording, in its original

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
AUG 1960

TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Pierre Monteux. RCA Victor LM-2369, $4.98, or Stereo LSC-2369, $5.98.

Same; Paris Conservatory Orchestra conducted by Albert Wolff. London Stereo CS-6150, $4.98.

Bernstein, N. Y. Philharmonic. Columbia MS-6035

Ⓢ THESE two very un-Russian and unaffectionate readings are excellent examples, it seems to me, of how not to play this work. For Monteux, the first consideration was obviously speed, while sensitivity to melodic phrasing, transitions, dynamics, and ethnic values appear to have been lost far behind. Wolff at least catches a glimmer of the nobility of the oft-repeated opening statement, but with the introduction over he has trouble deciding whether he wants to take matters slow or fast, with the transitions from one theme and tempo to the other being clumsily executed. From the second movement on, the slows have it, and the interpretation sags tediously. For me, however, these defects are as nothing compared to the maddening tonal production of the woodwinds and brass in this none-too-polished French orchestra. The wheezy, snake charmer-type oboe, very jazz-saxophone sounding French horns, and wide-vibratoed, nasal, and often flat trumpets would probably be real fat cats in somebody's Dixieland combo, but in music of the Russian idiom they are more than this listener can abide. —A.K.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
OCT 1960

GERSHWIN: Rhapsody in Blue; An American in Paris; Earl Wild (piano); Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler. Four-Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, RCA Victor FTC-2004, $8.95.

T FIEDLER, Wild, & Co. present a pair of boisterous and rather heavy-handed performances. The playing is abundant in energetic good spirits, however, and things move along in a happy-go-lucky fashion that is generally pleasant and probably appropriate. Victor's sound is big, live, and clean, with good stereo. —P.C.P.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
DEC 11 1960

GRAND PRIX FOR MUNCH

Charles Munch has been awarded the Grand Prix National du Disque by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recent recording of the Requiem by Hector Berlioz. The recording was made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Leopold Simoneau and the New England Conservatory Chorus, and was released by RCA Victor.

This award for the Berlioz Requiem is the eighth time Doctor Munch has been honored by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording activity.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

IN BRIEF

SCHUMANN: Sonata No. 1 in F sharp minor; Emil Gilels, pianist; CHOPIN: Ballade No. 2; Two Etudes; Vladimir Ashkenazy, pianist; KABALEVSKY: Sonata No. 3; Yakov Zak, pianist (Monitor). Three leading Soviet pianists are heard on this disk. Gilels plays the Schumann work in a manly, uneccentric manner. Ashkenazy is fluent, colorful and, in the Etude in Thirds, brilliant. Zak, the least-known of this trio, impresses as a big pianist with a liquid tone and musical elegance. Good recorded sound.

STRAVINSKY: Petruchka; Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Pierre Monteux (Victor). This is a new and exciting version of the complete ballet. A fairly recent version with the Paris Conservatory Orchestra is still in the catalogues. Mr. Monteux knows how to get flexibility and color without letting clarity and fidelity go by the board, and the excellent stereo sound adds more than a little to the pleasure.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
DEC 11 1960

GRAND PRIX FOR MUNCH

Charles Munch has been awarded the Grand Prix National du Disque by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recent recording of the Requiem by Hector Berlioz. The recording was made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Leopold Simoneau and the New England Conservatory Chorus, and was released by RCA Victor.

This award for the Berlioz Requiem is the eighth time Doctor Munch has been honored by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording activity.

ATLANTIC
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 288,257
JUL 1960

Mahler: Songs on the Death of Children

Maureen Forrester, contralto; Charles Munch conducting Boston Symphony Orchestra; RCA Victor LSC-2371 (stereo) and LM-2371

Maureen Forrester seems to me the long-sought successor to Schumann-Heink, a true and natural dramatic contralto with boundless flexibility and a real thrilling quality in her voice. Mahler is a good composer to bring this out, and he does. The two cycles of longing and grief come beautifully to life, assisted by the gorgeous sonic glint of the Boston Symphony. Munch distinguishes himself too. I won't say he is as good as Bruno Walter at Mahler, because nobody is, but he can make a threnody throb when he has a mind to. This record is mainly an exercise in the beauty of pathos, and as such it is a success.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 216,839
JUL 30 1960

RECORDINGS REPORTS I: ORCHESTRAL LPs

WORK, PERFORMER, DATA	REPORT
Bloch: Concerti Grossi Nos. 1 and 2. Howard Hanson conducting the Eastman-Rochester Symphony Orchestra. Mercury SR 90223. $5.98.	The first impression would be that the coupling of these two works is a singularly good idea, affording the listener ready access to the composer's treatment of a similar plan separated by more than twenty-five years. When the second appeared in 1952, it was welcomed for the values it contained, even though less individual than its predecessor of 1924-25. In these performances, however, both works sound blander, less rewarding than memory suggested. This may mean that time has eroded some of their attacking and commanding power, or that the performances are softer in outline, less incisive than they might be. Till fuller evidence is available, the second suggestion takes precedence. Highly satisfactory recording. (Monaural: MG 50223, $4.98.)
Copland: "Appalachian Spring," Ballet for Chamber Orchestra; "Billy the Kid" Suite. Composer conducting Boston Symphony Orchestra. RCA Victor LM-2401, $5.98.	The Copland "vocabulary" is put to much better use in "A.S." than in the excerpts from the opera, which have a degree of charm but not much compulsion to the listening attention. "Spring," on the other hand, has a well-varied sequence of sections, consisting in mood and tempo also a highly practiced use of some devices which originally served Copland well in "Billy the Kid" and "Rodeo"—offbeat accents, stepwise melodies, modal harmonies, etc. He is highly useful to his own purposes as conductor, and the orchestral sound is faithfully transmitted. (Monaural: LM 2401, $5.98.)

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 150,779
JUL 23 1960

summer.

ARRAU PLAYS BEETHOVEN—Claudio Arrau, appearing as soloist with the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood this weekend, is represented in a summer Angel release by a recording of Beethoven's First Piano Concerto, with the Philharmonia Orchestra under Alceo Galliera (35723 mono, S-35723 stereo). Arrau is at his best in the introspective slow movement, which he plays with quiet solemnity, but he is a little too decorous in the outer movements to suit my taste. The recording, while good, is unexceptional.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
AUG 1960

RAVEL: Daphnis and Chloé (Complete); Boston Symphony Orchestra and New England Conservatory Chorus conducted by Charles Munch. RCA Victor Stereo LSC-1893, $5.98.

⑧IN 1955 this recording, in its original monophonic form, deservedly won a number of awards as the year's outstanding orchestral performance. At last it is available in stereo, and if anything it is more impressive than ever. Though it does not have the range of the best 1960 engineering, it nevertheless has a clarity, even in the loudest passages, and a healthy sound that are more pleasing than the average recordings one has encountered during the past season. Munch's view of this score has always seemed to me to strike an admirable balance between the cool and authoritative detachment of Ansermet and Monteux and the personal volatility of Koussevitzky, of whose magical performance Ravel once commented: "It's beautiful, but it's not my music." The responsiveness of the Boston musicians to his vision is something rare and memorable. Indeed, in many ways, this remains Munch's finest recording effort since he came to the United States something over a decade ago. —C.J.L.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 814,169 S. 1,254,635
AUG 14 1960

IN BRIEF

SCHUMANN: Sonata No. 1 in F sharp minor; Emil Gilels, pianist; CHOPIN: Ballade No. 2; Two Etudes; Vladimir Ashkenazy, pianist; KABALEVSKY: Sonata No. 2; Yakov Zak, pianist (Monitor). Three leading Soviet pianists are heard on this disk. Gilels plays the Schumann work in a manly, uneccentric manner. Ashkenazy is fluent, colorful and, in the Etude in Thirds, brilliant. Zak, the least-known of this trio, impresses as a big pianist with a liquid tone and musical elegance. Good recorded sound.

STRAVINSKY: Petruchka; Boston Symphony Orchestra directed by Pierre Monteux (Victor). This is a new and exciting version of the complete ballet. A fairly recent version with the Paris Conservatory Orchestra is still in the catalogues. Mr. Monteux knows how to get flexibility and color without letting clarity and fidelity go by the board, and the excellent stereo sound adds more than a little to the pleasure.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 150,779
JUL 30 1960

GUEST REVIEW

EILEEN FARRELL [illegible] by Charles H. Frank of Brooklyn. (Eileen Farrell is one of the finest sopranos on the current operatic scene, proven beyond doubt in her recordings. Brünnhilde's Immolation from "Götterdämmerung" and the "Liebestod" from "Tristan" (Columbia ML-2255, mono, LSC-2255 stereo). The size of her voice and the range and warmth of tone it possesses ultimately necessitates a comparison with Kirsten Flagstad. Farrell's voice is richer and very slightly lighter than Flagstad's, while the latter has the fuller bottom tones. Although I feel Farrell's "Liebestod" falls short of Flagstad's singing of it in the complete "Tristan" conducted by Furtwängler, it is a completely credible job. Her vocal instrument is immense and is shown to good advantage in the "Götterdämmerung" excerpt. The accompaniment by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony is lively but does not have the fire that Furtwängler and Toscanini have given it.

(CUE readers are invited to submit guest reviews, which will be published in this space from time to time. Your opinions may be pro or con, but the recording(s) you elect to comment on must be currently available. Please limit each review to roughly 200 words and address: Disc Data, Cue Magazine, 20 West 43rd Street, New York 36.)

—CHRISTIE BARTER

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
AUG 1960

TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 4 in F minor, Op. 36; Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Pierre Monteux. RCA Victor LM-2369, $4.98, or Stereo LSC-2369, $5.98.

Same; Paris Conservatory Orchestra conducted by Albert Wolff. London Stereo CS-6150, $4.98.

Bernstein, N. Y. Philharmonic. Columbia MS-6035

⑧THESE two very un-Russian and unaffectionate readings are excellent examples, it seems to me, of how not to play this work. For Monteux, the first consideration was obviously speed, while sensitivity to melodic phrasing, transitions, dynamics, and ethnic values appear to have been lost far behind. Wolff at least catches a glimmer of the nobility of the oft-repeated opening statement, but with the introduction over he has trouble deciding whether he wants to take matters slow or fast, with the transitions from one theme and tempo to the other being clumsily executed. From the second movement on, the slows have it, and the interpretation sags tediously. For me, however, these defects are as nothing compared to the maddening tonal production of the woodwinds and brass in this none-too-polished French orchestra. The wheezy, snake charmer-type oboe, very jazz-saxophone sounding French horns, and wide-vibratoed, nasal, and often flat trumpets would probably be real fat cats in somebody's Dixieland combo, but in music of the Russian idiom they are more than this listener can abide. —A.K.

AMERICAN RECORD GUIDE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 21,096
OCT 1960

GERSHWIN: Rhapsody in Blue; An American in Paris; Earl Wild (piano); Boston Pops Orchestra conducted by Arthur Fiedler. Four-Track 7½ ips. Stereo Tape, RCA Victor FTC-2004, $8.95.

TFIEDLER, Wild, & Co. present a pair of boisterous and rather heavy-handed performances. The playing is abundant in energetic good spirits, however, and things move along in a happy-go-lucky fashion that is generally pleasant and probably appropriate. Victor's sound is big, live, and clean, with good stereo. —P.C.P.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
DEC11 1960

Award to Munch

Charles Munch has been awarded the Grand Prix National du Disque by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording of the Requiem by Hector Berlioz. The recording was made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Leopold Simoneau and the New England Conservatory chorus, and was released by RCA Victor.

This award for the Berlioz Requiem is the eighth time Dr. Munch has been honored by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording activity.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
DEC11 1960

GRAND PRIX FOR MUNCH

Charles Munch has been awarded the Grand Prix National du Disque by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recent recording of the Requiem by Hector Berlioz. The recording was made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Leopold Simoneau and the New England Conservatory Chorus, and was released by RCA Victor.

This award for the Berlioz Requiem is the eighth time Doctor Munch has been honored by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording activity.

GRAND PRIX FOR MUNCH

Charles Munch has been awarded the Grand Prix National du Disque by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recent recording of the Requiem by Hector Berlioz. The recording was made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Leopold Simoneau and the New England Conservatory Chorus, and was released by RCA Victor.

This award for the Berlioz Requiem is the eighth time Doctor Munch has been honored by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording activity.

165 Church Street
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,085 S. 505,121
AUG 7 1960

Pierre Monteux as seen by a caricaturist.

Records: Monteux Still Goes Strong

By JOHN D. MOLLESON

Pierre Monteux's eighty-fifth anniversary has been observed modestly enough, which is probably the way the conductor wanted it done. He may be more inclined to accept tributes and fanfare—from the podium, of course—on his ninetieth. In the meantime, he has been making records, and they are presumably his birthday greeting to us.

They consist in part of the music of his contemporaries. Stravinsky for one; also Tchaikovsky and Brahms, for both these composers were alive when he was born in Paris on April 4, 1875. So too were Verdi, Wagner, Gounod, Liszt and Cesar Franck. Ravel was three weeks old and Debussy was a lad of thirteen, a student at the Conservatoire where Monteux was to study at the age of nine.

Gentleness is an attribute of Monteux. His lack of showmanship and histrionics may have cost him some listeners. But he is a true Olympian whose tidy and infinitely precise gestures, some of them almost invisible to the audience, can command miracles of performance from his men.

Two by Haydn

Disks cannot capture the chief sight of a Monteux concert: the magisterial, steady and rotund presence of the maestro. Yet they can convey the balance, nuance, life and apparently effortless accomplishment of his conducting. A good starting point for anniversary-year listening a Victor disk (LSC-2394) of two Haydn symphonies, No. 94 "Surprise" and No. 101 "Clock," performed with the Vienna Philharmonic.

There is a popular image of "Papa" Haydn, a be-wigged and quaint charmer, and another of "Papa" Monteux, the lovable old gentleman who is distinguished by the fact of his survival in a dangerous world. Both misconceptions are swept away in these performances. The symphonies spring forth anew, cleanly and powerfully, beautifully planned and phrased, with none of their intricacies of thought and texture exaggerated or disregarded.

One of Monteux's gifts enables him to control things completely, without appearing to impose himself on the music or the musicians. In an appreciation of Monteux by Joseph Wechsberg (the commissioning of the pamphlet seems to have been Victor's chief concession to the anniversary) Stranvinsky is quoted:

"Monteux knew his job thoroughly. He knew how to get on with the musicians. . . . Thus he was able to achieve a very clean and finished execution of my score (The Rite of Spring). I ask no more of a conductor, for any other attitude on his part turns into interpretation, a thing I have a horror of." Monteux believes that a conductor's role is "to communicate with the orchestra and to bring out the conception of the composer."

Genius of Monteux

This is a splendid aim, if the genius to divine the composer's intention, and sufficient experience and knowledge to make the musicians rise to his command. Stravinsky seems to have sensed the heart of the matter. Monteux knows what the composer intended, and is able to make the musicians willingly obey. He does this with a minimum of argument and sawing the air, but with an abundance of experience. Monteux has been conducting for more than seventy years.

There is, of course, plenty of "interpretation" in Monteux's performances, including his Stravinsky, but it is the kind that even a composer can admire. Listen to Monteux's ringing new "Petrouchka," with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor LSC-2376), or "The Rite of Spring," with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra (Victor LSC-2085) and you will find in them always a memory of their origin in the dance. This gives them a lightness, naturalness, and ease of expression which they tend to lack when taken on by conductors who have neither Monteux's experience as a ballet conductor, nor his great familiarity with the scores. Monteux conducted both premiere performances.

It is possible, too, that Monteux does not always produce exactly what the composer intended. Times change, so does taste, and the alert conductor keeps up with the world. Monteux's Tchaikovsky (Symphony No. 4, with the Boston Symphony, Victor LSC-2369) is a good deal more refined and clean than the Tchaikovsky of Eugene Ormandy (Symphony No. 5, Columbia MS-6109, with the Philadelphia Orchestra). Monteux has a more contemporary approach to the music, with less gushing and swooning, though Ormandy's sentimentality and majesty is quite in character with the music.

Brahms' Concerto

This listener was grateful for the modernity, grace and precision of Monteux in such a large-scale work as Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor, performed with Julius Katchen and the London Symphony Orchestra (London, CS-6151). Though the piece has been condemned as cold and over-analytical, it emerges in this recording as warm, lively, spacious and thoroughly likable. Katchen lends all his talent and growing power as a pianist to the service of the maestro and the composer, in a splendidly engineered disk.

A comparison of Monteux and Antal Dorati in the early Stravinsky ballet music does not lessen respect for either conductor. Dorati seems at his best in the complete "Firebird," recorded with the London Symphony Orchestra (Mercury, SR-90226). He is next best in a complete "Petrouchka" (Mercury, (SR-90218) and seems least successful in "The Rite of Spring" (Mercury SR-90253).

Dash of Paprika

Dorati's "Rite" has more than a dash of paprika, rubbed into the already spicy broth. The music erupts with splendid savagery and brutality, and the engineers help this along with close-up sound which can set the chandeliers swinging. Monteux's version, and one by Igor Markevitch and the Philharmonia Orchestra (Angel, S-35549) are considerably more lithe, danceable, and amorous. After all, an orgy is depicted, not war. Perhaps these conductors are too old-fashioned, but we have Stravinsky's word that he admired the Monteux performance. In the living room, at least, it seems more comfortable, and certainly it is more musical.

NATION
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 23,148
AUG 20 1960

257

MUSIC

Lester Trimble

RCA VICTOR has issued two exceedingly fine recordings: the complete version of Stravinsky's Petrouchka, conducted by Monteux; and the new Poulenc opera, La Voix Humaine.

La Voix Humaine is a lyric tragedy in one act, a forty-minute solo tour de force set to the text of a Jean Cocteau play. The play itself was an avant-garde production in the prewar repertory of the Comédie Française. It also served as a vehicle for Anna Magnani in the Rossellini film, La Voce Umana. Undoubtedly, however, Poulenc has given the text its most durable form, for his setting of it is so substantial and dramatically perfect that the opera should find a lasting place in the repertory of every alert, modern opera house. The music, like most of Poulenc's output, is suave and harmonically opulent—very much in the French manner. There are one or two passages which might have been lifted whole from Debussy or Ravel, but they are counterbalanced by a main body of sound that is Poulenc's own. The total effect is fresh and exceedingly attractive.

If Poulenc were a less adroit and sincere composer, he could not have succeeded so well. For La Voix Humaine is the kind of conceit which can be creation, and I suspect that even those people who are not ordinarily fans of his music—as I am not—will find much in it to admire.

The executants on this record, who gave the opera its first performance in Paris, in February of 1959, are the soprano Denise Duval and the orchestra of the Théâtre National de l'Opéra-Comique, under George Pretre. They are superb, and so were the recording engineers. Poulenc is quoted in the jacket notes as saying: "The performance on this record is a veritable model. I doubt that it could be equalled. To surpass it is impossible. . . ." I entirely agree. (Soria Series—LS/LSS 2385).

THE SAME can be said for Pierre Monteux's reading of the complete Stravinsky ballet score, Petrouchka, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. (LM-2376; LSC-2376). How Monteux manages so unfailingly to get to the heart of a Stravinsky work, to illumine every facet of its structure and detail, is a mystery. It is a fact of life, however, and this recording illustrates it. Petrouchka is revealed as a piece of music that is developmental in attitude, standing firmly between The Firebird and The Rite of Spring, and conceived in a frame of mind radically different from either of them. It is really a symphony, though this fact has never, to my knowledge, been pointed out. I have never understood why Stravinsky was willing to dismantle its intricate, evolving structure and form a suite from the remnants. The long breath of the work is an integral part of its meaning.

Another excellent RCA recording is that of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherazade, made by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra (LM-2446). I must admit that I put this war horse on my machine expecting only boredom, but Reiner brought such immediacy to the work, such elegant suppleness, that all its old life returned. The piece was as fresh as the day I first heard it, and far more ravishing in color than I remembered. Reiner is unpredictable. He can play crudely on occasion and yet, when he really wants to, he makes the skies light up. This recording of Scheherazade should supplant all others.

SIR THOMAS BEECHAM'S readings of the Schubert Symphonies Nos. 3 and 5 with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra are not as virtuoso as the foregoing, but are delightfully clean and lyrical, and the playing of the Symphony No. 5, which struck me on first hearing as a bit dull, is entirely convincing the second or third time around. The Fifth Symphony is a more interesting work, and Beecham takes full advantage of its flowing lines and innate gracefulness. He is a good Schubert interpreter, and this is a good example of his work (Capitol G-7212).

Erich Leinsdorf's playing of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 6, 7, 8, and 9 on Volume II of Westminster's complete Mozart Symphonies is as sweet and ingratiating as can be. With the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of London he achieves the most affectionate kind of readings. All the little inner voices sing up delicately; the strong lines are slender but firm; tempi are ideal. (Westminster XWN-18862).

The young American pianist, Ann Schein, has made a recording of the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 3 with the Vienna State Opera Orchestra under Goossens which should put her into the front rank of this work's interpreters (Kapp Long Playing 6000). Her performance stands up very well against the now famous Cliburn recording (RCA Victor LM-2355); in fact, it has an alertness and edge that some listeners will prefer.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 15,412
OCT 1 1960

rina's "Oracion del Torero," and a fine, evocative performance it is, too. The others are Rachmaninoff's "Vocalise," Bach's "Air on the G String," and similar quiet confections. For the library which expects to provide this kind of listening fare to its patrons, worth considering.

SAINT-SAENS: Symphony no. 3, C minor, op. 78. Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond.; Berj Zamkochian, organ. LSC 2341
The big question nowadays is, what does stereo do for the "Organ Symphony." Those who have heard only the previously issued excellent monaural performances by Ormandy, Cluytens, Paray, and Toscanini had better hear this quick, for more lovely orchestral sounds seldom reach records; this is certain to rank high on any all-time hi-fi hit parade. The performance? It is just about the best available and one of Munch's unalloyed triumphs.

TCHAIKOWSKY: Symphony no. 4, F minor, op. 36. Boston Sym. Orch.; Pierre Monteux, cond. LSC 2369
The BSO has rarely seemed as animated as it does in this enormously rousing performance led by a young elderly gentleman with seeming energy to burn. Fiery it is. But at the other extreme, no other version matches the tranquil loveliness of the oboe solo in the second movement. Except for some trouble in the polyrhythms of the opening movement, this is patently one of Monteux's finest statements. [illegible] and artistic; sound is lifelike.

Stereo — With Reservations

TCHAIKOWSKY: Symphony no. 5, E minor, op. 64. Philadelphia Orch.; Eugene Ormandy, cond. MS 6109
This will find great favor with many listeners for it is quite easily the "prettiest" New World on records. Its lushness is its main trouble; it fits too neatly the Tchaikowsky stereotype in all the popular biographical sketches of the "pathetic" man. The ancient Mravinsky on monaural DL 9884 represents him better.

Monophonic — Recommended

BEETHOVEN: Symphony no. 3, E-flat, op. 55. NBC Sym. Orch.; Arturo Toscanini, cond. LM 2387
This was Toscanini's final performance of the "Eroica," and it sums up a lifetime of his thinking about one of his favorite works. The NBC broadcast of Dec. 6, 1953, from which this record was made, was not only one of the maestro's last conducting appearances but one of his greatest and one which caught the orchestra, perhaps because of the circumstances, unusually inspired. The recorded sound is sub-standard but what matter. Recommended for all libraries.

SIBELIUS: Symphony no. 2, major, op. 43. Detroit Sym. Orch.; Paul Paray, cond. MG 50204
Perhaps this should be billed as a "rehearsal record," not because it stops and starts, but because Paray hums, grunts, and growls exhortingly — and audibly — throughout. For steady

(Continued on p. 3585)

INFORMATION OBSCURED

165 Church Street
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,085 S. 505,121
AUG 7 1960

Pierre Monteux as seen by a caricaturist.

Records: Monteux Still Goes Strong

By JOHN D. MOLLESON

Pierre Monteux's eighty-fifth anniversary has been observed modestly enough, which is probably the way the conductor wanted it done. He may be more inclined to accept tributes and fanfare—from the podium, of course—on his ninetieth. In the meantime, he has been making records, and they are presumably his birthday greeting to us.

They consist in part of the music of his contemporaries. Stravinsky for one; also Tchaikovsky and Brahms, for both these composers were alive when he was born in Paris on April 4, 1875. So too were Verdi, Wagner, Gounod, Liszt and Cesar Franck. Ravel was three weeks old and Debussy was a lad of thirteen, a student at the Conservatoire where Monteux was to study at the age of nine.

Gentleness is an attribute of Monteux. His lack of showmanship and histrionics may have cost him some listeners. But he is a true Olympian whose tidy and infinitely precise gestures, some of them almost invisible to the audience, can command miracles of performance from his men.

Two by Haydn

Disks cannot capture the chief sight of a Monteux concert: the magisterial, steady and rotund presence of the maestro. Yet they can convey the balance, nuance, life and apparently effortless accomplishment of his conducting. A good starting point for anniversary-year listening a Victor disk (LSC-2394) of two Haydn symphonies, No. 94 "Surprise" and No. 101 "Clock," performed with the Vienna Philharmonic.

There is a popular image of "Papa" Haydn, a be-wigged and quaint charmer, and another of "Papa" Monteux, the lovable old gentleman who is distinguished by the fact of his survival in a dangerous world. Both misconceptions are swept away in these performances. The symphonies spring forth anew, cleanly and powerfully, beautifully planned and phrased, with none of their intricacies of thought and texture exaggerated or disregarded.

One of Monteux's gifts enables him to control things completely, without appearing to impose himself on the music or the musicians. In an appreciation of Monteux by Joseph Wechsberg (the commissioning of the pamphlet seems to have been Victor's chief concession to the anniversary) Stravinsky is quoted:

"Monteux knew his job thoroughly. He knew how to get on with the musicians. . . . Thus he was able to achieve a very clean and finished execution of my score (The Rite of Spring). I ask no more of a conductor, for any other attitude on his part turns into interpretation, a thing I have a horror of." Monteux believes that a conductor's role is "to communicate with the orchestra and to bring out the conception of the composer."

Genius of Monteux

This is a splendid aim, if the genius to divine the composer's intention, and sufficient experience and knowledge to make the musicians rise to his command. Stravinsky seems to have sensed the heart of the matter. Monteux knows what the composer intended, and is able to make the musicians willingly obey. He does this with a minimum of argument and sawing the air, but with an abundance of experience. Monteux has been conducting for more than seventy years.

There is, of course, plenty of "interpretation" in Monteux's performances, including his Stravinsky, but it is the kind that even a composer can admire. Listen to Monteux's ringing new "Petrouchka," with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor LSC-2376), or "The Rite of Spring," with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra (Victor LSC-2085) and you will find in them always a memory of their origin in the dance. This gives them a lightness, naturalness, and ease of expression which they tend to lack when taken on by conductors who have neither Monteux's experience as a ballet conductor, nor his great familiarity with the scores. Monteux conducted both premiere performances.

It is possible, too, that Monteux does not always produce exactly what the composer intended. Times change, so does taste, and the alert conductor keeps up with the world. Monteux's Tchaikovsky (Symphony No. 4, with the Boston Symphony, Victor LSC-2369) is a good deal more refined and clean than the Tchaikovsky of Eugene Ormandy (Symphony No. 5, Columbia MS-6109, with the Philadelphia Orchestra). Monteux has a more contemporary approach to the music, with less gushing and swooning, though Ormandy's sentimentality and majesty is quite in character with the music.

Brahms' Concerto

This listener was grateful for the modernity, grace and precision of Monteux in such a large-scale work as Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor, performed with Julius Katchen and the London Symphony Orchestra (London, CS-6151). Though the piece has been condemned as cold and over-analytical, it emerges in this recording as warm, lively, spacious and thoroughly likable. Katchen lends all his talent and growing power as a pianist to the service of the maestro and the composer, in a splendidly engineered disk.

A comparison of Monteux and Antal Dorati in the early Stravinsky ballet music does not lessen respect for either conductor. Dorati seems at his best in the complete "Firebird," recorded with the London Symphony Orchestra (Mercury, SR-90226). He is next best in a complete "Petrouchka" (Mercury, (SR-90219) and seems least successful in "The Rite of Spring" (Mercury SR-90253).

Dash of Paprika

Dorati's "Rite" has more than a dash of paprika, rubbed into the already spicy broth. The music erupts with splendid savagery and brutality, and the engineers help this along with close-up sound which can set the chandeliers swinging. Monteux's version, and one by Igor Markevitch and the Philharmonia Orchestra (Angel, S-35549) are considerably more lithe, danceable, and amorous. After all, an orgy is depicted, not war. Perhaps these conductors are too old-fashioned, but we have Stravinsky's word that he admired the Monteux performance. In the living room, at least, it seems more comfortable, and certainly it is more musical.

Complete Personality Analysis from Your Handwriting
$5.00
ALBERTA KANTER
Box 1, Station O, New York 14, N.Y.
Graphology for scientific evaluation, counseling, business, college.

HANDWRITING ANALYSIS

RECORDING
COLLECTOR'S ITEM: Limited, L.P. Record. Adlai Stevenson's Speech on Jesse Pell-Lincoln at Madison Civil War Round Table. $3.95 prepaid. Stevenson Record, 111 W. Main St., Madison 3, Wisc.

ATTENTION ALL WRITERS: Articles, books, plays, will receive our prompt sales handling! Write immediately for free literature! Literary Agent Mead, 915 Broadway N.Y.C. 10 ly between The Firebird and The Rite of Spring, and conceived in a frame of mind radically different from either of them. It is really a symphony, though this fact has never, to my knowledge, been pointed out. I have never understood why Stravinsky was willing to dismantle its intricate, evolving structure and form a suite from the remnants. The long breath of the work is an integral part of its meaning.

Another excellent RCA recording is that of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherazade, made by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra (LM-2446). I must admit that I put this war horse on my machine expecting only boredom, but Reiner brought such immediacy to the work, such elegant suppleness, that all its old life returned. The piece was as fresh as the day I first heard it, and far more ravishing in color than I remembered. Reiner is unpredictable. He can play crudely on occasion and yet, when he really wants to, he makes the skies light up. This recording of Scheherazade should supplant all others.

SIR THOMAS BEECHAM'S readings of the Schubert Symphonies Nos. 3 and 5 with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra are not as virtuoso as the foregoing, but are delightfully clean and lyrical, and the playing of the Symphony No. 5, which struck me on first hearing as a bit dull, is entirely convincing the second or third time around. The Fifth Symphony is a more interesting work, and Beecham takes full advantage of its flowing lines and innate gracefulness. He is a good Schubert interpreter, and this is a good example of his work (Capitol G-7212).

Erich Leinsdorf's playing of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 6, 7, 8, and 9 on Volume II of Westminster's complete Mozart Symphonies is as sweet and ingratiating as can be. With the Philharmonic Symphony Orchestra of London he achieves the most affectionate kind of readings. All the little inner voices sing up delicately; the strong lines are slender but firm; tempi are ideal. (Westminster XWN-18862).

The young American pianist, Ann Schein, has made a recording of the Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 3 with the Vienna State Opera Orchestra under Goossens which should put her into the front rank of this work's interpreters (Kapp Long Playing 6000). Her performance stands up very well against the now famous Cliburn recording (RCA Victor LM-2335); in fact, it has an alertness and edge that some listeners will prefer.

I would have thought Menotti had exhausted this idea in his comedy, The Telephone. Certainly, I would not have expected so frail, artificial and limiting a premise to support a convincing tragedy. But in Poulenc's hands, the device not only proved effective, but precisely its gimmicky flavor heightened the cynicism and hyper-urbanity that are central to the plot.

The heroine of La Voix Humaine is an abandoned mistress, a young and elegant woman, holding her last telephone conversation with a lover who is going to marry someone else. She had attempted suicide a day or two earlier and is now trying to control her grief and to hide it behind a façade of civilized acquiescence. Occasional interruptions on the party line and broken connections provide dramatic relief and irritant force. At the finish, after telling her lover to hang up quickly, that they must make an end, she lets the telephone fall to the floor as she cries, Je t'aime, je t'aime, je t'aime. The derivation from the scene of Mimi's death in La Boheme, complete with falling muff, is obvious. The scene is corny, but, as I remember, the only corny spot in the opera. Since the opera is immediately over, the one instant of melodrama can hardly spoil a firmly established impression of quality. Poulenc did a splendid, feeling job of creation, and I suspect that even those people who are not ordinarily fans of his music—as I am not—will find much in it to admire.

The executants on this record, who gave the opera its first performance in Paris, in February of 1959, are the soprano Denise Duval and the orchestra of the Théâtre National de l'Opéra-Comique, under George Pretre. They are superb, and so were the recording engineers. Poulenc is quoted in the jacket notes as saying: "The performance on this record is a veritable model. I doubt that it could be equalled. To surpass it is impossible. . . ." I entirely agree. (Soria Series—LS/LSS 2385).

THE SAME can be said for Pierre Monteux's reading of the complete Stravinsky ballet score, Petrouchka, with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. (LM-2376; LSC-2376). How Monteux manages so unfailingly to get to the heart of a Stravinsky work, to illumine every facet of its structure and detail, is a mystery. It is a fact of life, however, and this recording illustrates it. Petrouchka is revealed as a piece of music that is developmental in attitude, standing firm- and artistic, sound is lifelike.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 15,412
OCT 1 1960

rina's "Oracion del Torero," and a fine, evocative performance it is, too. The others are Rachmaninoff's "Vocalise," Bach's "Air on the G String," and similar quiet confections. For the library which expects to provide this kind of listening fare to its patrons, worth considering.

SAINT-SAENS: Symphony no. 3, C minor, op. 78. Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond.; Berj Zamkochian, organ. LSC 2341
The big question nowadays is, what does stereo do for the "Organ Symphony." Those who have heard only the previously issued excellent monaural performances by Ormandy, Cluytens, Paray, and Toscanini had better hear this quick, for more lovely orchestral sounds seldom reach records; this is certain to rank high on any all-time hi-fi hit parade. The performance? It is just about the best available and one of Munch's unalloyed triumphs.

TCHAIKOWSKY: Symphony no. 4, F minor, op. 36. Boston Sym. Orch.; Pierre Monteux, cond. LSC 2369
The BSO has rarely seemed as animated as it does in this enormously rousing performance led by a young elderly gentleman with seeming energy to burn. Fiery it is. But at the other extreme, no other version matches the tranquil loveliness of the oboe solo in the second movement. Except for some trouble in the polyrhythms of the opening movement, this is patently one of Monteux's finest statements.

Stereo — With Reservations

TCHAIKOWSKY: Symphony no. 5, E minor, op. 64. Philadelphia Orch.; Eugene Ormandy, cond. MS 6109
This will find great favor with many listeners for it is quite easily the "prettiest" New World on records. Its lushness is its main trouble; it fits too neatly the Tchaikowsky stereotype in all the popular biographical sketches of the "pathetic" man. The ancient Mravinsky on monaural DL 9884 represents him better.

Monophonic — Recommended

BEETHOVEN: Symphony no. 3, E-flat, op. 55. NBC Sym. Orch.; Arturo Toscanini, cond. LM 2387
This was Toscanini's final performance of the "Eroica," and it sums up a lifetime of his thinking about one of his favorite works. The NBC broadcast of Dec. 6, 1953, from which this record was made, was not only one of the maestro's last conducting appearances but one of his greatest and one which caught the orchestra, perhaps because of the circumstances, unusually inspired. The recorded sound is sub-standard but what matter. Recommended for all libraries.

SIBELIUS: Symphony no. 2, major, op. 43. Detroit Sym. Orch.; Paul Paray, cond. MG 50204
Perhaps this should be billed as a "rehearsal record," not because it stops and starts, but because Paray hums, grunts, and growls exhortingly — and audibly — throughout. For steady

(Continued on p. 3585)

INFORMATION OBSCURED

165 CHURCH STREET
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,085 S. 505,121
AUG 7 1960

Pierre Monteux as seen by a caricaturist.

Records: Monteux Still Goes Strong

By JOHN D. MOLLESON

Pierre Monteux's eighty-fifth anniversary has been observed modestly enough, which is probably the way the conductor wanted it done. He may be more inclined to accept tributes and fanfare—from the podium, of course—on his ninetieth. In the meantime, he has been making records, and they are presumably his birthday greeting to us.

They consist in part of the music of his contemporaries. Stravinsky for one; also Tchaikovsky and Brahms, for both these composers were alive when he was born in Paris on April 4, 1875. So too were Verdi, Wagner, Gounod, Liszt and Cesar Franck. Ravel was three weeks old and Debussy was a lad of thirteen, a student at the Conservatoire where Monteux was to study at the age of nine.

Gentleness is an attribute of Monteux. His lack of showmanship and histrionics may have cost him some listeners. But he is a true Olympian whose tidy and infinitely precise gestures, some of them almost invisible to the audience, can command miracles of performance from his men.

Two by Haydn

Disks cannot capture the chief sight of a Monteux concert: the magisterial, steady and rotund presence of the maestro. Yet they can convey the balance, nuance, life and apparently effortless accomplishment of his conducting. A good starting point for anniversary-year listening is Victor disk (LSC-2394) of two Haydn symphonies, No. 94 "Surprise" and No. 101 "Clock," performed with the Vienna Philharmonic.

There is a popular image of "Papa" Haydn, a be-wigged and quaint charmer, and another of "Papa" Monteux, the lovable old gentleman who is distinguished by the fact of his survival in a dangerous world. Both misconceptions are swept away in these performances. The symphonies spring forth anew, cleanly and powerfully, beautifully planned and phrased, with none of their intricacies of thought and texture exaggerated or disregarded.

One of Monteux's gifts enables him to control things completely, without appearing to impose himself on the music or the musicians. In an appreciation of Monteux by Joseph Wechsberg (the commissioning of the pamphlet seems to have been Victor's chief concession to the anniversary) Stravinsky is quoted:

"Monteux knew his job thoroughly. He knew how to get on with the musicians. . . . Thus he was able to achieve a very clean and finished execution of my score (The Rite of Spring). I ask no more of a conductor, for any other attitude on his part turns into interpretation, a thing I have a horror of." Monteux believes that a conductor's role is "to communicate with the orchestra and to bring out the conception of the composer."

Genius of Monteux

This is a splendid aim, if the genius to divine the composer's intention, and sufficient experience and knowledge to make the musicians rise to his command. Stravinsky seems to have sensed the heart of the matter. Monteux knows what the composer intended, and is able to make the musicians willingly obey. He does this with a minimum of argument and sawing the air, but with an abundance of experience. Monteux has been conducting for more than seventy years.

There is, of course, plenty of "interpretation" in Monteux's performances, including his Stravinsky, but it is the kind that even a composer can admire. Listen to Monteux's ringing new "Petrouchka," with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (Victor LSC-2378), or "The Rite of Spring," with the Paris Conservatoire Orchestra (Victor LSC-2085) and you will find in them always a memory of their origin in the dance. This gives them a lightness, naturalness, and ease of expression which they tend to lack when taken on by conductors who have neither Monteux's experience as a ballet conductor, nor his great familiarity with the scores. Monteux conducted both premiere performances.

It is possible, too, that Monteux does not always produce exactly what the composer intended. Times change, so does taste, and the alert conductor keeps up with the world. Monteux's Tchaikovsky (Symphony No. 4, with the Boston Symphony, Victor LSC-2369) is a good deal more refined and clean than the Tchaikovsky of Eugene Ormandy (Symphony No. 5, Columbia MS-6100, the Philadelphia Orchestra). Monteux has a more contrary approach to the [illegible] with less gushing and [illegible]ing, though Ormandy's [illegible]mentality and majesty is [illegible] in character with the music.

Brahms' Concerto

This listener was grateful for the modernity, grace and precision of Monteux in such a large-scale work as Brahms' Piano Concerto No. 1 in D minor, performed with Julius Katchen and the London Symphony Orchestra (London, CS-6151). Though the piece has been condemned as cold and over-analytical, it emerges in this recording as warm, lively, spacious and thoroughly likable. Katchen lends all his talent and growing power as a pianist to the service of the maestro and the composer in a splendidly engineered disk.

A comparison of Monteux and Antal Dorati in the early Stravinsky ballet music does not lessen respect for either conductor. Dorati seems at his best in the complete "Firebird," recorded with the London Symphony Orchestra (Mercury, SR-90226). He is next best in a complete "Petrouchka" (Mercury, (SR-90216) and seems least successful in "The Rite of Spring" (Mercury SR-90253).

Dash of Paprika

Dorati's "Rite" has more than a dash of paprika, rubbed into the already spicy broth. The music erupts with splendid savagery and brutality, and the engineers help this along with close-up sound which can set the chandeliers swinging. Monteux's version, and one by Igor Markevitch and the Philharmonia Orchestra (Angel, S-35549) are considerably more lithe, danceable, and amorous. After all, an orgy is depicted, not war. Perhaps these conductors are too old-fashioned, but we have Stravinsky's word that he admired the Monteux performance. In the living room, at least, it seems more comfortable, and certainly it is more musical.

PUBLICATIONS

"EXPERTISES," the leading liberal paper in France today. Send 10c for Your sample copy. Howard Publications, 178 Third Ave., New York 3.

Complete Personality Analysis From Your Handwriting Fee $5.00
ALFRED KANFER
60 Lacey Ste., New York 14, N. Y.
Endorsed by scientific authorities. Business, insurance companies, colleges, psych. journals.
Recipients of research Grants

HANDWRITING ANALYSIS

COLLECTOR'S ITEM: Limited, L.P. Record. Adlai Stevenson's speech on Jesse Fell-Lincoln at Madison Civil War Round Table. $3.95 prepaid. Stevenson Record, 111 W. Main St., Madison 3, Wisc.

RECORDING

Telephone. Certainly, [illegible] expected so frail, artificial and limiting a premise to support a convincing tragedy. But in Poulenc's hands, the device not only proved effective, but precisely its gimmicky flavor heightened the cynicism and hyper-urbanity that are central to the plot.

The heroine of La Voix Humaine is an abandoned mistress, a young and elegant woman, holding her last telephone conversation with a lover who is going to marry someone else. She had attempted suicide a day or two earlier and is now trying to control her grief and to hide it behind a façade of civilized acquiescence. Occasional interruptions on the party line and broken connections provide dramatic relief and irritant force. At the finish, after telling her lover to hang up quickly, that they must make an end, she lets the telephone fall to the floor as she cries, Je t'aime, je t'aime, je t'aime. The derivation from the scene of Mimi's death in La Boheme, complete with falling muff, is obvious. The scene is corny, but, as I remember, the only corny spot in the opera. Since the opera is immediately over, the one instant of melodrama can hardly spoil a firmly established impression of quality. Poulenc did a splendid, feeling job of creation, and I suspect that even those people who are not ordinarily fans of his music—as I am not—will find much in it to admire.

The executants on this record, who gave the opera its first performance in Paris, in February of 1959, are the soprano Denise Duval and the orchestra of the Théâtre National de l'Opéra-Comique, under George Prêtre. They are superb, and so were the recording engineers. Poulenc is quoted in the notes as saying: "Th[illegible] this record is a very [illegible] that it co[illegible] is [illegible]etween The Firebird and The Rite of Spring, and conceived in a [illegible] of [illegible]d radically different fro[illegible] [illegible]m. It is really a symphony, though [illegible] fact has never, to my knowledge, been pointed out. I have never understood why Stravi[illegible] willing to dismantle its intricate, evolving structure and form a suite from the remnants. The long breath of the work is an integral part of its meaning.

Another excellent RCA recording is that of Rimsky-Korsakoff's Scheherazade, made by Fritz Reiner and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra (LM-2446). I must admit that I put this war horse on my machine expecting only boredom, but Reiner brought such immediacy to the work, such elegant suppleness, that all its old life returned. The piece was as fresh as the day I first heard it, and far more ravishing in color than I remembered. Reiner is unpredictable. He can play crudely on occasion and yet, when he really wants to, he makes the skies light up. This recording of Scheherazade should supplant all others.

SIR THOMAS BEECHAM'S readings of the Schubert Sy[illegible]ies Nos. 3 and 5 with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra are not as virtuoso as the foregoing, but are delightfully clean and lyrical, and the playing of the Symphony No. 3, which struck me on first hearing as a bit dull, is entirely convincing the second or third time around. The Fifth Symphony is a more interesting work, and Beecham takes full advantage of its flowing lines and innate gracefulness. He is a good Schubert interpreter, and this is a good example [illegible] work (Capitol G-7212).

Eri[illegible] [illegible]ng of the Mo- [illegible]7, 8, and 9 [illegible]r's complete [illegible]eet and in- [illegible]e Philhar- [illegible] London [illegible]te kind- [illegible] voices [illegible]es are [illegible] Vast-

Write for Catalog of LP listings
Over 400 Different Labels
Over 36 Different Languages
OVER 1,750,000 LONG PLAYING RECORDS OF EVERY TYPE
Over 36,000 Different Titles
Always in Stock:
We Pay All Shipping Costs
30% off list price on all long play records
The World's Largest Record Dealer at Sam Goody
Schools • Public Libraries • Universities
Open Accounts for All

(from p. 3429)

[illegible] but it also interestingly [illegible] Faray finds important in the score [illegible] where his attention is focussed from minute to minute. Since Barbirolli's now-departed Bluebird recording, it is the most powerful and expansive reading to come along. Mercury sound, as always, is first-rate.

STRAVINSKY: Firebird (complete). London Sym. Orch.; Antal Dorati, cond. MG 50226
Even monaurally this is a thrilling experience. The clarity of the recording (to ignore, for a moment, the superb performance of the orchestra) brings out tone colors and inner parts too-long buried in the murk of some of the more sensuous interpretations available. Dorati tilts this towards more stark subsequent Stravinsky compositions rather than pointing up the work's obligation to Debussy. Even blasé ears will harken to an uncommon fury in "Kastchei's Infernal Dance," and to the most walloping and effective closing "Wedding Cortège" ever recorded. Liner notes are uncommonly literate.

WARREN BENSON PRESENTS PERCUSSION. Ithaca Percussion Ensemble; Warren Benson, cond. CR 4016
For all the composers' earnest intentions, the ensemble's great efforts and superb drumming, this is not going to convince many that music for percussion instruments alone can be more than momentarily interesting or exciting, except perhaps to orchestration students and drummers. They will find this disc useful since the score for each work can be purchased separately. The playing is skilled and artistic; sound is tremen-

258

JAMESTOWN, N.Y.
SUN
D. 11,107
OCT 13 1960

Concert Recordings:

Monteux, Boston Symphony Give Of Best in 'Daphnis' Recording

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Boston Symphony loves Pierre Monteux, and Pierre Monteux loves the Boston Symphony. But that doesn't prevent them from competing with Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet score.

Monteux recorded it with the London Symphony and the Royal Opera House Chorus (London-CS6147). The Boston Symphony recorded it with the New England Conservatory Chorus, Charles Munch conducting (RCA Victor-LSC1893). If you want Daphnis plus Chloe, either will do.

Presumably Monteux recorded Ravel with his left hand, while with his right he was recording Stravinsky's ballet score, "Petrouchka," and Tchaikowsky's 4th symphony, and with what orchestra do you suppose? The Boston Symphone! (RCA Victor - LSC2376 and LSC2369.)

Though the old rigidity of exclusive artis affiliaion wih one label is much less rigid now, Monteux is old enough to put little store in exclusivity. Yet he is not so old that he can't enliven Ravel's delicate ironies with real sensuousness. But he is not so youthful as to be cloyingly sentimental with Tchaikowskky. He plays T very straight.

Exceptional merit is claimed for a recording of Rachmaninoff's 2nd symphony by Alfred Wallenstein conducting the Los Angeles Philharmonic, because Wallenstein was a personal as well as a musical intimate of the composer over many years. After listening to the recording, this reviewer must agree.

To his ears, Rachmaninoff's 2nd (and a great deal more Rachmaninoff) had come to seem somewhat obvious in its devices, uninteresting in its architecture, and certainly much too long (with a playing time of about one hour!). Wallenstein gave the reviewer pause in this kind of feeling. He does have unique Rachmaninoff insights, indeed.

One of Prokofiev's neglected early symphonies, the 4th, has been given a sumptuous recording by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. The maker is right. It deserves more attention than it gets (Columbia-MS6154). Beethoven's 7th has suffered in the opposite way — too much playing, too many recordings.

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 17 1960

Victor Berlioz LP Wins French Prize

NEW YORK—The RCA Victor Soria Series recording of Berlioz's "Requiem" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch has just been awarded the Grand Prix National Du Disque Francais. The award, Prix du President de le Republique, was accepted by Victor reps in France. In addition to the complete Berlioz score, the album includes a booklet printed by Skira in Switzerland and illustrated with tipped-in color plates.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 218,939
OCT 29 1960

Strauss: Serenade in E flat, Sonatina in F. Eric Simon conducting the Boston Wind Ensemble. Records B 406, $4.98.

As well as providing congenial occupation for such sweet-sounding instruments as flutes, horns, clarinets, basset horn, bass clarinet, and bassoons, these two works put a virtual parenthesis around Strauss's creative career. The Serenade was the cause of Hans von Bülow's highly productive interest in the seventeen-year-old Strauss, and the Sonatina is a backward glance, from the same mind sixty-three years later, over the world of music he dominated so long. The performances by members of the Boston Symphony under Simon's understanding direction are models of execution, ease, and fine sound. Also included is a gavotte from the Opus 4 suité for thirteen winds. The recording conforms to the high standards associated with the Boston label. —I. K.

ATLANTIC
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 288,257
DEC 1960

Record Reviews

Brahms: Concerto No. 1

Gary Graffman, piano; Charles Munch conducting Boston Symphony Orchestra; RCA Victor LSC-2274 (stereo) and LM-2274

This merits mention because Graffman and the Boston instrumentalists

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 15,412
OCT 15 1960

BEETHOVEN: Concerto, op. 61, D. David Oistrakh, vln.; French Nat'l Radio Orch.; Andre Cluytens, cond. S35780

More technique than interpretation sums this one up. Oistrakh does a beautiful job technically but the whole thing needs teeth in it. It is pale, flabby, and washed-out. It is, by the way, his fifth recording of this work currently in the catalog but this is the first stereo recording by him.

BOCCHERINI: Concerto, B-flat; VIVALDI: Concerto, D; VIVALDI-BACH: Concerto, G. Antonio Janigro, cello; Solisti di Zagreb. LSC2365

Janigro is a marvellous cellist but I wish he had employed his talents to better effect. The selections are all arrangements and sometimes arrangements of arrangements which leave a bad aftertaste. The last named is really a piece by Duke Johann Ernst of Saxe-Weimar which was transcribed by Bach for an organ solo. Other than that, very good.

GERSHWIN: Rhapsody in Blue; An American in Paris. Earl Wild, pf.; Boston Pops Orch.; Arthur Fiedler, cond. LSC2367

The record for recorded speed and loudness has been broken by this disc. The sound is clear and alive but too much for even Gershwin's piano part. Wild has played this piece so many times that this performance is even more flip than usual. The "American" is a trifle calmer but could be improved.

MENDELSSOHN: Concerto, op. 64, E minor; LALO: Symphonie Espagnole, op. 21. Mischa Elman, vln.; Vienna State Opera Orch.; Vladimir Golschmann, cond. VSD2047

Evidently this is a companion recording to the earlier mentioned disc since it employs the same forces. These are good performances but nothing spectacular in any aspect as were the Khachaturian and Saint-Saëns. In fact Elman's slow tempos at times make this music sound stilted and mannered which it is not.

Not Recommended

BEETHOVEN: Concerto no. 5, op. 73, E-flat, "Emperor." Robert Riefling, pf.; Oslo Phil. Orch.; Odd Grüner-Hegge, cond. CAS566

Mr. Riefling is a bit out of his element in this work and as a result uses pounding tactics to make up for lack of forceful playing. The piano is certainly not one of the best and when pummeled becomes tinny and distasteful to the ear. There are at least six fine stereo performances to choose from in preference to this even at the price.

BRAHMS: Concerto, op. 77, D. Arthur Grumiaux, vln.; Concertgebouw Orch.; Eduard Van Beinum, cond. BC1017

Grumiaux, although much admired in this quarter, simply does not have the sweep and broadness of this concerto in his mind. His playing is good and tone is sweet but the perfection of his recent Schubert recording is nowhere in evidence. To make matters worse he employs uncalled for ritards and other devices which are not only distracting but downright annoying. Sound is good and orchestral support excellent.

GRIEG: Concerto, op. 16, A minor; LISZT: Concerto no. 2, A. Gyorgy Cziffra, pf.; Philharmonia Orch.; Andre Vandernoot, cond. C35738

Mr. Cziffra tries to gain his effects by means of superficial ritards and through periods of intense "interpretation," as well as adding extra notes to cadenzas and all the other tricks known to musicians. It seems a shame that a person connot play the music as written and make something out of it without distorting it for his own reasons. The Liszt can best be described as plodding and anyone familiar with this work knows that it certainly is not that if played correctly.

MOZART: Concerto no. 17, K.453, G; No. 24, K.491, C minor, Gina Bachauer, pf.; London Orch.; Alex Sherman, cond. SC7194

The recorded sound is clear, perhaps too much so for every action of the hammers can be heard. Miss Bachauer lacks only one thing in these performances and that is depth. Tone, technique, tempos are all fine but these works cry out for variation, color, and sincerity which I find lacking in these performances. Miss Bachauer's husband, the conductor, seems to be well-aware of her interpretation and follows it amiably.

TCHAIKOVSKI: Concerto, op. 35, D. Henryk Szeryng, vln.; Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LSC2363

Mr. Szeryng has technique to burn but does not integrate it with the music. He should listen most attentively to Milstein's disc of this concerto. Endings of phrases are thrown off with a "sigh of relief that that is over" attitude. His tone is often dry and sometimes scratchy. Milstein and Steinberg worked together whereas Munch merely follows Szeryng and as a result the performance does not hang together. Also the famous Boston sound is coarse and hard in tutti sections which is not the usual case with that fine ensemble.

Concertos: Monophonic Recommended

BRAHMS: Concerto, op. 77, D. Joseph Szigeti, vln.; London Sym. Orch.; Herbert Menges, cond. MG50225

This marks Szigeti's third recording of this concerto and it is his best to date. It is a broad and noble performance that results in a musically satisfying recording. There are times when the technical difficulties of the music interfere slightly, and a few unpleasant sounding notes get in the way but these can be overlooked when one considers the interpretation and over-all results of the performance.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 91,227
DEC 1960

STRAVINSKY: Pétrouchka

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, cond.

●● RCA Victor FTC 2007. 35 min. $8.95.

With two great Pétrouchkas already available in the 4-track catalogue, a third would seem superfluous if it were not so distinctively different in approach from either the long-admired one by Ansermet for London or the more recent Goossens-Everest taping, or if the present conductor were not the one most closely associated with the work from the time of its first performance in 1911.

Those who know the work only in concert and non-Monteux recordings may be surprised at first by the leisureliness of this reading, by its lack of flambovance and nervous intensity, and by the delicacy of many details—all of which are characteristic of Monteux's essentially balletic approach to this music. Even more surprising—and appealing—is his warmth and compassion, which transform the puppet's fate from its usual stark or ironic tragedy into an even more heart-wrenching human comedy. Yet even if Monteux's interpretation were not completely hors de concours, this version tops all others for its orchestral playing (and Bernard Zighera's realization of the vital piano role) and is at least the peer of the magnificent stereo recording in the Goossens set.

258

JAMESTOWN, N.Y.
SUN
D. 11,107
OCT 13 1960

Concert Recordings:

Monteux, Boston Sy[illegible]ny Give Of Best in 'Daphnis' [illegible]rding

By DELOS SMITH

NEW YORK (UPI) — The Boston Symphony lover Pierre Monteux, and Pierre [illegible]ux loves the Boston Symphony. But that doesn't prevent them from competing with Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet score.

Monteux recorded it with the London Symphony and the Royal Opera House Chorus (London-CS6147). The Boston Symphony recorded it with the New England Conservatory Chorus, Charles Munch conducting (RCA Victor-LSC1893). If you want Daphnis plus Chloe, either will do.

Presumably Monteux recorded Ravel with his left hand, while with his right he was recording Stravinsky's ballet score, "Petrouchka," and Tchaikowsky's 4th symphony, and with what orchestra do you suppose? The Boston Symphone! (RCA Victor - LSC2376 and LSC2369.)

Though the old rigidity of exclusive artis affiliaion wih one label is much less rigid now, Monteux is old enough to put little store in exclusivity. Yet he is not so old that he can't enliven Ravel's delicate ironies with real sensuousness. But he is not so youthful as to be cloyingly sentimental with Tchaikowskky. He plays T very straight.

Exceptional merit is claimed for a recording of Rachmaninoff's 2nd symphony by Alfred Wallenstein conducting the Los Angeles Philharmonic, because Wallenstein was a personal as well as a musical intimate of the composer over many years. After listening to the recording, this reviewer must agree.

To his ears, Rachmaninoff's [illegible] (and a great deal more Rachmaninoff) had come to seem somewhat obvious in its devices, uninteresting in its architecture, and certainly much too long (with a playing time of about one hour!). Wallenstein gave the reviewer pause in this kind of feeling. He does have unique Rachmaninoff insights, indeed.

One of Prokofiev's neglected early symphonies, the 4th, has been given a sumptuous recording by the Philadelphia Orchestra under Eugene Ormandy. The maker is right. It deserves more attention than it gets (Columbia-MS6154). Beethoven's 7th has suffered in the opposite way — too much playing, too many recordings.

LIBRARY JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SEMI-MONTHLY 15,412
OCT 15 1960

BEETHOVEN: Concerto, op. 61, D. David Oistrakh, vln.; French Nat'l Radio Orch.; Andre Cluytens, cond. S35780
More technique than interpretation sums this one up. Oistrakh does a beautiful job technically but the whole thing needs teeth in it. It is pale, flabby, and washed-out. It is, by the way, his fifth recording of this work currently in the catalog but this is the first stereo recording by him.

BOCCHERINI: Concerto, B-flat; VIVALDI: Concerto, D; VIVALDI-BACH: Concerto, G. Antonio Janigro, cello; Solisti di Zagreb. LSC2365
Janigro is a marvellous cellist but I wish he had employed his talents to better effect. The selections are all arrangements and sometimes arrangements of arrangements which leave a bad aftertaste. The last named is really a piece by Duke Johann Ernst of Saxe-Weimar which was transcribed by Bach for an organ solo. Other than that, very good..

GERSHWIN: Rhapsody in Blue; An American in Paris. Earl Wild, pf.; Boston Pops Orch.; Arthur Fiedler, cond. LSC2367
The record for recorded speed and loudness has been broken by this disc. The sound is clear and alive but too much for even Gershwin's piano part. Wild has played this piece so many times that this performance is even more flip than usual. The "American" is a trifle calmer but could be improved.

MENDELSSOHN: Concerto, op. 64, E minor; LALO: Symphonie Espagnole, op. 21. Mischa Elman, vln.; Vienna State Opera Orch.; Vladimir Golschmann, cond. VSD2047
Evidently this is a companion recording to the earlier mentioned disc since it employs the same forces. These are good performances but nothing spectacular in any aspect as were the Khachaturian and Saint-Saëns. In fact Elman's slow tempos at times make this music sound stilted and mannered which it is not.

Not Recommended

BEETHOVEN: Concerto no. 5, op. 73, E-flat, "Emperor." Robert Riefling, pf.; Oslo Phil. Orch.; Odd Grüner-Hegge, cond. CAS566
Mr. Riefling is a bit out of his element in this work and as a result uses pounding tactics to make up for lack of forceful playing. The piano is certainly not one of the best and when pummeled becomes tinny and distasteful to the ear. There are at least six fine stereo performances to choose from in preference to this even at the price.

BRAHMS: Concerto, op. 77, D. Arthur Grumiaux, vln.; Concertgebouw Orch.; Eduard Van Beinum, cond. BC1017
Grumiaux, although much admired in this quarter, simply does not have the sweep and broadness of this concerto in his mind. His playing is good and tone is sweet but the perfection of his recent Schubert recording is nowhere in evidence. To make matters worse he employs uncalled for ritards and other devices which are not only distracting but downright annoying. Sound is good and orchestral support excellent.

GRIEG: Concerto, op. 16, A minor; LISZT: Concerto no. 2, A. Gyorgy Cziffra, pf.; Philharmonia Orch.; Andre Vandernoot, cond. C35738
Mr. Cziffra tries to gain his effects by means of superficial ritards and through periods of intense "interpretation," as well as adding extra notes to cadenzas and all the other tricks known to musicians. It seems a shame that a person connot play the music as written and make something out of it without distorting it for his own reasons. The Liszt can best be described as plodding and anyone familiar with this work knows that it certainly is not easy if played correctly.

MOZART: Concerto no. 17, K.453, G; No. 24, K.491, C minor. Gina Bachauer, pf.; London Orch.; Alex Sherman, cond. SW7194
The recorded sound is clear, perhaps too much so for every action of the hammers can be heard. Miss Bachauer lacks only one thing in these performances and that is depth. Tone, technique, tempos are all fine but these works cry out for variation, color, and sincerity which I find lacking in these performances. Miss Bachauer's husband, the conductor, seems to be well-aware of her interpretation and follows it amiably.

TCHAIKOVSKI: Concerto, op. 35, D. Henryk Szeryng, vln.; Boston Sym. Orch.; Charles Munch, cond. LSC2363
Mr. Szeryng has technique to burn but does not integrate it with the music. He should listen most attentively to Milstein's disc of this concerto. Endings of phrases are thrown off with a "sigh of relief that that is over" attitude. His tone is often dry and sometimes scratchy. Milstein and Steinberg worked together whereas Munch merely follows Szeryng and as a result the performance does not hang together. Also the famous Boston sound is coarse and hard in tutti sections which is not the usual case with that fine ensemble.

Concertos: Monophonic Recommended

BRAHMS: Concerto, op. 77, D. Joseph Szigeti, vln.; London Sym. Orch.; Herbert Menges, cond. MG50225
This marks Szigeti's third recording of this concerto and it is his best to date. It is a broad and noble performance that results in a musically satisfying recording. There are times when the technical difficulties of the music interfere slightly, and a few unpleasant sounding notes get in the way but these can be overlooked when one considers the interpretation and over-all results of the performance.

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
DEC 17 1960

Victor Berlioz LP Wins French Prize

NEW YORK—The RCA Victor Soria Series recording of Berlioz's "Requiem" by the Boston Symphony Orchestra conducted by Charles Munch has just been awarded the Grand Prix National Du Disque Francais. The award, Prix du President de la Republique, was accepted by Victor reps in France. In addition to the complete Berlioz score, the album includes a booklet printed by Skira of Switzerland and illustrated with tipped-in color plates.

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 91,227
DEC 1960

STRAVINSKY: Pétrouchka

Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, cond.

●● RCA VICTOR FTC 2007. 35 min. $8.95.

With a great Pétrouchka already available in the 4-track catalogue, a third would seem superfluous if it were not so distinctively different in approach from either the long-admired one by Ansermet for London or the [illegible] Goossens taping, or if [illegible] were not the one most closely associated with the work from the time of its first performance in 1911.

Those who know the work only in concert and non-Monteux recordings may be surprised at first by the leisureliness of this reading, by its lack of flamboyance and nervous intensity, and by the delicacy of many details—all of which are characteristic of Monteux's essentially balletic approach to this music. Even more surprising—and appealing—is his warmth and compassion, which transform the puppet's fate from its usual stark or ironic tragedy into an even more heart-wrenching human comedy. Yet even if Monteux's interpretation were not completely hors de concours, this version tops all others for its orchestral playing (and Bernard Zighera's realization of the vital piano role) and is at least the peer of the magnificent stereo recording in the Goossens set.

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
SAT. 218,939
OCT 29 1960

Strauss: Serenade in E-flat; Sinfonia in B-flat. Eric Simon Wind Ensemble. Records B 406, $4.98.

As well as providing congenial occupation for such sweet-sounding instruments as flutes, horns, clarinets, bassoons, and, relatively, oboes, these two works put a virtual parenthesis around Strauss's creative career. The Serenade was the cause of Hans von Bülow's highly productive interest in the seventeen-year-old Strauss, and the Sinfonia is a backward glance from the same man three years later, over the world of music he dominated so long. The performances by members of the Boston Symphony, under Simon's understanding direction, are models of [illegible] fine sound. Also included is a gavotte from the Opus 4 suite for thirteen winds. The recording conforms to the high standards associated with the Boston label.

ATLANTIC
BOSTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 288,257
DEC 1960

Record Reviews

Brahms: Concerto No. 1

Gary Graffman, piano; Charles Munch conducting Boston Symphony Orchestra; RCA Victor LSC-2274 (stereo) and LM-2274

This merits mention because Graffman and the Boston instrumentalists

JAMAICA, N.Y.
LONG ISLAND PRESS
D. 286,371 S. 371,566
NOV 20 1960

Concert Recordings

The Boston Symphony loves Pierre Monteux and Pierre Monteux loves the Boston Symphony. But that doesn't prevent them from competing with Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe" ballet score.

Monteux recorded it with the London Symphony and the Royal Opera House Chorus (London-CS6147). The Boston Symphony recorded it with the New England Conservatory Chorus, Charles Munch conducting (RCA Victor-LSC1893). If you want Daphnis plus Chloe, either will do.

Presumably Monteux recorded this Ravel with his left hand, while with his right he was recording Stravinsky's ballet score, "Petrouchka," and Tchaikowsky's 4th Symphony, and with what orchestra do you suppose? The Boston Symphony! (RCA Victor-LSC2376 and LSC2369).

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
DEC 1960

COPLAND LEADS HIS WORKS

Copland: APPALACHIAN SPRING; THE TENDER LAND. THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA, AARON COPLAND, cond. RCA Victor LSC-2401, stereo.

This RCA release contains the first composer-conducted recording of "Appalachian Spring," and the first recorded performance of "The Tender Land" Suite. Passing over the established qualities of Copland as an interpreter of his own works, it is the "Tender Land" music that commands the most interest on this disc. Couched in the composer's familiar idiom (the first notes "spell" Copland), the score is at its best in the lyrical and introspective periods. From the standpoints of music, performance and recordings, this is a worthwhile addition to one's stereo library. R. I. F.

259

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
DEC 11 1960

Musigrams

Anna Russell, concert comedienne, will take a year's sabbatical from concert appearances to star in a play and perhaps write a book. . . . Lois Marshall, Canadian soprano, will appear in two concerts in next summer's festival at Stratford, Ont. . . . Charles Munch has received the Grand Prix National du Disque from the Academie du Disque Francais for his Boston Symphony recording of Berlioz' Requiem. . . . The American-born Lorin Maazel will be the Boston Symphony's guest conductor this week. He made his New York debut when nine years old at a concert at the 1939 World's Fair.

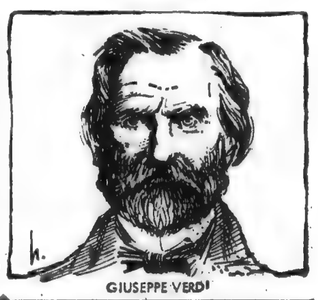
New England Newsclipping Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Post
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 69,258
DEC 4 1960

Death Rites Inspire Great Works

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN

The Requiem Mass, probably because of the haunting appeal of death and judgment as a theme and the masterful poetry of the ages-old liturgy, has always fascinated composers.

From the earliest days of Gregorian chant, the booming solemnity of the "Dies Irae, Dies Illa . . ." (days of wrath and days of mourning), the stately march of the "Kyries" (Lord, have mercy), the moving plaintive plea of "Libera me, Domine, de Morta Aetrna" (Deliver me, Lord, from eternal death) and all the other magificent passages in the Catholic burial rites have evoked some of the world's greatest music from composers of many religious and national backgrounds.



GIUSEPPE VERDI

Writers as miles and styles apart as Berlioz, Bruckner, Brahms, Cherubini, Delius, Dvorak, Faure, Gossec, Mehul, Mozart, Palestrina and Verdi all have been inspired to write Requiems.

TWO OF THE most famous Requiems, Berlioz's and Verdi's, have been the subject of recent recordings by several companies both here and in Europe.

Verdi, who detested writing music for special occasions and seldom was inspired to write anything without first receiving a commission, came to write his Requiem almost by chance. When Rossini died in 1868, Verdi hit upon the idea of having 13 Italian composers collaborate on writing a Requiem in memory of their famous countryman. Verdi himself wrote the "Libera me," the prayer which the priest says when he blesses the body at the end of Mass, but the whole idea fell through when a row developed over which composers should be selected to contribute the other movements.

Verdi, as it happened, was never particularly attached to Rossini but he was tremendously devoted to Alessandro Manzoni, the great Italian novelist and patriot. When Manzoni died in 1873, Verdi was too broken up to attend the funeral of the man whom he constantly referred to as "a saint," but he was moved to complete his Requiem Mass. The work was first performed on the anniversary of Manzoni's death, with Verdi himself conducting. Music critic George Bernard Shaw called it Verdi's greatest work. Other critics regard it as the finest Requiem ever written.

Berlioz started out to write his Requiem in honor of his fellow Frenchmen who had fallen in the Revolution of 1830, but saw his chance to have it played at the funeral of Gen. Damremont, who was killed in the fighting at Constantine in Algeria. During the funeral, Berlioz hid behind the drums because he wanted to keep his eye on conductor Habeneck, a close friend of Cherubini who also had just completed a Requiem. At a crucial moment in a movement that required close coordination between orchestra and chorus, Habeneck suddenly dropped his baton and pecked at his snuffbox. Berlioz, arriving like the cavalry, dashed out from behind the drums and gave the needed downbeat. Experts still argue whether Berlioz's version of the snuffbox episode is a true one, but there is no argument about the magnificence of his Requiem.

AMONG THE recent recordings of these famous words, RCA Victor's "Verdi Requiem" is notable as the last recording made by the late Swedish tenor Jussi Bjoerling and for Fritz Reiners' inspired conducting of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. Capitol's excellent recording of the same work features Tullia Serafin conducting the orchestra and chorus of the Rome Opera House and tenor Eugenio Fernandi.

Westmintser's recording of "Berlioz Requiem" was made in the chapel of Hotel des Invalides, where the work had its premier, and features the Orchestra of the Theater National Opera under Herman Scherchen. RCA Victor's superbly mounted album of the Berlioz work is preferred mainly because it had the advantage of one of the world's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony under the baton of Charles Munch.

(AP Newsfeatures)

NEW REPUBLIC
WASHINGTON, D.C.
W. 27,000
DEC 5 1960

RECORDS

Outstanding Records of 1960

Bach: Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue and other pieces; Landowska (Angel). Italian Concerto, Partitas Nos. 1 and 2; Gould (Columbia). St. Matthew Passion; Stich-Randall, Rossl-Majdan, Kmentt, Berry, Braun, Vienna Chamber Choirs and State Opera Orchestra, conducted by Woeldike (Vanguard). Mass in B Minor; Alarie, Simoneau, Merriman, Vienna Academy Chorus and State Opera Orchestra, conducted by Scherchen (Westminster; stereo only). Cantatas Nos. 4 and 140; Dutoit, Equiluz, Braun, Vienna Chamber Choir and State Opera Orchestra, conducted by Prohaska (Vanguard).

Beethoven: Eroica Symphony; Toscanini and NBC Symphony (Victor). Symphony No. 8; Van Otterloo and Hague Philharmonic (Epic). Piano Concerto No. 3; Gould with New York Philharmonic under Bernstein (Columbia). Violin Concerto; Oistrakh with French Radio Orchestra under Cluytens (Angel). Quartets Op. 18; Budapest Quartet (Columbia). Quartets Opp. 59, 74, 95; Budapest Quartet (Columbia).

Berlioz: Symphonie Fantastique: Van Otterloo and Hague Philharmonic (Epic). Overtures: Roman Carnival, Beatrice and Benedict, Benvenuto Cellini, The Corsair; Martinon and Paris Conservatory Concerts Orchestra (London; stereo only). Requiem; Simoneau, New England Conservatory Chorus, Boston Symphony, conducted by Munch (Victor).

Bizet: Carmen; De los Angeles, Gedda, Micheau, Blanc, French Radio Orchestra, conducted by Beecham (Capitol).

Chopin: Piano Concerto No. 1; Harasiewicz with Vienna Symphony under Hollreiser (Epic; monophonic recording preferable). Sonata Op. 35 and other pieces; Harasiewicz (Epic).

Copland: Suites from Appalachian Spring and The Tender Land; Boston Symphony under Copland (Victor).

Donizetti: L'Elisir d'Amore; Carteri, Alva, Panerai, Taddei, La Scala Orchestra and Chorus, conducted by Serafin (Angel).

Gabrieli: Canzonas; E. Power Biggs and Boston Brass Ensemble (Columbia).

Handel: Water Music; London Philomusica under Thurston Dart (Oiseau-Lyre). Acis and Galatea, Sutherland, Pears, Galliver, Brannigan, St. Anthony Singers, London Philomusica, conducted by Boult (Oiseau-Lyre).

Haydn: Symphonies Nos. 99 to 104; Beecham and Royal Philharmonic (Capitol; monophonic recording preferable). Symphony No. 104; Von Karajan and Vienna Philharmonic (Victor). The Seasons; Morison, Young, Langdon, Beecham Choral Society, Royal Philharmonic, conducted by Beecham (Capitol).

Mahler: Das Lied von der Erde; Dickie, Fischer-Dieskau, Philharmonia Orchestra, conducted by Kletzki (Angel); Lewis, Forrester, Chicago Symphony, conducted by Reiner (Victor). Lieder eines fahrenden Gesellen and Kindertotenlieder; Christa Ludwig with Philharmonia under Boult and Vandernoot (Angel).

Mendelssohn: Violin Concerto; Stern with Philadelphia Orchestra under Ormandy (Columbia).

Mozart: Symphony in G minor; Von Karajan and Vienna Philharmonic (Victor); Symphony K.504 (Prague); Maag and London Symphony (London; stereo only). Symphony K.425 (Linz), Casals and Festival Casals Orpheum Theater. Globe 12/11/60

Award to Munch

Charles Munch has been awarded the Grand Prix National du Disque by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording of the Requiem by Hector Berlioz. The recording was made with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, assisted by Leopold Simoneau and the New England Conservatory chorus, and was released by RCA Victor.

This award for the Berlioz Requiem is the eighth time Dr. Munch has been honored by the Academie du Disque Francais for his recording activity.

R-6009 DS

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

DEC 13 1960

BBC Puts Ear to Transatlantic Cable

By Melita Knowles

London

Live relays of concerts from Boston's Symphony Hall which have delighted music-lovers here recently are significant of a new standard of transatlantic exchange which many hope will replace less desirable imports of recent years.

This music comes to listeners in Britain over the new transatlantic submarine cable. About 8:30 in the evening, listeners to the BBC home service heard part of the Friday afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under conductor Charles Münch.

Leonid Kogan's solo work in Beethoven's Violin Concerto came over the air as clearly as if he had been in London's Albert Hall. Mr. Kogan is remembered here for his participation in the 1959 Tchaikovsky Festival.

The concert from Boston was relayed to France, Italy, the Soviet Union, and Belgium. Announcements were made in five languages.

* * *

Such transatlantic linkups pleasantly make up for American material missing from the British Broadcasting Corporation TV schedules this winter.

British stars have taken over to a much greater extent than ever before. Eric Maschwitz, head of BBC TV light entertainment, has announced this as a definite trend of their present policy.

"Top British performers attract greater audience appreciation." And he added, "we must try not to be dazzled by Broadway."

Of TV programs, generally, Kenneth Adam, program controller says: "The emphasis is on quality and content and British material."

The substitution of live British programs in place of the large number of American films has made this the most expensive winter BBC TV has ever had. Extra sums are spent on special projects, documentaries, news features, and outside broadcasts.

This all adds up to the conclusion British TV is maturing on its own account, aside from American influence, that it is producing its own material as well as the trained technicians and artists to put it across. For instance, a series of new, specially-written Sunday night plays began last September and will continue till February 1961.

* * *

The new emphasis on native talent does not mean British viewers do not see American productions—and like them. On BBC Perry Como, Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and the westerns are strong favorites still. The Perry Como show is adapted for British showing. In this connection Mr. Como has expressed his delight at the "expert showmanship in the difficult task of adapting the show for England." He feels this is a "significant first step toward the realization of true international TV."

Many American TV films are shot in British studios and shown in Britain. And unfortunately there is no longer monopoly of fisticuffs and shooting in American films. ITV's so-called children's serial "Robin Hood" is not without its violent moments.

Commercial television (ITV), to the casual viewer, seems to carry more films of violence than the BBC. ITV is more often slated in the press for this type of film. At one period ITV made enormous holes in the BBC's child audience figures with its American films and the BBC followed suit. Now, however, the BBC, responding to public outcry, has withdrawn many.

Women's organizations, social workers, and church authorities have campaigned for less violence in TV films. The companies are urged to stick more closely to the letter of the Television Act covering both BBC and ITV which demands there should be a proper balance of programs and that "they should be predominantly British."

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 9',227

FEB 1961

TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

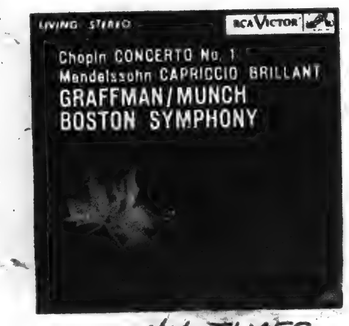
Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, cond.

• • RCA VICTOR FTC 2031. 39 min. $8.95.

I'm torn here: in one direction by respect for Monteux's lucidity, freedom from interpretative excesses, and lyrical freshness of approach; in the other by a hankering to linger just a bit more over the middle movements and to experience a heavier dramatic impact from the finale. If you want a really passionate, "Russian" Fourth, I can't recommend this one. But if you are weary of more extroverted readings or even of the music itself, this will surely give you a new slant on—and perhaps enhanced respect for—the work. It is, of course beautifully played and recorded in expansive, yet unexaggerated stereo, but with somewhat less reverberance than is characteristic of most recent Symphony Hall (Boston) recordings.



Graffman's "Ballades" album dramatically established his pre-eminence as a Chopin interpreter. Now comes an exciting new example of Graffman's mastery of Chopin's music. It is his first recording of a Chopin concerto, and it is stunning! Also a stereo debut of Mendelssohn's "Capriccio Brillant."

N.Y. TIMES. MAG

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 9',227

FEB 1961

DVORAK: Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, in B minor, Op. 104

Gregor Piatigorsky, cello; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2490. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2490. SD. $5.98.

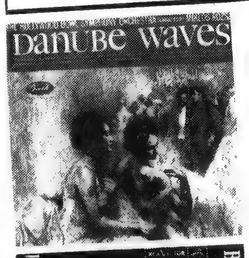
Mstislav Rostropovich, cello; Czech Philharmonic Orchestra, Vaclav Talich, cond.
• PARLIAMENT PLP 139. LP. $1.98.

Rostropovich's interpretation of this concerto does not differ materially from his two earlier recorded performances. Although his phrasing sometimes tends to be more glutinous than protean and his basically ravishing tone might have a bit more sharpness and animation of sound, he plays with lyricism and technical polish. What distinguishes the present version from the cellist's other ones is Talich's superlative handling of the orchestral part: the strings sing, the muscular components of the orchestra (i.e., timpani and brass) are incisive, and the judicious touch of vibrato in the wind instruments' playing (are these wooden flutes here?) imparts a wonderfully rustic quality to the reading. The recording presumably is not [illegible] with me that it is a little foolish to even seriously consider owning any other version, save as a supplement to that still very respectable-sounding one. H.G.

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY — CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

FEB 18 1961

CLASSICAL



"DANUBE WAVES"—The Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra conducted by Miklos Rozsa —Capitol P 8540

Film track composer Rozsa ("Ben Hur") is also a well respected conductor. Here, fronting Capitol's ubiquitous Hollywood Bowl ork, he offers pleasant, unpretentious, carefully paced readings of symphonic war horses. Among them are Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, Strauss' (Sr.) "Radetzky March," and Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody" No. 14. An enjoyable light classical listening session.

"BERLIOZ OVERTURES"—Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Victor LP-2438

Munch, acknowledged Berlioz master, has been recorded in a series of the composer's most stirring overtures. The emotional music is translated into passionate ork terms by an understanding and intense display of conducting facility. The overtures include "The Roman Carnival," "Benvenuto Cellini," "The Corsair" and two others.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700

FEB 1961

Disc Engagement

Rudolf Bing has kindly volunteered to absolve Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti and Giorgio Tozzi on April 21 and 22 so that they may fulfill a long-awaited engagement to record Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony on those dates, since all will be in the Hub with the "Met" during that week.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

DEC 13 1960

BBC Puts Ear to Transatlantic Cable

By Melita Knowles

London

Live relays of concerts from Boston's Symphony Hall which have delighted music-lovers here recently are significant of a new standard of transatlantic exchange which many hope will replace less desirable imports of recent years.

This music comes to listeners in Britain over the new transatlantic submarine cable. About 8:30 in the evening, listeners to the BBC home service heard part of the Friday afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Münch.

Leonid Kogan's solo work in Beethoven's Violin Concerto came over the air as clearly as if he had been in London's Albert Hall. Mr. Kogan is remembered here for his participation in the 1959 Tchaikovsky Festival.

The concert from Boston was relayed to France, Italy, the Soviet Union, and Belgium. Announcements were made in five languages.

* * *

Such transatlantic linkups pleasantly make up for American material missing from the British Broadcasting Corporation TV schedules this winter.

British stars have taken over to a much greater extent than ever before. Eric Maschwitz, head of BBC TV light entertainment, has announced this as a definite trend of their present policy.

"Top British performers attract greater audience appreciation." And he added, "we must try not to be dazzled by Broadway."

Of TV programs, generally, Kenneth Adam, program controller says: "The emphasis is on quality and content and British material."

The substitution of live British programs in place of the large number of American films has made this the most expensive winter BBC TV has ever had. Extra sums are spent on special projects, documentaries, news features, and outside broadcasts.

This all adds up to the conclusion British TV is maturing on its own account, aside from American influence, that it is producing its own material as well as the trained technicians and artists to put it across. For instance, a series of new, specially-written Sunday night plays began last September and will continue till February 1961.

* * *

The new emphasis on native talent does not mean British viewers do not see American productions—and like them. On BBC Perry Como, Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and the westerns are strong favorites still. The Perry Como show is adapted for British showing. In this connection Mr. Como has expressed his delight at the "expert showmanship in the difficult task of adapting the show for England." He feels this is a "significant first step toward the realization of true international TV."

Many American TV films are shot in British studios and shown in Britain. And unfortunately there is no longer monopoly of fisticuffs and shooting in American films. ITV's so-called children's serial "Robin Hood" is no without its violent moments.

Commercial television (ITV), to the casual viewer, seems to carry more films of violence than the BBC. ITV is more often slated in the press for this type of film. At one period ITV made enormous holes in the BBC's child audience figures with its American films and the BBC followed suit. Now, however, the BBC, responding to public outcry, has withdrawn many.

Women's organizations, social workers, and church authorities have campaigned for less violence in TV films. The companies are urged to stick more closely to the letter of the Television Act covering both BBC and ITV which demands there should be a proper balance of programs and that "they should be predominantly British."

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 91,227

FEB 1961

TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

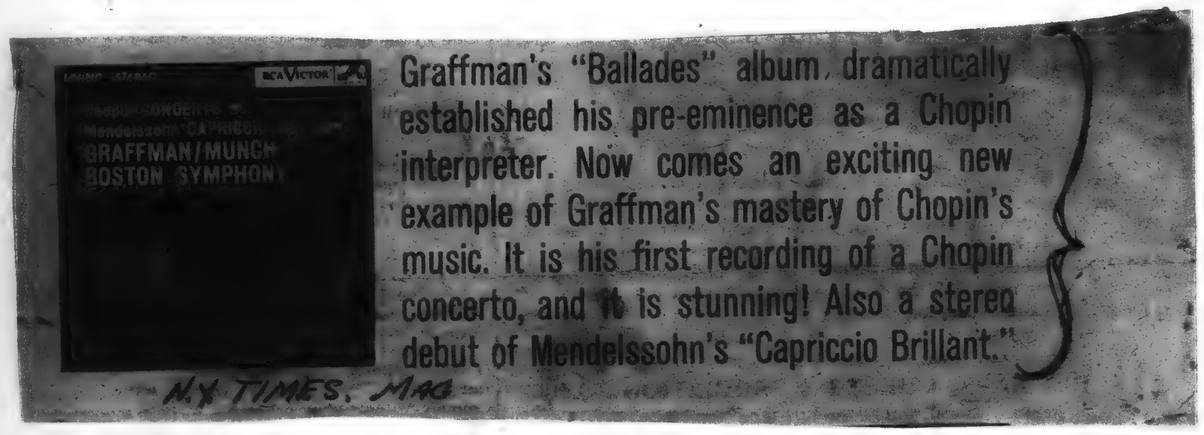
Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, cond.

• • RCA VICTOR FTC 2031. 39 min. $8.95.

I'm torn here: in one direction by respect for Monteux's lucidity, freedom from interpretative excesses, and lyrical freshness of approach; in the other by a hankering to linger just a bit more over the middle movements and to experience a heavier dramatic impact from the finale. If you want a really passionate, "Russian" Fourth, I can't recommend this one. But if you are weary of more extroverted readings or even of the music itself, this will surely give you a new slant on—and perhaps enhanced respect for—the work. It is, of course beautifully played and recorded in expansive [illegible] stereo, but with [illegible] reverberance than is [illegible] Symphony [illegible]



Graffman's "Ballades" album dramatically established his pre-eminence as a Chopin interpreter. Now comes an exciting new example of Graffman's mastery of Chopin's music. It is his first recording of a Chopin concerto, and it is stunning! Also a stereo debut of Mendelssohn's "Capriccio Brillant."

N.Y. TIMES, MAG

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 91,227

FEB 1961

DVORAK: Concerto for Cello and Orchestra, in B minor, Op. 104

Gregor Piatigorsky, cello; Boston Symphony Orchestra, Charles Munch, cond.
• RCA VICTOR LM 2490. LP. $4.98.
• • RCA VICTOR LSC 2490. SD. $5.98.

Mstislav Rostropovich, cello; Czech Philharmonic Orchestra, Vaclav Talich, cond.
• PARLIAMENT PLP 139. LP. $1.98.

Rostropovich's interpretation of this concerto does not differ materially from his two earlier recorded performances. Although his phrasing sometimes tends to be more glutinous than protean and his basically ravishing tone might have a bit more sharpness and animation of sound, he plays with lyricism and technical polish. What distinguishes the present version from the cellist's other ones is Talich's superlative handling of the orchestral part: the strings sing, the muscular components of the orchestra (i.e., timpani and brass) are incisive, and the judicious touch of vibrato in the wind instruments' playing (are these wooden flutes here?) imparts a wonderfully rustic quality to the readings. The recording presumably is not [illegible] with me that it is a little foolish to even seriously consider owning any other version, save as a supplement to that still very respectable-sounding one. H.G.

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY — CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

FEB 18 1961

CLASSICAL

"DANUBE WAVES"—The Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra conducted by Miklos Rozsa —Capitol P 8540

Film track composer Rozsa ("Ben Hur") is also a well respected conductor. Here, fronting Capitol's ubiquitous Hollywood Bowl ork, he offers pleasant, unpretentious, carefully paced readings of symphonic war horses. Among them are Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, Strauss' (Sr.) "Radetzky March," and Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody" No. 14. An enjoyable light classical listening session.

"BERLIOZ OVERTURES"—Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra—Victor LP-2438

Munch, acknowledged Berlioz master, has recorded in a series of the composer's most stirring overtures. The emotional music is translated into passionate ork terms by an understanding and intense display of conducting facility. The overtures include "The Roman Carnival," "Benvenuto Cellini," "The Corsair" and two others.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700

FEB 1961

Disc Engagement

Rudolf Bing has kindly volunteered to absolve Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti and Giorgio Tozzi on April 21 and 22 so that they may fulfill a long-awaited engagement to record Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony on those dates, since all will be in the Hub with the "Met" during that week.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • HIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
DEC 13 1960

BBC Puts Ear to Transatlantic Cable

By Melita Knowles

London

Live relays of concerts from Boston's Symphony Hall which have delighted music-lovers here recently are significant of a new standard of transatlantic exchange which many hope will replace less desirable imports of recent years.

This music comes to listeners in Britain over the new transatlantic submarine cable. About 8:30 in the evening, listeners to the BBC home service heard part of the Friday afternoon concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under conductor Charles Münch.

Leonid Kogan's solo work in Beethoven's Violin Concerto came over the air as clearly as if he had been in London's Albert Hall. Mr. Kogan is remembered here for his participation in the 1959 Tchaikovsky Festival.

The concert from Boston was relayed to France, Italy, the Soviet Union, and Belgium. Announcements were made in five languages.

* * *

Such transatlantic linkups pleasantly make up for American material missing from the British Broadcasting Corporation TV schedules this winter.

British stars have taken over to a much greater extent than ever before. Eric Maschwitz, head of BBC TV light entertainment, has announced this as a definite trend of their present policy.

"Top British performers attract greater audience appreciation." And he added, "we must try not to be dazzled by Broadway."

Of TV programs, generally, Kenneth Adam, program controller says: "The emphasis is on quality and content and British material."

The substitution of live British programs in place of the large number of American films has made this the most expensive winter BBC TV has ever had. Extra sums are spent on special projects, documentaries, news features, and outside broadcasts.

This all adds up to the conclusion British TV is maturing on its own account, aside from American influence, that it is producing its own material as well as the trained technicians and artists to put it across. For instance, a series of new, specially-written Sunday night plays began last September and will continue till February 1961.

* * *

The new emphasis on native talent does not mean British viewers do not see American productions—and like them. On BBC Perry Como, Bing Crosby, Bob Hope and the westerns are strong favorites still. The Perry Como show is adapted for British showing. In this connection Mr. Como has expressed his delight at the "expert showmanship in the difficult task of adapting the show for England." He feels this is a "significant first step toward the realization of true international TV."

Many American TV films are shot in British studios and shown in Britain. And unfortunately there is no longer monopoly of fisticuffs and shooting in American films. ITV's so-called children's serial "Robin Hood" is not without its violent moments.

Commercial television (ITV), to the casual viewer, seems to carry more films of violence than the BBC. ITV is more often slated in the press for this type of film. At one period ITV made enormous holes in the BBC's child audience figures with its American films and the BBC followed suit. Now, however, the BBC, responding to public outcry, has withdrawn many.

Women's organizations, social workers, and church authorities have campaigned for less violence in TV films. The companies are urged to stick more closely to the letter of the Television Act covering both BBC and ITV which demands there should be a proper balance of programs and that "they should be predominantly British."

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 91,227
FEB 1961

TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 4, in F minor, Op. 36

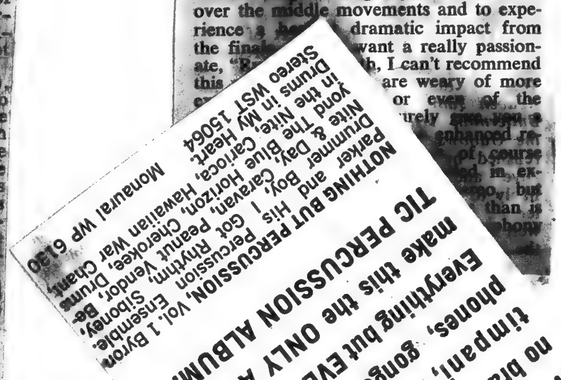
Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pierre Monteux, cond.

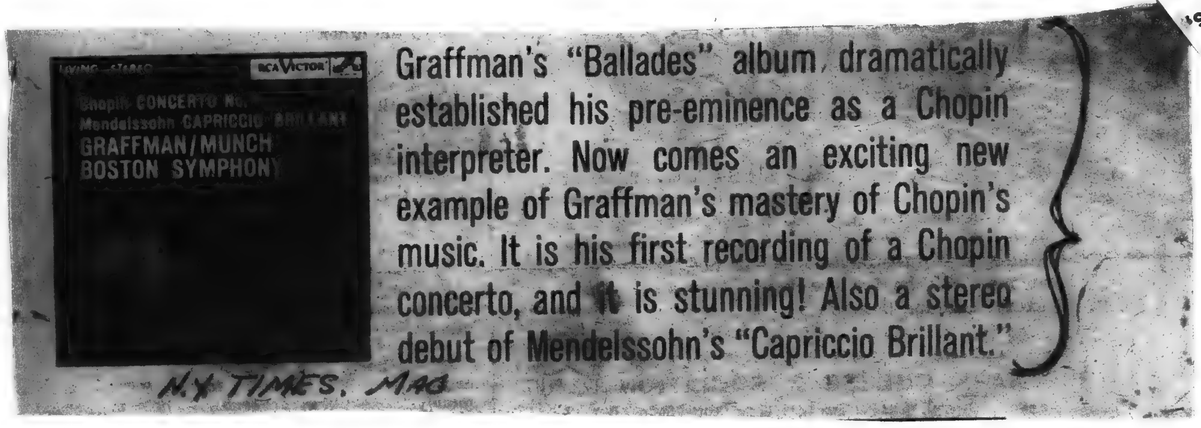
• • RCA VICTOR FTC 2031. 39 min. $8.95.

I'm torn here: in one direction by respect for Monteux's lucidity, freedom from interpretative excesses, and lyrical freshness of approach; in the other by a hankering to linger just a bit more over the middle movements and to experience a [illegible] dramatic impact from the fina[illegible] want a really passionate, "R[illegible]h, I can't recommend this [illegible] are weary of more or [illegible] of the [illegible] enhanced re[illegible] of course [illegible] in ex[illegible] but [illegible] than is [illegible]hony new, but the sound is agreeable, with only a slight lack of brilliance.

The Piatigorsky-Munch disc is probably more extended in frequency response than the Parliament, but Dvořák's haunting melodies do not evoke from the Boston Symphony men anything like the musical response and sheer love forthcoming from the Czech players. Moreover, the tonal quality is inclined to be shrewish and congested, with too much emphasis placed on the triangle and brass. Stereo adds little to what is, for me at any rate, an unsympathetic aural image. Piatigorsky's playing here does have more emotional drive than Kostropovich's, but also quite a bit more scrubbing, smearing, and off-center intonation. Technical matters aside, I find his interpretative inclinations throughout rather throbby and overdone. Others may be more sympathetic to this type of [illegible] music making.

But [illegible] have ever heard the whiplash and invigorating tensile line projected by Casals' 1937 recording of this work [illegible] in Angel's "Great Recordings of the Century" series, you probably will agree with me that it is a little foolish to even seriously consider owning any other version, save as a supplement to that still very respectable-sounding one. H.G.





Graffman's "Ballades" album dramatically established his pre-eminence as a Chopin interpreter. Now comes an exciting new example of Graffman's mastery of Chopin's music. It is his first recording of a Chopin concerto, and it is stunning! Also a stereo debut of Mendelssohn's "Capriccio Brillant."

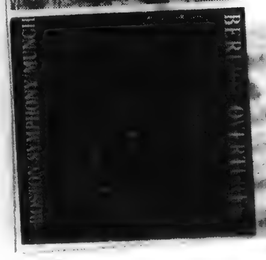
N.Y. TIMES. MAG

CASH BOX
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY — CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
FEB 18 1961

CLASSICAL

"DANUBE WAVES"—The Hollywood Bowl Symphony Orchestra conducted by Miklos Rozsa —Capitol P 8540

Film track composer Rozsa ("Ben Hur") is also a well respected conductor. Here, fronting Capitol's ubiquitous Hollywood Bowl ork, he offers pleasant, unpretentious, carefully paced readings of symphonic war horses. Among them are Smetana's "Bartered Bride" overture, Strauss' (Sr.) "Radetzky March," and Liszt's "Hungarian Rhapsody" No. 14. An enjoyable light classical listening session.



"BERLIOZ OVERTURES"—Charles Münch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra— Victor LP-2438

Münch, acknowledged Berlioz master, has recorded in a series of the composer's most stirring overtures. The emotional music is translated into passionate ork terms by an understanding and intense display of conducting facility. The overtures include "The Roman Carnival," "Benvenuto Cellini," "The Corsair" and two others.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
FEB 1961

Disc Engagement

Rudolf Bing has kindly volunteered to absolve Rosalind Elias, Cesare Valletti and Giorgio Tozzi on April 21 and 22 so that they may fulfill a long-awaited engagement to record Berlioz's "Romeo and Juliet" Symphony with Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony on those dates, since all will be in the Hub with the "Met" during that week.

BLANK PAGE

Monitor 10/1/60

More Youth Concerts

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct a second season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, beginning Nov. 5. There will be three programs, each given twice, on Saturday mornings from 11 to 12. Reserved seats are offered at $3 for either set of three concerts.

Sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play for the children, and informal comments are made by the conductor and his guest soloists.

Elementary and high school pupils come in groups from their schools, younger children are escorted by parents or relatives. The first series will be held Nov. 5, Jan. 14, and March 18; the second Nov. 12, Jan. 21, and March 25.

Enthusiastic response from local children for last season's series of concerts has prompted this year's. Applications for tickets already have accounted for three quarters of those available. Remaining ones may be obtained from the Youth Concerts Ticket Committee, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,670
OCT 6 - 1960

Youth Concerts To Be Held at Symphony Hall

SUDBURY -- Young people from schools and private homes in this area have played a valuable role in an important cultural development. Their enthusiasm for the experimental series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, played last fall and winter by Boston Symphony musicians, has helped conductor Harry Ellis Dickson to venture a second season.

Last season's experience proved the attractiveness of the programs for pupils of elementary and high schools coming in groups, and for younger listeners, averaging 8 years.

Again, Mr. Dickson will present three programs of Saturday mornings from 11 to 12, and repeat each one on the Saturday following. Thus, two series are provided, with tickets offered at $3 for either set of three concerts . Adults may subscribe, if acting as escort. Applications may be addressed to:

Youth Concerts Ticket Committee, Symphony Hall, Boston 15. More information may be obtained from Mrs. Pollock or Mr. Wentworth at the Lincoln-Sudbury Regional School or from Miss Olive Smith or Mr. Aldrich at the Junior High School. Mrs. John H. Walker is chairman for Sudbury, and will be serving as a hostess at one of the series of concerts.

The dates of performances will be: First Series: Nov. 5, Jan. 14, March 18. Second Series. Nov. 12, Jan. 21, March 25.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
OCT 9 1960

Youth Concerts

For the opening concert of the second season of youth concerts in Symphony Hall, conductor Harry Dickson and his 60 Boston Symphony musicians will offer a program of music of North and South America. This program will be played Saturday, Nov. 5, from 11 o'clock until noon, and will be repeated the following Saturday.

Two more paired concerts will be given on Jan. 14 and 21 and Mar. 18 and 25. In detail, Dickson's opening program is as follows:

Malambo Dance from Ballet, "Estancia"; Ginastera; Preludio from Suite "South America"; Serebrier; first Boston performance; The Little Train: Villa-Lobos; My Toy Balloon (arranged from Brazilian folk song); Slonimsky; narrator, Slonimsky; Hymn and Dance from "Tres Estampas del Peru": Andres Sas; first U.S. performance; Diversions for Orchestra: Irving Fine; first U.S. performance; Suite on American Folk Songs for Viola and Orchestra; Emanuel Vardi; soloist, Joseph de Pasquale; Sinfonia India: Chavez.

Tea bags were invented in the United States in 1904.

Herald 10/9/60

Youth Concerts In Vital Series

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"I was pleased to attend concerts in the series," Charles Munch wrote recently, "and proud to take part in one." Said Isaac Stern: "It is only by attendance at such concerts as yours that young people will learn to have music as a natural part of their everyday lives, and a rich addition to their future as civilized human beings."

The recipient of these testimonials was Harry Ellis Dickson, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who, last year quietly launched a major enterprise—the first series of Youth Concerts organized in Boston since the era of Wheeler Beckett. We have had children's concerts (Arthur Fiedler has been energetic in this direction), scattered cycles, and even extended series in places such as Brookline and Cambridge. But a gap existed in Boston's musical life and Mr. Dickson filled it.

Three Concerts

As you may or may not recall, the first season of the venture consisted of three concerts, repeated on successive Saturday mornings of November, January and March. Verbal explanation was kept to a minimum. Program notes were concise. The idea was to let the music, presented by BSO musicians, speak independently. The audience was supposed to relax.

Well, the other day we ran into Mr. Dickson, and he brought us up to date on the progress of last year's series, and the plans for the future. It seems the first set of Youth Concerts was a smashing success; and the current series virtually sold out. Mr. Dickson, who regards this work with crusading zeal, was not unnaturally pleased, although the reward, at best intangible, hardly guarantees speedy retirement to some indolent elysium. "We may even be able to meet the deficit this year," he said wryly.

Last season's concerts were considered of vital importance by Dr. Munch and Isaac Stern, both of whom contributed, as was indicated, and who later penned glowing endorsements to Harry Dickson. The visiting Soviet composers witnessed one, and Kabalevsky, the sole English-speaking member of the delegation, compared Boston's Youth Concerts with a similar series he conducts in Russia. He found the approach and concept exciting, and the problem of overcoming a child's boredom at sitting in one place so long no different here than at home. He thought Mr. Dickson was doing a splendid job.

At the close of the initial series, Mr. Dickson offered an additional concert during April, this one under the auspices of the Filene Foundation. The young audience on this occasion comprised children who would not ordinarily come into contact with music of classical calibre, many indeed visiting Symphony Hall for the first time. Again the concert proved successful.

Glancing over the program for last year's concerts, it struck us that part of the secret lay in the arrangements of the music. Although Mr. Dickson might play segments of symphonies, the entire bill had a coherence; and the message was implied rather than preached at the kids. For instance, the program for last Nov. 7 and 14 was built around the elemental fact that music conveys various shades of emotion—sadness (the Andantino of Tchaikowsky's Fourth), grandeur (Allegro con brio, Beethoven's Fifth), fun (the Circus Parade from "The Incredible Flutist") or joy (Allegro Giocoso, Brahms' Fourth.)

Latin Music

We were particularly impressed, however, by the first projected bill at Symphony Hall, on the forthcoming Saturdays of November 5 and 12. It's construed about the theme, "Music of North and South America," and since so little South American composition is heard here, represents a challenge to adults as well as youngsters. Not often does one encounter a concert where music, essentially designed to make instant contact, transcends the age barrier.

Mr. Dickson has cleared the hurdle by scheduling works from a variety of South American nations. The Hymn and Dance from "Tres Estampas del Peru," by the distinguished yet almost-unknown Andreas Sas will receive a first hearing in the United States. From Uruguay, Jose Serebrier's Preludio from the Suite "South Americana," is having a first Boston performance; and so is Emanuel Vardi's Suite of American Folk Songs, for Viola (Joseph de Pasquale) and Orchestra. Irving Fine's Diversions for Orchestra (bearing such perky titles as "Koko's Lullaby," and "The Red Queen's Gavotte") will be heard in a world premiere; and then there are items from Carlos Chavez of Mexico, Argentina's Ginastera, Brizil's Villa-Lobos, and "My Toy Balloon," by Nicolas Slonimsky, the author, among scores of learned tomes, of a book on Latin-American music.

I shouldn't like to entice adults to the Hall, since the importance of stimulating the future audience is paramount. Still, one has to admit the diversified appeal. Who knows, Mr. Dickson may even insert a snatch of rock 'n roll by way of criticism and illustration; but whatever happens, we need the work he has so ably begun among young people.

tomorrow. Globe 10/2/60

Youth Concerts

Three-quarters of the youngsters who attended last year's experimental first season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall have re-subscribed, Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson accordingly is busily arranging a new season.

Following the successful plan of last year, he will present three programs played by Boston Symphony musicians on Saturday mornings from 11 to 12. Each program will be repeated on the Saturday following. Thus, there will be two series, as before. In addition to school groups, children preferably not younger than) may attend with an adult, both subscribe.

Monitor 11/7/60 Art—Music—Theater THE CHRIST

Youth Concert Premières—

Novelties Galore Conducted by Harry Dickson

By Harold Rogers

In culture-conscious Boston the youngsters who attend the Youth Concerts are so musically sophisticated that they might embarrass some of their elders.

Contemporary music for them poses no problem (last Saturday's program in Symphony Hall was completely modern). Only two largish boys were seen to give up in the middle of Chávez' Sinfonia India, yet I have sometimes seen a half dozen dowagers charging for the door disturbed over something colorful by Bartók, Messiaen, or William Schuman.

There is no reason why the children of our day should not appreciate the music of our day. Expose them to modern music, and they'll come to terms with it as easily as they do with television, satellites, or the immediate prospect of space travel. Unlike many of their elders, their musical education did not come to a stop with Debussy. On the contrary, theirs is getting launched with Ginastera of Argentina, Serebrier of Uruguay, Villa-Lobos of Brazil, Sás of Peru, Fine of Boston, and Chávez of Mexico!

♪ ♪ ♪

All these were to be found on the program that Harry Ellis Dickson selected to open the Youth Concerts this season—a sold-out series, by the way. Not only did Mr. Dickson give his young listeners music by living composers (with the exception of the late Villa-Lobos), he gave them two Boston premières, one United States première, and one world première!

Mr. Dickson was evidently so taken with this program of superlatives that it seemed quite natural for him to introduce Nicolas Slonimsky as "the man who knows more about music than anyone else in the world!" Whereupon Mr. Slonimsky — after having been presented as a musicologist, pianist, lecturer, author, and composer—warned the children against accepting at face value anything that might be said by one's friends; and Mr. Dickson, to be sure, was a friend.

"However," Mr. Slonimsky added, "since I am not overly modest, I will accept the introduction as he gave it." He then began to explain the nature of "My Toy Balloon," his suite of seven variations on a Brazilian tune that the Boston Symphony musicians were about to play.

"Variations," he said, "are a variety of various versions on a theme. The reason I am able to explain this to you so clearly is because I happen to be a musicologist."

♪ ♪ ♪

Then the musicians put the tune through its paces in the manner of a music box, the minor mode, hommage à Brahms, and a few others beyond recall, concluding with "Carnival." For this movement Harold Thompson, a percussionist, came forward with a cluster of balloons and proceeded with the aid of a hatpin to produce a series of diverting explosions. Both Mr. Slonimsky and his music were a great success.

True, Mr. Dickson's program seemed over-long before he brought the Sinfonia India to its dizzying climax. After all, he had given his listeners the Final Dance from Alberto Ginastera's Ballet "Estancia," the first Boston performance of José Serebrier's Prelude from his "South Americana" Suite, "The Little Train" of Villa-Lobos, the Hymn and Dance from Andrés Sás's "Tres Estampas del Peru" (in its first U.S. performance), and the world première of Irving Fine's Diversions for Orchestra.

Mr. Fine, who was in the audience and took a bow to warm applause afterward, has concocted four winning movements called Little Toccata, Flamingo Polka, Koko's Lullaby (Koko is Mr. Fine's poodle), and the Red Queen's Gavotte. Them music is filled with whimsies.

Then, too, there was the first Boston performance of Emanuel Vardi's Suite on American Folk Songs, played by Joseph de Pasquale (introduced by Mr. Dickerson as "one of the greatest viola players in the world"). There is no cause to doubt Mr. Dickson, for if Mr. de Pasquale were indeed not great, he could hardly hold down his position as principal violist of the Boston Symphony.

Youth
The You
phony Hall scription, i
ond season,
on Saturda
Nov. 5, by ductor, Har fortunate si prise, it wi youngsters late. Subsc a concert enjoy it by numbers to Office, as for the b Fund. The ut

12; Jan. 14, 21;
Each program is the following Satur-
North and South
Mr. Dickson's theme
ing program:
ra (1916—): Final Dance
Ballet, "Estrancia" (1936—): Preludio from "South Americana" os (1887-1959): The Lit-nsky (1894—): My Toy 00—): Hymn and Dance, res Estampas del Peru"
(1914—): Diversions for
a (1917—): Suite on Amerlk Songs, for Viola and
a
(1899—): Sinfonia India

More Youth Concerts

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct a second season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, beginning Nov. 5. There will be three programs, each given twice, on Saturday mornings from 11 to 12. Reserved seats are offered at $3 for either set of three concerts.

Sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will play for the children, and informal comments are made by the conductor and his guest soloists.

Elementary and high school pupils come in groups from their schools, younger children are escorted by parents or relatives. The first series will be held Nov. 5, Jan. 14, and March 18; the second Nov. 12, Jan. 21, and March 25.

Enthusiastic response from local children for last season's series of concerts has prompted this year's. Applications for tickets already have accounted for three quarters of those available. Remaining ones may be obtained from the Youth Concerts Ticket Committee, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

---

tomorrow. Globe 10/2/60 begin

Youth Concerts

Three-quarters of the youngsters who attended last year's experimental first season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall have re-subscribed, Conductor Harry Ellis Dickson accordingly is busily arranging a new season.

Following the successful plan of last year, he will present three programs played by Boston Symphony musicians on Saturday mornings from 11 to 12. Each program will be repeated on the Saturday following. Thus, there will be wo series, as before. In addiion to school groups, children preferably not younger than) may attend with an adult, both subscribe.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,670

OCT 6 - 1960

Youth Concerts To Be Held at Symphony Hall

SUDBURY -- Young people from schools and private homes in this area have played a valuable role in an important cultural development. Their enthusiasm for the experimental series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, played last fall and winter by Boston Symphony musicians, has helped conductor Harry Ellis Dickson to venture a second season.

Last season's experience proved the attractiveness of the programs for pupils of elementary and high schools coming in groups, and for younger listeners, averaging 8 years.

Again, Mr. Dickson will present three programs of Saturday mornings from 11 to 12, and repeat each one on the Saturday following. Thus, two series are provided, with tickets offered at $3 for either set of three concerts . Adults may subscribe, if acting as escort. Applications may be addressed to;

Youth Concerts Ticket Committee, Symphony Hall, Boston 15. More information may be obtained from Mrs. Pollock or Mr. Wentworth at the Lincoln-Sudbury Regional School or from Miss Olive Smith or Mr. Aldrich at the Junior High School. Mrs. John H. Walker is chairman for Sudbury, and will be serving as a hostess at one of the series of concerts.

The dates of performances will be: First Series: Nov. 5, Jan. 14, March 18. Second Series. Nov. 12, Jan. 21, March 25.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

OCT 9 1960

Youth Concerts

For the opening concert in the second season of youth concerts in Symphony Hall, conductor Harry Dickson and his 60 Boston Symphony musicians will offer a program of music of North and South America. This program will be played Saturday, Nov. 5, from 11 o'clock until noon, and will be repeated the following Saturday.

Two more paired concerts will be given on Jan. 14 and 21 and Mar. 18 and 25. In detail, Dickson's opening program is as follows:

Malambo Dance from Ballet, "Estancia": Ginastera; Preludio from Suite "South America": Serebrier; first Boston performance; The Little Train: Villa-Lobos; My Toy Balloon (arranged from Brazilian folk song): Slonimsky; narrator, Slonimsky; Hymn and Dance from "Tres Estampas del Peru": Andres Sas; first U.S. performance; Diversions for Orchestra: Irving Fine; first U.S. performance; Suite on American Folk Songs for Viola and Orchestra; Emanuel Vardi; soloist, Joseph de Pasquale; Sinfonia India: Chavez.

Tea bags were invented in the United States in 1904.

Herald 10/9/60

Youth Concerts In Vital Series

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"I was pleased to attend concerts in the series," Charles Munch wrote recently, "and proud to take part in one." Said Isaac Stern: "It is only by attendance at such concerts as yours that young people will learn to have music as a natural part of their everyday lives, and a rich addition to their future as civilized human beings."

The recipient of these testimonials was Harry Ellis Dickson, a violinist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who, last year quietly launched a major [illegible] of the first series of [illegible] orchestral portrait . . . a Vic Schoen, presents a fascinating [illegible] Peter London Orchestra conducted by Art Harris, Nick Perito & Vic Schoen, presents a fascinating orchestral portrait . . .

MUSICAL PICTURES: Visual music and special effects blend to give stirring entertainment. as played by the Medallion Concert Band, Ben-Hur Chariot Race, The Midnight Fire Alarm, The Whistler and His Dog, In The Clock Store, In A Persian Market, Roaring Volcano and many other exciting musical pictures.

Monaural 7501 ..... $4.98
Stereo 7501 ..... $5.98

MEDALLION 12" LPs

THE SOUND OF TOP BRASS. The [illegible] Monaural 7500 ..... $4.98
Stereo 7500 ..... $5.98

projected bill at Symphony Hall, on the forthcoming Saturdays of November 5 and 12. It's construed about the theme, "Music of North and South America," and since so little South American composition is heard here, it represents a challenge to adults as well as youngsters. Not often does one encounter a concert where music, essentially designed to make instant contact, transcends the age barrier.

Mr. Dickson has cleared the hurdle by scheduling works from a variety of South American nations. The Hymn and Dance from "Tres Estampas del Peru," by the distinguished yet almost-unknown Andreas Sas will receive a first hearing in the United States. From Uruguay, Jose Serebrier's Preludio from the Suite "South Americana," is having a first Boston performance; and so is Emanuel Vardi's Suite of American Folk Songs, for Viola (Joseph de Pasquale) and Orchestra. Irving Fine's Diversions for Orchestra (bearing such perky titles as "Koko's Lullaby," and "The Red Queen's Gavotte") will be heard in a world premiere; and then there are items from Carlos Chavez of Mexico, Argentina's Ginastera, Brizil's Villa-Lobos, and "My Toy Balloon," by Nicolas Slonimsky, the author, among scores of learned tomes, of a book on Latin-American music.

I shouldn't like to entice adults to the Hall, since the importance of stimulating the future audience is paramount. Still, one has to admit the diversified appeal. Who knows, Mr. Dickson may even insert a snatch of rock 'n roll by way of criticism and illustration; but whatever happens, we need the work he has so ably begun among young people.

Monitor 11/7/60 Art—Music—Theater THE CHRIST

Youth Concert Premières—

Novelties Galore Conducted by Harry Dickson

By Harold Rogers

In culture-conscious Boston the youngsters who attend the Youth Concerts are so musically sophisticated that they might embarrass some of their elders.

Contemporary music for them poses no problem (last Saturday's program in Symphony Hall was completely modern). Only two largish boys were seen to give up in the middle of Chávez' Sinfonia India, yet I have sometimes seen a half dozen dowagers charging for the door disturbed over something colorful by Bartók, Messiaen, or William Schuman.

There is no reason why the children of our day should not appreciate the music of our day. Expose them to modern music, and they'll come to terms with it as easily as they do with television, satellites, or the immediate prospect of space travel. Unlike many of their elders, their musical education did not come to a stop with Debussy. On the contrary, theirs is getting launched with Ginastera of Argentina, Serebrier of Uruguay, Villa-Lobos of Brazil, Sás of Peru, Fine of Boston, and Chávez of Mexico!

* * *

All these were to be found on the program that Harry Ellis Dickson selected to open the Youth Concerts this season—a sold-out series, by the way. Not only did Mr. Dickson give his young listeners music by living composers (with the exception of the late Villa-Lobos), he gave them two Boston premières, one United States première, and one world première!

Mr. Dickson was evidently so taken with this program of superlatives that it seemed quite natural for him to introduce Nicolas Slonimsky as "the man who knows more about music than anyone else in the world!" Whereupon Mr. Slonimsky — after having been presented as a musicologist, pianist, lecturer, author, and composer—warned the children against accepting at face value anything that might be said by one's friends; and Mr. Dickson, to be sure, was a friend.

"However," Mr. Slonimsky added, "since I am not overly modest, I will accept the introduction as he gave it." He then began to explain the nature of "My Toy Balloon," his suite of seven variations on a Brazilian tune that the Boston Symphony musicians were about to play.

"Variations," he said, "are a variety of various versions on a theme. The reason I am able to explain this to you so clearly is because I happen to be a musicologist."

* * *

Then the musicians put the tune through its paces in the manner of a music box, the minor mode, hommage à Brahms, and a few others beyond recall, concluding with "Carnival." For this movement Harold Thompson, a percussionist, came forward with a cluster of balloons and proceeded with the aid of a hatpin to produce a series of diverting explosions. Both Mr. Slonimsky and his music were a great success.

True, Mr. Dickson's program seemed over-long before he brought the Sinfonia India to its dizzying climax. After all, he had given his listeners the Final Dance from Alberto Ginastera's Ballet "Estancia," the first Boston performance of José Serebrier's Prelude from his "South Americana" Suite, "The Little Train" of Villa-Lobos, the Hymn and Dance from Andrés Sás's "Tres Estampas del Peru" (in its first U.S. performance), and the world première of Irving Fine's Diversions for Orchestra.

Mr. Fine, who was in the audience and took a bow to warm applause afterward, has concocted four winning movements called Little Toccata, Flamingo Polka, Koko's Lullaby (Koko is Mr. Fine's poodle), and the Red Queen's Gavotte. Them music is filled with whimsies.

Then, too, there was the first Boston performance of Emanuel Vardi's Suite on American Folk Songs, played by Joseph de Pasquale (introduced by Mr. Dickerson as "one of the greatest viola players in the world"). There is no cause to doubt Mr. Dickson, for if Mr. de Pasquale were indeed not great, he could hardly hold down his position as principal violist of the Boston Symphony.

[illegible] violist starred.

Herald 10/30/60

Youth Concerts Are Sold Out

The Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall are sold out by subscription, in advance of their second season, which is to be opened on Saturday morning at 11:00, Nov. 5, by their founder and conductor, Harry Ellis Dickson. A fortunate situation for the enterprise, it will be disappointing to youngsters whose orders came too late. Subscribers unable to attend a concert could enable others to enjoy it by telephoning their ticket numbers to the Symphony Hall Box Office, as donations, to be sold for the benefit of the Concert Fund. The dates of the concerts are: Nov. 5, 12; Jan. 14, 21; March 18, 25. Each program is repeated on the following Saturday.

"Music of North and South America" is Mr. Dickson's theme for his opening program:

Alberto Ginastera (1916—): Final Dance from the Ballet, "Estrancia"
Jose Serebrier (1936—): Preludio from the Suite "South Americana"
Heitor Ville-Lobos (1887-1959): The Little Train
Nicholas Slonimsky (1894—): My Toy Balloon
Andres Sas (1900—): Hymn and Dance, from "Tres Estampas del Peru"
Irving Fine (1914—): Diversions for Orchestra
Emanuel Cardi (1917—): Suite on American Folk Songs, for Viola and Orchestra
Carlos Chavez (1899—): Sinfonia India

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 149,750
OCT 12 1960

Society: Boston Symphony to Offer Two Sets of Youth Concerts

By MARJORIE W. SHERMAN

No sooner does the Boston Symphony launch a regular season than the orchestra begins scheduling extra concerts, here and on tour. For its future season subscribers, youth concerts will begin on Nov. 5 in two sets of three concerts for $3. Sold-out last year, when the concerts for youngsters were revived at Symphony Hall, the series is already three-quarters subscribed for this year:

The hour-long concerts at 11 a.m. come on Jan. 14 and Mar. 18 after the Nov. 5 opening, and the second series, repeating the programs, is scheduled for Nov. 12, Jan. 21, and Mar. 21. All seats are reserved. Music of North and South America will set the theme as the concerts open.

Teachers struggling with bus-loads of eager young symphony-goers and parents with cars full of guests will be aided this year by an innovation planned by Mrs. Alexander H. Ladd Jr. of Dover. Working with her, Mrs. Manuel Kurland and Mrs. Ralph Katz of Brookline, have invited a committee of hostesses to help regular ushers and answer questions about the concerts. Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten is executive chairman of the Youth Concerts.

Wearing crimson ribbons to distinguish their group, hostesses will include Mrs. Noah Bielski of Newton Center, Mrs. Fidele Faillace of Brookline, Mrs. Harry Brenner of Walpole, Mrs. William Owen of Foxboro, Mrs. Irving Helman of Newton, Mrs. Germain Bouchard of Lowell, Mrs. Leonard Wolsky of Woburn, Mrs. David Misner of Scituate and Mrs. Samuel S. Rogers of Andover.

FOR THE 27TH TIME, Friends of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will meet to renew their pledge of loyalty to the orchestra at their annual gathering tomorrow at 4 p.m. Henry B. Cabot, president of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and chairman of the Friends; will speak, and Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in a surprise program.

Members of the orchestra will join the Friends at tea in the upper foyer after the concert, showing them pictures taken of the tour last Summer to the Far East.

Trustees receiving with Mr. Cabot will include Richard C. Paine, Henry A. Laughlin, John T. Noonan, Palfrey Perkins, Charles H. Stockton, Raymond S. Wilkins, Oliver Wolcott, Talcott M. Banks, Theodore P. Ferris, Francis W. Hatch, Harold D. Hodgkinson, C. D. Jackson, and E. Morton Jennings Jr.

Trustees emeritus include Philip R. Allen, Lewis Perry, Edward A. Taft, N. Penrose Hallowell and Mark A. DeWolfe Howe.

Joseph de Pasquale will be soloist in Vardi's Suite on American Folk Songs for Viola and Orchestra at the opening of the second season of Youth Concerts on Saturday morning in Symphony Hall. Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct.

Youth Concerts Sold Out

The Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, founded and conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, have already sold out all subscriptions for the second season, due to open Saturday morning at 11 o'clock. Those with tickets who cannot attend any performance are asked to telephone their seat numbers to Symphony Hall, so that other youngsters may go.

The program for the opening concert:

Ginastera's Final Dance from the Ballet, "Estancia"; Serebrier's Preludio from the Suite "South Americana"; Villa-Lobos's "The Little Train"; Slonimsky's "My Toy Balloon"; Sas's Hymn and Dance, from "Tres Estamas del Peru"; Fine's Diversions for Orchestra; Vardi's Suite on American Folk Songs, for Viola and Orchestra; and Chavez's Sinfonia India.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
GLOUCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 9,273
OCT 20 1960

Youth Concerts

A series of Youth Concerts on Saturday mornings from 10 a. m. to 12 noon at Symphony Hall will be presented during the school year 1960-1961 by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson.

Concerts for elementary and junior high school pupils will be held November 12, January 21, 1961 and March 25, 1961.

Parents interested in having their children attend the concerts are asked to sign the form sent home by the student and return the form and a check for $3 to the Memorial School office on or before Friday.

Checks should be made payable to Youth Concerts and mailed to Symphony Hall, Inc., Huntington Avenue, Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Advocate
SHARON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,200
OCT 13 1960

Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall

Young people from schools and private homes in this area have played a valuable role in an important cultural development. Their enthusiasm for the experimental series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, played last Fall and Winter by Boston Symphony musicians, has helped conductor Harry Ellis Dickson to venture a second season. In fact, applications for tickets for the new season have disposed of two-thirds of the supply, although the first concert does not take place until November 5.

Last season's experience proved the attractiveness of the programs for pupils of elementary and high schools coming in groups, and for younger listeners, averaging eight years, escorted by parents or relatives. The adults obviously also enjoyed the music, and the informal comments made by the conductor and his guest soloists, who included violin virtuoso Isaac Stern.

Again, Mr. Dickson will present three programs of Saturday mornings from eleven to twelve, and repeat each one on the Saturday following. Thus, two series are provided, for either set of three concerts. Adults may subscribe, if acting as escort. Applications may be addressed to: Youth Concerts Ticket Committee, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

The dates of performance will be:

First Series: November 5, January 14, March 18.

Second Series: November 12, January 21, March 25.

If planning to use school bus for transportation, contact Mrs. Edwards, Supervisor of vocal music. Committee Chairman, Mrs. Vaughn Hamilton.

Herald 11/6/60

MUSIC

SYMPHONY HALL

Youth Concert

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Harry Ellis Dickson conducting, presented the first of a series of Youth Concerts in Symphony Hall yesterday morning. The soloist was Joseph de Pasquale, viola. The program:

Argentina—Final Dance from the Ballet "Estancia" — Ginastera
Uruguay—Preludio from the Suite, "South Americana" — Serebrier
Brazil—The Little Train — Villa-Lobos
My Toy Balloon — Slonimsky
Peru—Hymn and Dance, from "Tres Estampas del Peru" — Sas
U. S.—Diversions for Orchestra — Fine
Suite on American Folk Songs, for Viola and Orchestra — Vardi
Mexico—Sinfonia India — Chavez

By ROBERT TAYLOR

A Youth Concert including one world premiere, one first U. S. performance, and two first Boston performances, is surely out of the ordinary. Thus did Harry Ellis Dickson launch his second series of performances for youngsters by Boston Symphony musicians yesterday forenoon in a jammed, though decorous, auditorium.

The idea of the concert was ingenious: music of contemporary North and South America. One encounters the latter seldom. The program represented talent from five Ibero-American nations and our own country; and I found Irving Fine's "Diversions for Orchestra" (first performance) fetching; Jose Serebrier's prelude (first Boston hearing) interestingly textured and swaying with infectious samba rhythms; Andres Sas's Hymn and Dance (U. S. premiere) strongly colored and folkish as the checks of a serape; and Emmanuel Vardi's Suite on American Folk Songs (local premiere) a pensive and handsome arrangement of four appealing British and American-rooted tunes. Mr. Vardi, incidentally, is a member of the BSO viola section, and his piece was stated sensitively by his colleague, Joseph de Pasquale.

A children's concert, however, must be regarded from two viewpoints: the educational as well as the aesthetic. I'm afraid that if much of the music attracted me, it was a little out of the range of the kids. There was, I thought, too much talking about the scores, and not enough practical illustration such as the moment when Mr. de Pasquale and Alfred Krips compared the relative size of the viola and violin or a percussionist popped balloons during a climatic circus episode in Nicholas Slonimsky's "The Toy Balloon."

Mr. Slonimsky was narrator for his own work, which is wonderfully buoyant child-like thing based on a Rio Carnival song. He is an erudite, witty, warm and whimsical personality (he even sang and displayed an exquisitely grating vibrato) but the wrong narrator for this piece, since he has an accent slightly thinner than borscht. But all honor to Mr. Slonimsky, to Harry Ellis Dickson, the idealistic regisseur, and all the forces involved; they are on the right track, I hope, merely, that the approach doesn't become too lofty. The capacity audience appeared beguiled; it was bracing to hear a youth concert outside the scope of the "Nutcracker," for an adult. The program will be repeated next Saturday morning.

Music 11-5-60

Children Appreciate Saturday Concerts

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—The youth concerts on Saturday mornings in Symphony hall, Boston, by members of the celebrated orchestra, and conducted by the talented member of the organization, Harry Ellis Dixon, opened this morning on a resounding note of success. As expected the event was a capacity audience of youngsters who showed a tremendous appreciation of what was happening on the stage.

The program will be repeated next Saturday morning and included in the list were selections representing such countries as the United States, Argentina, Uruguay, Brazil, Peru, and Mexico.

Tito Gobbi

Composers whose music appeared on the program included Ginastera, Jose Serebrier, Villa-Lobos, Slonimsky (in the role of narrator), Irving Fine, Emanuel Vardi and Chavez.

Over a period of years possibly no living baritone has achieved such a complete success as Tito Gobbi. A giant among baritones, Mr. Gobbi has received the toast of musical experts and lovers of opera throughout the entire world.

A native of Italy, he is constantly on stage either in the leading opera houses or in motion pictures. In opera he has essayed the leading roles in the entire standard repertoire and in motion pictures has been acclaimed for his singing in films of entirely performed operas.

His appearances in America have been restricted to only a few times. However, his singing at the Metropolitan has been one of the sensations of the past decade. The notice that has announced his appearance in Boston with The Opera Group, incorporated, in the role of Iago in Verdi's "Otello" has created the biggest sensation in town for many years.

He will be joined in this production by several famed artists among them, Lucine Amara, Louis Sgarro and Eunice Alberts. This production scheduled for Dec. 7, 11 and 14, will be the second vehicle to be presented in the Verdi festival portion of the company's 1960-61 season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Messenger
MARBLEHEAD, Mass.
Weekly Ind. Rep.
Circ. 3,206
NOV 3 1960

MARBLEHEAD STUDENTS ATTEND YOUTH CONCERTS

Marblehead students are again provided an opportunity to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Muench, perform at concerts arranged especially for public school students. Three Youth Concerts have been scheduled — the first in November, the second in January and the last in March.

Accompanying a group of forty junior high students who will travel to Boston by bus this Saturday, will be Mrs. Josephine R. Gleason, music supervisor; Mrs. Peryle H. Frost, John A. M. Dow, and William W. Peabody, all members of the junior high school staff.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
NOV 6 1960

Dickson Begins Second Youth Concerts Season

YOUTH CONCERTS at Symphony Hall began a second season yesterday morning. Harry Ellis Dickson conducted the following program: Ginastera: Final Dance from Ballet "Estancia;" Serebrier: Preludio from Suite "South America" (first performance in Boston); Villa-Lobos: "The Little Train;" Nicolas Slonimsky: "My Toy Balloon" (narrated by the composer); Sas: Hymn and Dance (first U.S. performance); Irving Fine: Diversions for Orchestra (first performance); Emanuel Vardi: Suite of American Folk Songs (Joseph De Pasquale, viola soloist) Chavez: Sinfonia India.

By CYRUS DURGIN

Harry Ellis Dickson began the second season of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall yesterday morning to a subscription audience of youngsters—and a few adults—who had bought out the capacity of the hall in advance. Accordingly, the news of local music for the young is doubly good.

The overall pattern will be the same this season as last, three programs, each to be performed twice a week apart, thus making six concerts in all. Mr. Dickson's opener obviously had been planned very carefully and with much work, and it was extraordinarily interesting: music from North and South America by seven living composers and one—Brazil's Heitor Villa-Lobos—who died a year ago the 17th of this month.

Moreover, four of the pieces never had been heard here before. Diversions for Orchestra, an instrumental arrangement of four piano compositions by Irving Fine of Brandeis University, received first performance anywhere. They are cute, droll miniatures nicely orchestrated, spiced with dissonant harmony. The composer took a bow from his seat in the auditorium.

Emanuel Vardi's viola-and-orchestra version of four American folk songs—"The Unconstant Lover," "I Will and I Must Get Married," "The Wayfaring Stranger" and "On the Banks of the Old Pee Dee"—proved to be beautiful orchestration beneath lyrical solos. Joseph De Pasquale, the Boston Symphony's first violist, played them most excellently.

Conductor Dickson has a fine way of explaining to young listeners what the music is about, and of telling them the special qualities of instruments used. Each performance by an orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians was preceded by a friendly little chat.

Along this line there was a king-sized dividend in the presence of Nicolas Slonimsky to narrate his own "My Toy Balloon," which is a set of variations on a Brazilian tune. Mr. Slonimsky did a superb job and was immensely funny in doing it. Just to point up the balloon theme (pun intended), percussionist Harold Thompson brought down to stage front a lovely collection of balloons, and in the finale popped them off, one by one with a hatpin, as the orchestra sounded out loud chords.

This program will be repeated next Saturday morning at 11.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Natick Bulletin
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,011
NOV 10 1960

Youth Concert At Symphony

The Second of the series of Youth concerts by the Boston Symphony will be held Saturday November 12, at Symphony Hall in Boston.

About sixty students of the Natick Public Schools will attend, transportation to be provided by the Natick Music Association.

The program promises to be of great interest especially for Natick. Among the selections to be played will be those by Irving Fine of this Community. Mr. Fine is with Brandeis University. The concert will feature Music of North and South America.

For students who are attending the concerts the bus schedule is as follows:

Pupils will be picked up at the following schools; Saturday November 12, 9:40 a.m. Coolidge Junior High, 9:50 a.m. Brown School, 10:00 a.m. Wilson Junior High.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,670
NOV 3 1960

Second Season Begins For Youth Concerts

LINCOLN -- The first Youth Concert at Symphony Hall will take place Nov. 5. This is the second season for the Boston Symphony concerts for young people conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson. Again, Mr. Dickson will present three programs on Saturday mornings from 11 to 12, and repeat each one on the Saturday following.

Two series are provided, with tickets offered at $3 for either set of three concerts. Adults may subscribe, if acting as escort. Applications may be addressed to Youth Concerts Ticket Committee, Symphony Hall, Boston 15. Dates of concerts will be: First series, Nov. 5, Jan. 14, March 18. Second series, Nov. 12, Jan. 21, March 25. Mr. Leonard Moss of Lincoln is one of the musicians who will participate.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Wayland Enterprise
NATICK, Mass.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 400
NOV 10 1960

Youth Concert At Symphony

The Second of the series of Youth concerts by the Boston Symphony will be held Saturday November 12, at Symphony Hall in Boston.

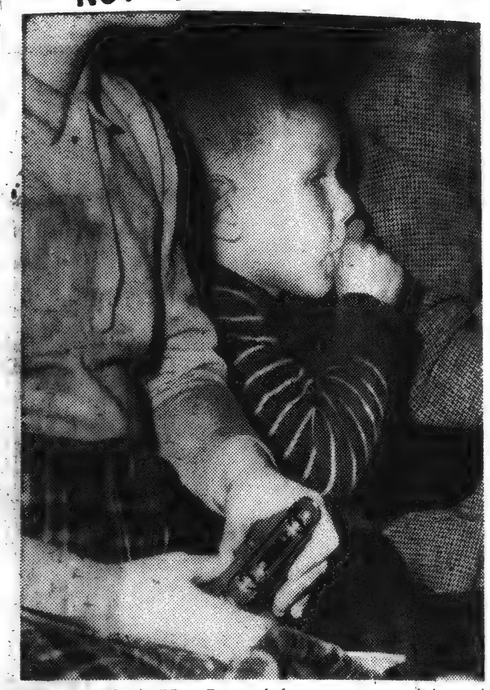
About sixty students of the Natick Public Schools will attend, transportation to be provided by the Natick Music Association.

The program promises to be of great interest especially for Natick. Among the selections to be played will be those by Irving Fine of this Community. Mr. Fine is with Brandeis University. The concert will feature Music of North and South America.

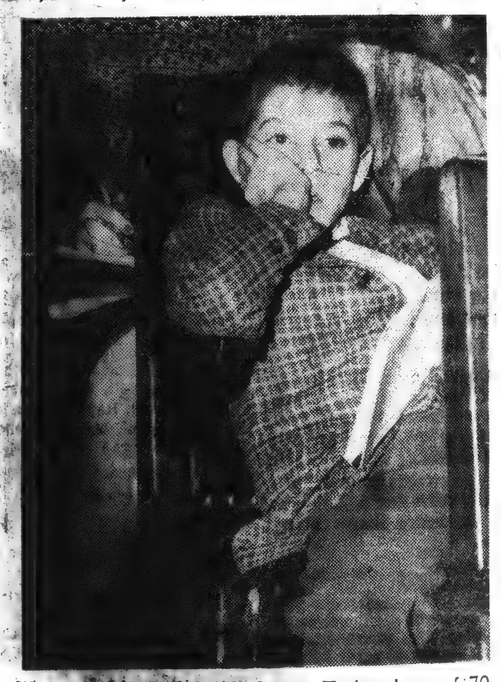
For students who are attending the concerts the bus schedule is as follows:

Pupils will be picked up at the following schools; Saturday November 12, 9:40 a.m. Coolidge Junior High, 9:50 a.m. Brown School, 10:00 a.m. Wilson Junior High.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111
NOV 13 1960



SOLACE SEEKER—Pinned between an adult and camera bug, David Atlas of 101 Craftsland Rd., Chestnut Hill, retires behind his thumb at Symphony Hall concert. The concerts continue for six Saturdays each year.



"I LIKE THAT," Mark Stuart Trahtenberg of 70 Wiswell Rd., Newton Center, seems to be saying as he concentrates on the Symphony Hall musical program. Conductor was Harry Ellis Dickson, leading members of the Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News-Weekly
CHELMSFORD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,830

NOV 10 1960

ATTENDING YOUTH CONCERTS in Boston this season are (Front L-R) Dolores Strobl, David Page and Sandy Page; (Rear) James Pettee, Lincoln Clark III. Many others from town are also going to these concerts which are very popular.

Local Young Folk To Attend Boston Concerts For Youth

More than 100 young music-lovers are planning to attend the current series of Youth concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, presented by 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson. Three concerts will be given in pairs, one on Nov. 5 and 12, one on Jan. 14 and 21, and one on March 18 and 25, so that all who wish may hear the entire series of three.

From Chelmsford, the group of concert goers includes Bill, Cass and Gayton Bartlett Edith and Andrew Bragdon, Josephine Churchill Nancy, Alan and Lincoln Clark III, Cheryl Cooke, Barbara Fulton, Kathy Douglas and Ronald Latham, Warren and Mickey Miller, Sandra and Susan Page, James Pettee, Susan, Mark and David Sills, and Diane and Dolores Strobl.

The series now in its second year, is extremely popular and tickets are in great demand. Mrs. Germain Bouchard (GL 5-5115) is the ticket chairman for the Greater-Lowell area, and she urges that any ticket-holder who cannot use his ticket for any one of the three concerts get in touch with her so that one of these on the long waiting list may have an opportunity to hear these splendid programs.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

NOV 17 1960

BROOKLINE PIANIST WINS DUBBS AWARD

At the Annual Auditions for the Harry Dubbs Memorial Award of the Brookline Youth Concerts, held Nov. 10, Alan Summers, 13 year old pianist son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Summers, of Brookline, was chosen as the winner by the following judges: Arthur Fiedler, Conductor, Boston "Pops"; Harry Ellis Dickson, Conductor, Brookline Youth Concerts; John Corley, Director of Music, Brookline Schools; Mrs. Marion Dubbs and Mrs. Mark Cahn, Youth Concerts Committee.

Alan Summers has won an impressive list of awards from the National Federation of Music Clubs, International Piano Recording Festival, National Guild of Piano Teachers and recording competition of American College of Musicians.

Alan played the First Movement, Concerto in C. Major by Mozart in this competition. He will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next youth concert on Dec. 10.

Other young musicians in the competition included: Robert Helman, Trumpet; Alexander Schwartz and Emily Paxon, Violinists; Stephen Stember, Piano and Stanley Rose, Clarinet.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Post
LYNN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 20,000

NOV 13 1960

MARBLEheadlines

By ELAINE TALBOT

UNITARIAN CHURCH LAYMEN'S LEAGUE held a supper last Monday at Bide-A-Wee Restaurant with Samuel Swasey as chairman. Members then went to the church auditorium to hear Noel Reebenacker, head coach of the Marblehead High football team, as he showed films of recent games. A hobby show and discussion was held on Wednesday by the New Dorcas Society. Hostesses were Mrs. Samuel Swasey and Mrs. Howard Dolliber assisted by Mrs. Samuel Crowell, Jr., Mrs. Greeley Curtis, Miss Edith Downing, Mrs. Herbert Gilman, Mrs. Judson Morse, Mrs. George McAnual, Miss Gertrude Neilson, Mrs. Alice Nichols, Mrs. Philip Stocker, Mrs. Arthur Swasey and Mrs. Edward Walkley.

MARBLEHEAD ARTS ASSOCIATION will hold a dessert card party at the King Hooper Mansion, Thursday at 7:30 p.m. Mrs. Arthur L. Collier is chairman. Table prizes were donated by Mrs. Madalyn Joyce Brown. Mrs. I. Laurence Roffman and Mrs. Roy H. Gardner are in charge of dessert. Reservations may be phoned to the Marblehead Arts Association.

MEMBERS of MARBLEHEAD POST 32, A. L., the auxiliary, and other veterans organizations and their auxiliaries and guests have been invited by Rev. Norman D. Kretzmann, pastor of the Clifton Lutheran church to attend services at that church, 154 Humphrey st. this morning. It is requested that members wishing to attend services assemble at A. L. post headquarters at 10:30 a.m. or in front of the church in uniform or Legion hat, if possible. Services will start at 11:00 a.m. The next regular meeting of A.L. Post 32 will be the annual session held at the Legion building on Monday at 8 p.m.

MARBLEHEAD STUDENTS were again provided an opportunity yesterday to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Muench, perform at a concert arranged especially for public school students. The second concert will be in January and the third in March. Forty junior high students taking advantage of the opportunity were accompanied by Mrs. Josephine R. Gleason, music supervisor, Mrs. Peryle H. Frost, John A. M. Dow and William W. Peabody, all members of the junior high school staff.

Mrs. Lillian Lucas, Marblehead's visiting nurse, reveals that she and her assistant, Mrs. Florence Barker, made 3,005 calls this year. The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Gordon Peach on Kenneth rd. Newly elected officers and directors are: first vice president, Miss Eliza S. Brown. Directors for three years, Mrs. William Gray, Mrs. Raymond Abbott, and Mrs. Robert Rideout; director for one year is Mrs. Albert Hatch.

Youth Concert In Special Performance

For the benefit of boys and girls who were physically or financially unable to attend Harry Ellis Dickson's recently concluded Youth Concerts in Symphony Hall, a special performance tomorrow morning is being sponsored by the Lincoln and Therese Filene Foundation. Tried out last spring, this idea created so much enjoyment among those to whom such an experience was new and wonderful, that this repetition resulted.

Looking forward with special interest to joining the audience in front of Mr. Dickson and his large contingent of Boston Symphony musicians is Mrs. Filene's daughter, Mrs. Jouette Shouse of Washington, D. C. She missed last year's occasion because she was in Europe, but heard such gratifying reports that she made it a definite plan to attend this time.

* * *

The committee is headed by Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb of Boston. Serving with her are: Mrs. Leonard Baron of Weston, Mrs. Germain Bouchard of Lowell, Mrs. Harry Brenner of Wayside, Mrs. Martina M. Driscoll of Hingham, Mrs. Fedele Faillace of Brookline, Mrs. William Morton of Cohasset, Mrs. Leo Pistorino of Winchester, Julian Sobin of Newton, and Mrs. Leonard Wolsky of Woburn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Citizen
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,400

NOV 17 1960

Youth Concerts At Symphony Hall

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the first of a series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall on the past two Saturday mornings to an enthusiastic capacity audience.

Forty-four of Sudbury's young people attended these performances along with students from all the Greater Boston suburbs.

This is the second season for these outstanding concerts with Harry Ellis Dickson, the founder and director, conducting. Mr. Dickson, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra chose for his theme, 'Music of Contemporary North and South America.' The program represented talent from five areas of South America and our own country and included one world premiere, one first United States performance and two first Boston performances which is surely out of the ordinary. Three of the composers were present and took part in either conducting or narrating their own works.

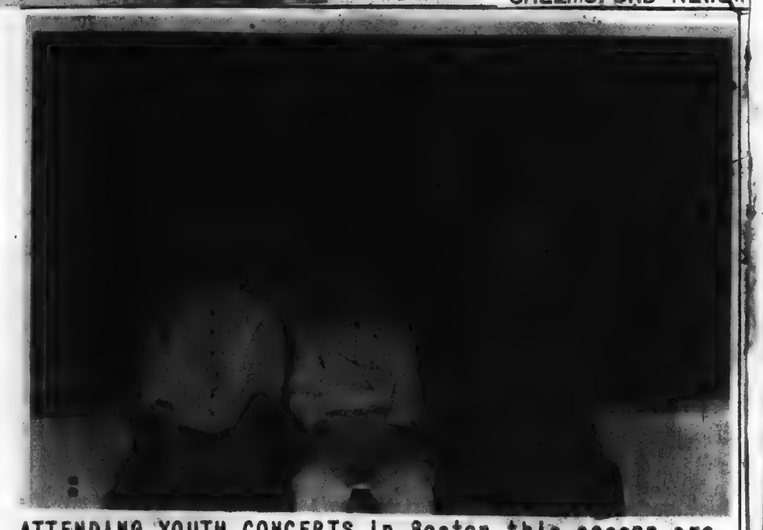
It is encouraging to see more and more youngsters from Sudbury taking advantage of this wonderful opportunity to hear and see members of the world's greatest symphony orchestra perform.

Mrs. John Walker, new Sudbury chairman of the Youth Concerts, reports the concerts were sold out by subscription well in advance of their second season which began on Saturday morning, November 5. It has been disappointing to many youngsters whose orders came too late. Mrs. Walker urges all Sudbury subscribers unable to attend a concert to enable others to enjoy it by giving the ticket numbers to the Symphony Hall Box Office, as donations, to be sold for the benefit of the Concert Fund.

Assisting Mrs. Walker have been the music directors in the Sudbury Schools, Mr. Robert Wentworth, Miss Olive Smith, Mr. Dean Aldrich, and Mrs. Laura Pollock, Guidance Director at Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School.

The following young people in Sudbury who subscribed this season are: Martha Curran, Christina Debye, Rosemary Debye, Keith Emmons, Sharon Fitzpatrick, Kathy Hennessey, John Kane, Robert Kirschner, Robert Kitchin, Edith Phelps, Karen Rittenberg, Robert Streeter, Thomas Tarpey, Peter Tighe, Stuart Walker, Barbara Anderson, Joy Child, Judy Child, Penny Child, Shirley Clark, Susan Clippinger, Judy Davis, Lois Dickey, Jill Frye, Doris Grayson, Vianna Heath, Emily Kennedy, Martha Norton, Lois O'Hara, Susan Plumley, Jim Powers, Janet Sampson, Richard Walker, and our Exchange students from Norway, Astrid Eik, Winka Mathieson and Thorild Nielson.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Weekly
CHELMSFORD, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,830
NOV 10 1960



ATTENDING YOUTH CONCERTS in Boston this season are (Front L-R) Dolores Strobl, David Page and Sandy Page; (Rear) James Pettee, Lincoln Clark III. Many others from town are also going to these concerts which are very popular.

Local Young Folk To Attend Boston Concerts For Youth

More than 100 young music-lovers are planning to attend the current series of Youth concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, presented by 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson. Three concerts will be given in pairs, one on Nov. 5 and 12, one on Jan. 14 and 21, and one on March 18 and 25, so that all who wish may hear the entire series of three.

From Chelmsford, the group of concert goers includes Bill, Cass and Gayton Bartlett Edith and Andrew Bragdon, Josephine Churchill Nancy, Alan and Lincoln Clark III, Cheryl Cooke, Barbara Fulton, Kathy Douglas and Ronald Latham, Warren and Mickey Miller, Sandra and Susan Page, James Pettee, Susan, Mark and David Sills, and Diane and Dolores Strobl.

The series now in its second year, is extremely popular and tickets are in great demand. Mrs. Germain Bouchard (GL 5-5115) is the ticket chairman for the Greater-Lowell area, and she urges that any ticket-holder who cannot use his ticket for any one of the three concerts get in touch with her so that one of these on the long waiting list may have an opportunity to hear these splendid programs.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
NOV 17 1960

BROOKLINE PIANIST WINS DUBBS AWARD

At the Annual Auditions for the Harry Dubbs Memorial Award of the Brookline Youth Concerts, held Nov. 10, Alan Summers, 13 year old pianist son of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Summers, of Brookline, was chosen as the winner by the following judges: Arthur Fiedler, Conductor Boston 'Pops'; Harry Ellis Dickson, Conductor Brookline Youth Concerts; John Corley, Director of Music, Brookline Schools; Mrs. Marion Dubbs and Mrs. Mark Cahn, Youth Concerts Committee.

Alan Summers has won an impressive list of awards from the National Federation of Music Clubs, International Piano Recording Festival, National Guild of Piano Teachers and recording competition of American College of Musicians.

Alan played the First Movement, Concerto in C Major by Mozart in this competition. He will play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the next youth concert on Dec. 10.

Other young musicians in the competition included: Robert Helman, Trumpet; Alexandra Schwartz and [illegible], Violinists; Stephen [illegible], Piano and Stanley [illegible] net.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Post
LYNN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 20,000
NOV 13 1960

MARBLEheadlines

By ELAINE TALBOT

UNITARIAN CHURCH LAYMEN'S LEAGUE held a supper last Monday at Bide-A-Wee Restaurant with Samuel Swasey as chairman. Members then went to the church auditorium to hear Noel Reebenacker, head coach of the Marblehead High football team, as he showed films of recent games. A hobby show and discussion was held on Wednesday by the New Dorcas Society. Hostesses were Mrs. Samuel Swasey and Mrs. Howard Dolliber assisted by Mrs. Samuel Crowell, Jr., Mrs. Greeley Curtis, Miss Edith Downing, Mrs. Herbert Gilman, Mrs. Judson Morse, Mrs. George McAnual, Miss Gertrude Neilson, Mrs. Alice Nichols, Mrs. Philip Stocker, Mrs. Arthur Swasey and Mrs. Edward Walkley.

MARBLEHEAD ARTS ASSOCIATION will hold a dessert card party at the King Hooper Mansion, Thursday at 7:30 p.m. Mrs. Arthur L. Collier is chairman. Table prizes were donated by Mrs. Matalyn Joyce Brown. Mrs. I. Laurence Roffman and Mrs. Roy H. Gardner are in charge of dessert. Reservations may be phoned to the Marblehead Arts Association.

MEMBERS of MARBLEHEAD POST 32, A. L., the auxiliary, and other veterans organizations and their auxiliaries and guests have been invited by Rev. Norman D. Kretzmann, pastor of the Clifton Lutheran church to attend services at that church, 154 Humphrey st. this morning. It is requested that members wishing to attend services assemble at A. L. post headquarters at 10:30 a.m. or in front of the church in uniform or Legion hat, if possible. Services will start at 11:00 a.m. The next regular meeting of A.L. Post 32 will be the annual session held at the Legion building on Monday at 8 p.m.

MARBLEHEAD STUDENTS were again provided an opportunity yesterday to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra, under the direction of Charles Muench, perform at a concert arranged especially for public school students. The second concert will be in January and the third in March. Forty junior high students taking advantage of the opportunity were accompanied by Mrs. Josephine R. Gleason, music supervisor, Mrs. Peryle H. Frost, John A. M. Dow and William W. Peabody, all members of the junior high school staff.

Mrs. Lillian Lucas, Marblehead's visiting nurse, reveals that she and her assistant, Mrs. Florence Barker, made 3,005 calls this year. The meeting was held at the home of Mrs. Gordon Peach on Kenneth rd. Newly elected officers and directors are: first vice president, Miss Eliza S. Brown. Directors for three years, Mrs. William Gray, Mrs. Raymond Abbott, and Mrs. Robert Rideout; director for one year, is Mrs. Albert [illegible].

Youth Concert In Special Performance

For the benefit of boys and girls who were physically or financially unable to attend Harry Ellis Dickson's recently concluded Youth Concerts in Symphony Hall, a special performance tomorrow morning is being sponsored by the Lincoln and Therese Filene Foundation. Tried out last spring, this idea created so much enjoyment among those to whom such an experience was new, and was wonderful, that this repetition resulted.

Looking forward with special interest to joining the audience in front of Mr. Dickson and his large contingent of Boston Symphony musicians is Mrs. Filene's daughter, Mrs. Jouette Shouse of Washington, D. C. She missed last year's occasion because she was in Europe, but heard such gratifying reports that she made it a definite plan to attend this time.

• • •

The committee is headed by Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb of Boston. Serving with her are Mrs. Leonard Baron of Weston, Mrs. Germain Bouchard of Lowell, Mrs. Harry Brenner of Waltham, Mrs. Martina M. Driscoll of Hingham, Mrs. Fedele Fauno of Brookline, Mrs. William Morton of Cohasset, Mrs. Leo Pistorino of Winchester, Julian Sobin of Newton, and Mrs. Leonard Walker of Woburn.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Citizen
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,400
NOV 17 1960

Youth Concerts At Symphony Hall

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the first of a series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall on the past two Saturday mornings to an enthusiastic capacity audience.

Forty-four of Sudbury's young people attended these performances along with students from all the Greater Boston suburbs.

This is the second season for these outstanding concerts with Harry Ellis Dickson, the founder and director, conducting. Mr. Dickson, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra chose for his theme, Music of Contemporary North and South America. The program represented talent from five areas of South America and our own country and included one world premiere, one first United States performance and two first Boston performances which is surely out of the ordinary. Three of the composers were present and took part in either conducting or narrating their own works.

It is encouraging to see more and more youngsters from Sudbury taking advantage of this wonderful opportunity to hear and see members of the world's greatest symphony orchestra perform.

Mrs. John Walker, new Sudbury chairman of the Youth Concerts, reports the concerts were sold out by subscription well in advance of their second season which began on Saturday morning, November 5. It has been disappointing to many youngsters whose orders came too late. Mrs. Walker urges all Sudbury subscribers unable to attend a concert to enable others to enjoy it by giving the ticket numbers to the Symphony Hall Box Office, as donations, to be sold for the benefit of the Concert Fund.

Assisting Mrs. Walker have been the music directors in the Sudbury Schools, Mr. Robert Wentworth, Miss Olive Smith, Mr. Dean Aldrich, and Mrs. Laura Pollock, Guidance Director at Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School.

The following young people in Sudbury who subscribed this season are: Martha Curran, Christina Debye, Rosemary Debye, Keith Emmons, Sharon Fitzpatrick, Kathy Hennessey, John Kane, Robert Kirschner, Robert Kitchin, Edith Phelps, Karen Rittenberg, Robert Streeter, Thomas Turpey, Peter Tighe, Stuart Walker, Barbara Anderson, Joy Child, Judy Child, Penny Child, Shirley Clark, Susan Clippinger, Judy Davis, Lois Dickey, Jill Frye, Doris Grayson, Vianna Heath, Emily Kennedy, Martha Norton, Lois O'Hara, Susan Plumley, Jan Powers, Janet Sampson, Richard Walker, and our Exchange students from Norway, Astrid Elk, Winka Mathiesen and Thorild Nielson.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Fence Viewer
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,670

NOV 17 1960

Youth Concerts At Symphony Hall Held

SUDBURY -- Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the first of a series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall on two Saturday mornings Nov. 5 and 12 to an enthusiastic capacity audience.

Forty-four of Sudbury's young people attended these performances along with students from all the Greater Boston suburbs.

This is the second season for these outstanding concerts with Harry Ellis Dickson, the founder and director, conducting. Mr. Dickson is well known as the concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and for the opening program this year he chose for his theme, "Music of Contempory North and South America". The program represented talent from five areas of South America and our own country and included one world premiere, one first United States performance and two first Boston performances which is surely out of the ordinary. Three of the composers were present and took part in either conducting or narrating their own works.

It is encouraging to see more and more youngsters from Sudbury taking advantage of this wonderful opportunity to hear and see members of the world's greatest symphony orchestra perform.

Mrs. John H. Walker, new Sudbury chairman of the Youth Concerts, reports the concerts were sold out by subscription well in advance of their second season which began on Saturday morning, Nov. 5. The same concert was repeated on the following Saturday, Nov. 12. The remaining dates of the concerts are: Jan. 14, 21; March 18, 25. Each program is repeated on the following Saturday. Mrs. Walker urges all Sudbury subscribers unable to attend a concert to enable others to enjoy it by giving the ticket numbers to the Symphony Hall Box Office, as donations, to be sold for the benefit of the Concert Fund.

Next spring the drive for the third series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall will begin. These concerts are open to all students, elementary through college plus parents and other interested persons at the low cost of $3.00 for the series of three concerts.

Assisting Mrs. Walker have been the music directors in the Sudbury schools, Mr. Robert Wentworth, Miss Olive Smith, Mr. Dean Aldrich, and Mrs. Laura Pollock, Guidance Director at Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School.

The following young people in Sudbury who subscribed this season are: Martha Curran, Christina Debye, Rosemary Debye, Keith Emmons, Sharon Fitzpatrick, Kathy Hennessey, John Kane, Robert Kirschner, Robert Kitchin, Edith Phelps, Karen Rittenberg, Robert Streeter, Thomas Tarpey, Peter Tighe, Stuart Walker, Barbara Anderson, Joy Child, Penny Child, Shirley Clark, Susan Clippinger, Judy Davis, Lois Dickey, Jill Frye, Doris Grayson, Vianna Heath, Emily Kennedy, Martha Norton, Lois O'Hara, Susan Plumley, Jim Powers, Jane Sampson, Richard Walker, and our Exchange students from Norway, Astrid Eik, Winka Mathieson and Thorild Nielson.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Wayland Citizen
SUDBURY, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,500

NOV 17 1960

Youth Concerts At Symphony Hall

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra presented the first of a series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall on the past two Saturday mornings to an enthusiastic capacity audience.

Forty-four of Sudbury's young people attended these performances along with students from all the Greater Boston suburbs.

This is the second season for these outstanding concerts with Harry Ellis Dickson, the founder and director, conducting. Mr. Dickson, concert master of the Boston Symphony Orchestra chose for his theme, 'Music of Contemporary North and South America.' The program represented talent from five areas of South America and our own country and included one world premiere, one first United States performance and two first Boston performances which is surely out of the ordinary. Three of the composers were present and took part in either conducting or narrating their own works.

It is encouraging to see more and more youngsters from Sudbury taking advantage of this wonderful opportunity to hear and see members of the world's greatest symphony orchestra perform.

Mrs. John Walker, new Sudbury chairman of the Youth Concerts, reports the concerts were sold out by subscription well in advance of their second season which began on Saturday morning, November 5. It has been disappointing to many youngsters whose orders came too late. Mrs. Walker urges all Sudbury subscribers unable to attend a concert to enable others to enjoy it by giving the ticket numbers to the Symphony Hall Box Office, as donations, to be sold for the benefit of the Concert Fund.

Assisting Mrs. Walker have been the music directors in the Sudbury Schools, Mr. Robert Wentworth, Miss Olive Smith, Mr. Dean Aldrich, and Mrs. Laura Pollock, Guidance Director at Lincoln-Sudbury Regional High School.

The following young people in Sudbury who subscirbed this season are: Martha Curran, Christina Debye, Rosemary Debye, Keith Emmons, Sharon Fitzpatrick, Kathy Hennessey, John Kane, Robert Kirschner, Robert Kitchin, Edith Phelps, Karen Rittenberg, Robert Streeter, Thomas Tarpey, Peter Tighe, Stuart Walker, Barbara Anderson, Joy Child, Judy Child, Penny Child, Shirley Clark, Susan Clippinger, Judy Davis, Lois Dickey, Jill Frye, Doris Grayson, Vianna Heath, Emily Kennedy, Martha Norton, Lois O'Hara, Susan Plumley, Jim Powers, Jane Sampson, Richard Walker, and our Exchange students from Norway, Astrid Eik, Winka Mathieson and Thorild Nielson.

LAFAYETTE, LA.
ADVERTISER
D. 20,006 S. 19,253

NOV 20 1960

Records

Death Rites Inspire Great Musical Works

By HUGH A. MULLIGAN
AP Newsfeatures Writer

The Requiem Mass, probably because of the haunting appeal of death and judgment as a theme and the masterful poetry of the ages - old liturgy, has always fascinated composers.

From the earliest days of Gregorian chant, the booming solemnity of the "Dies Irae, Dies Illa . . ." (days of wrath and days of mourning), the stately march of the "Kyries" (Lord, have mercy), the moving plaintive plea of "Libera me, Domine, deMorta Aeterna" (Deliver me, Lord, from eternal death) and all the other magnificent passages in the Catholic burial rites have evoked some of the world's greatest music from composers of many religious and national backgrounds.

Writers as miles and styles apart as Berlioz, Bruckner, Brahms, Cherubini, Delius, Dvorak, Faure, Gossec, Mehul, Mozart, Palestrina and Verdi all have been inspired to write Requiems.

Two of the most famous Requiems, Berlioz's and Verdi's, have been the subject of recent recordings by several companies both here and in Europe.

Verdi, who detested writing music for special occasions and seldom was inspired to write anything without first receiving a commission, came to write his Requiem almost by chance. When Rossini died in 1868, Verdi hit upon the idea of having 13 Italian composers collaborate on writing a Requiem in memory of their famous countryman. Verdi himself wrote the "Libera me," the prayer which the priest says when he blesses the body at the end of Mass, but the whole idea fell through when a row developed over which composers should be selected to contribute the other movements.

Verdi, as it happened, was never particularly attached to Rossini but he was tremendously devoted to Alessandro Manzoni, the great Italian novelist and patriot. When Manzoni died in 1873, Verdi was too broken up to attend the funeral of the man whom he constantly referred to as "a saint," but he was moved to complete his Requiem Mass. The work was first performed on the anniversary of Manzoni's death, with Verdi himself conducting. Music critic George Bernard Shaw called it Verdi's greatest work. Other critics regard it as the finest Requiem ever written.

Berlioz started out to write his Requiem in honor of his fellow Frenchmen who had fallen in the Revolution of 1830, but saw his chance to have it played at the funeral of Gen. Damremont, who was killed in the fighting at Constantine in Algeria. During the funeral, Berlioz hid behind the drums because he wanted to keep his eye on conductor Habeneck, a close friend of Cherubini who also had just completed a Requiem. At a crucial moment in a movement that required close coordination between orchestra and chorus, Habeneck suddenly dropped his baton and pecked at his snuffbox. Berlioz, arriving like the cavalry, dashed out from behind the drums and gave the needed downbeat. Experts still argue whether Berlioz's version of the snuff box episode is a true one, but there is no argument about the magnificence of his Requiem.

Among the recent recordings of these famous works, RCA Victor's "Verdi Requiem" is notable as the last recording made by the late Swedish tenor Jussi Bjoerling and for Fritz Reiner's inspired conducting of the Vienna Philharmonic Orchestra. Capitol's excellent recording of the same work features Tullio Serafin conducting the orchestra and chorus of the Rome Opera House and tenor Eugenio Fernandi.

Westminster's recording of "Berlioz Requiem" was made in the chapel of Hotel des Invalides, where the work had its premier, and features the Orchestra of the Theater National Opera under Herman Scherchen. RCA Victor's superbly mounted album of the Berlioz work is preferred mainly because it had the advantage of one of the world's great orchestras, the Boston Symphony under the baton of Charles Munch.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript
DEDHAM, Mass.
Circ. 5,427

MAY 4 1961

Symphony Youth Concert Series Aided in Dedham

Three Dedham women are contributing their time and efforts in behalf of the Saturday morning Youth Concert Series at Boston Symphony Hall. Mrs. Harry Bornhofft of 18 Thompson St., is ticket chairman for the town. She is assisted by Mrs. Leland Proctor of 4 Harvard Place, and Miss Rhona Swartz.

The concerts, sold out the past two seasons, are conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson with 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. There will be two series of three concerts each. The first series will be performed on Nov. 4, Jan. 6 and Mar. 3. The second is scheduled for Nov. 11, Jan. 13 and Mar. 10.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle & News
Sentinel
STOUGHTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,156

MAY 25 1961

ANNOUNCES SERIES OF YOUTH CONCERTS

Saturday morning Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, will be offered again in the 1961-62 season. Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in two series of three concerts each, a pair of concerts with identical programs to be played a week apart. The first series is scheduled for Nov. 4, Jan. 6, and March 3; the second series Nov. 11, Jan. 13, and March 10. All will be given at Symphony Hall Saturdays at 11 A. M., and are planned to last about one hour.

Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten is executive director. In Stoughton, Mrs. Joseph Tobin is ticket chairman.

Young people who wish to subscribe to the Youth Concerts may consult their school instrumental music director, Irving Schein or Mrs. Joseph Tobin. Bus transportation to and from the concerts will be supplied by the Instrumental Music Club of Stoughton.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

South Shore
Weekly Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,562

MAY 25 1961

YOUTH CONCERT

Tickets and information on the Youth Concert series for 1961-1962 season may be obtained from Mrs. S. Edward Eaton 100 Otis St., Hingham, Tel. Ri.-9-2812.

Over 60 boys and girls had the opportunity to hear the Boston Symphony Orchestra and outstanding soloists during this past season. It is hoped that all people from Grade 5 to 9 will avail themselves of this excellent opportunity.

KART

Dream Comes True For Two Young Musicians

By GAIL KREDENSER

Some boys may be chained to a piano or a violin by an apron string. Under mother's watchful eye their fingers may be running down a scale, but what they're really dreaming about is running down a field for a touchdown.

But, if you are 13-year-old Eugene Indjic, who lives in Springfield and has studied piano for five years and one month, or if you are Holton High senior Daniel Kobialka of Danvers, a violin student for nine years, you have a different dream.

LONG PRACTICE A NECESSITY

You practice four hours a day, maybe six if school is out.

Sometimes you sneak in a small daydream. You are facing a packed concert hall, like Symphony Hall, for instance. A great orchestra is behind you—maybe the Boston Symphony. The lights fade until they look like pale stars in the dimness. The work to be played is a great concerto, and you are the soloist.

Then one day you learn that you and about a dozen other teen agers are to audition for the chance to appear as soloist at the last pair of Boston Symphony youth concerts next March.

The series of six Saturday morning concerts is conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, the Symphony's associate conductor.

Now in its second year, it has attracted thousands from schools throughout the state. This year is the first in which high school soloists are to appear with the orchestra.

STANDING IN TUNING ROOM

So, one morning you find yourself among 18 jittery students, as well as hovering parents, accompanists and music teachers.

You hear Harry Ellis Dickson, who is wearing dark-rimmed glasses and a blue button-down shirt, offer encouragement to the nervous group.

"In the history of auditions all over the world there is only one winner," he says. (But there will be two today, a pianist and a violinist or cellist.)

"I've gone through it many times. We all have. So don't be nervous. This is the price you must pay if you want to be a professional musician."

TENSION TWANGS THROUGH AIR

Dickson's kind words prove little comfort to those who wait their turn before the judges. Small wonder—the judges sitting in the dimness of the nearly empty hall are Arthur Fiedler, Boston Pops conductor; Richard Burgin, Boston Symphony concertmaster; first cellist Samuel Mayer and Dickson.

Tension twangs through the air as violins are tuned and retuned. The room is warm, but one pianist keeps his gloves on while he waits. The girls form small, anxious groups. Some clutch their music as though they are absorbing the notes by osmosis. A young violinist paces the floor, rehearsing a passage as he walks.

They encourage each other—"Stop worrying," one girl tells another. "You'll do all right."

Daniel Kobialka is especially nervous because he is playing an excerpt from Sibelius' Concerto in D Minor for Violin.

ALL AWAIT DECISION

He knows all too well that one of the judges, Richard Burgin, has also performed the work and is listening intently from his seat.

But soon it's all over and everyone gathers in the tuning room to wait for the decision.

But Eugene Indjic can't wait—he has a piano lesson in Waban with his teacher, Alexander Borovsky. He leaves, to learn later that he will play with the 65 Symphony members in March.

Danny, tall and sandy-haired, is there to hear Dickson announce his name.

"It's unbelievable," he says with a stunned grin. "Just unbelievable."

DEEP ROOTS IN MUSIC

But it isn't so unbelievable when you know Danny's background. He is concertmaster of the All-State High School Orchestra and is on the student board of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony. His father, Harry, is a violinist who teaches in the Medford schools and is a former member of the Stradivarius Quartet.

Eugene is tall for his age and husky, with a shock of dark hair. An eighth grader at Springfield Classical Junior High, he came to the United States in 1951 with his mother from Belgrade, Yugoslavia. Unlike Danny, he has no musical tradition in his family to account for his abundant talent and sensitivity.

The boys will appear in two concerts, March 18 and 25. The program has not yet been decided.

The 1959 youth concert series was the first in 12 years. Its success has encouraged Dickson to make more ambitious plans for the future.

"Next year we hope to introduce some compositions by high school students," he said. "And we would also like to introduce a one-act opera, and perhaps even some ballet. And will open the competition for soloists to wind players.

"We want to show the children that exposure to good music can make their lives much happier, that being acquainted with the beautiful things in life can make their lives so much fuller.

"I'm terribly worried about this preoccupation with science," Dickson continued. "A country can't live on science alone. We must have beauty and culture."

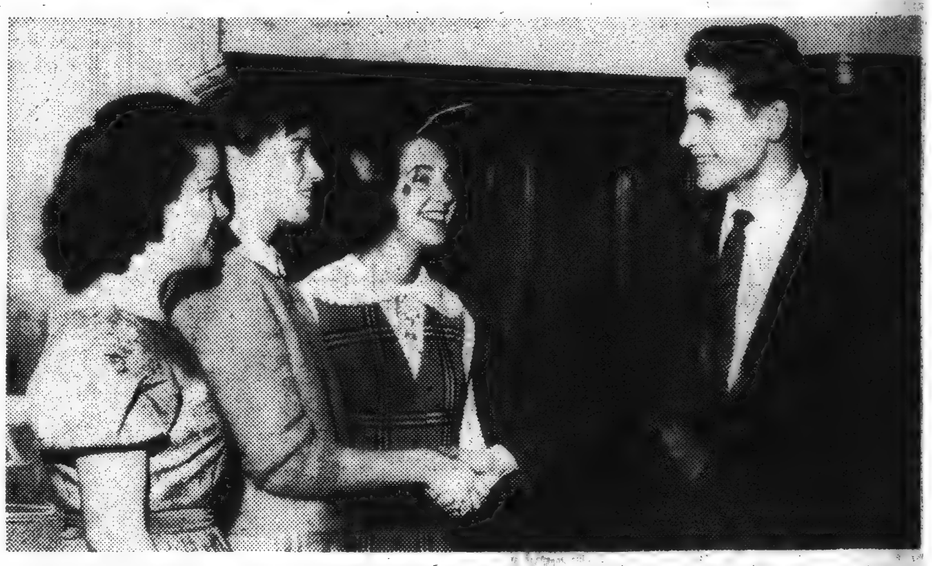
Most good will between Russia and the United States, Dickson is convinced, has come through cultural exchange tours. He cited as examples the Boston Symphony's visit to Russia in 1956 and similar visits here by Soviet musicians and composers.

The next concert in the youth series, which was sold out long in advance, will be on Jan. 14 and will be titled "Music You've Asked For." Dickson has received hundreds of requests from youngsters whose tastes have proven to be quite adult, as the program indicates.

Works will include a Beethoven overture, two movements from Beethoven's Pastoral Symphony and work for harpsichord, an instrument in which they have shown great interest.

Meanwhile, the boy from Springfield and the boy from Danvers will be putting extra effort into those practice sessions. They will have one rehearsal on the morning of the March 18 concert.

And then they will face a packed hall—Symphony Hall—with the Boston Symphony behind them.



DELIBERATIONS AND CONGRATULATIONS—In upper photo, judges at Symphony Hall auditions confer. Left to right, they are Harry Ellis Dickson, Boston Symphony Orchestra conductor; Arthur Fiedler, Boston Pops conductor; Richard Burgin, concert master, and Samuel Mayes, first cellist. In lower photo, Daniel Kobialka of Danvers, one of the winners, accepts the best wishes of, left to right, contestants Priscilla Morizia, Susan Follett and Jane Kaplan.

CELLISTS CHECK—Stephen Custer, left, of Newton High and Herbert Allen of Boston Latin look over an arrangement together.

WEAR GLOVES—Joseph Klein of Brookline High isn't taking any chance of having stiff fingers when it's his turn to audition. He wears gloves to keep his hands warm.

DON'T BE nervous," advises Harry Ellis Dickson, Boston Symphony Orchestra, associate conductor. But they're nervous anyway.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
JAN 1 1961

Eugene Indjic to Appear as Soloist With Boston Symphony Next March

Youthful Pianist Wins Audition, Praise of Judges

By FOSTER L. SPENCER

Eugene Indjic, a 13-year old Springfield schoolboy, has earned the coveted honor of appearing as guest piano soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in March. The talented young man was accorded this privilege as a result of competitive auditions held at Symphony Hall, Boston.

Adjudged Best

As one of 11 youthful pianists aspiring for the Boston Symphony appearance, Eugene was adjudged best. He will appear in the final two performances of the Youth Concert series to be held in Symphony Hall, March 18 and 25.

For those who would take this achievement lightly, it should be suggested that this honor can be compared to a little leaguer being called upon to pinch hit for Ted Williams in baseball. Eugene, according to BSO publicity man Lanny Humphrey, 'was far and away the most gifted pianist in the youth competition. He conducted himself well and played with finesse and confidence."

The judges for the auditions were Arthur Fiedler, conductor Boston Pops Orchestra, Richard Burgen, concert-master and associate conductor of Boston Symphony, and Samuel Mayes, noted BSO cellist. All three were high in the praise of young Indjic. One of the judges commented that Eugene displayed "surprising maturity."

Appeared Last Year

Guest appearances are nothing new for the Springfield boy. Last year, he was piano soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra in the finals of the Merriweather Post contest in Washington. And, in the summer, the Boston Symphony had him as soloist at the Esplanade in a matinee performance in Boston.

According to Humphrey, Eugene comported himself with assurance. "He came onto the stage, saw that the chair had been adjusted, sat down, spent a minute or two getting comfortable and then played.

"What we saw," Humphrey went on, "was a lad who played like a mature artist. He was not ostentatious or showy. Rather, he was accomplished, polished and certain."

Eugene said he was startled to hear that he had won the audition last Tuesday. "I was very nervous before I went on stage, but the minute I sat down at the piano, I forgot all about it."

Played Portions

He played Brahms' second concerto in B-flat major. "I didn't play the entire concerto, but the judges asked me to play certain portions from each movement," the city student reported.

Born in Belgrade, Yugoslavia, Eugene came with his mother, Mrs. Barbara V. Injdic, to the United States in 1951. He was only three when his father insisted his family escape Communist oppression. Eugene and his mother live at 86 Pearl St.

Eugene began piano studies about five years ago. He studied first under Lubov Stephani of Springfield. Later he continued under Benjamin Kalman, also of this city. For the past two years, he has been under the tutelage of the noted Russian pianist Alexander Borovsky of Boston.

Sponsored Recital

Mr. Kalman last year sponsored a recital for Eugene at the Museum of Fine Arts, here, the proceeds of which went into trust for the young musician's education. Mr. Kalman, who is very fond of his former pupil, raised $800 at that recital.

Mr. Borovsky, who was one of Russia's finest pianists in his day, was well-known for his appearances with the great conductor Serge Koussevitzky, founder of Tanglewood. In his time, Mr. Borovsky played before audiences the world over, settling in the United States some years ago.

The Russian-born teacher says of his talented pupil, "The young man has no family heritage in music. What he has is God-given. He is a genius." According to those who know Mr. Borovsky, when he says a pupil is a genius, he means it.

Many Accolades

Eugene has won many accolades since he began his music career. He was winner of the New England regional auditions for the fifth annual Merriweather Post contest sponsored by the National Symphony Orchestra, Washington, D. C. last February. Although eliminated in the national finals in May, 1960, Eugene brought much favorable attention upon himself, being the youngest of 12 finalists — having just turned 13.

He has been a featured soloist upon two occasions with the Springfield Symphony Orchestra's children's concerts. He also won first award in a piano contest at Boston in 1959, sponsored by the Crescendo Club.

"I look forward a great deal to the Boston Symphony appearance," Eugene said. "I have been practicing harder than usual and hope that I play my best."

His appearance with the Boston Symphony will just be another step in the direction of his ultimate goal of becoming a concert pianist.

Springfield Symphony Orchestra conductor Robert Staffanson says, "Eugene is a very gifted boy. I am indeed happy that he has this break. He deserves it."

Straight-A Pupil

Russell Williams, principal of Classical Junior High where Eugene is an eighth grader, praises him as an artist, pupil and gentleman.

Says Mr. Williams, "Eugene is a straight-A student. He is well-liked by other students and is a regular boy. He mixes well, and despite the attention being paid to him for his musical abilities, he remains modest. He is industrious, practicing piano four to five hours daily, besides finding time for his school studies."

Everyone who has heard Eugene play is thrilled by his mastery of the concert piano. Just this past week, Charles Steinway, grandson of the founder of Steinway pianos, stayed over in Springfield to hear the boy. Mr. Steinway termed Eugene "a marvel."

Eugene says he doesn't have too much time for hobbies right now. His music takes up most of his time. "I listen to records quite a bit, but beyond that, I have little time left."

He keeps a rigorous schedule of practicing at least four hours daily. "When there's no school I make a habit to practice six hours a day," Eugene said.

Child Audience

When Eugene plays with the Boston Symphony March 18 and 25, he'll be playing before 2600 school children in the Youth Concert series. This series was begun last year by Harry Ellis Dickson.

The series was so successful that six concerts were scheduled this season. The Boston Symphony has played at all the concerts before child audiences, but never before have children been guest soloists with the world renowned orchestra. Besides Eugene, a violin soloist's also scheduled to appear in the final two youth concerts.

For Eugene Indjic, the appearance with the great concert orchestra will be another milestone in his short, but already illustrious career. Those who know the Springfield boy and his musical genius say he will carve many more milestones on his way to the pinnacle of success.

Bruce Simonds Will Present Sunday Concert

SOUTH HADLEY — Pianist Bruce Simonds will present the third concert in the John Martyn Warbeke series at Mount Holyoke College next Sunday.

Open to Public

In a 3.15 p. m. concert in Chapin Auditorium, Simonds will present a program featuring works by Bach, Mozart, Franck, Chopin and Debussy.

Simonds, a graduate of Yale College and the Yale School of Music, has also studied at the Schola Cantorum in Paris with Vincent D'Indy and with Matthay in London. After one year, he received the highest award given by the Matthay School, the Chappell Gold Medal.

He returned to the U. S. in 1921, and has since taught music at Yale, where he became dean in 1941. Although he continues to teach there, Simonds retired as dean in 1954 to devote more time to his playing.

He has appeared as soloist with the Philadelphia, Minneapolis, Cleveland and Boston Symphony Orchestras, and as chamber artist with the Berkshire, Roth, Tanglewood, Oberlin and Budapest String Quartets. In 1956, he joined with violinist Robert Brink and cellist Karl Zeise to form the Hamden Trio.

In this Mount Holyoke appearance, Simonds will play Bach's "Toccata in G major," Mozart's "Sonata in B flat, K. 333," Franck's "Prelude, Choral et Fugue," Chopin's "Impromptu in F sharp," and Debussy's "La puerta del vino," "Poissons d'or," and "L'isle joyeuse."

The concert is open to the public without charge. The final Warbeke concert of the year will present the Fine Arts Quartet on March 5.

Borovsky Calls 13-Year-Old City Pupil 'Genius'

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
South Shore
Weekly Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,562
JAN 12 1961

Second Youth Concert

The second in the current series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall will be held Saturday, Jan. 14, at 11 am, when 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform under the baton of Harry Ellis Dickson.

The program will feature the "Concerto for Harpsichord and Strings," by C. P. E. Bach, and the "Concerto in F Major for Harpsichord, Strings, and Two Oboes," by Handel, with Daniel Pinkham as soloist.

In addition, to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the Civil War, there will be selections relating to this period, including the "Lincoln Portrait" by Copland, narrated by Carl DeSuze, and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" with members of the North Eastern and South Eastern Massachusetts High School Choruses.

Cohasset children who have subscribed to the concert series will be transported by school bus to Boston. They will meet in the Ripley Road School parking lot at 9:15 a.m. The bus will leave promptly at 9:30, and will return at approximately 1:30. They will be accompanied by adult chaperons.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
South Shore News
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,562
JAN 12 1961

Cohasset Children To Attend Concert

The second in the current series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall will be held Saturday, January 14, at 11 a.m., when 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform under under the baton of Harry Ellis Dickson.

The program will feature the "Concerto for Harpsichord and Strings", by C. P. E. Bach, and the "Concerto in F Major for Harpsichord, Strings and Two Oboes", by Handel, with Daniel Pinkham as soloist.

In addition, to commemorate the one hundred anniversary of the Civil War, there will be selections relating to this period, including the "Lincoln Portrait" by Copland, narrated by Carl DeSuze, and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" with members of the Northeastern and Southeastern Massachusetts High School Choruses.

Cohasset children who have subscribed to the concert series will be transported by school bus to Boston. They will meet in the Ripley Road School parking lot at 9:15 a.m. The bus will leave promptly at 9:30, and will return at approximately 1:30. They will be accompanied by adult chaperons.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 45,338
JAN 10 1961

Boston Symphony To Give Second Concert For Youth

COHASSET — The second in the current series of Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall will be held Saturday morning at 11 o'clock when 60 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform under the direction of Harry Ellis Dickson.

The program will feature the "Concerto for Harpsicohord and Strings" by C. P. E. Bach and the "Concerto in F for Harpsichord, Strings and Two Oboes" by Handel, with Daniel Pinkham as soloist.

In addition, to commemorate the one hundredth anniversary of the Civil War, there will be selections relating to this period, including the "Lincoln Portrait" by Copland, narrated by Carl De Suze; and "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," with members of the Northeastern and Southeastern Massachusetts High School Choruses.

20 C THE BOSTON SUNDAY HERALD, JAN. 15, 1961

Dr. Schweitzer Honored At Concert

A capacity audience joined in two special celebrations yesterday at the Youth Concert in Symphony Hall. The program was played by Boston Symphony musicians conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Commemorating the 86th birthday of the musician and humanitarian, Dr. Albert Schweitzer, Mr. Dickson opened the concert by conducting the orchestra and audience in "Happy Birthday to You." Since Dr. Schweitzer is a recognized authority on the music of Bach, the conductor continued with a fugue by J. S. Bach and a Concerto for Harpsichord and Strings by his son, C. P. E. Bach.

The second half of the program was devoted to commemorating the centennial of the Civil War. The orchestra played Aaron Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait," with Carl de Suze reading some of the great lines from Lincoln's speeches.

Members of the Northeast Massachusetts High School Choruses then joined the orchestra and audience in The Battle Hymn of the Republic. Baritone Francis Hester sang the second verse as a solo, and also sang Lincoln's favorite folk song, "The Blue Tailed Fly."

The youngsters impressed concertmaster Alfred Krips with their attentiveness and enthusiasm. "No other audience like them," he said.

The program will be repeated next Saturday at 11 a.m.

ANOTHER THRONG like this is due at Symphony Hall on Saturday forenoon, January 14, and a week later, for the season's third and fourth Youth Concerts conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson.

Herald 1/8/61

Youth Concert Commemorates The Civil War

By CYRUS DURGIN

One hundred years ago, plus a few months, another new President, Abraham Lincoln, sat in the White House, and war had erupted between North and South. This year 1961 accordingly will see many centennial commemorations of the Civil War.

Harry Ellis Dickson, conductor of the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, elected to add a musical memorial at the second of the season's programs. For the occasion he chose Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," and the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" in an elaborate orchestral-choral arrangement by Roy Ringwald.

These pieces and the remainder of an hour's program were enjoyed by a large audience, yesterday morning, one that showed only occasional empty seats due to the difficulties of travel because of the blizzard.

Carl de Suze, long known to many by his radio broadcasts and lectures, narrated Copland's musical portrait of The Great Emancipator, and did so with clear, ringing delivery of the words, and a fine warmth and dignity.

For the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," Dickson assembled members of the North East and South East Massachusetts High School Choruses, who sang with a nice tone and alert response to Dickson's baton.

As a most agreeable novelty, baritone Francis Hester (who had been soloist in the "Battle Hymn") sang one of Lincoln's favorite tunes, "The Blue-Tailed Fly," to harpsichord accompaniment by Daniel Pinkham, who had been soloist in concertos for that instrument earlier in the program. Then the orchestra lit into an ingenious, expertly orchestrated set of variations on "The Blue-Tailed Fly."

Hans Lumbye's Polka for orchestra and two solo violins, and the Gottschalk-Kay "Cakewalk" ended the program. The next in the series will be Mar. 18 and 25, under the general theme of "Music You Have Asked For."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass
Circ. 175,076
JAN 25 1961

WITH OUR COMPLIMENTS

To the Editor of The Herald:

I wonder how many people in our community realize our great fortune to have Mr. Harry Ellis Dickson here, guiding and helping to form the musical tastes of our children.

His concerts at the Boston Symphony Hall in the Youth Concert Series have been planned with intelligence and executed with great love and enthusiasm. His programs are always timely. He never loses the rapt attention of his audience, which is made up of all age groups.

To attend these concerts is a moving experience, and I think Mr. Dickson should know of the gratitude of his admirers.

LEILA F. SOBIN.
Newton Center.

Globe 1/21/61

De Suze Narrates At Youth Concert

Carl de Suze will narrate Copland's "A Lincoln Portrait" at the second program in the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall series tomorrow morning at 11.

Harry Ellis Dickson also will conduct harpsichord concertos by C. P. E. Bach and Handel, with Daniel Pinkham as soloist; the Bach-Cailliet Fugue in G minor, Battle Hymn of the Republic with high schol choruses assisting, and other pieces.

Herald 1/20/61

Civil War Work At Youth Concert

Aaron Copland's "Lincoln Portrait," with Carl de Suze as narrator, will be presented in commemoration of the 100th anniversary of the Civil War at 11:00 a.m. tomorrow at Symphony Hall when Harry Dickson will conduct an orchestra of Boston Symphony musicians for the season's fourth Youth Concerts program.

Daniel Pinkham will be soloist in a Handel haprsichord concerto, and Alfred Krips with Clarence Knudson will merge their violins for the Lumbye "Polka."

Works by Bach-Caillet, C.P.E. Bach, and Gottschalk-Kay complete the program.

Ballet

Monitor 1/20/61

Youth Concert Repeated

The varied program presented in Symphony Hall last Saturday morning at 11 to an enthusiastic audience of young people will be heard again tomorrow at the same time. Members of the Boston Symphony will be conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, who also comments on the music.

Composers represented include Bach, Handel, Copland ("Lincoln Portrait"), Lumbye, and Gottschalk. A feature of the program is the singing of the "Battle Hymn of the Republic" by members of northeast Massachusetts high school choruses.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
MAR 9 1961

Herald 1/22/61

Youth Concert Draws 2500 Despite Snow

Despite towering snowbanks, the Boston Symphony's Youth Concert yesterday played to a near capacity audience of 2,500 young people from as far away as Lowell. Harry Ellis Dickson conducted.

However, Friday's regular Symphony afternoon concert, scheduled at the peak of the storm, will be held today at 3 p.m.

DI's Oboist to Play In Concerts by BSO In Hub March 18, 25

DALTON — Douglas Bairstow, oboist and Dalton High School representative on the all-state high school orchestra, is among 60 invited to participate with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its final youth concert in Symphony Hall March 18 and 25.

Each student will be seated next to a BSO member. The students will play the final movement of Tchaikovsky's fourth symphony.

Douglas plans to attend the Curtis Institute of Music in the fall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
MAR 17 1961

Monitor 3/16/61

Youth Concerts

At the forthcoming Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall on Saturday mornings, March 18 and 25 at 11 o'clock, Harry Ellis Dickson has arranged to play requests from members of his young audience. School boys will be soloists, and boys and girls of the All-State High School Orchestra will play with Boston Symphony musicians.

The program will include Tchaikovsky's First Piano Concerto; Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso; Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3, and last movements of Beethoven's "Pastoral Symphony; Grofe's "On the Trail" from the "Grand Canyon" suite; Ravel's "Bolero"; and Tchaikovsky's finale from his Symphony No. 4.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
MAR 17 1961

Students Invited To Perform With Boston Symphony

Five Classical High School students and two Technical High students have been invited to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on the 18th and 25th for youth concerts to be given in Symphony Hall, Boston, it was announced Thursday by Miss Fern L. Zipse, director of music, Springfield public schools. The students are members of the All-State High School Orchestra.

Harry Ellis Dickson, who will direct the symphony in the youth concerts, was guest conductor of the All-State Orchestra at the Massachusetts Music Educators Association convention in Worcester last year.

According to Miss Zipse, Dickson invited members of this year's All-State Orchestra to join with the symphony in playing the last movement of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F Minor.

To play on Saturday are John Farrell, flute, and Peter Cokkinias, clarinet, both of Classical.

To play on the 25th are Frederic Hoffman, French horn, Mary Ann Kuczynski, cello, and Robert Hankey, bass viol, of Classical, and Sue Crabtree, violin, and Daniel Diamond, percussion, of Technical.

Farrell will play the piccolo on the 25th.

Miss Zipse said the students have accepted the invitation and will rehearse with the symphony at 9.30 a. m. on Saturday and the 25th. The concerts are scheduled at 11 a. m.

Board of Birth

28 A Boston Traveler, Thursday, March 16, 1961

COMMITTEE for Youth Concert at Symphony Hall on Saturday confers with conductor Harry Ellis Dickson. Seated, from left: Mrs. Albert C. Titcomb of Boston; Mrs. E. Anthony Kutten of Brookline and Mrs. Julian Sobin of Newton. Standing: Mrs. Manuel Kurland and Mrs. Ralph Katz, both of Brookline. The concert will feature requests from youngsters attending the concert series. Members of the All-State High School Orchestra will play with the musicians. The concert will be repeated March 25 at 11 a.m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513
MAR 18 1961

Top Boy Musicians Solo With Symphony

Eugene Indjic of Springfield, a 14-year-old pianist, and Daniel Kobialka of Danvers, a 17-year-old violinist, are featured soloists today with the famed Boston Symphony Orchestra.

They are among 30 of the state's outstanding schoolboy musicians who will join the orchestra in one number as part of the Youth Concert Series at Symphony Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,001
MAR 17 1961

HIGH SCHOOLERS JOIN SYMPHONY

Several local high school students have been invited to play with the Boston Symphony Orchestra tomorrow and the 25th for youth concerts to be given in Symphony Hall, Boston. Conductor will be Harry Ellis Dickson who has directed the All-State Orchestra of which the local students are members.

He invited all All-State Orchestra members to join in playing the last movement of Tschaikowsky's Symphony No. 4 in F minor.

Playing tomorrow will be John Farrell and Peter Cokinias, both of Classical, and on the 25th, John Farrell again and Frederic Hoffman, Mary Ann Kuczynski and Robert Hankey, all of Classical and Sue Crabtree, violin, and Daniel Diamond, Technical percussion students.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

MAR 23 1961

Students, Symphony Musicians Join Forces In Youth Concert

(Traveler staff photos by Warren Patriquin)

CONDUCTOR DICKSON (TOP) AND CONCERTMASTER ALFRED KRIPS WITH STUDENT SOLOISTS

By GAIL KREDENSER

The young people who filed into Symphony Hall last Saturday morning came in assorted sizes, from high schoolers down to first graders who could barely see over the seat in front.

They poured into the hall from schools throughout the Greater Boston area and beyond to hear the fifth in a series of six youth concerts by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Some were music students. But for others the orchestra, under the baton of Harry Ellis Dickson, opened a new world.

A NEW WORLD FOR MANY

The program contained chiefly works requested by the youngsters in hundreds of letters to Dickson, founder of the youth concert series which began in 1959.

If the requests were from children, the program that resulted was no child's play: Beethoven's Overture to "Leonore," No. 3; the last movements of Beethoven's Symphony No. 6 in F Major; "On the Trail," from Grofe's Grand Canyon Suite; Ravel's "Bolero," and the Finale of Tchaikowsky's Symphony No. 4.

In the last number, the Symphony men were joined by 50 members of the All-State High School Orchestra—an experience which the youngsters found "thrilling and inspiring," as one Belmont High miss put it. It was also fun.

"Don't look so sad," Dickson told one earnest young violinist who was steeped in monumental concentration during rehearsal. The violinist—and the others—smiled back and relaxed.

Dickson also put the two soloists—pianist Eugene Indjic, 14, and violinist Daniel Kobialka, 17,—at their ease.

The two were chosen in an audition last December. Judges at the audition were Boston Pops conductor Arthur Fiedler; Richard Burgin, Symphony associate Conductor; First Cellist Samuel Mayes, and Dickson, Boston Symphony violinist and Boston Pops assistant conductor.

Eugene, who came to the United States in 1951 with his mother from Belgrade, Yugoslavia, is an eighth grader at Springfield Classical Junior High. A piano student for only five years he has been termed by his teacher, Alexander Borovsky, "absolutely exceptional."

Tall for his age, with a shock of dark hair that started out neatly combed, Eugene stunned the young audience with his performance of the last movement of Tchaikowsky's Piano Concerto No. 1 in B Flat Minor.

"He plays like he has a million fingers!" said one awed high schooler when the applause had subsided.

Violinist Kobialka, who played excerpts from Saint-Saens' Introduction and Rondo Lapriccioso for violin and orchestra, is concertmaster of the All-State High School Orchestra and is on the student board of the Greater Boston Youth Symphony. His father, Harry, is a violinist who teaches in Medford schools and is a former member of the Stradivarius Quartet.

The young audience even had a chance to conduct. In simple terms Dickson explained some of the functions of a conductor. He used Ravel's "Bolero," to illustrate.

"It's in three-quarter time," he told the aduience, "and you conduct in a triangle." He demonstrated, with percussionist Charles Smith providing the distinctive rhythm which continues unbroken through the whole piece.

"Now you conduct Mr. Smith," Dickson said to the audience, and they did, with great glee, from the floor way up to the second balcony.

The concert will be repeated this Saturday at 11 a.m. It will be the last in the 1960-61 series.

"We want these concerts to continue," Dickson told the audience at the end of the program, "because we do not believe, as some do, that the younger generation is going to the dogs. And you are proof that

DONNA LAWSON, NEWTON, WITH SYMPHONY VIOLINIST

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

MAR 19 1961

Young Soloists Play With Symphony Group

Music chosen by popular request and performances by young instrumentalists were the outstanding features of the third program of Youth Concerts presented yesterday morning at Symphony Hall. Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Harry Ellis Dickson, performed favorites in orchestral repertoire from Beethoven to Ferde Grofe.

The two soloists for this concert were selected through all-state competition among Massachusetts young people. Eugene Indjic, from Classical Junior High, Springfield, soloed in the last movement of Tchaikovsky's first Piano Concerto. The performance was dynamic and technically accomplished; it becomes even more notable when one learns that the pianist has been a student of his instrument for only five years.

On High Level

The Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso of Saint-Saens received a spirited and competent interpretation from violinist Daniel Kobialka, of Danvers' Holten High School. The intonation and fingering accuracy displayed by this young artist were of a level seldom heard from a musician of his years.

Ravel's Bolero, if played in its entirely, is considered by many persons to be a monotonous work. Nevertheless, it has definite educational possibilities.

Nearly every instrument in the orchestra can be identified in solo passages that are written above a ceaseless bolero rhythm, beginning as a whisper on the snare drum and finishing like a thunderstorm.

Stirring Finale

Members of the Massachusetts All-State High School Orchestra joined the Boston Symphony musicians for the concluding Finale from Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4.

The clean and stirring performance attested to the proficiency of both organizations.

The same program will be heard in this season's final Youth Concert next Saturday morning.

MC L. H.

The Program

Leonore Overture No. 3	Beethoven
Symphony No. 6 (last three movements)	Beethoven
Piano Concerto No. 1 (finale) Eugene Indjic, soloist	Tchaikovsky
On the Trail, from the Grand Canyon Suite	Grofe
Introduction and Rondo Capriccioso Daniel Kobialka, violin soloist	Saint-Saens
Bolero	Ravel
Symphony No. 4 (finale) (with members of the All-State High School Orchestra)	Tchaikovsky

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 373,012

MAR 20 1961

ELLIOT NORTON WRITES:

Hub Concerts for Young Win Deserved Success

As Bostonians, we can be proud of the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall. From any point of view these Saturday programs by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are stimulating, reason for pride and cause for hope.

Men and women of public spirit have sponsored the concerts, which have been given during the last two seasons up to and including last Saturday morning. The musicians, under Harry Ellis Dickson, are the primary reason for their distinguished success, but a good many Bostonians have given time, money and energy to the project. Among the commendable ones, count the trustees of the orchestra.

Elliot Norton

Saturday's program was particularly impressive. For there were young people on the stage as well as in front. On both sides of the platform, they were admirable, and the theatergoer came away with the conviction that here is this hall something of the cultural future of Boston was being determined. The future is bright.

SPRINGFIELD PIANIST

A 14-year-old boy was one of the stars of the Saturday show. Eugene Indjic, a student at Classical Junior High School of Springfield, who has been studying the piano only since he and his parents came to this country five years ago, played to the kind of applause that would have stirred an older virtuoso.

As winners of a contest staged at Symphony Hall last fall, Eugene was one of two soloists; the other was a lanky amiable violinist of 17 years, Daniel Kobialka, of Holton High, Danvers.

Each of the young musicians played commendably, Eugene with Tchaikovsky, Daniel with Saint-Saens, both in happy association with the orchestra, which numbers some of the best musicians of the world.

EXCITING PERFORMANCE

Later, for the final movement of Tchaikovsky's Symphony No. 4, twenty-five or thirty student members of the Massachusetts All-State High School Symphony orchestra moved onto the stage to sit and play with members of the Boston Symphony on even terms. The result was enormously exciting and seemed to bear out Conductor Dickson's contention that "there is more musical talent here in Massachusetts than in any state of the Union."

From the podium, Harry Dickson has conducted not only the orchestra but the whole show in these Youth Concerts. In an easy, comfortable way, he explains the music the audience is about to hear, introduces the musicians who may carry a significant burden, and describes with engaging simplicity what the composer was up to in each work.

In introducing Ravel's "Bolero," for example, he pointed out that this particular composition utilizes a special musical figure which is introduced and sustained on the drum.

DRUMMER DEMONSTRATES

To make this meaningful, he presented the drummer, who brought his instrument downstage center and played the thumping basic beat which is at the heart of "Bolero." Having demonstrated this, the drummer remained where he was throughout the number, allowing the small fry in the audience to discover for themselves how this particular popular work is constructed around the percussive beat.

For each of the other works, the leader called on individual players to demonstrate or to play a theme or a melodic phrase which is significant. Here again, the young concertgoers were afforded an opportunity to discover something about the form of the composition.

VISIBLE PATTERN

The conductor gave them, too, a reasonable inkling of what it means to lead a big orchestra. He invited them to find the beat of the "Bolero," by tracing in the air three sides of a triangle, thus creating a visible pattern of three-four time. More than a thousand delighted youngsters took part in that exercise, "conducting" happily throughout.

In so doing, they learned something that will make this and other music more comprehensible and so more enjoyable in the future.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

South Shore
Weekly Mirror
SCITUATE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 4,562

APR 27 1961

Youth Concerts Made Available To Young People

MARSHFIELD—The Marshfield Ass'n has big plans for the next school year. One of the first to be released to the public arranges for the young people of Marshfield an opportunity to attend the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall in Boston. This program is conducted by Mr. Harry Ellis Dickson and is played by sixty members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

There is a series of three concerts scheduled for the following Saturdays: Nov. 11, Jan. 13, and March 10. They are held at 11 o'clock in the morning for approximately one hour. The young people will attend, being transported by bus, which the Marshfield Assn will provide.

Mrs. Dorothy Roswell, who may be contacted for further information about the program, says that this is a wonderful opportunity for our young people to hear the best in music with a program suitable for their ages.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Advocate
SHARON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,200

APR 27 1961

High School Boys and Girls Join Symphony at Youth Concerts

Once more, Mr. Harry Ellis Dickson, Conductor of the Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, hopes to have members of the All State High School Orchestra join Boston Symphony members at one of the concerts next season. It is almost as thrilling for the audience as for the teenagers directly involved, to see these fine young people on the stage of Symphony Hall.

By tomorrow, Friday, ticket applications shall have been distributed to Sharon school children of the proper grade levels, as promised in our last article. It is most important that every child who wishes to travel with the groups going in by bus, return his or her application to the schools no later than May 5th. We have set this early date in order to insure our getting a fine block of seats for the concerts. Don't be one of those who end up looking unsuccessfully for tickets in the Fall. Even advance individual ticket applications are being accepted only until June 30th.

Mr. Dickson has arranged a delightful treat for next year, a surprise that will thrill all who are lucky enough to attend. We know many parents enjoy the concerts as much as the youngsters and teenagers do. Those of you who prefer to travel to the concerts in a family group, may send the applications directly to the address specified on the blanks. For dates and price information see ad on page 4.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Advocate
ARLINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 6,648

APR 27 1961

YOUTH CONCERTS

The Saturday morning Youth Concerts at Symphony Hall, Boston, which have been sold out for the past two years, attracting young people from public, independent, and parochial schools from 97 Massachusetts communities, will be offered again in the 1961-62 season.

Harry Ellis Dickson will conduct 60 members of the Boston Symphony orchestra in two series of three concerts each, a pair of concerts with identical programs to be played a week apart.

Mrs. Robert W. Mayerson of 90 Scituate st. is local ticket chairman.

(Globe Photos by Jack Sheahan)

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY AT THE HEAD OF THE CLASS, whether on stage or on screen. Above and below, some participants in the annual Youth Concerts at which high school players join Dr. Charles Munch and the famed musicians, and, at right, student reactions while watching the orchestra on Channel 2's "21-Inch Classroom."

The Sound of Classical Music

A Symphony Orchestra as an Educational Instrument

By IAN FORMAN

Everyone knows that the 80-year-old Boston Symphony Orchestra is one of the world's most famous music ensembles.

What is less realized is that it's also a great instrument of education.

When people speak of the cultural attractions of Boston—the atmosphere which draws students—the symphony is a by-word.

But all the ways the Boston Symphony actually educates now are hard to keep up with.

The latest is TV, bringing the symphony right into the classrooms of 160 public and Catholic school systems of 160 cities and towns of Massachusetts, Rhode Island, southern New Hampshire, and part of Connecticut.

This started in February on Channel 2's "Twenty-one Inch Classroom" and will continue in hour-long programs at 1 p.m., Apr. 24 and May 22, with the cooperation of the Musicians' Union.

Another big venture is the Youth Concert series in Symphony Hall, which started last year and continued so successfully this Winter that next year's series is assured.

Everything the Boston Symphony touches—the Pops, the Esplanade concerts—seems to turn to pure gold, and the Youth Concerts fit the pattern.

Inaugurated by Harry Ellis Dickson, violinist and assistant Pops conductor, the Youth Concerts have attracted children and young people for six Saturday morning concerts.

Giving youthful fizz to the orchestra, Dickson invited 90 members of the All-State High School Orchestra to sit in with the symphony ensemble for part of a program.

Youth concerts are nothing new to the Boston Symphony, with series going on, from time to time, since its seventh season in 1888-89.

The great teaching tradition during Summers at the Berkshire Music Center in Lenox, begun in 1940 by Serge Koussevitzky and the orchestra, has been continued under the inspired leadership of Dr. Charles Munch.

Running concurrently with the Berkshire Music Festival, the center is forced to choose its limited 400 students from thousands of applicants from throughout the world. The talent is tops, with alumni now in most of the nation's symphony orchestras.

In many ways the Boston Symphony's role as an educator has been great—and is still growing yearly.

END OF VOLUME

VOLUME 104

Tanglewood

1961

NATIONAL FLAT BACK SCRAP BOOKS

Made in U.S.A.

FULL DUCK COVER, MANILA PAPER

Without Index, Ruling, Paging or Title

NUMBER	THICKNESS	SIZE
56-032	72 Leaves	12⅝ × 10¼
56-033	72 Leaves	15 × 10
56-034	100 Leaves	15 × 10
56-036	90 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-038	150 Leaves	16 × 11⅜
56-039	90 Leaves	18 × 13
56-041	150 Leaves	18 × 13
56-042	150 Leaves	25 × 20

To duplicate this book Order Number indicated by arrow

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

1961 Season

THEATRE COLLAPSES ---------- 1
SCHOENBERG CONTROVERSY ---------- 6
BERKSHIRE NIGHTS SALES ---------- 10
PRE-SEASON CHAMBER MUSIC ---------- 12
PRE-SEASON FESTIVAL ---------- 17
PRE-SEASON BERKSHIRE CENTRE ---------- 48
BERKSHIRE LORE ---------- 60
FIRST WEEK ---------- 66
SECOND WEEK ---------- 84
Fromm Concert ---------- 89
Danny Kaye Concert ---------- 94
THIRD WEEK ---------- 103
FOURTH WEEK ---------- 120
FIFTH WEEK ---------- 136
Tanglewood on Parade ---------- 142
SIXTH WEEK ---------- 153
"King Theodore" - Opera Premier ---------- 160
SEVENTH WEEK ---------- 176
B. M. C. Gala ---------- 184
T. V. PANEL SHOW ---------- 198
"TODAY" SHOW ---------- 204
POST - SEASON ---------- 212
CLARK INSTITUTE PARTY ---------- 218
NEGRO DISPUTE ---------- 224
MISCELLANEOUS ---------- 228
COPLAND ---------- 232
HAIEFF AWARD ---------- 236
ESPLANADE ---------- 238
LEINSDORF ---------- 242
RECORDINGS ---------- 244

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

1961 Season

THEATRE COLLAPSES ---------- 1
SCHOENBERG CONTROVERSY ---------- 6
BERKSHIRE NIGHTS SALES ---------- 10
PRE-SEASON CHAMBER MUSIC ---------- 12
PRE-SEASON FESTIVAL ---------- 17
PRE-SEASON BERKSHIRE CENTRE ---------- 48
BERKSHIRE LORE ---------- 60
FIRST WEEK ---------- 66
SECOND WEEK ---------- 84
Fromm Concert ---------- 89
Danny Kaye Concert ---------- 94
THIRD WEEK ---------- 103
FOURTH WEEK ---------- 120
FIFTH WEEK ---------- 136
Tanglewood on Parade ---------- 142
SIXTH WEEK ---------- 153
"King Theodore" - Opera Premier ---------- 160
SEVENTH WEEK ---------- 176
B. M. C. Gala ---------- 184
T. V. PANEL SHOW ---------- 198
"TODAY" SHOW ---------- 204
POST - SEASON ---------- 212
CLARK INSTITUTE PARTY ---------- 218
NEGRO DISPUTE ---------- 224
MISCELLANEOUS ---------- 228
COPLAND ---------- 232
HAIEFF AWARD ---------- 236
ESPLANADE ---------- 238
LEINSDORF ---------- 242
RECORDINGS ---------- 244

Tanglewood
1961
Berkshire Festival

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge in the heart of the beautiful Berkshire hills of western Massachusetts, will be held from July 5 through August 20, extended from six to seven weeks.

At the 1961 Festival fifteen concerts by the full Orchestra will be given plus six chamber orchestra concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, seven chamber music recitals, and two gala benefit evenings.

Charles Munch will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with the full Orchestra. Among Doctor Munch's guests will be Leonard Bernstein who will conduct one of the three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the Orchestra's former Music Director and first Director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will return to Tanglewood to conduct several concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct, Eugene Ormandy will make his first Berkshire Festival appearance, and many outstanding soloists have been invited to participate.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August 3rd in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. The second Center benefit evening will be on August 17. Programs and ticket information for these benefit programs will be available in mid-July.

The orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall. Those who prefer may listen to these concerts from the Great Lawn which adjoins the Shed and the Theatre.

CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

THE Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, will be in session for the seven weeks of the Festival. Charles Munch is Director of the Center and Aaron Copland is his Chairman of Faculty.

Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward the support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than fifty school events — concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures, forums.

A calendar of events open to the Friends is shown on the reverse side.

ARRAU

BURGIN

FIEDLER

GRAFFMAN

JANIS

ORMANDY

THOMAS D. PERRY, JR., Manager

Baldwin Piano RCA Victor Records

COMPLETE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL PROGRAMS, TICKET PRICES AND TICKET ORDER FORM ON REVERSE SIDE

BERNSTEIN

COPLAND

HENRIOT-SCHWEITZER

ISTOMIN

MONTEUX

STERN

TRANSPORTATION TO TANGLEWOOD:

By Automobile:

from the east: Mass. Turnpike to Exit #2 (Lee) or Exit #1 (West Stockbridge).

from the south: N. Y. Thruway to Berkshire Extension of the Thruway, Berkshire Extension to Exit B-3 (State Line). Alternate routing: Taconic Pkwy. to Route #44 then to #7.

from the west: N. Y. Thruway to Berkshire Extension of the Thruway, Berkshire Extension to Exit B-3 (State Line).

from the north: Routes 7 or 20.

Note: Automobiles westbound on the Mass. Turnpike may use Exit #1 (West Stockbridge) but there is no exit here for eastbound traffic. Thruway traffic eastbound to Tanglewood should use either Exit #B-3 (State Line) on the Berkshire Extension of the N. Y. Thruway.

By Train:

from New York: New Haven Railroad from Grand Central to Great Barrington, Stockbridge, Lee, Pittsfield.

from Boston: Boston and Albany Railroad to Pittsfield.

from the west: New York Central Railroad to Pittsfield.

By Bus:

Regular service from New York, Albany and Boston to Pittsfield and Lenox.

Auto Rentals:

The Avis and Hertz automobile rental companies, and others, have facilities in Pittsfield.

Tours:

Several New York tour companies include Tanglewood in their weekly bus excursions to the Berkshires. These companies advertise in the New York press.

HIGHWAY MILEAGES TO TANGLEWOOD from:

Albany, N. Y.	45
Boston, Mass.	130
Buffalo, N. Y.	330
Chicago, Ill.	861
Cincinnati, Ohio	763
Cleveland, Ohio	518
Hartford, Conn.	61
Montreal, P. Q.	264
New York, N. Y.	148
Philadelphia, Pa.	225
Portland, Me.	236
Washington, D. C.	365

FURTHER BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL INFORMATION:

Until June 20
Festival Ticket Office
Symphony Hall
Boston 15, Mass.
CO 6-1492

After June 20
Festival Ticket Office
Tanglewood
Lenox, Mass.
Lenox 600

FURTHER INFORMATION ON ACCOMMODATIONS AND RECREATION:

Berkshire Hills Conference
100 North Street
Pittsfield, Mass.
HIllcrest 3-9186
or the local information bureaus of Pittsfield, Lenox, Lee, Stockbridge, Great Barrington, North Adams and Williamstown.

Printed in U.S.A.

ACCOMMODATIONS AND RECREATION IN THE BERKSHIRES

For many generations the Berkshires have been famed for physical beauty and recreation. The vacationer is offered swimming and boating, golf, tennis and riding. Accommodations range from the hotel deluxe to the modern motel.

In addition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Festival at Tanglewood, the vacationer may wish to visit the several museums, the art galleries, and the four summer theatres which are within an easy drive from Tanglewood. A dance festival and jazz concerts are also nearby.

Visitors who wish information on accommodations or schedules of other activities in the Berkshires should address the Berkshire Hills Conference, Pittsfield, Mass. or the local information bureaus of Pittsfield, Lenox, Lee, Stockbridge, Great Barrington, North Adams and Williamstown.

PLEASE USE THIS FORM TO ORDER TICKETS TO INDIVIDUAL CONCERTS

With orders to individual concerts please enclose check and self-addressed return envelope. Prior to June 20 your order should be mailed to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. (CO 6-1492). After June 20 orders should be sent to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. (Lenox 600.)

Ticket Order:
(quantity)

.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 5	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 7	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 8	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 9	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 12	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 14	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 15	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 16	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 19	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 21	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 22	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 23	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 26	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 28	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 29	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for July 30	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 2	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 4	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 5	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 6	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 9	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 11	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 12	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 13	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 16	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 18	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 19	Total	$.....
.....	tickets at $.....	each for August 20	Total	$.....

Tickets To Individual Concerts, Grand Total $ .....

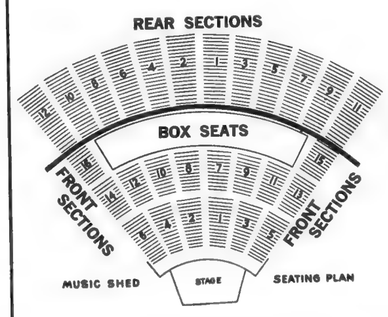
(please enclose check, made payable to Boston Symphony Orchestra Inc., and return stamped envelope)

I prefer to sit in Section No. .....
(Please List Sections by Preference)

Your Name

Permanent Address

Address to which tickets should be mailed after June 1st



Please do not write in this space

PLEASE TEAR HERE — PLEASE TEAR HERE — PLEASE TEAR HERE

SIX BACH-MOZART CONCERTS IN THE MUSIC SHED PERFORMED BY A CHAMBER ORCHESTRA OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MUSICIANS

Series 1: July 7, 8, 9 Series 2: July 14, 15, 16

Fridays and Saturdays at 8:30 p.m.
Sundays at 2:30 p.m.

Section	Single ticket, per concert
Box Seat (6 seats per box)	$5.00
Front: 1, 2, 7 to 10	5.00
Front: 3 to 6, 11 to 16	4.00

FIFTEEN CONCERTS BY THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN THE MUSIC SHED

Series 3: July 21, 22, 23 Series 5: Aug. 4, 5, 6
Series 4: July 28, 29, 30 Series 6: Aug. 11, 12, 13
Series 7: Aug. 18, 19, 20

Fridays and Saturdays at 8:30 p.m.
Sundays at 2:30 p.m.

Section	Single ticket, per concert
Box Seat (6 seats per box)	$6.50
Front: 1, 2, 7 to 10	6.00
Front: 3, 4, 11, 12	5.50
Front: 5, 6, 13 to 16	4.50
Rear, 1 to 8: rows A thru M	4.00
Rear, 1 to 8: rows N thru V	3.50
Rear: 9 to 12	3.00

SEVEN CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS IN THE THEATRE CONCERT HALL

July 5, 12, 19, 26, August 2, 9, 16

Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

Section	Single ticket, per concert
Center and Center Sides	$3.50
Left and Right Sides	3.00

Admission to lawns $2.50
on sale 2½ hours before each concert

PLEASE USE THIS FORM TO ORDER TICKETS TO INDIVIDUAL CONCERTS

With orders to individual concerts please enclose check and self-addressed return envelope. Prior to June 20 your order should be mailed to Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. (CO 6-1492). After June 20 orders should be sent to Festival Ticket Office, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. (Lenox 600.)

Ticket Order:
(quantity)

..... tickets at $..... each for July 5 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 7 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 8 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 9 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 12 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 14 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 15 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 16 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 19 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 21 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 22 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 23 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 26 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 28 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 29 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for July 30 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 2 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 4 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 5 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 6 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 9 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 11 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 12 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 13 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 16 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 18 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 19 Total $.....
..... tickets at $..... each for August 20 Total $.....

Tickets To Individual Concerts, Grand Total $.....
(please enclose check, made payable to Boston Symphony Orchestra Inc., and return stamped envelope)

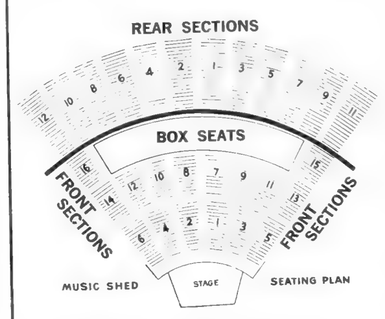
I prefer to sit in Section No. .....
(Please List Sections by Preference)

Your Name

Permanent Address

Address to which tickets should mailed after June 1st

REAR SECTIONS



Please do not write in this space

PLEASE TEAR HERE — PLEASE TEAR HERE — PLEASE TEAR HERE

SIX BACH-MOZART CONCERTS IN THE MUSIC SHED PERFORMED BY A CHAMBER ORCHESTRA OF BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA MUSICIANS

Series 1: July 7, 8, 9 Series 2: July 14, 15, 16

Fridays and Saturdays at 8:30 p.m.
Sundays at 2:30 p.m.

Section	Single ticket, per concert
Box Seat (6 seats per box)	$5.00
Front: 1, 2, 7 to 10	5.00
Front: 3 to 6, 11 to 16	4.00

FIFTEEN CONCERTS BY THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA IN THE MUSIC SHED

Series 3: July 21, 22, 23 Series 5: Aug. 4, 5, 6
Series 4: July 28, 29, 30 Series 6: Aug. 11, 12, 13
Series 7: Aug. 18, 19, 20

Fridays and Saturdays at 8:30 p.m.
Sundays at 2:30 p.m.

Section	Single ticket, per concert
Box Seat (6 seats per box)	$6.50
Front: 1, 2, 7 to 10	6.00
Front: 3, 4, 11, 12	5.50
Front: 5, 6, 13 to 16	4.50
Rear, 1 to 8: rows A thru M	4.00
Rear, 1 to 8: rows N thru V	3.50
Rear: 9 to 12	3.00

SEVEN CHAMBER MUSIC CONCERTS IN THE THEATRE CONCERT HALL

July 5, 12, 19, 26, August 2, 9, 16

Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

Section	Single ticket, per concert
Center and Center Sides	$3.50
Left and Right Sides	3.00

Admission to lawns $2.50
on sale 2½ hours before each concert

	SERIES 1	SERIES 2	SERIES 3	SERIES 4	SERIES 5	SERIES 6	SERIES 7
MONDAY	The public is cordially invited to attend the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday, July 2, at 3:30 p.m. in the Theatre.	JULY 10 8:40 THEATRE Friends Foundation Concert 17th-century chamber music Played by Boston Symphony Orchestra Members	JULY 17 8:30 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Composer's Forum	JULY 24 8:30 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Composer's Forum	JULY 31 8:30 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Composer's Forum	AUGUST 7 This Week's Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (1874-1951) 8:30 THEATRE BMC Opera Production	AUGUST 14 8:30 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Composer's Forum
TUESDAY	JULY 4	11	18 8:30 THEATRE Tanglewood Choir	25 8:30 THEATRE BMC One-Act Operas	AUGUST 1 8:30 THEATRE Tanglewood Choir	8 8:30 THEATRE BMC Opera Production	15
WEDNESDAY	5 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Curtis Quartet with DePasquale and Mayes BRAHMS: Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18 SCHUBERT: Quintet in C major, Op. 163	12 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Budapest Quartet HAYDN: Quartet in D major MILHAUD: Quartet No. 12 BEETHOVEN: Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3	19 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Beaux Arts Trio of New York BEETHOVEN: Trio in G major, No. 1 ROUSSEL: Trio SCHUBERT: Trio in B-flat, Op. 99	26 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert New York Pro Musica Music of Early Renaissance masters, for vocal and instrumental ensemble.	2 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Boston Fine Arts Quartet with DePasquale MOZART: String Quintets in C minor, D major, E-flat major	9 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Kroll Quartet BEETHOVEN: Quartet in F minor, Op. 95 DIAMOND: Quartet No. 2 SCHUMANN: Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3	16 8:30 THEATRE Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital Claudio Arrau Années de Pèlerinage excerpts, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Bénédiction de Dieu, Mephisto Waltz.
THURSDAY	6 8:30 SHED Tanglewood Concert	13 8:30 SHED BMC Orchestra	20 8:30 SHED BMC Orchestra	27 8:30 SHED BMC Orchestra	3 8:30 SHED BOSTON POPS AT TANGLEWOOD ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor (Program and tickets available mid-July)	10 8:30 SHED BMC Orchestra	17 GALA EVENING Berkshire Music Center Benefit (Program and tickets available mid-July)
FRIDAY	7 8:15 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Seminar in Contemporary Music 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BACH: Suite No. 3 Suite No. 2 (Dwyer) Suite No. 1 Suite No. 4	14 8:15 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Seminar in Contemporary Music 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch MOZART: Symphony No. 36 Serenade for Wind Instruments Adagio & Fugue for Strings Symphony No. 40	21 8:15 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Seminar in Contemporary Music 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BEETHOVEN: "Coriolan" Overture BRAHMS: Symphony No. 1 POULENC: Gloria (Addison, Festival Chorus)	28 8:15 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Seminar in Contemporary Music 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch COPLAND: Preamble COPLAND: "Appalachian Spring" Conducted by the Composer RAVEL: "Daphnis et Chloe," complete (Festival Chorus)	4 8:15 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Seminar in Contemporary Music 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Pierre Monteux BEETHOVEN: "Fidelio" Overture SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto (Istomin) STRAUSS: Dance from "Salome" SIBELIUS: Symphony No. 2	11 8:15 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Seminar in Contemporary Music 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Richard Burgin HAYDN: Symphony No. 88 MAHLER: Symphony No. 2 (Carr, Alberts, Festival Chorus)	18 8:15 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL Seminar in Contemporary Music 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch MENDELSSOHN: Octet for Strings DEBUSSY: La Mer BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 4 (Arrau)
SATURDAY	8 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BACH: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin) Cantata No. 202 (Addison) Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss)	15 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch MOZART: Bassoon Concerto (Walt) Flute Concerto (Dwyer) Sinfonia Concertante (Cioffi, Gomberg, Stagliano, Walt)	22 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch SCHUMANN: "Genoveva" Overture SCHUMAN: Symphony No. 7 BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto (Stern)	29 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Eugene Ormandy STRAUSS: "Don Juan" HARRIS: Symphony No. 3 ROUSSEL "Bacchus et Ariane" BRAHMS: Symphony No. 2	5 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:00 SHED BMC Orchestra 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BRAHMS: Variations on a Theme by Haydn PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto No. 2 (Henriot-Schweitzer) FRANCK: Symphony	12 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Leonard Bernstein SHAPERO: Adagietto STRAVINSKY: Symphony of Psalms (Festival Chorus) TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 5	19 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:00 SHED BMC Orchestra 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Pierre Monteux STRAVINSKY: "Petrouchka" Suite RACHMANINOFF: Piano Concerto No. 2 (Grafman) TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 6
SUNDAY	9 10:00 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL BMC Chamber Music 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BACH: Sinfonia from Easter Cantata Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss) Magnificat (Addison, Kopleff, Bressler, Morgan, Tanglewood Choir)	16 10:00 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL BMC Chamber Music 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch MOZART: Symphony No. 29 Piano Concerto, K. 466 (Lipkin) Cantata, "Davidde Penitente" Hugh Ross, Conductor (Tanglewood Choir and Soloists)	23 10:00 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL BMC Chamber Music 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Pierre Monteux RESPIGHI: Antique Dances & Airs VIOTTI: Violin Concerto No. 22 (Stern) DE FALLA: Three-Cornered Hat Dances BARTOK: Violin Rhapsody (Stern) STRAUSS: "Rosenkavalier" Suite	30 10:00 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL BMC Chamber Music 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 4 LISZT: Piano Concerto No. 2 (Janis) PISTON: Three New England Sketches LISZT: Piano Concerto No. 1 (Janis)	6 10:00 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL BMC Chamber Music 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 7 BARTOK: Viola Concerto (de Pasquale) RESPIGHI: "The Pines of Rome"	13 10:00 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL BMC Chamber Music 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch HANSON: Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky HONEGGER: Symphony No. 1 BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 3 8:30 THEATRE BMC Student Soloists	20 10:00 CHAMBER MUSIC HALL BMC Chamber Music 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BERLIOZ: Romeo et Juliette (Kopleff, McCollum, Gramm, Festival Chorus)

IN WHITE — EVENTS TO WHICH FRIENDS ARE INVITED, SUBJECT ONLY TO LIMITS OF SEATING SPACE.
IN BLACK — FESTIVAL CONCERTS, FOR WHICH TICKETS ARE REQUIRED.

PROGRAMS AND SCHEDULE SUBJECT TO CHANGE.

ADMISSION TO SATURDAY MORNING REHEARSALS: $1.50 FOR ADULTS, 50 CENTS FOR CHILDREN; PROCEEDS BENEFITING THE ORCHESTRA'S PENSION FUND.

	SERIES	SERIES	SERIES	SERIES	SERIES	SERIES	SERIES
		JULY 10	JULY 17	JULY 24	JULY 31	AUGUST 7	AUGUST 14
MONDAY	The public is cordially invited to attend the opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center on Sunday, July 2, at 3:30 p.m. in the Theatre.					This Week's Concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are a tribute to Serge Koussevitzky (1874-1951)
TUESDAY	JULY 4	11	18	25	AUGUST 1	8	15
WEDNESDAY	5 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Curtis Quartet with DePasquale and Mayes BRAHMS: Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18 SCHUBERT: Quintet in C major, Op. 163	12 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Budapest Quartet HAYDN: Quartet in D major MILHAUD: Quartet No. 12 BEETHOVEN: Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3	19 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Beaux Arts Trio of New York BEETHOVEN: Trio in G major, No. 1 ROUSSEL: Trio SCHUBERT: Trio in B-flat, Op. 99	26 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert New York Pro Musica Music of Early Renaissance masters, for vocal and instrumental ensemble.	2 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Boston Fine Arts Quartet with DePasquale MOZART: String Quintets in C minor, D major, E-flat major	9 8:30 THEATRE Chamber Music Concert Kroll Quartet BEETHOVEN: Quartet in F minor, Op. 95 DIAMOND: Quartet No. 2 SCHUMANN: Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3	16 8:30 THEATRE Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital Claudio Arrau Années de Pèlerinage excerpts, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Bénédiction de Dieu, Mephisto Waltz.
THURSDAY	6	13	20	27	3 8:30 SHED BOSTON POPS AT TANGLEWOOD ARTHUR FIEDLER, Conductor (Program and tickets available mid-July)	10	17 GALA EVENING Berkshire Music Center Benefit (Program and tickets available mid-July)
FRIDAY	7 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BACH: Suite No. 3 Suite No. 2 (Dwyer) Suite No. 1 Suite No. 4	14 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch MOZART: Symphony No. 36 Serenade for Wind Instruments Adagio & Fugue for Strings Symphony No. 40	21 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BEETHOVEN: "Coriolan" Overture BRAHMS: Symphony No. 1 POULENC: Gloria (Addison, Festival Chorus)	28 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch COPLAND: Preamble COPLAND: "Appalachian Spring" Conducted by the Composer RAVEL: "Daphnis et Chloe," complete (Festival Chorus)	4 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Pierre Monteux BEETHOVEN: "Fidelio" Overture SCHUMANN: Piano Concerto (Istomin) STRAUSS: Dance from "Salome" SIBELIUS: Symphony No. 2	11 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Richard Burgin HAYDN: Symphony No. 88 MAHLER: Symphony No. 2 (Carr, Alberts, Festival Chorus)	18 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch MENDELSSOHN: Octet for Strings DEBUSSY: La Mer BEETHOVEN: Piano Concerto No. 4 (Arrau)
SATURDAY	8 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BACH: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin) Cantata No. 202 (Addison) Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss)	15 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch MOZART: Bassoon Concerto (Walt) Flute Concerto (Dwyer) Sinfonia Concertante (Cioffi, Gomberg, Stagliano, Walt)	22 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch SCHUMANN: "Genoveva" Overture SCHUMAN: Symphony No. 7 BEETHOVEN: Violin Concerto (Stern)	29 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Eugene Ormandy STRAUSS: "Don Juan" HARRIS: Symphony No. 3 ROUSSEL "Bacchus et Ariane" BRAHMS: Symphony No. 2	5 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BRAHMS: Variations on a Theme by Haydn PROKOFIEV: Piano Concerto No. 2 (Henriot-Schweitzer) FRANCK: Symphony	12 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Leonard Bernstein SHAPERO: Adagietto STRAVINSKY: Symphony of Psalms (Festival Chorus) TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 5	19 10:00 SHED BSO Open Rehearsal 8:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Pierre Monteux STRAVINSKY: "Petrouchka" Suite RACHMANINOFF: Piano Concerto No. 2 (Graffman) TCHAIKOVSKY: Symphony No. 6
SUNDAY	9 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BACH: Sinfonia from Easter Cantata Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss) Magnificat (Addison, Kopleff, Bressler, Morgan, Tanglewood Choir)	16 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch MOZART: Symphony No. 29 Piano Concerto, K. 466 (Lipkin) Cantata, "Davidde Penitente" Hugh Ross, Conductor (Tanglewood Choir and Soloists)	23 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Pierre Monteux RESPIGHI: Antique Dances & Airs VIOTTI: Violin Concerto No. 22 (Stern) DE FALLA: Three-Cornered Hat Dances BARTOK: Violin Rhapsody (Stern) STRAUSS: "Rosenkavalier" Suite	30 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 4 LISZT: Piano Concerto No. 2 (Janis) PISTON: Three New England Sketches LISZT: Piano Concerto No. 1 (Janis)	6 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 7 BARTOK: Viola Concerto (de Pasquale) RESPIGHI: "The Pines of Rome"	13 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch HANSON: Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky HONEGGER: Symphony No. 1 BEETHOVEN: Symphony No. 3	20 2:30 SHED BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA Conductor: Charles Munch BERLIOZ: Romeo et Juliette (Kopleff, McCollum, Gramm, Festival Chorus)

IN WHITE — EVENTS TO WHICH FRIENDS ARE INVITED, SUBJECT ONLY TO LIMITS OF SEATING SPACE.
IN BLACK — FESTIVAL CONCERTS, FOR WHICH TICKETS ARE REQUIRED.

PROGRAMS AND SCHEDULE SUBJECT TO CHANGE.

ADMISSION TO SATURDAY MORNING REHEARSALS: $1.50 FOR ADULTS, 50 CENTS FOR CHILDREN; PROCEEDS BENEFITING THE ORCHESTRA'S PENSION FUND.

Theatre collapses

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 13,908
MAR 9 - 1961

SNOW COLLAPSES TANGLEWOOD THEATRE—Tons of snow, piled up on the roof of the Tanglewood Concert Hall at Stockbridge, Mass., proved too much for the wooden girders, looking at the damage is James Kiley, superintendent of the estate looks toward the stage. A new building will [illegible] (AP) Wirephoto

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
MAR 9 1961

Snow Collapses Theater

Tons of snow, piled up on the roof of the Tanglewood Concert hall at Stockbridge, proved too much for the wooden girders. Looking at the damage is James Kiley, superintendent of the estate. A new building will replace the collapsed one. —AP WIREPHOTO.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

JAN 14 1961

Tanglewood Crew Has Renovations Nearly Completed

LENOX—Renovation of a number of areas at Tanglewood is expected to be complete within the next two weeks, according to superintendent of grounds James F. Kiley, who says, "I never anticipated we could get so much work done."

Most of the work has been done by Kiley and four men employed at Tanglewood: A carpenter, a painter and two groundskeepers.

Renovation of the inside and outside of the ticket office has been completed. The Friends of Tanglewood office, the cafeteria and the administration building are also done. Kiley says all that now has to be completed is the press room and two offices.

The grounds crew has also finished the transplanting of five large sugar maples, one of which has been placed in front of the ticket office. Five Norway spruces have been placed around the grounds.

Geraniums for Pops

Kiley says the grounds crew will be occupied with pruning trees and trimming shrubbery after construction is completed. He notes that the greenhouse, where geraniums are being grown for display at the opening of the Pops Concert in Boston the latter part of April, is progressing well.

This will be the second year that the greenhouse at Tanglewood has produced geraniums for the Pops opening. This year's geraniums are the product of cuttings from last year's plants. In addition to the geraniums, petunias and English Ivy will also be sent to the opening.

The new power line from West Street to the Theater Concert Hall is expected to be constructed. Purpose of the new line is to eliminate overhead wires at the main entrance.

If the grounds crew gets a chance this winter, they will tear tear down the north side of the storage building between the garage and the theater because it is felt that area of the storage building is no longer needed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958

MAR 8 1961

Snow Weight Caves In Tanglewood Concert Hall Roof

The roof of the Tanglewood Theatre Concert Hall (not the Music Shed), collapsed Monday under the weight of snow.

The roof was built during World War II with wooden girders, tied together at the joints by riveted steel braces. A new roof, using steel trusses and girders similar to those in the Music Shed, will be constructed before the concert season opens.

Theatre collapses

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 13,908

MAR 9 - 1961

SNOW COLLAPSES TANGLEWOOD THEATRE—Tons of snow, piled up on the roof (AP) Wirephoto of the Tanglewood Concert Hall at Stockbridge, Mass., proved too much for the wooden girders, looking at the damage is James Kiley, superintendent of the estate looks toward the stage, a new building will replace the collapsed one.

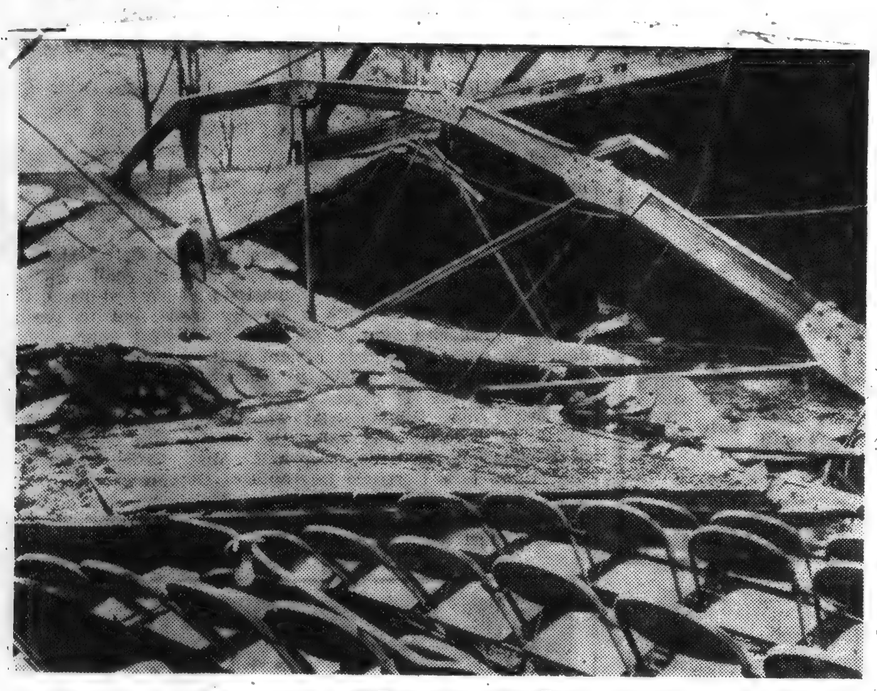
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164

MAR 9 1961



Snow Collapses Theater

Tons of snow, piled up on the roof of the Tanglewood Concert hall at Stockbridge, proved too much for the wooden girders. Looking at the damage is James Kiley, superintendent of the estate. A new building will replace the collapsed one. —AP WIREPHOTO.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

JAN 14 1961

Tanglewood Crew Has Renovations Nearly Completed

LENOX—Renovation of a number of areas at Tanglewood is expected to be complete within the next two weeks, according to superintendent of grounds James F. Kiley, who says, "I never anticipated we could get so much work done."

Most of the work has been done by Kiley and four men employed at Tanglewood: A carpenter, a painter and two groundskeepers.

Renovation of the inside and outside of the ticket office has been completed. The Friends of Tanglewood office, the cafeteria and the administration building are also done. Kiley says all that now has to be completed is the press room and two offices.

The grounds crew has also finished the transplanting of five large sugar maples, one of which has been placed in front of the ticket office. Five Norway spruces have been placed around the grounds.

Geraniums for Pops

Kiley says the grounds crew will be occupied with pruning trees and trimming shrubbery after construction is completed. He notes that the greenhouse, where geraniums are being grown for display at the opening of the Pops Concert in Boston the latter part of April, is progressing well.

This will be the second year that the greenhouse at Tanglewood has produced geraniums for the Pops opening. This year's geraniums are the product of cuttings from last year's plants. In addition to the geraniums, petunias and English Ivy will also be sent to the opening.

The new power line from West Street to the Theater Concert Hall is expected to be constructed. Purpose of the new line is to eliminate overhead wires at the main entrance.

If the grounds crew gets a chance this winter, they will tear tear down the north side of the storage building between the garage and the theater because it is felt that area of the storage building is no longer needed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958

MAR 8 1961

Snow Weight Caves In Tanglewood Concert Hall Roof

The roof of the Tanglewood Theatre Concert Hall (not the Music Shed), collapsed Monday under the weight of snow.

The roof was built during World War II with wooden girders, tied together at the joints by riveted steel braces. A new roof, using steel trusses and girders similar to those in the Music Shed, will be constructed before the concert season opens.

2

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 29 1961

Librizzi

SAFE AND SOUND, the theater concert hall at Tanglewood is now ready for the opening exercises of the 1961 Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon at 3:30. All steel girders have been erected in the theater and a new roof has been constructed. Old roof collapsed during winter when prewar wooden girders gave way under weight of heavy snow which piled up during winter months. First chamber concert will be held in the theater Wednesday evening when the Curtis Quartet will present a concert at 8:30. Bach-Mozart series opens July 7 in the Music Shed with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 17 1961

Tanglewood Opens Shed For Season

Four Area Youths To Work Summer With Grounds Crew

LENOX—The grounds crew at Tanglewood took down about 90 wooden panels to open up the shed this week.

Except for general cleaning of the Shed and installation of seats in the structure, it is now prepared for the coming festival season, according to James I. Kiley, superintendent of grounds.

Mr. Kiley reports that four local youths have been employed as groundskeepers for the summer. They are Kenneth MacFadyen, Rebert Butler and Walter McHendry, all of Lenox, and Allen Brown of Stockbridge.

Three other Lenox men are in the year-round grounds crew. They are Marcel Roux, Harold Clark and Augustus B. Wehry. Another man in the year-round grounds crew is Osceola Crandell of Stockbridge.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
BATH, Me.
Circ. 2,839

MAR 10 1961

Cold Weather Follows Storm Into New England

Boston (AP) — Fair, cold and windy weather today followed yesterday's heavy snow that left as much as 13 inches at Bennington, Vt., and 12 inches in northern Aroostook County and at Augusta in Maine.

At least five deaths in New England were attributed to the storm.

Walter J. Kennedy, 59, a school bus driver, suffered a fatal heart attack at Pittsfield, Maine, after putting chains on the bus during the storm.

Herman R. Koegler, 75, died at Portland, Maine, apparently of a heart attack, while shoveling snow.

Another death occurred at Arlington, Mass., where Christopher Metropoulos, 44, died after shoveling his driveway.

Mrs. Elizabeth Emielita, 33, of Branford, Conn., was killed in that town when her car skidded into another vehicle during the storm.

Another snow shoveler died at Bath, Me. Melvin J. Marco, 67, suffered an apparent heart attack while shoveling snow at his home.

The storm was approaching Newfoundland early today but snow flurries were continuing in the Berkshires of Massachusetts and in northern New England.

The storm had one bright aspect, it blanketed northern ski slopes with a fresh cover that promised a profitable weekend.

At Lenox, Mass., the heavy snow collapsed the roof of the concert hall where the Tanglewood Music Festival is held in summer. Officials estimated damage at $20,000. Repairs are expected to be completed in time for this year's concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

APR 17 1961

Tanglewood Theater Project Will Be Started This Week

LENOX — James F. Kiley, superintendent of grounds at Tanglewood, said today that preliminary work on the reconstruction of the theater concert hall, which was damaged by heavy snows this winter, will start this week.

The east section of the theater roof collapsed late in February when tons of snow proved too much for the wooden Girders. Four steel trusses and a steel girder will replace the wooden roof supports.

The grounds crew at Tanglewood has cleared the debris of the collapsed roof in preparation for the contractor, Ernest J. Cramer of Pittsfield, to begin the reconstruction.

The contractor's preliminary work will include the installation of cement footings and steel posts for the support of the trusses and the girder.

Mr. Kiley said it is hoped the reconstruction will be completed the week of May 15.

Holes will be cut through a part of the roof now intact and a cable from a crane will draw the trusses from the floor of the hall into place. Prentice Bradley, Pittsfield architect, is the designer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026

MAR 9 1961

Boston Symphony's Tanglewood Hall Is Felled By Snow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is going to have to build new theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Heavy snow this winter, it was revealed yesterday, caused the roof of the austere contemporary design building to collapse and that buckled a section of wall. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra said Prentice Bradley, Pittsfield architect, has been engaged to design the new building and Ernest J. Cramer, Pittsfield contractor, will put it up. It is expected it will be ready for the opening of the Tanglewood season July 4.

The structure was built after the start of World War II, and since steel for girders was not then available, the cantilever roof was supported by wooden beams held together at the joints by riveted steel braces. The weight of the winter snow was too much for the structure. Perry said that the new building will have steel trusses and girders.

The theater-music hall is used for chamber music and operatic productions. It is some distance from the big 6,000-seat music shed which apparently came through the winter unscathed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,001

MAR 10 1961

TANGLEWOOD ROOF CRUSHED BY SNOW

LENOX (AP)—Heavy snow from yesterday's storm collapsed the roof of the concert hall where the Tanglewood Music Festival is held in summer. Officials estimated damage at $20,000.

Repairs are expected to be completed in time for this year's concerts.

Theatre collapses

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal (e)
LEWISTON-AUBURN, Me.
Circ. 13,908
MAR 9 - 1961

SNOW COLLAPSES TANGLEWOOD THEATRE—Tons of snow, piled up on the roof of the Tanglewood Concert Hall at Stockbridge, Mass., proved too much for the wooden girders, looking at the damage is James Kiley, superintendent of the estate looks toward the stage. A new building will replace the collapsed one. (AP) Wirephoto

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 42,164
MAR 9 1961

Snow Collapses Theater

Tons of snow, piled up on the roof of the Tanglewood Concert hall at Stockbridge, proved too much for the wooden girders. Looking at the damage is James Kiley, superintendent of the estate. A new building will replace the collapsed one. —AP WIREPHOTO.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
JAN 14 1961

Tanglewood Crew Has Renovations Nearly Completed

LENOX—Renovation of a number of areas at Tanglewood is expected to be complete within the next two weeks, according to superintendent of grounds James F. Kiley, who says, "I never anticipated we could get so much work done."

Most of the work has been done by Kiley and four men employed at Tanglewood: A carpenter, a painter and two groundskeepers.

Renovation of the inside and outside of the ticket office has been completed. The Friends of Tanglewood office, the cafeteria and the administration building are also done. Kiley says all that now has to be completed is the press room and two offices.

The grounds crew has also finished the transplanting of five large sugar maples, one of which has been placed in front of the ticket office. Five Norway spruces have been placed around the grounds.

Geraniums for Pops

Kiley says the grounds crew will be occupied with pruning trees and trimming shrubbery after construction is completed. He notes that the greenhouse, where geraniums are being grown for display at the opening of the Pops Concert in Boston the latter part of April, is progressing well.

This will be the second year that the greenhouse at Tanglewood has produced geraniums for the Pops opening. This year's geraniums are the product of cuttings from last year's plants. In addition to the geraniums, petunias and English Ivy will also be sent to the opening.

The new power line from West Street to the Theater Concert Hall is expected to be constructed. Purpose of the new line is to eliminate overhead wires at the main entrance.

If the grounds crew gets a chance this winter, they will tear tear down the north side of the storage building between the garage and the theater because it is felt that area of the storage building is no longer needed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958
MAR 8 1961

Snow Weight Caves In Tanglewood Concert Hall Roof

The roof of the Tanglewood Theatre Concert Hall (not the Music Shed), collapsed Monday under the weight of snow.

The roof was built during World War II with wooden girders, tied together at the joints by riveted steel braces. A new roof, using steel trusses and girders similar to those in the Music Shed, will be constructed before the concert season opens.

2

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 29 1961

Librizzi

SAFE AND SOUND, the theater concert hall at Tanglewood is now ready for the opening exercises of the 1961 Berkshire Festival Sunday afternoon at 3:30. All steel girders have been erected in the theater and a new roof has been constructed. Old roof collapsed during winter when prewar wooden girders gave way under weight of heavy snow which piled up during winter months. First chamber concert will be held in the theater Wednesday evening when the Curtis Quartet will present a concert at 8:30. Bach-Mozart series opens July 7 in the Music Shed with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 17 1961

Tanglewood Opens Shed For Season

Four Area Youths To Work Summer With Grounds Crew

LENOX—The grounds crew at Tanglewood took down about 90 wooden panels to open up the shed this week.

Except for general cleaning of the Shed and installation of seats in the structure, it is now prepared for the coming festival season, according to James I. Kiley, superintendent of grounds.

Mr. Kiley reports that four local youths have been employed as groundskeepers for the summer. They are Kenneth MacFadyen, Robert Butler and Walter McHendry, all of Lenox, and Allen Brown of Stockbridge.

Three other Lenox men are in the year-round grounds crew. They are Marcel Roux, Harold Clark and Augustus B. Wehry. Another man in the year-round grounds crew is Osceola Crandell of Stockbridge.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
BATH, Me.
Circ. 2,839

MAR 10 1961

Cold Weather Follows Storm Into New England

Boston (AP) — Fair, cold and windy weather today followed yesterday's heavy snow that left as much as 13 inches at Bennington, Vt., and 12 inches in northern Aroostook County and at Augusta in Maine.

At least five deaths in New England were attributed to the storm.

Walter J. Kennedy, 59, a school bus driver, suffered a fatal heart attack at Pittsfield, Maine, after putting chains on the bus during the storm.

Herman R. Koegler, 75, died at Portland, Maine, apparently of a heart attack, while shoveling snow.

Another death occurred at Arlington, Mass., where Christopher Metropoulos, 44, died after shoveling his driveway.

Mrs. Elizabeth Emielita, 33, of Branford, Conn., was killed in that town when her car skidded into another vehicle during the storm.

Another snow shoveler died at Bath, Me. Melvin J. Marco, 67, suffered an apparent heart attack while shoveling snow at his home.

The storm was approaching Newfoundland early today but snow flurries were continuing in the Berkshires of Massachusetts and in northern New England.

The storm had one bright aspect, it blanketed northern ski slopes with a fresh cover that promised a profitable weekend.

At Lenox, Mass., the heavy snow collapsed the roof of the concert hall where the Tanglewood Music Festival is held in summer. Officials estimated damage at $20,000. Repairs are expected to be completed in time for this year's concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

APR 17 1961

Tanglewood Theater Project Will Be Started This Week

LENOX — James F. Kiley, superintendent of grounds at Tanglewood, said today that preliminary work on the reconstruction of the theater concert hall, which was damaged by heavy snows this winter, will start this week.

The east section of the theater roof collapsed late in February when tons of snow proved too much for the wooden Girders. Four steel trusses and a steel girder will replace the wooden roof supports.

The grounds crew at Tanglewood has cleared the debris of the collapsed roof in preparation for the contractor, Ernest J. Cramer of Pittsfield, to begin the reconstruction.

The contractor's preliminary work will include the installation of cement footings and steel posts for the support of the trusses and the girder.

Mr. Kiley said it is hoped the reconstruction will be completed the week of May 15.

Holes will be cut through a part of the roof now intact and a cable from a crane will draw the trusses from the floor of the hall into place. Prentice Bradley, Pittsfield architect, is the designer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,001

MAR 10 1961

TANGLEWOOD ROOF CRUSHED BY SNOW

LENOX (AP)—Heavy snow from yesterday's storm collapsed the roof of the concert hall where the Tanglewood Music Festival is held in summer. Officials estimated damage at $20,000.

Repairs are expected to be completed in time for this year's concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-420(

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026

MAR 8 1961

Boston Symphony's Tanglewood Hall Is Felled By Snow

The Boston Symphony Orchestra is going to have to build new theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Heavy snow this winter, it was revealed yesterday, caused the roof of the austere contemporary design building to collapse and that buckled a section of wall. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra said Prentice Bradley, Pittsfield architect, has been engaged to design the new building and Ernest J. Cramer, Pittsfield contractor, will put it up. It is expected it will be ready for the opening of the Tanglewood season July 4.

The structure was built after the start of World War II, and since steel for girders was not then available, the cantilever roof was supported by wooden beams held together at the joints by riveted steel braces. The weight of the winter snow was too much for the structure. Perry said that the new building will have steel trusses and girders.

The theater-music hall is used for chamber music and operatic productions. It is some distance from the big 6,000-seat music shed which apparently came through the winter unscathed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

MAR 7 1961

Snow Collapses Tanglewood Theater Roof

Liberini

Tons of snow, piled up on the roof of the Tanglewood Theatre Concert Hall, proved too much for the wooden girders, tied together at the joints by riveted steel braces, the only material available when the building was constructed following the outbreak of World War II. Standing on the damaged roof, inspecting the damage, is James Kiley, superintendent of the Tanglewood estate, looking toward the stage. Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said today Prentice Bradley, Pittsfield architect, will design the new building, using steel trusses and girders such as may be found in the Music Shed, which was reinforced with steel throughout before war was declared. Ernest J. Cramer, Pittsfield contractor, will build the new structure. The loss, which is estimated at thousands of dollars, is not covered by insurance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026

APR 18 1961

Theater-Concert Hall Going Up At Tanglewood

Preliminary work will start this week on reconstruction of the theater-concert hall at Tanglewood, Lenox, James F. Kiley, superintendent of grounds, said yesterday.

Wooden trusses supporting the roof of the structure, built during World War II when steel was not available, gave way under the weight of winter snow and let the east section of the roof collapse.

Kiley said four steel trusses and a steel girder will be installed to replace the wooden trusses. Steel posts set in cement footings will support the trusses and girder. The part of the roof that was not damaged will be retained.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 17 196.

Gray

TANGLEWOOD CREW removes panels from the front of the Shed, opening it up for the season which will start next month. Box office personnel and equipment will arrive Tuesday. In photo, l. to r., are James I Kiley, superintendent of grounds, Allen Brown, Kenneth MacFadyen, Robert Butler.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367

MAR 10 1961

Tanglewood Roof Falls

LENOX (AP) — Heavy snow from yesterday's storm collapsed the roof of the concert hall where the Tanglewood Music Festival is held in summer. Officials estimated damage at $20,000.

Repairs are expected to be completed in time for this year's concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 178,037

MAR 10 1961

Tanglewood Hall Roof Collapses Under Snowfall

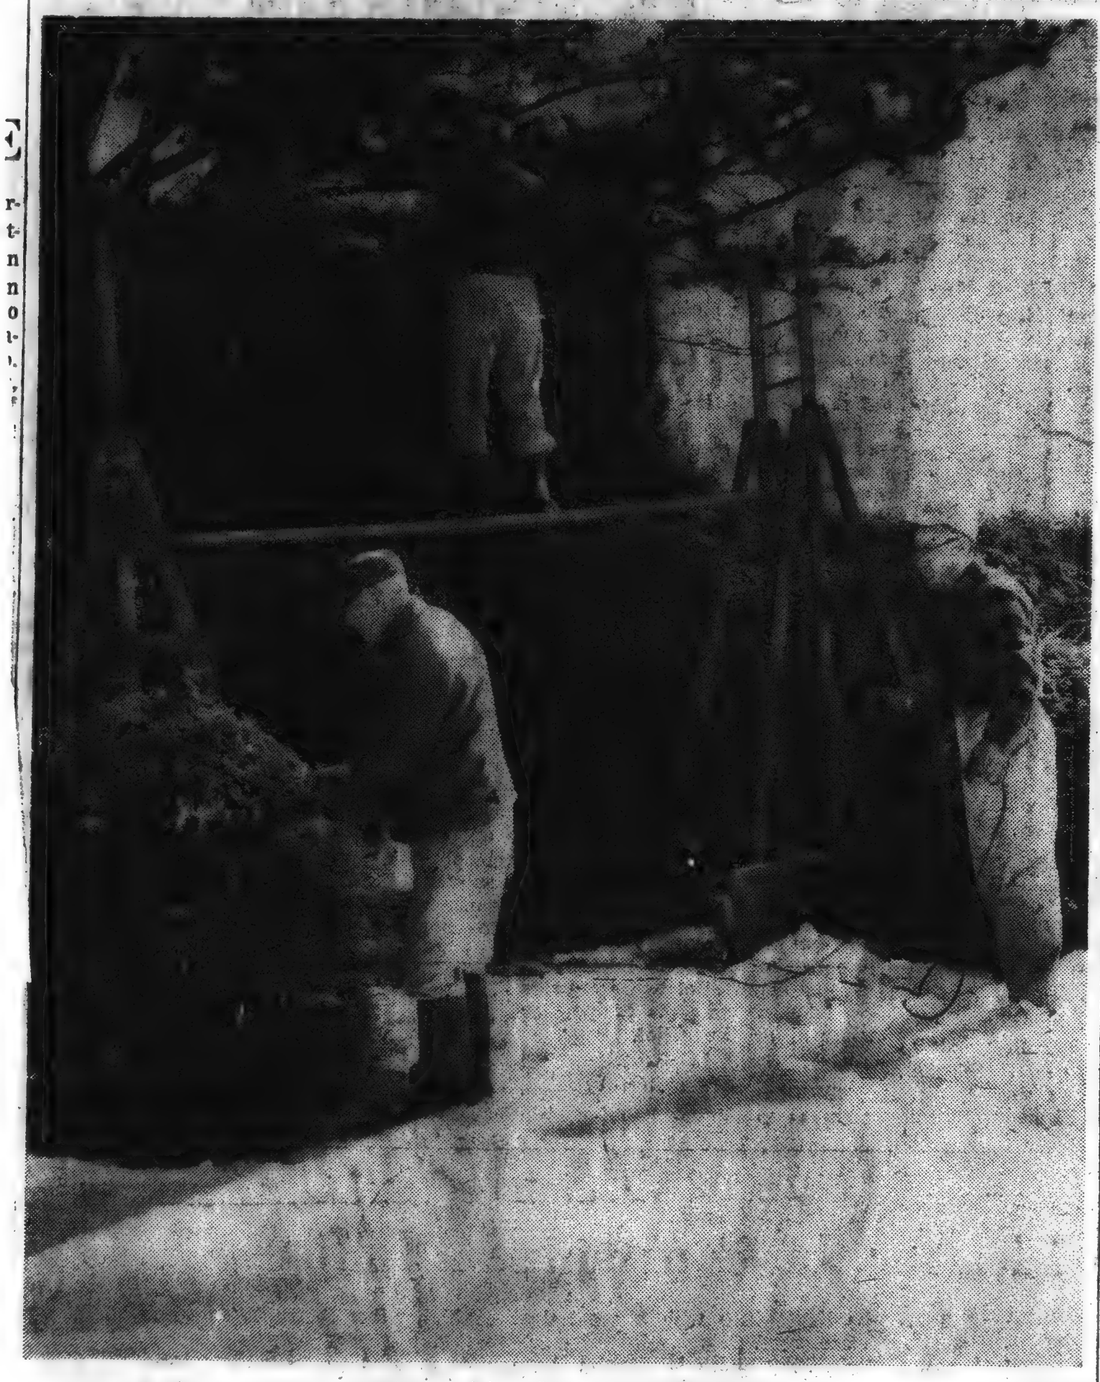
LENOX (AP)—Heavy snow from yesterday's storm collapsed the roof of the concert hall where where the Tanglewood music festival is held in summer. Officials estimated damage at $20,000.

Repairs are expected to be completed in time for this year's concerts.

4

The Berkshire E

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Saturday, March 4, 1961



Librizzi

SPRING PRUNING in the formal gardens at Tanglewood was started this week when the temperatures started to climb. James Kiley, at right, superintendent of the Tanglewood grounds, holds cord for electric shears being used on platform by Harry B. Clark, while Gus B. Wehry clips one of the evergreen hedges at left. Gardens attract many Festival visitors.

PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

OCT 15 1960

Sounds of Off-Season Fix-Up Fill Tanglewood

By FRANK V. McCARTHY

TANGLEWOOD — Sounds of hammers and saws and the radio broadcast of the World Series echoed across the lawns here this week as about two dozen workmen carried out extensive alterations at various points around the grounds.

The alterations include repainting the whole or part of several buildings, addition of a new porch and other work on the administration building (former mansion of the Tappan Estate), and remodeling of the building housing the ticket booths and adjacent offices near the main parking lot. In addition, some of the roadways have received a new layer of oil and stone, and the pavement has been extended on a part of the parking lot near the ticket windows.

All work is under the general supervision of James F. Kiley, superintendent at Tanglewood. The repainting jobs are being carried out by Mr. Kiley's maintenance crew with the assistance of four workmen sent up from the Symphony Hall crew in Boston.

55 Gallons for Shed

The men have completed the repainting of the Shed in the special buff shade used since the Shed was built in 1937. Two coats were added in 1958 and a single coat of 55 gallons has been added in the latest job. The oil-base paint is mixed specially for the Tanglewood Shed by the Glidden Paint Co. of Reading, Pa.

The paint job on the administration building is changing the color of the former mansion from gray to Victorian green. The dark shade of green was chosen to blend the building with its background.

Since the building is more than 100 years old, all the former layers of paint are being removed so the wood may be newly primed. Starting with what was apparently an initial coat of white lead, the old paint included layers of white, brown, green and gray. The old paint doesn't come off easily. It takes three men to remove the old paint as quickly as one man can brush on the new green.

Old Porch Matched

The new covered porch on the building is an extension of the old one. The extension is on the side that formerly had only a porch floor, shaded during the festival season by a canvas awning. The floor was torn out and replaced. New pillars and other woodwork are duplications of those along the old covered porch.

Roofing on the new porch is galvanized metal. New galvanized flashing is also being installed on the roof of the old porch, as well as on part of the building's main roof.

Workmen have pointed up the stone foundation of the building, as well as the stonework in the former ice house nearby where the public telephones are kept.

The remodeling of the ticket booths and adjacent offices includes a rearrangement of ticket windows to move them away from the main gate in order to reduce crowding there during the concerts. The new windows have two jalousie sections with a sliding panel arrangement at the bottom for the passage of money and tickets.

Ticket Section Enlarged

Either the upper or lower jalousie sections can be opened or closed depending upon outdoor temperatures. The former ticket windows had to be either completely opened or closed no matter what the weather outside. They often resulted in considerable discomfort to those in the ticket office.

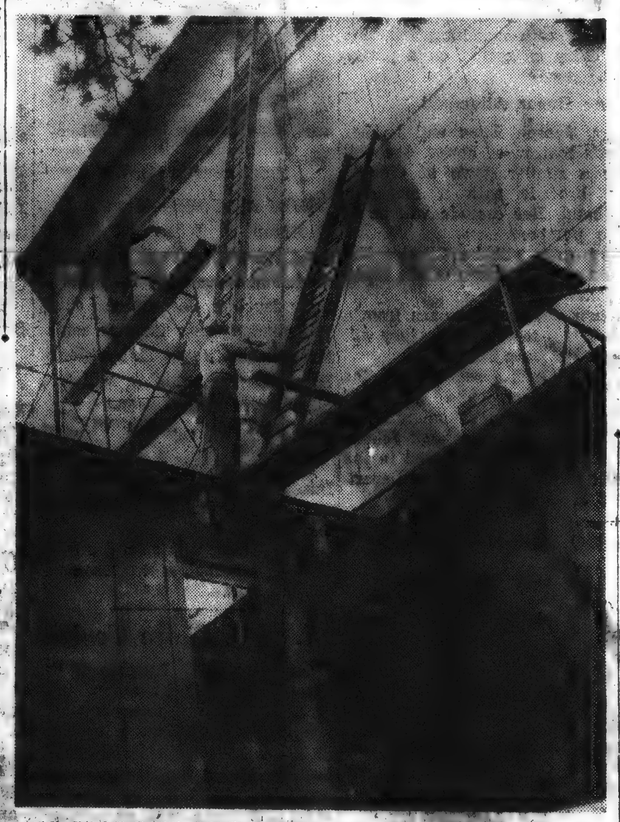
Ten feet has been added to the section devoted to ticket sales. Another 10 feet has been added to the press room. To provide space for the expansions, the section available to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center has been reduced and one administration office will be moved to another part of the grounds. Which office will be moved has not yet been determined.

The foundation of the office building has been raised eight inches to allow air to circulate under the flooring. It was found that lack of air circulation resulted in rapid deterioration of the sills and joists. Rotted woodwork has been replaced.

The color of the trim on the ticket offices and adjacent sections will be changed from baby blue to brown. Similarly repainted will be the trim on the book store, cafeteria and concert hall. In the cafeteria, screening that formerly separated the kitchen from the serving area has been removed and replaced by a louver arrangement. Rotted wood at the base of the back wall on the cafeteria has been replaced.

Contractors involved in the several projects include Ernest J. Cramer, Inc. and D. J. Wooliver & Sons, both of Pittsfield; Victor Pellizzaro of Lee; William T. Lahart & Son of Lenox, and Nat Beacco & Sons of Stockbridge.

TICKET BOOTH REMODELING at Tanglewood this fall includes enlargement and rearrangement of the sales areas. The windows have been moved away from the main gate to lessen congestion, and jalousie windows have been installed to better cope with weath...



55 GALLONS OF PAINT were required for a single coat on the huge Music Shed at the Berkshire Festival grounds. The same buff shade used since the shed was built in 1937 was applied. James F. Kiley, Tanglewood superintendent, is in charge of the current face-lifting activities on buildings.

Photos by McCarthy

SCRAPING DOWN the outside surface of the 100-year-old administration building at Tanglewood proved a time-consuming task. One man applying the new Victorian green can keep up with three scrapers. The porch section pictured is a newly roofed extension of the old porch, and matching materials were used to keep the two areas harmonious.

6

SCHONBERG CONTROVERSY

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
APR 30 1961

WARMED OVER

Routine Winter Works Fill Berkshire Lists

By HAROLD C. SCHONBERG

HOW festive should a festival be? Should the idea of a music festival imply something fresh and out of the ordinary? If so, the programs of the oncoming Berkshire Festival are about as festive as a ballroom after the ball is over. It was with a sinking feeling that we looked over the recently announced programs—programs with no unity, no theme, no adventure, hardly any novelties, programs with the same conductors and soloists as of yore. The Berkshire Festival programs by now are not only inbred, esthetically speaking; they are intermated to a degree that comes close to legal prohibition.

From July 7 to Aug. 20, sixty-seven pieces of music will be played. The first two weekends will once again be devoted to Bach and Mozart. The other five will contain popular symphonies, many of them taken from the regular Boston Symphony season in Boston and New York. Three important contemporary pieces of music, the Poulenc "Gloria," Schuman's Seventh Symphony and the Foss "Time Cycle," will be conducted by Charles Munch and Leonard Bernstein, both of whom were responsible for the premieres last season. Mr. Bernstein will be doing the "Symphony of Psalms" by Stravinsky. He had conducted it with the New York Philharmonic. About the only major works not heard during the regular winter season will be Mahler's "Resurrection" Symphony and Bartok's Viola Concerto.

Sorry Showing

The conclusion seems inescapable that neither the conductors nor the sponsors of the festival are going much out of their way. Perhaps they figure that what has worked well in the past should work equally well in the future, and why trifle with a good thing? One hesitates to accuse these good gentlemen of cynicism. But certainly the Berkshire Festival programs, which year in and year out repeat the same material, make a sorry showing for what is commonly supposed to be the most important music festival in America.

Nobody would expect so commercial an enterprise as the Berkshire Festival to turn around and change its format. If it is challenged by anybody in the business that it has become a money-maker by catering to an audience that is not avant-garde, that responds to and wants the great music of the past. Granted all of that, there is still no real excuse for the slapdash, unenterprising programs that mark the prevalent philosophy there; just as there is no excuse for allowing on the Tanglewood grounds squealing young women dressed in very brief shorts and halters. Tanglewood is beginning to look like Coney Island, and, on Sunday afternoons, to smell and sound like it.

Lukas Foss.

Within the framework that has made Tanglewood so successful, there still is plenty of room in which to work without repeating the same pieces every summer. Instead of the traditional Bach week-end opening, why not a Haydn week-end, in which some of the less-played symphonies are explored? The audience that will listen happily to the Bach "Brandenburg" Concertos will listen just as happily to the "Bear" Symphony. It is not as if the Haydn symphonies were musical cripples, to be played on sufferance. They are great music.

Theme Needed

What the programs need are a theme, such as the one some years back when Mr. Munch examined the music of Berlioz. Audiences will still be able to get Isaac Stern playing the Beethoven or Brahms, or Rudolf Serkin the Brahms concertos, and there is no reason why they should not. But if there were some sort of theme, audiences would get something out of the routine in addition. The theme this year could have well been Liszt, with one major work inserted into each week-end, along with the more standard repertory. Or it could have been MacDowell. Or, horror of horrors, Anton Webern, who died fifteen years ago. Or it could celebrate an important living composer.

If not for the chamber music concerts and the Fromm-sponsored series of modern music (naturally, the Berkshire Festival would not sponsor contemporary music), the Tanglewood summer would be a sheer intellectual nullity. It has been degenerating ever since Serge Koussevitzky left it. It is true that Koussevitzky's programs also had a habit of repeating themselves, but the proportion of novelty on them was higher than it now is. And in addition, Koussevitzky, with his flaming presence, his interest in everything that went on during the summer, and his activities with young composers and conductors and orchestral musicians, was a symbol. His presence made itself felt and was an inspiration. Nobody of that stature is around Tanglewood nowadays.

Extra Effort

The Berkshire Festival badly needs a leading spirit. It should stand for something—and it now stands for nothing. During the summer months a little extra effort should be made. Would attendance be hurt so badly if the season ended with Berlioz' "Benvenuto Cellini" instead of "Daphnis and Chloe" or "Romeo and Juliet" or the Beethoven Ninth? Would the Massachusetts populace flee with terror if a work by Luigi Nono or Pierre Boulez were slyly inserted into a program, along with the "Eroica" Symphony and Schubert's "Rosamunde"? Would the world come to an end if, on an evening containing the Brahms First Symphony and Strauss' "Don Juan," Mr. Munch were also to conduct a work by a composer such as Peter Racine Fricker or Ben Weber or Charles Ives?

Or, in the standard repertory, would the Berkshire Festival collapse if Schumann's Overture, Scherzo and Finale were substituted for his Piano Concerto? The Brahms A major Serenade could replace the symphonies once in a while. Some Delius would be welcome in place of Debussy. Stravinsky's "Petruchka" is a wonderful piece; but so is his "Renard," "Persephone" and "Baiser de la Fée," none of which ever turns up at the festival. Tchaikovsky's last three symphonies seem to turn up every summer. Why not his orchestral suites for a change? (The Suite No. 1, for instance, is a brilliant piece of music.)

In short, there is a world of great music that the Berkshire Festival could and should present. But whatever the reason—whether the conductors do not want to learn new works, or whether the sponsors feel it will hurt attendance, or a combination of both—only a tiny, well-worn segment of the repertory has been the major part of the Berkshire Festival for more years than one cares to think. What it needs is what in race track talk is called an edison—something to give it a sharp jolt and make it run a little faster.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
MAY 17 1961

Notes and Footnotes

OPEN AND SHUT: Interesting switch in the Boys' Club building program: a rare case of a building wiping out a parking lot, instead of vice versa . . . Watch Friday's paper, and Jimmy Hatlo's cartoon, "They'll Do It Every Time." In his customary credit for the idea he will list Clarence (Gus) Dohoney of Lee, real estate dealer. The cartoon gag deals with the oddities of folks when they sell their house. Gus sent in the suggestion about three months ago, and just heard from Hatlo, who told when to look for it, and closed, "If anything arouses you or makes you blow your top I'd be glad to hear about it" . . . When South Mountain Temple of Music set out daffodils in the grass along the Route 20 entrance to the property, it seemed inevitable that the larcenous traveling public would help themselves to the lovely blossoms. And so they have. Mrs. Sally Willeke, South Mountain director, asks us to make mention that the daffodils are for public enjoyment, were a gift from Holland of 23 specimen varieties, so "please don't pick them." They may appear to be growing wild in the grass, but that is in reality a method of planting followed by experts, who say it brings out the colors to best advantage . . . Repercussions in the music world: Harold C. Schonberg, New York Times music critic, a couple o Sundays ago roundly trounced th Boston Symphony for its "med ocre" programming at Tanglewoo Last Sunday the Times ran thre letters from readers who agree wholly with the critic . . . Th Auto Legal Association warns, no that summer is here, so is the slow poke driver, or "highway turtle. The ALA surmises that the creep ing motorist causes more accident than the speeder. Don't pok along to admire the scenery. Pul off the road and let that line bac of you pass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

MAY 6 1961

Tanglewood Programming

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

In the music section of the New York Times last Sunday, April 30, its music critic, Harold S. Schonberg, let fly some observations on what he feels should be the character of the musical offerings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Inasmuch as The Eagle reprinted Mr. Schonberg's criticism, perhaps you would be willing to print my reply.

Mr. Schonberg's criticisms seem to boil down basically to one, that there is less novelty in the Tanglewood programs than he would like to see, since they consist largely of music that has been played in the preceding season in Boston and New York and in previous Berkshire Festivals. In turn, this seems to indicate to Mr. Schonberg a somnolence or commercialism, or both, on the orchestra's part, and leads him to feel that a new messiah is needed to lead Tanglewood back out of the wilderness and again into the paths of righteousness from whence it has strayed.

* * *

Mr. Schonberg indicates in his opening sentences that a festival should imply "something fresh and out of the ordinary." He may believe so, but this is his own addition to the definition by Webster, who says a festival is "a periodical seasonal entertainment of a specific sort; as a music festival," or the Oxford Dictionary: "A musical performance, or series of performances, at recurring periods, e.g. the Handel festival." This phrase "fresh and out of the ordinary" is Mr. Schonberg's private addition and we do not accept responsibility for it.

In answer to Mr. Schonberg's criticism, that the programs are drawn from the preceding season's repertoire, let it be known that it is the intention of the Festival and has been ever since the orchestra first became associated with Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1936, to offer music from the orchestra's recent repertoire, at the highest level of performance. To understand this point, one must consider the functioning of an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Performance and preparation at our level of work is done under the most intense application by the players and conductor. Speaking generally, a full week's work is the preparation and performance, one or more times, of one concert program. Beyond that human fatigue makes further work simply wasteful and unrewarding.

* * *

When the orchestra first went to Tanglewood, a decision was made in response to the circumstances there: given a locus such as Tanglewood, an orchestra like the Boston Symphony, and a summer season, what was the best thing to do? One might decide on one program with the necessary five or six rehearsals; or one might decide on a new program every day with scant rehearsals; or something in between. In our case, there were other added factors of an apparently insatiable appetite for the orchestra's concerts, and a fresh repertoire of the 24 carefully prepared programs of the season just past—50 or 60 hours of music prepared and played in Boston and, in part, in New York and other cities visited by the orchestra in the winter season, but even so not yet available to much of anyone else. It was decided therefore that a schedule of three programs a week drawn from the winter repertoire, with five or six rehearsals to refresh them and to give some time for some new productions, would be the best. As a result, a perfectly conscious decision was made to wed the Festival offerings to the winter repertoire, a practice that has been followed for 25 years. A simple examination of the programs over the years reveals this and we have never pretended we were doing anything else.

* * *

Thus what Mr. Schonberg says—that most of the programs at Tanglewood are drawn from the winter's repertoire is therefore perfectly true and it is intentionally so. What is surprising is that so knowledgeable a reviewer is startled thereby or that, except from a personal point of view, he would argue this practice is shabby, sleepy, base, unworthy, or otherwise reprehensible.

As for Mr. Schonberg's wish for a messiah to lead us out of the wilderness, I'm afraid that I don't agree that we are in the wilderness. His belief that we are poor lost sheep gone astray in a forest is based again on a private idea of what is a sheep, what is astray, and what is a forest. We are quite aware of what we are doing, and we offer no apologies for the course we follow. Mr. Schonberg asks that the Festival "stand for something." What it stands for is an offering to the public of a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, drawn from its winter repertoire, carefully and lovingly prepared and played in one of the world's loveliest settings, under excellent acoustical conditions. If this be slumber, or greed, or abdication of our musical responsibility, Mr. Schonberg may make the most of it.

THOMAS D. PERRY Jr.
Manager, Boston Symphony Orch.
Boston.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

MAY 6 1961

In Brief . . .

We're delighted to print in adjacent columns today Boston Symphony Orchestra manager Thomas D. Perry's reply to the trumpet-like blast against Tanglewood sounded by New York Times music critic Harold C. Schonberg. This discord over musical programming makes for an endless debate, as inconclusive as arguments about musical taste itself, but it is good to have both sides so resoundingly on the record . . . Wh[illegible] Robert T. Capeless would seem to be unusually well qualified for his mission as a member of a promotion team spreading the word of Massachusetts' golden economic opportunities among hesitant Midwestern industrialists . . .

Because of the miserable weekend weather prevailing in the past month, the labors of Roy Boutard, Dick Boyce, et al., on the Friday garden pages seemed a grim jest. But right now, at least, this looks like one weekend when Berkshire gardeners can put all that good advice to work . . . It would be surprising if that record-breaking pike catch in Onota by three Pittsfield youths did not result in a run on bait minnows and spincasters by Berkshire anglers . . .

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

MAY 16 1961

The Lively Arts

By Milton R. Bass

THE CURRENT controversy that is mildly raging between Harold C. Schonberg, the music critic for the New York Times, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra over programming at Tanglewood is merely variations on a theme. Every year some critic or other takes off on the Boston Symphony and its Tanglewood programming. Even our own Jay Rosenfeld, the gentlest of men, gruntled a bit once at the lack of daring in the summer schedule.

I personally took up the cudgels a few years ago with Jay Harrison, a music critic for the New York Herald Tribune, when he ripped into the Tanglewood management for playing the same old Beethoven Ninth each year and not trying some of the more contemporary composers.

My point in the debate was that it was quite understandable how metropolitan music critics might get terribly tired of hearing the same old Beethoven Ninth and Tchaikovsky and Bach and Brahms over and over again, but nearly all the people who hear these works at Tanglewood are hearing them for the one and only time that year and maybe many years. It is doubtful whether many even play recordings of these pieces the rest of the year.

* * *

I HEAR MORE live jazz in the course of a year than live symphonic music, but I play more recorded symphonic music than I play recorded jazz. My few thousand records contain examples of nearly all the big symphonic orchestras, conductors, singers, jazz musicians and vocalists. For instance, I have four different interpretations of Beethoven's "Emperor Concerto," one of my favorite war horses, and each one fills a slightly different need. I also have all the recordings of the Modern Jazz Quartet, and this includes all their interpretations of "God Rest Ye, Merry Gentlemen."

Just as Mr. Schonberg cringes at the thought of hearing the Boston Symphony doing another rendition of Beethoven's Ninth, so do I at a live concert of the Modern Jazz Quartet shake with exasperation when leader John Lewis announces the group is going to do their version of "God Rest Ye, Merry Gentlemen." It's a good number and pleasant to hear, but I have heard it played at every one of the 15 live concerts of the Modern Jazz Quartet that I have attended, and I have it at home on four different records. To me it has become a big, fat drag.

To the average person who attends the Modern Jazz Quartet concert at the Music Barn here it is just the opposite. At the most he hears this group once a year, and it is most unlikely that he even owns one of their records. He may have heard them do "God Rest Ye" once before and he loved it. Therefore, when John Lewis announces that they are going to play this tune, the average member of the audience squeals with glee.

* * *

IT IS ONLY Mr. Schonberg at Tanglewood and me at Music Barn who are disturbed by the standard repertoire. The rest of the people are there to hear the musicians' specialties played the best way they know how. At Tanglewood it is the winter repertoire of the Boston Symphony, polished and perfected, and played under salubriously beautiful surroundings. At Music Barn it is the Modern Jazz Quartet playing its classics. In the same way the people who attend a Shakespeare festival do not expect to see Ionesco. They want Shakespeare.

Now where does a critic come in under these circumstances? Should he be relieved of duty after a few years so that his jaded ears will not be pounded deaf? Should he be put out to pasture or shot? Should the public disregard his comments as unworthy of consideration?

* * *

ON BEHALF of Mr. Schonberg and myself I would like to venture a firm no. After all, you need someone who has heard several versions of the piece several times in order to find out if you are getting your money's worth. Someone has to keep the musicians from getting sloppy or bored or overconfident. You must always remember that the musicians have also heard these pieces several times, and they might be in worse shape than the critics. And on those occasions, those happy occasions, when the musicians outdo themselves to such an extent that even the tired old critic is stirred to superlatives, think what a boon it is to the public. Those who were lucky enough to be there can tell their envious friends that even old Schonberg showed some enthusiasm.

* * *

ORCHESTRAS and musicians need tired old critics to keep them on their toes, to keep them aware of public responsibility and public censure. Quite often the criticism is unjust, but more often it is just what the musicians need. Great art does not come from lethargy or complacence or the status quo. Only the phoenix rises from the ashes, and even they haven't pulled that off recently. I am sure that some warmth and light will come from Mr. Schonberg's throwing a few sticks in the fire.

And if the Modern Jazz Quartet plays "God Rest Ye" at their concert here this year, I'm going to tell Schonberg about it when I see him at Tanglewood during the Beethoven Ninth. We'll both sit down and weep and comb my thinning hair.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658

MAY 14 1961

8

MAIL POUCH: TANGLEWOOD IN DISPUTE

To the Music Editor:

TWO weeks ago, Harold C. Schonberg let fly some observations on what he feels should be the character of the musical offerings of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. I generally adhere to the principle that the place for a reviewer is his journal, and for a performer his stage, and each should keep off the other's platform. In disfavoring our musical policies, however, Mr. Schonberg has elected to enter my realm with some force and a good deal of misunderstanding. I therefore ask to have a bit of equal space in his bailiwick.

Mr. Schonberg's criticisms seem to boil down basically to one, that there is less novelty in the Tanglewood programs than he would like to see, since they consist largely of music that has been played in the preceding season in Boston and New York and in previous Berkshire Festivals. In turn, this seems to indicate to Mr. Schonberg a somnolence or commercialism, or both, on the orchestra's part, and leads him to feel that a new Messiah is needed to lead Tanglewood back out of the wilderness and again into the paths of righteousness from whence it has strayed.

Mr. Schonberg indicates in his opening sentences that a festival should imply "something fresh and out of the ordinary." He may believe so, but this is his own addition to the definition by Webster, who says a festival is "a periodical seasonal entertainment of a specific sort; as a music festival," or the Oxford Dictionary: "a musical performance, or series of performances, at recurring periods, e.g., the Handel Festival." This phrase "fresh and out of the ordinary" is Mr. Schonberg's private addition and we do not accept responsibility for it.

Planned Repetition

In answer to Mr. Schonberg's criticism, that the programs are drawn from the preceding season's repertoire, let it be known that it is the intention of the festival, and has been ever since the orchestra first became associated with Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1936, to offer music from the orchestra's recent repertoire, at the highest level of performance.

To understand this point, one must consider the functioning of an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Performance and preparation at our level of work is done under the most intense application by the players and conductor. Speaking generally, a full week's work is the preparation and performance, one or more times, of one concert program. Beyond that human fatigue makes further work simply wasteful and unrewarding.

When the orchestra first went to Tanglewood, a decision was made in response to the circumstances there: given a locus such as Tanglewood, an orchestra like the Boston Symphony, and a summer season, what was the best thing to do? One might decide on one program with the necessary five or six rehearsals; or one might decide on a new program every day with scant rehearsals; or something in between.

Insatiable Appetite

In our case, there were other added factors of an apparently insatiable appetite for the orchestra's concerts, and a fresh repertoire of the twenty-four carefully prepared programs of the season just past—fifty or sixty hours of music prepared and played in Boston and, in part, in New York and other cities visited by the orchestra in the winter season, but even so not yet available to much of anyone else. It was decided therefore that a schedule of three programs a week drawn from the winter repertoire, with five or six rehearsals to refresh them and to give some time for some new productions, would be the best. As a result, a perfectly conscious decision was made to wed the festival offerings to the winter repertoire, a practice that has been followed for twenty-five years. A simple examination of the programs over the years reveals this and we have never pretended we were doing anything else.

Thus what Mr. Schonberg says—that most of the programs at Tanglewood are drawn from the winter's repertoire—is therefore perfectly true and it is intentionally so. What is surprising is that so knowledgeable a reviewer is startled thereby or that, except from a personal point of view, he would argue this practice is shabby, sleepy, base, unworthy, or otherwise reprehensible.

As for Mr. Schonberg's wish for a Messiah to lead us out of the wilderness, I'm afraid that I don't agree that we are in the wilderness. His belief that we are poor lost sheep gone astray in a forest is based again on a private idea of what is a sheep, what is astray, and what is a forest. We are quite aware of what we are doing, and we offer no apologies for the course we follow. Mr. Schonberg asks that the festival "stand for something"; what it stands for is an offering to the public of a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, drawn from its winter repertoire, carefully and lovingly prepared and played in one of the world's loveliest settings, under excellent musical conditions. If this be slumber, or greed, or abdication of our musical responsibility, Mr. Schonberg may make the most of it.

THOMAS D. PERRY JR.,
Manager, Boston Symphony Orchestra.

[I am happy that I sent my good friend Mr. Perry to the dictionary, and even happier that he agrees so wholeheartedly with much of my article. We both accept the Webster definition of "festival." My article merely wondered whether or not a festival should contain something fresh. We both agree that the Berkshire Festival programs contain much the same material as the regular winter seasons of the Boston Symphony. We both agree that preparation of a few new scores needs work. Where we part company and snarl at each other, of course, is in philosophy. Mr. Perry thinks that things are just fine; I think that, by rehashing winter programs and ignoring all but a narrow band of The Fifty Pieces, the Berkshire Festival has abdicated its artistic responsibilities.—H.C.S.]

NO ANTICIPATION

To the Music Editor:

For a number of years I have attended at least one concert at the Berkshire Festival but have found it increasingly difficult to select one that can be looked forward to with real anticipation.

In going over the programs for this season, a number of thoughts passed through my mind. Webern, among others, should certainly be played, if for no other reason than this music makes the wonderful Bartók more understandable.

As for the Coney Island crowd, I can put up with them, particularly if we get better programing. After all, they have not invaded the Music Shed, as yet.

JOHN BATH.

Worcester, Mass.

ASPEN FAN

To the Music Editor:

I could not agree more with Mr. Schonberg's penetrating article on Tanglewood. For a long time, Tanglewood programs have been deteriorating and have lost their attraction for me and my friends.

Instead, we go to Aspen where year after year a circle of visitors from all over the United States enjoys the best selected and about the best presented music of any of the summer festivals.

DR. HERBERT STRAUSS.

New York.

LEADERSHIP NEEDED

To the Music Editor:

Mr. Schonberg's article is a much-needed challenge to affairs at Tanglewood. A strong, imaginative leader is essential to the broader vision, but he must be companioned and, if need be, urged by a forward-looking management, including trustees. Symphony Hall is too inbred.

We are grateful to Charles Munch for the particular talents he has shown, and for certain works given surpassing performance. But the orchestra has no point of view any more; the few American works, though well selected, were chosen by others than the conductor; no group of upcoming composers or performers has felt the encouragement and support of a great orchestra as was the case in Koussevitzky's day. We have abandoned national leadership for local titillation. A change is long overdue, and at least a waking up of the management.

H. EARLE JOHNSON.

Boston, Mass.

LACK OF SUPPORT

To the Music Editor:

New York is supposed to be a music-loving town. Sometimes I wonder.

Recently I heard two magnificent performances of Handel's works. "Belshazzar" impeccably performed by Thomas Dunn and the Cantata Singers at Carnegie Hall drew a poor house; a rare experience, great music superbly performed, passed by almost unnoticed. "Esther" at Town Hall did a bit better, but could not manage to fill the house.

Had Van Cliburn been doing the Tchaikovsky B-flat minor Concerto again, or Bernstein dancing his way through an "educational" program of music which should never have been written in the first place, let alone revived and explained, tickets would have been at a premium.

The saddest consequence is that groups like the Cantata Singers will find it even more difficult to give these masterpieces, and poor (in every sense of the word) music-lovers like me will find it even more difficult to find musical refreshment.

MAX L. JACOBSON.

New York.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

MAY 7 1961

Tanglewood Aims Need Clear Focus

By ROBERT TAYLOR

"It was with a sinking feeling that we looked over the recently announced programs (of the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood)—programs with no unity, no theme, no adventure, hardly any novelties; programs with the same conductors and soloists as of yore. The Berkshire Festival programs by now are not only inbred, esthetically speaking; they are intermated to a degree that comes close to legal prohibition."

Thus writes Harold C. Schonberg in an article published in the New York "Times" last Sunday. Coming as it does from a critic of vast national influence, the argument derives weight. Is the Berkshire Festival as decadent as Mr. Schonberg seems to imagine?

In fairness to the man from the "Times," important announcements have issued from the Festival front since last week. One is the first performance anywhere in 150 years of Giovanni Paisiellos opera, "King Theodorus." No vocal or instrumental manuscript existed until Boris Goldovsky recently discovered the engraved plates in Marie Antoinette's palace in Vienna. The Berkshire performances are scheduled for Aug. 7 and 8; and later the major production will be mounted in New York city.

Moreover, since last Sunday it has also been announced that the second performance of Busoni's "Ariecchino," an unjustly neglected opera will occur at Tanglewood; and that several one-act English operas will be mounted to honor Joseph Horovitz, the British musicologist who will be in residence.

Guiding Spirit

Yet the bulk of Mr Schonberg's criticisms remain, since these apply to the instrumental rather than the orchestral field. He makes many interesting points, some pertinent, while couching the entire piece in a tone so peevish as to vitiate them.

One is that the Berkshire Festival sorely needs a guiding spirit. Nobody has managed to fill Koussevitsky's place as a symbol there, generated the same inspiration, dared as much.

This is undoubtedly true. But we must also remember it was not the Berkshire Festival that produced Koussevitzky, rather vice-versa. He, innately, existed as a great original. The Berkshire Festival could stand such a flaming genius, whose concept of his role branched into diverse phases of society and of art; but then, so could music in general.

The other point that Mr. Schonberg raises, concerns a more practical matter: how popular should the Berkshire Festival be? A valid point. Alas, in the process the "Times" critic is betrayed into radical and intemperate conclusions. He hesitates to imply that Charles Munch and Leonard Bernstein are cynical in their program-making, though the implication is there and may be categorically denied by anyone who has the slightest knowledge of the two conductors, whatever aesthetic lapses occur.

Mr. Schonberg also doesn't like "squealing young women dressed in very brief shorts and halters" on the Tanglewood grounds. Squealing young women in this costume do not affect us as unpleasantly, but aside from their taste or lack of it, they illustrate the dilemma of Tanglewood. Either the Berkshire Festival aims at being a huge popular potlatch of democratic art (and the Coney Island aspects are an inevitable concommitant), or else advances the cause of serious music through a restricted coterie of the elite, the musical tastemakers.

Two Audiences

If we regard the programming as an effort to bring music to the masses, then Mr. Schonberg's strictures are invalid. Poulenc's "Gloria," Piston's "Three New England Sketches," the Roy Harris Third, the Schuman Seventh, Shapero's "Adagietto," and other modern works are not flaccid reprises of the winter season. Rather these are informing vast numbers of persons who cannot possibly jam into a concert hall on a given night of the season. Modern scores are brought to the grass-roots public.

Yet if one thinks that music, like all art, is undemocratic, being nourished by a cultivated minority of intellect and talent, then Mr. Schonberg speaks with real authority. As part of the coterie audience he has a right to demand more initiative; the happy position of being exposed to nearly everything in significant contemporary work is his.

There are perils in either course. One is left with no doubt as to which the "Times" chooses. I am not persuaded it is right. Only a single fact is certain: The Berkshire Festival must focus clearly on which kind of audience it is meant for. You can't please everyone.

JULY 1, 1961
Bushnell PROMPTER

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAMS — HOW THEY ARE MADE UP

In a recent letter to the New York Times, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, outlined the policies underlying the orchestra's programming at the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Perry's letter was in reply to criticism by Times writer Harold C. Schonberg that there is less novelty in the Tanglewood programs than he would like to see. Exerpts from Mr. Perry's letter follow:

"In answer to Mr. Schonberg's criticism, that the programs are drawn from the preceding season's repertoire, let it be known that it is the intention of the festival, and has been ever since the orchestra first became associated with Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1936, to offer music from the orchestra's recent repertoire, at the highest level of performance.

"To understand this point, one must consider the functioning of an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Performance and preparation at our level of work is done under the most intense application by the players and conductor. Speaking generally, a full week's work is the preparation and performance, one or more times, of one concert program. Beyond that human fatigue makes further work simply wasteful and unrewarding.

"When the orchestra first went to Tanglewood, a decision was made in response to the circumstances there: given a locus such as Tanglewood, an orchestra like the Boston Symphony, and a summer season, what was the best thing to do? One might decide on one program with the necessary five or six rehearsals; or one might decide on a new program every day with scant rehearsals; or something in between.

"In our case, there were other added factors of an apparently insatiable appetite for the orchestra's concerts, and a fresh repertoire of the 24 carefully prepared programs of the season just past — 50 or 60 hours of music prepared and played in Boston and, in part, in New York and other cities visited by the orchestra in the winter season, but even so not yet available to much of anyone else. It was decided therefore that a schedule of three programs a week drawn from the winter repertoire, with five or six rehearsals to refresh them and to give some time for some new productions, would be the best. As a result, a perfectly conscious decision was made to wed the festival offerings to the winter repertoire, a practice that has been followed for 25 years. A simple examination of the programs over the years reveals this and we have never pretended we were doing anything else.

"We are quite aware of what we are doing, and we offer no apologies for the course we follow. Mr. Schonberg asks that the festival 'stand for something'; what it stands for is an offering to the public of a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, drawn from its winter repertoire, carefully and lovingly prepared and played in one of the world's loveliest settings, under excellent acoustical conditions."

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456

MAY 28 1961

movie, "Exodus," to be shown soon at the

Music

Is Tanglewood Ours or Theirs?

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Some of the Metropolitan critics are apparently under the delusion that programs of the Berkshire Music Festival should be planned for their special benefit so that they would have something different to criticize.

A controversy is now raging, sparked by Harold C. Schonberg, music critic for the New York Times, to the effect that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will repeat too many "old war-horses," heard many times at Tanglewood or performed last season in Boston.

Several of the New York critics have personally given us variations of this complaint as alibis for not coming to the Worcester Music Festivals.

"Why should we come to Worcester to hear the orchestra or soloists perform works that we can hear in New York or on records?" they have asked.

Not All Alike

Critics soon would become obsolete if reviews were no longer required after an organization had been heard a certain number of times, performing standard repertory.

We are yet to hear two similar performances of the same work by the same orchestra or any two orchestras. Two specific examples are (1) the below-par playing of the Boston Symphony on this season's Civic Music series, and (2) the highly individual interpretation of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony on the same series by the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Josef Krips.

We have rarely worked in the Tanglewood Press Room with more than a couple dozen of our colleagues. Audiences have ranged from 5,500 to 15,000.

Get Best Seats

Critics don't pay for their tickets and they're given the best seats in the house. Therefore, the press room doesn't contribute toward the heavy cost of running the festival other than the publicity value of reviews, when they are favorable.

The forthcoming Berkshire Festival (July 7-August 20) will include two Beethoven Overtures, his Symphonies 3, 4 and 7, Violin Concerto, and Fourth Piano Concerto. These will be performed at seven of the 21 concerts. It's an established fact that Beethoven is the biggest box-office draw of all composers.

As a matter of fact, the Tanglewood festival is demonstrating courage in again programming works by Aaron Copland with the composer conducting.

Many Annoyed

We've seen many an audience askance and annoyed at Tanglewood when Copland conducted his music.

Also to be taken into account is the scant rehearsal time to prepare these programs during the summer. Certainly the Tanglewood audience would prefer to hear music that was well prepared for Symphony Hall (which the vast majority of summer patrons didn't frequent including the Metropolitan critics) than underprepared new scores for the Berkshire Festival.

One happy solution, except for the audience, would be for the unhappy critics to plan the programs, and underwrite the financial deficit.

Last summer, $383,592 was taken in at the Tanglewood box-office. Total attendance was 173,579.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUN 4 1961

Second Thoughts On Music

Critical Remarks About Tanglewood Unjustified

Those Who Attack Repetition of Performances At Shed Forget Audiences Change

By WILLARD M. CLARK

The continuing disparaging remarks about the programs heard each summer at Tanglewood are becoming a little tiresome and will not, it appears, have the least affect upon the "powers that be" in the planning department. It seems to us that Todd Perry made this abundantly clear in his answer to the critic of the New York Times a couple of weeks ago.

Give Something New

Admitting that audiences have heard works repeated each year, the fact remains that for the few who have heard repeats, there are thousands who have not. Many times these repeat performances have given listeners something new, as, for example, the last memorable performance of the Berlioz "Requiem" which had been performed several times. For every individual who is tired of hearing Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, there are thousands who feel it is the high light of the season.

Considering Tanglewood programs as a whole, it seems to this listener of many years that if one wishes to hear fine music, superlatively performed amid ideal surroundings, Tanglewood is the place to go. For the more adventurous, there are other music centers where contemporary music and the like can be heard.

It seems to me that Charles Munch has given us a goodly share of contemporary music and that the majority of the audiences were relieved when a deal of it was over. Few orchestras operate on the schedule of the Boston Symphony and only so much can be accomplished within a set time.

Fiedler's Repeat

Were we to complain, we might mention the two seasons that Arthur Fiedler offered the same program. That seemed an error in judgement or a lack of interest in audience requirements. It must be said that the audience reaction was as enthusiastic as at the first performance, but then, there were probably hundreds in the audience hearing the program for the first time.

It is sometimes difficult to remember that those critics who hear music practically every day or night might get tired of repeats, but there are going to be repeats, so get used to it.

Personally, we get more tired listening to the same stable of soloists than we do listening to the pieces they perform. There are so many fine young artists these days who should be given an opportunity. Many of the big stars are out of the country in the summer and unavailable, but there are others, not as big, but very good, whom it would be pleasant to hear. This we feel is particularly true with regard to the chamber music concerts.

Fill of Wagner

When Mr. Leinsdorf takes over, we shall probably get our fill of Wagner, and perhaps other operas in concert form something which always seems to please. As far as opera in the Shed is concerned, Mr. Munch has stuck pretty close to Berlioz.

There is going to be no great change in programming at Tanglewood, so let's get used to it and be not too hard on the rest. Musicians are humans and not far removed from the critical fraternity. For the thousands of people who visit Tanglewood each summer there will always be something of interest.

Since coming to this city 40 years ago, scarcely a year has passed without the question of a Music Shell coming up. Now a shell seems near reality.

Just why a shell is needed, we do not know. It takes more than a shell to produce good music. Our New England weather is no friend of outdoor concerts and we have been told that audiences will still be without cover. Mount Holyoke College has a new ampitheater but how to plan events with our variable weather is not going to be easy. As far as band concerts are concerned, we do not know whether audience interest is great or small. In the Scandinavian countries, people are still enthusiastic while listening to their well-trained, fully-adequate bands. How Springfield reacts we do not know, but are inclined to believe a shell won't make a great difference in audience reaction even though the music may be louder.

JULY 1, 1961
Bushnell PROMPTER

TANGLEWOOD PROGRAMS — HOW THEY ARE MADE UP

In a recent letter to the New York Times, Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, outlined the policies underlying the orchestra's programming at the Berkshire Festival. Mr. Perry's letter was in reply to criticism by Times writer Harold C. Schonberg that there is less novelty in the Tanglewood programs than he would like to see. Exerpts from Mr. Perry's letter follow:

"In answer to Mr. Schonberg's criticism, that the programs are drawn from the preceding season's repertoire, let it be known that it is the intention of the festival, and has been ever since the orchestra first became associated with Tanglewood under Dr. Koussevitzky in 1936, to offer music from the orchestra's recent repertoire, at the highest level of performance.

"To understand this point, one must consider the functioning of an organization like the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Performance and preparation at our level of work is done under the most intense application by the players and conductor. Speaking generally, a full week's work is the preparation and performance, one or more times, of one concert program. Beyond that human fatigue makes further work simply wasteful and unrewarding.

"When the orchestra first went to Tanglewood, a decision was made in response to the circumstances there: given a locus such as Tanglewood, an orchestra like the Boston Symphony, and a summer season, what was the best thing to do? One might decide on one program with the necessary five or six rehearsals; or one might decide on a new program every day with scant rehearsals; or something in between.

"In our case, there were other added factors of an apparently insatiable appetite for the orchestra's concerts, and a fresh repertoire of the 24 carefully prepared programs of the season just past — 50 or 60 hours of music prepared and played in Boston and, in part, in New York and other cities visited by the orchestra in the winter season, but even so not yet available to much of anyone else. It was decided therefore that a schedule of three programs a week drawn from the winter repertoire, with five or six rehearsals to refresh them and to give some time for some new productions, would be the best. As a result, a perfectly conscious decision was made to wed the festival offerings to the winter repertoire, a practice that has been followed for 25 years. A simple examination of the programs over the years reveals this and we have never pretended we were doing anything else.

"We are quite aware of what we are doing, and we offer no apologies for the course we follow. Mr. Schonberg asks that the festival 'stand for something'; what it stands for is an offering to the public of a series of concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, drawn from its winter repertoire, carefully and lovingly prepared and played in one of the world's loveliest settings, under excellent acoustical conditions."

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUN 4 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Second Thoughts On Music

Critical Remarks About Tanglewood Unjustified

Those Who Attack Repetition of Performances At Shed Forget Audiences Change

By WILLARD M. CLARK

The continuing disparaging remarks about the programs heard each summer at Tanglewood are becoming a little tiresome and will not, it appears, have the least affect upon the "powers that be" in the planning department. It seems to us that Todd Perry made this abundantly clear in his answer to the critic of the New York Times a couple of weeks ago.

Give Something New

Admitting that audiences have heard works repeated each year, the fact remains that for the few who have heard repeats, there are thousands who have not. Many times these repeat performances have given listeners something new, as, for example, the last memorable performance of the Berlioz "Requiem" which had been performed several times. For every individual who is tired of hearing Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, there are thousands who feel it is the high light of the season.

Considering Tanglewood programs as a whole, it seems to this listener of many years that if one wishes to hear fine music, superlatively performed amid ideal surroundings, Tanglewood is the place to go. For the more adventurous, there are other music centers where contemporary music and the like can be heard.

It seems to me that Charles Munch has given us a goodly share of contemporary music and that the majority of the audiences were relieved when a deal of it was over. Few orchestras operate on the schedule of the Boston Symphony and only so much can be accomplished within a set time.

Fiedler's Repeat

Were we to complain, we might mention the two seasons that Arthur Fiedler offered the same program. That seemed an error in judgement or a lack of interest in audience requirements. It must be said that the audience reaction was as enthusiastic as at the first performance, but then, there were probably hundreds in the audience hearing the program for the first time.

It is sometimes difficult to remember that those critics who hear music practically every day or night might get tired of repeats, but there are going to be repeats, so get used to it.

Personally, we get more tired listening to the same stable of soloists than we do listening to the pieces they perform. There are so many fine young artists these days who should be given an opportunity. Many of the big stars are out of the country in the summer and unavailable, but there are others, not as big, but very good, whom it would be pleasant to hear. This we feel is particularly true with regard to the chamber music concerts.

Fill of Wagner

When Mr. Leinsdorf takes over, we shall probably get our fill of Wagner, and perhaps other operas in concert form, something which always seems to please. As far as opera in the Shed is concerned, Mr. Munch has stuck pretty close to Berlioz.

There is going to be no great change in programming at Tanglewood, so let's get used to it and be not too hard on the rest. Musicians are humans and not far removed from the critical fraternity. For the thousands of people who visit Tanglewood each summer there will always be something of interest.

Since coming to this city a few years ago, scarcely a year has passed without the question of a Music Shell coming up. Now a shell seems near reality.

Just why a shell is needed, we do not know. It takes more than a shell to produce good music. Our New England weather is no friend of outdoor concerts and we have been told that audiences will still be without cover. Mount Holyoke College has a new ampitheater but how to plan events with our variable weather is not going to be easy. As far as band concerts are concerned, we do not know whether audience interest is great or small. In the Scandinavian countries, people are still enthusiastic while listening to their well trained, fully-adequate bands. How Springfield reacts we do not know, but are inclined to believe a shell won't make a great difference in audience reaction, even though the music may be louder.

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
MAY 28 1961

Music

Is Tanglewood Ours or Theirs?

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Some of the Metropolitan critics are apparently under the delusion that programs of the Berkshire Music Festival should be planned for their special benefit so that they would have something different to criticize.

A controversy is now raging, sparked by Harold C. Schonberg, music critic for the New York Times, to the effect that the Boston Symphony Orchestra will repeat too many "old war-horses," heard many times at Tanglewood or performed last season in Boston.

Several of the New York critics have personally given us variations of this complaint as alibis for not coming to the Worcester Music Festivals.

"Why should we come to Worcester to hear the orchestra or soloists perform works that we can hear in New York or on records?" they have asked.

Not All Alike

Critics soon would become obsolete if reviews were no longer required after an organization had been heard a certain number of times performing standard repertory.

We are yet to hear two similar performances of the same work by the same orchestra or any two orchestras. Two specific examples are (1) the below-par playing of the Boston Symphony on this season's Civic Music series, and (2) the highly individual interpretation of Beethoven's Fifth Symphony on the same series by the Buffalo Philharmonic Orchestra, conducted by Josef Krips.

We have rarely worked in the Tanglewood Press Room with more than a couple dozen of our colleagues. Audiences have ranged from 5,500 to 15,000.

Get Best Seats

Critics don't pay for their tickets and they're given the best seats in the house. Therefore, the press room doesn't contribute toward the heavy cost of running the festival other than the publicity value of reviews, when they are favorable.

The forthcoming Berkshire Festival (July 7-August 20) will include two Beethoven Overtures, his Symphonies 3, 4 and 7, Violin Concerto, and Fourth Piano Concerto. These will be performed at seven of the 21 concerts. It's an established fact that Beethoven is the biggest box-office draw of all composers.

As a matter of fact, the Tanglewood festival is demonstrating courage in again programming works by Aaron Copland with the composer conducting.

Many Annoyed

We've seen many an audience askance and annoyed at Tanglewood when Copland conducted his music.

Also to be taken into account is the scant rehearsal time to prepare these programs during the summer. Certainly the Tanglewood audience would prefer to hear music that was well prepared for Symphony Hall (which the vast majority of summer patrons didn't frequent including the Metropolitan critics) than underprepared new scores for the Berkshire Festival.

One happy solution, except for the audience, would be for the unhappy critics to plan the programs, and underwrite the financial deficit.

Last summer, $369,592 was taken in at the Tanglewood box-office. Total attendance was 178,579.

10

Berkshire Nights Sales

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,861
MAY 19 1961

Just Pokin' Around

by Agnes Rockwood

We're wondering just how many people in Bennington or its environs attended the big celebration in 1877 at Bennington Center. And also if they're planning to attend the Bicentennial festivities here in August.

The committee has expressed an interest in hearing from these people and figures they deserve a place of honor. Via the old grapevine, they've heard that there's at least one. The party reports she had to be hoisted to her father's shoulders to see what was going on, that the crowd was "immense" and that she has never heard before — or since — such orators.

It is hoped that people who attended that celebration on the hill nearly 84 years ago will let the committee know. A note to James H. Walbridge will suffice.

— o —

The last time we heard anything about Capt. Louis E. Lawrence, formerly of Bennington, I guess he was in Alaska. A career man in the U. S. Army, he's been assigned to many far-off places since leaving his hometown a number of years ago.

Capt. Lawrence is now in Texas, where he is commanding officer of the Student Company, U.S. Army Primary Helicopter School, Camp Wolters, Mineral Wells. Mrs Lawrence is the former Miss Martha Cook of Bennington. The couple has one son and one daughter.

Just recently the army officer was awarded a certificate of achievement for his outstanding service as intelligence and operations officer of Headquarters, U.S. Army Pusan Area Command, from Sept. 28, 1960 to Feb. 18, 1961.

The citation read in part: "Capt. Lawrence contributed immeasurably in the efficient accomplishment of the mission of the Pusan Area Command. He revised all the sub - area alert plans, supervised the training program and coordinated excellent relations with the people of the local community. He supervised the troop information program and had timely photographs and news coverage on area activities, hometown releases and visiting dignitaries. As chief of the Visitors Bureau he prepared, coordinated and made transportation arrangements for all visitors."

Capt. Lawrence is the son of the late Leonard Lawrence of Bennington, and a nephew of Oliver Lawrence Sr. and Mrs. LeRoy H. Dunn of Bennington.

— o —

A mammoth Girl Scout pageant is planned as opening event of the 30th annual Rose Festival June 17 - 25 in the 17 - acre Jackson & Perkins rose garden.

As part of the introductory ceremony for the new Girl Scout floribunda rose, named in honor of the 50th anniversary celebration of the Girl Scouts, flags of the 52 nations in which the movement is active will be paraded down the famous garden's 400 - foot mall.

It is to be a gala week with the 1961 Rose of the Year, a brilliant red hybrid tea named Americana, as a feature of the second day ceremonies.

The garden is open free of charge at all times. Located 30 miles east of Rochester, N.Y., it is on New York 88 just off the New York Thruway (exits 42 and 43), and may be reached by bus or railroad. Nearest airports are at Rochester and Syracuse.

— o —

Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of Pittsfield, Mass., reports that more than 200 have subscribed to the Berkshire Night series of concerts at Tanglewood this summer. Subscriptions should be sent before June 1.

The Berkshire Festival season has been extended to seven weeks with the Bach - Mozart series the first two weeks in July and major concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed the following five weeks.

As a result of extending the season an extra week this year, the BSO has extended the Berkshire Nights series to offer subscribers five Friday night concerts in the Shed at the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend.

Subscriptions should be mailed to Mrs. Mahanna at 20 Warwick St., Pittsfild.

— o —

Many well known artists will be appearing at the weekend chamber music concerts at Marlboro from July 8 - Aug. 26, it has been announced by Rudolf Serkin, artistic director of Marlboro's music school and music festival. Among them is Claude Frank of the Bennington College music faculty.

— o —

Interesting Notes: Five drum corps from the Northeastern Circuit of marching and maneuvering corps will take part in the second annual "march time" competition June 10 at Wahconah Park in Pittsfield, Mass. Walter Wood, business manager of the Interstatesmen, says that among those attending will be the Washington Carver Gay Blades of Newark, N.J., winner of last year's event; the Springfield Marksmen; and the Somerville Thunderbirds ....By the way, some of the flashy and well - known drum corps will appear in the Elks convention parade tomorrow....A plaque bearing the name of "Vermont" is to be placed in the lobby of the new home of the American Association of University Women in Washington. The placing will be in June during the biennial convention of the AAUW when the educational center will be dedicated. This will be in recognition of AAUW members in the state who have reached their fund-raising goal for the center. Among the eight branch fund chairmen in Vermont are Mrs. Harlow Mats of Bennington and Mrs. Wilmond Parker, Randolph, formerly of Bennington....Boston is one of the few cities on the 1961 tour of Ringling Bros. and Barnum and Bailey circus in which the famous cannon act of the Zachini family will be presented. Only in a few cities are the ceilings high enough to accommodate the human "bullets" shot from this cannon. Edmundo Zacchini, inventor of the cannon, will fire his daughters, Victoria and Dwina, from the mouth of the huge gun at a speed of 90 miles per hour in a 150-ft. arc. Both girls will land in a net at the opposite end of Boston Garden. The show runs through Sunday....The only 1961 show appearance in the eastern United States of the famed Royal Canadian Mounted Police will be at the Eastern States Exposition West Springfield, Mass. Sept. 20 - 24. Returning for the third time to the exposition, the scarlet-coated Mounties will present their famous Musical Ride with new routines and new music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
APR 17 1961

Berkshire Nights Series Increase Concerts To Five

Five concerts for the price of three are being offered for the 1961 Berkshire Nights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this summer.

With the Festival season extended an extra week this season, the Tanglewood Advisory Committee announced today that the Boston Symphony officials have extended the Berkshire Nights series from four to five Friday evening concerts by the full orchestra in the Music Shed.

Subscribers to Berkshire Nights are offered the five consecutive Friday evening concerts for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The subscription closes June 1.

Chairman Named

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the BSO, announced that Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of 20 Warwick St., this city, has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee which she has headed for the past three seasons. Since the completion of the Massachusetts Turnpike and the Berkshire Spur leading to the New York Thruway, many music lovers in nearby New York State cities and towns, as well as in adjacent counties in Western Massachusetts have been taking advantage of the Berkshire Nights series, Mrs. Mahanna said.

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has arranged the five Berkshire Nights programs to include two piano soloists, Eugene Istomin and Claudio Arrau; soprano soloist Adele Addison of Springfield and the Festival chorus; Pierre Monteux, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin as guest conductors. Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Berkshire Nights concerts.

Munch To Open Series

Dr. Munch will open the major concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed on Friday evening, July 21, presenting Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture and Brahms Symphony No. 1 in the first half of the program, closing with Poulenc's "Gloria," with Adele Addison as soloist and the full Festival chorus. This choral work was given its first New York performance by the BSO at Carnegie Hall April 8 when Miss Addison was soloist with the Pro Musica Chorus of New York.

Aaron Copland, the American composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will conduct two of his own works at the July 28 concerts, the "Preamble," and "Appalachian Spring." Dr. Munch will take over the podium for the last portion of the concert when the full Festival chorus will join the BSO in Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe."

Pierre Monteux, who will make three appearances at Tanglewood as a guest conductor during the 1961 season, will conduct the concert Friday, Aug. 4, with Eugene Istomin as piano soloist. The program will include Beethoven's "Fidelio" overture; Schumann's Piano Concerto; Strauss' Dance from "Salome" and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster

Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna

of the Boston Symphony, will be the guest conductor on Aug. 11 with the Festival chorus and soloists. The program will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 88 and close with Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final Berkshire Nights program Friday, Aug. 18 with Claudio Arrau as piano soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4. Also to be heard will be Mendelssohn's Octect for Strings and Debussy's "La Mer."

Further information on Berkshire Nights may be obtained from Mrs. Mahanna. Subscriptions for the 1961 series may be mailed to her at 20 Warwick St., this city.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
APR 30 1961

Heads Committee

Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of Pittsfield will again head the Berkshire Nights program committee by Boston Symphony Orchestra. Five concerts will be offered for the price of three. With the Music Festival being extended a week this season, the Tanglewood advisory committee decided to extend the Berkshire Nights series from four to five Friday night concerts by the full Boston Symphony orchestra in the Music Shed.

Subscribers to Berkshire Nights are being offered the five consecutive Friday night concerts for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts on one week end. Subscription closes June 1.

As part of the Berkshire Nights program Dr. Charles Munch, director of the orchestra, has announced the programs will include two piano soloists, Eugen Istomin and Caludio Arrau; soprano soloist Adele Addison of Springfield, the Festival Chorus, Pierre

SPRINGFIELD, MASS.
UNION
D. 81,815
APR 19 1961

Cut Rate Offered For 5 Concerts

PITTSFIELD — The Tanglewood Advisory Committee has announced that five concerts, for the price of three, are being offered for the 1961 Berkshire Nights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this summer.

With the festival season extended an extra week this season, the Boston Symphony officials have extended the Berkshire Nights series from four to five Friday evening concerts by the full orchestra in the Music Shed. These concerts will start July 21.

Subscribers to Berkshire Nights are offered the five consecutive Friday evening concerts for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one week-end. The subscription closes June 1.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, announced that Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of 20 Warwick St., this city, has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee which she has headed for the past three seasons. Further information on Berkshire Nights may be obtained from Mrs. Mahanna. Subscriptions for the 1961 series may be mailed to her at 20 Warwick St.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958

APR 17 1961

Berkshire Nights At Tanglewood Offer 5 Concerts For Price Of 3

Five concerts for the price of three are being offered for the 1961 Berkshire Nights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this summer.

With the Festival season extended an extra week this season, the Tanglewood advisory committee announced today that the Boston Symphony officials have extended the Berkshire Nights series from four to five Friday evening concerts by the full orchestra in the Music Shed.

Subscribers to Berkshire Nights are offered the five consecutive Friday evening concerts for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The subscription closes June 1.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the BSO, announced that Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of 20 Warwick St., Pittsfield, has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights committee which she had headed for the past three seasons. Since the completion of the Mass. Turnpike and the Berkshire spur leading to the New York Thruway, many music lovers in nearby New York State cities and towns, as well as in adjacent counties in Western Massachusetts have been taking advantage of the Berkshire Nights series, Mrs. Mahanna said.

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has arranged the five Berkshire Nights programs to include two piano soloists, Eugene Istomin and Caludio Arran; soprano soloist Adele Addison of Springfield and the Festival Chorus; Pierre Monteux, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin as guest conductors. Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Berkshire Nights concerts.

Dr. Munch will open the major concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Music Shed on Friday evening, July 21, presenting Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture and Brahms Symphony No. 1 in the first half of the program, closing with Poulenc's "Gloria," with Adele Addison as soloist and the full Festival Chorus. This choral work was given its first New York performance by the BSO at Carnegie Hall April 8 when Miss Addison was soloist with the Pro Musica Chorus of New York.

Aaron Copland, the American composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will conduct two of his own works at the July 28 concerts, the "Preamble," and "Appalachian Spring." Dr. Munch will take over the podium for the last poriton of the concert when the full Festival choru will join the BSO in Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe."

Pierre Monteux, who will make three appearances at Tanglewood as a guest conductor during the 1961 season, will conduct the concert Friday, August 4, with Eugene Istomin as piano soloist. The program will include Beethoven's "Fidelio" overture; Schumann's Piano Concerto; Strauss' Dance from "Salome," and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, will be the guest conductor on Aug. 11 with the Festival chorus and soloists. The program will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 88 and close with Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final Berkshire Nights program Friday, Aug. 18 with Claudio Arrau as piano soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4. Also to be heard will be Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and Debussy's "La Mer."

Further information on Berkshire Nights may be obtained from Mrs. Mahanna. Subscriptions for the 1961 series may be mailed to her at 20 Warwick St., Pittsfield.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026

APR 17 1961

5 Berkshire Nights Concerts Offered For Price of Three

Five concerts for the price of three are being offered for the 1961 Berkshire Nights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this summer.

With the Festival season extended an extra week this season, the Tanglewood Advisory Committee announced today that the Boston Symphony officials have extended the Berkshire Nights series from four to five Friday evening concerts by the full orchestra in the Music Shed.

Closes June 1

Subscribers to Berkshire Nights are offered the five consecutive Friday evening concerts for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The subscription closes June 1.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the BSO, announced that Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of Pittsfield has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee which she has headed for the past three seasons. Since the completion of the Massachusetts Turnpike and the Berkshire spur leading to the New York Thruway, many music lovers in nearby New York State cities and towns, as well as in adjacent counties in Western Massachusetts have been taking advantage of the Berkshire Nights series, Mrs. Mahanna said..

Five Programs

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has arranged the five Berkshire Nights programs to include two piano soloists, Eugene Istomin and Caludio Arran; soprano soloist Adele Addison of Springfield and the Festival chorus; Pierre Monteux, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin as guest conductors. Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Berkshire Nights concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,861

APR 20 1961

Concert Plans Announced:

Berkshire Nights at Tanglewood

Five concerts for the price of three are being offered for the 1961 Berkshire Nights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this summer.

With the Festival season extended an extra week, the Tanglewood Advisory Committee has announced that Boston Symphony officials have extended the Berkshire Nights series from four to five Friday evening concerts by the full orchestra in the Music Shed.

Closes June 1

Subscribers to Berkshire Nights are offered the five consecutive Friday evening concerts for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The subscription closes June 1.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the BSO, announced that Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of 20 Warwick St., Pittsfield, has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Night Committee which she has headed for the past three season.

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has arranged the five Berkshire Nights programs to include two piano soloists, Eugene Istomin and Caludio Arrau; soprano soloist Adele Addison of Springfield and the Festival chorus; Pierre Monteaux, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin as guest conductors. Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Berkshire Nights concerts.

Dr. Munch will open the major concerts in the Music Shed Friday evening, July 21, presenting Beethovn's "Coriolan" overture and Brahms Symphony No. 1 in the first half of the program, closing with Poulenc's "Gloria," with Adele Addison as soloist and the full Festival chorus.

Aaron Copland, American composer and assistant director of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, will conduct two of his own works at the July 28 concerts, the "Preamble," and "Appalachian Spring." Dr. Munch will take over the podium for the last portion of the concert when join the BSO in Ravel's "Daphnis and Chloe."

Guest Conductor

Pierre Monteux, who will make three appearances at Tanglewood as a guest conductor during the 1961 season, will conduct the concert Friday, Aug. 4, with Eugene Istomin as piano soloist. The program will include Beethoven's "Fidelio" overture; Schumann's Piano Concerto; Strauss' Dance from "Salome," and Sibelius' Symphony No. 2.

Richard Burgin, concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, will be the guest conductor on Aug. 11 with the Festival chorus and soloists. The program will open with Haydn's Symphony No. 88 and No. 2.

Dr. Munch will conduct the final Berkshire Nights program Friday, Aug. 18, with Claudio Arrau as piano soloist in Beethoven's Piano Concerto No. 4. Also to be heard will be Mendelssohn's Octet for Strings and Debussy's "La Mer."

Further information on Berkshire Nights may be obtained from Mrs. Mahanna. Subscriptions for the 1961 series may be mailed to her.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498

APR 20 1961

TANGLEWOOD TO OFFER BARGAIN

Five concerts for the price of three are being offered for the 1961 Berkshire Nights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this summer.

With the Festival season extended an extra week this season, the Tanglewood Advisory Committee announced this week that the Boston Symphony officials have extended the Berkshire Nights series from four to five Friday evening concerts by the full orchestra in the Music Shed.

Subscribers to Berkshire Nights are offered the five consecutive Friday evening concerts for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend. The subscription closes June 1.

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the BSO, announced that Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna of 20 Warwick Street, Pittsfield, Mass., has been reappointed chairman of the Berkshire Nights Committee which she has headed for the past three seasons.

Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has arranged the five Berkshire Nights programs to include two piano soloists, Eugene Istomin and Caludio Arrau; soprano soloist Adele Addison of Springfield and the Festival chorus; Pierre Monteux, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin as guest conductors. Dr. Munch will conduct three of the five Berkshire Nights concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

MAY 13 1961

More Than 200 Subscribe to Concert Series

Berkshire Nights Responses Ahead Of a Year Ago

Responses to the Berkshire Nights series of concerts at Tanglewood this summer are running far ahead of last year at this time in the drive, Mrs. John G. W. Mahanna, chairman reported today.

To date more than 200 subscriptions have been received for the concerts in the Music Shed on five consecutive Friday nights by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Mrs. Mahanna said.

This season the Berkshire Festival season at Tanglewood has been extended to seven weeks, with the Bach-Mozart series taking place the first two weeks in July and the major concerts by the BSO in the Music Shed the following five weeks.

As a result of extending the season an extra week this year, the Boston Symphony has extended the Berkshire Nights series from four to five, offering subscribers five Friday night concerts in the Shed for the same price as the usual subscription to three concerts in one weekend.

The Berkshire Nights series was inaugurated in 1957 at the suggestion of the Tanglewood Advisory Committee. The special subscription offer of five concerts for the price of three will close June 1. Subscriptions for the 1961 series may be mailed to Mrs. Mahanna, 20 Warwick St., this city.

12

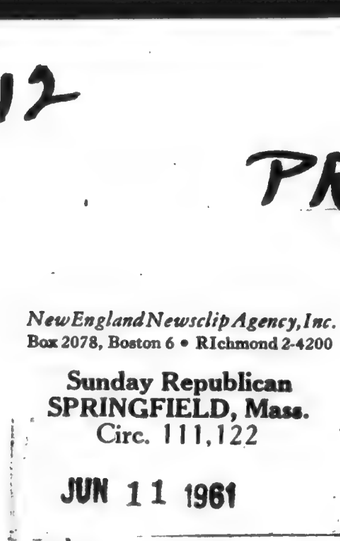
PRE-SEASON - CHAMBER MUSIC

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

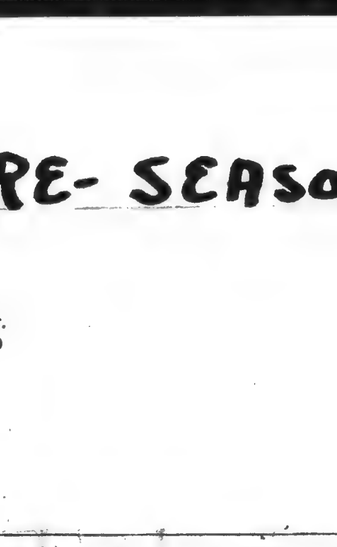
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUN 11 1961

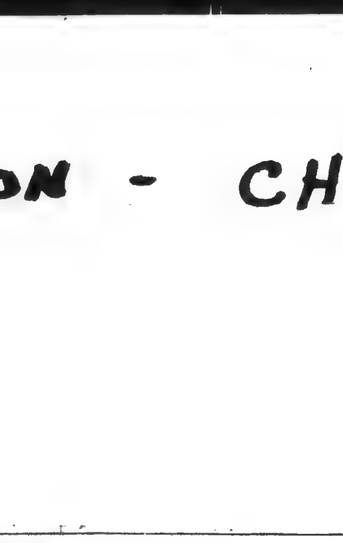
Participants, Programs Announced For Tanglewood Chamber Concerts



CLAUDIO ARRAU



SAMUEL MAYES



JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

BOSTON—Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Opening July 5

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C Major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D Major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C Major, Op. 59, No 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert July 19. Their program includes the trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G Major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C Minor, D Major, E-flat Major).

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F Minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A Major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Special Recital

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, to be given on Wednesday evenings at 8.30 in the 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall, are available at the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office at Boston's Symphony Hall until Friday. The Tanglewood office opens on the 20th.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973

JUL 7 1961

To Perform at Tanglewood

Among the many artists who will give concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood are members of the Budapest String Quartet. They are, from left, Joseph Roisman, Alexander Schneider, Mischa Schneider and Boris Kroyt. The season which opened over the week end will include concerts by the Boston Symphony, chamber music and program by outstanding soloists.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

JUN 15 1961

Chamber Music Concerts Are Set For Tanglewood

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.).

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms's Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat major).

On August 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, to be given on Wednesday evenings at 8:30 in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall, are available at $3.50 and $3.00 per concert. The Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, at Boston's Symphony Hall (CO-6-1492) until June 16, will open at Tanglewood on June 20 (Lenox 600).

• • • • •

Composers to be represented in the 1961 Berkshire Festival chamber music concerts and the respective number of performances:

Beethoven, 3; Mozart, 3; Schubert, 2; Diamond, 1; Haydn, 1; Milhaud, 1; Roussel, 1; Schuman, 1; plus the program of Early Renaissance music by the New York Pro Musica and Mr. Arrau's Lszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498

JUN 22 1961

Tanglewood Chamber Music

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Chausson, the Trio in G Major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B Flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

On August 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the G minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

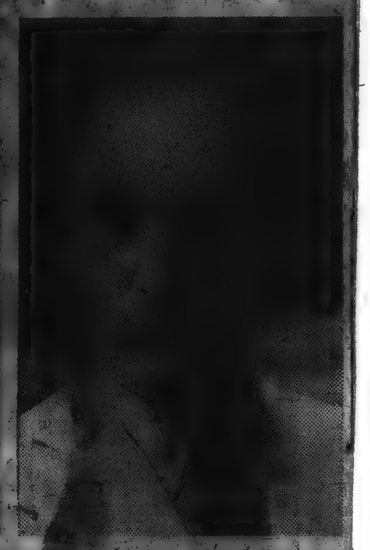
Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Années de Pèlerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Bénédiction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

12

PRE-SEASON - CHAMBER MUSIC

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUN 11 1961

Participants, Programs Announced For Tanglewood Chamber Concerts



CLAUDIO ARRAU

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE

BOSTON—Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood.

Opening July 5

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C Major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D Major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C Major, Op. 59, No 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert July 13. Their program includes the trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G Major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C Minor, D Major, E-flat Major).

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F Minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A Major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Special Recital

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendantes, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood to be given on Wednesday evenings at 8:30 in the 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall, are available at the Berkshire Festival Ticket Office at Boston's Symphony Hall until Friday. The Tanglewood office opens on the 20th.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
JUN 22 1961

Tanglewood Chamber Music

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — will give the third chamber music concert on July 13. Their program includes the Trio by Chausson, the Trio in G Major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B Flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

On August 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the G minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Années de Pèlerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Bénédiction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
JUL 7 1961

To Perform at Tanglewood

Among the many artists who will give concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival, Tanglewood are members of the Budapest String Quartet. They are, from left, Joseph Roisman, Alexander Schneider, Mischa Schneider and Boris Kroyt. The season which opened over the week end will include concerts by the Boston Symphony, chamber music and program by outstanding soloists.

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500
JUN 15 1961

Chamber Music Concerts Are Set For Tanglewood

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.).

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms's Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert on July 13. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat major).

On August 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, to be given on Wednesday evenings at 8:30 in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall, are available at $3.50 and $3.00 per concert. The Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, at Boston's Symphony Hall (CO-6-1492) until June 16, will open at Tanglewood on June 20 (Lenox 600).

• • • • •

Composers to be represented in the 1961 Berkshire Festival chamber music concerts and the respective number of performances:

Beethoven, 3; Mozart, 3; Schubert, 2; Diamond, 1; Haydn, 1; Milhaud, 1; Roussel, 1; Schuman, 1; plus the program of Early Renaissance music by the New York Pro Musica and Mr. Arrau's Lzst Sesquicentennial Recital.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUN 10 1961

Regional Roundup

Tanglewood Slates Seven Chamber Music Concerts

Curtis Quartet Will Perform at Opening Event Of Berkshire Festival July 5

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Brahms' Sextet

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

De Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

Special Recital

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt sesquicentennial recital on Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

* * *

Transfer of Air Routes Backed by CAB Counsel

The Civil Aeronautics Board bureau counsel filed an opinion this week in regard to Eastern Air Lines' transfer of two Vermont and six Upstate New York cities to Mohawk Airlines. In the bureau counsel's opinion, "There is logic in the plan."

The bureau counsel explained the Mohawk services are concentrated in the Northeast section of the country and particularly in the area of which most of the cities of Plattsburgh, Saranac Lake-Lake Placid, Glens Falls, Albany, Massena, Watertown, N. Y. and Burlington and Rutland, Vt., are located.

In his brief to the Civil Aeronautics Board, the attorney found that Mohawk "should be able to provide its proposed additional markets with service favorably comparable to that previously offered by Eastern Air Lines." And, each community in this case, a level of service equal to or better than Eastern Air Lines is proposed right from the "start up period."

The Bureau Counsel urged that the examiner issue an initial decision in accordance with his recommendations generally approving the route transfer.

John R. Carver, vice-president of Mohawk said, "We are pleased with bureau counsel's opinion and look forward to an early, final and favorable decision by the Civil Aeronautics Board."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763
JUN 1 9 1961

Chamber Music at Lenox

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, to be given on Wednesday evenings at 8:30 in the 1200-seat Theater Concert Hall, are available at $3.50 and $3.00 per concert. The Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, at Boston's Symphony Hall (CO 6-1942) until June 16, will open at Tanglewood on June 20 (Lenox 600).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUN 8 1961

Chamber Events At Tanglewood

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and the Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 869,958 S. 1,186,625
JUN 10 1961

Notes of Music and Musicians

Malcolm Frager will replace the reportedly ailing Glenn Gould in tomorrow afternoon's piano recital in Orchestra hall.

Mr. Frager

Mr. Frager's program includes Bach's Toccata in G minor, Haydn's Sonata in E-flat major, a Chopin group and Prokofieff's Sixth Sonata.

The substitution was made after the music section of THE SUNDAY TRIBUNE had been printed.

* * *

The Berkshire Music Festival at Lenox, Mass., has announced its programs for seven chamber music concerts. July 5 offers Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony orchestra, with the Curtis quartet, playing Brahms' Sextet in B-flat major, and Schubert's Quintet in C major. July 12 features the Budapest quartet playing Milhaud, Haydn, and Beethoven. July 19 brings the Beaux Arts Trio of New York in music of Roussel, Beethoven, and Schubert. July 26 lists New York Pro Musica in music of early Renaissance masters. Mr. de Pasquale and the Boston Fine Arts quartet appear Aug. 2 in three Mozart quintets. The Kroll quartet plays Beethoven, David Diamond, and Schumann on Aug. 9. The series ends Aug. 16 when Caludio Arrau, pianist, plays a Liszt sesquicentennial recital ranging from excerpts from "Annees de Pelerinage" to the "Mephisto" Waltz. Performances are in the 1,200 seat theater-concert hall.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,912 S. 1,014,829
JUN 18 1961

Berkshire Festival lists 7 chamber concerts

The seven Wednesday chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.), will be opened by the Curtis Quartet July 5. The Budapest Quartet will play July 12 and the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, July 19.

On July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct this New York Pro Musica in Early Renaissance music for vocal and instrumental ensemble. Joseph de Pasquale and the Boston Fine Arts Quartet will play three string quintets by Mozart Aug. 2. On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will play.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JUN 15 1961

Tanglewood Music

Participants and programs have been announced for seven Wednesday night chamber music concerts in the Berkshire Festival series at Tanglewood.

July 5—Joseph de Pasquale, Samuel Mayes, and the Curtis Quartet will play Brahms' Sextet in B flat, Schubert's Quintet in C major.

July 12—The Budapest Quartet will play Milhaud's No. 12, Haydn's D major, Beethoven's C major (Op. 59).

July 19—The Beaux Arts Trio (violin, cello, piano) will play Roussel, Beethoven (No. 1), Schubert (Op. 99).

July 26—New York Pro Musica, Noah Greenberg directing, in music of the early Renaissance for voices and instruments.

August 2—Joseph de Pasquale and the Fine Arts Quartet will play Mozart quintets (C minor, D major, E-flat major).

August 9—The Kroll Quartet will play Beethoven's F minor (Op. 95), David Diamond's Second, Schumann's A major (Op. 41).

August 16—Claudio Arrau will play a special Liszt sesquicentennial piano recital.

Tickets for these 8:30 concerts are available at Symphony Hall until June 16, and after June 20 at Tanglewood (Lenox 600).

PASTE OVER

14

The Hartford Times
44
Saturday, June 10, 1961

Tanglewood Midweek Chamber Music Listed

CHARLES MUNCH announces the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts to be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert Wednesday, July 5, in Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

●Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

●The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — on July 19 will present the Trio, by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G Major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

●Noah Greenberg on July 26 will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

●Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat major.)

●The Kroll Quartet on Aug. 9 will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41.

●Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. Excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

* * *

TICKETS for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m. in the 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall, are available at $3.50 and $3 a concert. The Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, at Boston's Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) until June 16, will open at Tanglewood on June 20 (Lenox 600).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUN 15 1961

Munch Announces Chamber Concerts

Seven Will Be Performed At Tanglewood

Series of Wednesday Evening Concerts Will Extend From July 5 to August 16.—Music Of Brahms, Schubert, Roussel, Beethovrn, Mozart, Haydn, and Diamond on Program.

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayers, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12, plus the D major quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat major).

On August 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, to be gi on Wednesday evenings at 8:30 in 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall, now available. The Berkshire F tival Ticket Office, at Boston's S phony Hall until June 16, will oper Tanglewood on June 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUN 10 1961

Chamber Music Programs Listed For Tanglewood

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano—will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven, and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat major.)

On August 9, the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, to be given Wednesday evenings at 8:30 in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall, are available at $3.50 and $3 per concert. The Berkshire Festival ticket office, at Boston's Symphony Hall until June 16, will open at Tanglewood June 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUN 10 1961

Tanglewood Midweek Chamber Music Listed

CHARLES MUNCH announces the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts to be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert Wednesday, July 5, in Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

●Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

●The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — on July 19 will present the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G Major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

●Noah Greenberg on July 26 will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

●Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat major.)

●The Kroll Quartet on Aug. 9 will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41.

●Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. Excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

* * *

TICKETS for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m. in the 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall, are available at $3.50 and $3 a concert. The Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, at Boston's Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) until June 16, will open at Tanglewood on June 20 (Lenox 600).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542
JUN 13 1961

Chamber Music Concerts Listed For Tanglewood

The schedule of chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox was announced today.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18 and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B—flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Reaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E—flat Major).

On August 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

15

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W: 10,215

JUN 17 1961

MUSIC - ART - DRAMA

(Continued from Page 4)

in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2nd program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

Bershire Festival Chamber Music Concerts

On August 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schubann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, to be given on Wednesday evenings at 8:30 in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall, are available at $3.50 and $3.00 per concert. The Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, at Boston's Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) until June 16, will open at Tanglewood on June 20 (Lenox 600).

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.).

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubret Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio

(Continued on Page 5)

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (e)
NEW BRITAIN, Conn.
Circ. 31,209

JUN 26 1961

Tanglewood Will Open Next Week

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.).

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on July 5. The program will consist of Brahm's Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts of Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the seven chamber music concerts at Tanglewood, to be given on Wednesday evenings at 8:30 in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall, are available at $3.50 and $3. The Berkshire Festival Ticket Office is at Tanglewood (Lenox 600).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856

JUN 10 1961

Chamber Music Concerts Planned at Tanglewood

LENOX, Mass.—Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival here at Tanglewood.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12, plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — will give the third chamber music concert July 19. Their program include the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

De Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the August 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

On August 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on August 16 as the final program of the series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUN 11 1961

Chamber Music Programs Listed for Tanglewood

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts to be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert on Wednesday, July 5, in the Brahms' sextet in B-flat, and the Schubert Quintet in C major.

Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York — violin, cello, piano — will give the third chamber music concert on July 19 with the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert on July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital on Aug. 16 as the final program of the series with excerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

Tickets for the concerts in the 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall are available at $3.50 and $3.00 per concert. The Berkshire Festival Ticket Office, at Boston's Symphony Hall (CO 6-1492) until June 16, will open at Tanglewood on June 20 (Lenox 600).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

JUN 11 1961

Chamber Music At Tanglewood

Charles Munch has announced participants and programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening concert Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12, plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York, violin, cello and piano, on July 19 will present the Trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble, July 26.

De Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 program of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat major).

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt sesquicentennial recital Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of excerpts from "Annees de Pelerinage," two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, "Benediction de Dieu" and the "Mephisto" Waltz.

12

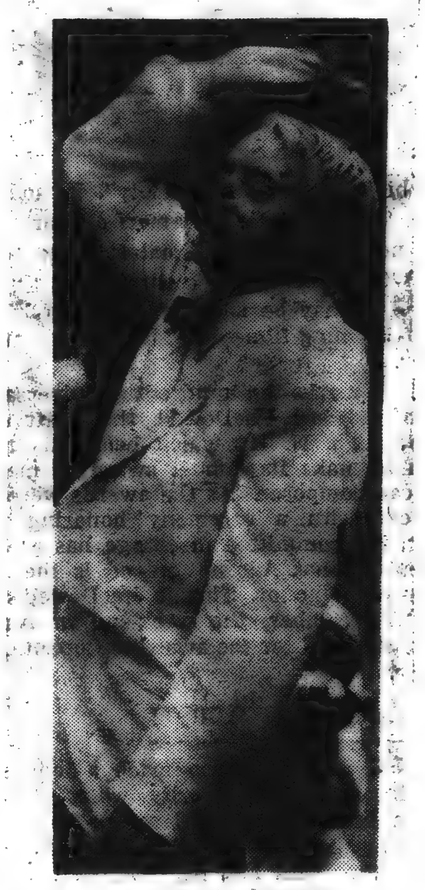
The New York Times Magazine

STRINGS AT TANGLEWOOD—The Berkshire Festival, "Big Daddy" of the summer festivals, draws throngs to its beautiful home at Lenox, Mass., each year. Here, the Curtis String Quartet and assisting artists prepare a program to be heard in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 21 1961



CHARLES MUNCH

RIDGEWOOD, N.Y.
TIMES
W. 10,050

JUN 29 1961

TANGLEWOOD

The Brooklyn Acedemy of Music will run its fifth annual "Sunday at Tanglewood" excursion on July 23. The all-inclusive ticket includes round trip transportation, a box lunch on the Tanglewood grounds and a reserved seat inside the Music Shed for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Independent
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent

JUN 29 1961

TANGLEWOOD

Boston Symphony Summer Home

The 210-acre Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., estate was given to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936 by Mrs. Gorham Brooks and Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan.

The public is invited to visit and to enjoy the beauty of the grounds and gardens at Tanglewood. During the day when the Berkshire Music Center, the Orchestra's summer school of music, is in session visitors are asked to meet at the main Gate and to go through the grounds with a Guide. The grounds, however, are opened from 12 to 1:30 p.m. daily and no Guide is necessary between these hours. Admission to the grounds is by ticket only at the time of Berkshire Festival concerts.

Visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward the support of the Center; members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than fifty school concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures, forums. The Friends Office is at the Main Gate.

Buildings-Grounds

Chamber Music Hall: designed by Eliel Saarinen, built in 1941, capacity 300; used for small chamber music groups, lectures, seminars, and large classes.

Hawthorne Cottage: a replica of the "Little Red House" where Nathaniel Hawthorne lived in 1850-51 and wrote The House of Seven Gables and Tanglewood Tales. This replica, replacing the original building destroyed by fire in 1891, was built and presented to the Orchestra by the National Federation of Music Clubs. Now used as music studios, the cottage is open to the public before each concert.

Hemlock Gardens: situated west of the Main House and open before, during and after each concert.

Main House: the original mansion of the Tanglewood estate, now the administration building of the Berkshire Music Center.

Music Shed: building in 1938, capacity 5898. The Edmund Hawes Talbot Memorial Stage Canopy, given through the generosity of Mrs. Talbot was installed in 1959.

Theatre Concert Hall: designed by Saarinen, built in 1941, capacity 1152; used for chamber music concerts and opera performances.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, will be held from July 5 through August 20, extended from six to seven weeks.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUN 12 1961

Chamber Music Concert Programs Listed by Munch

Charles Munch has announced the participants and the programs for the seven chamber music concerts which will be given as part of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert Wednesday, July 5. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Darius Milhaud's Quartet No. 12 plus the D major Quartet by Haydn and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3, will be performed by the Budapest Quartet at the second concert, July 12.

The Beaux Arts Trio of New York—violin, cello, piano — will give the third chamber music concert on July 19. Their program includes the trio by Albert Roussel, the Trio in G major, No. 1, by Beethoven and Schubert's Trio in B-flat, Op. 99.

For the fourth concert of the series, July 26, Noah Greenberg will direct his New York Pro Musica in music of Early Renaissance masters, scored for vocal and instrumental ensemble.

Mr. de Pasquale will be guest of the Boston Fine Arts Quartet for the Aug. 2 probram of three string quintets by Mozart (C minor, D major, E-flat Major).

On Aug. 9 the Kroll Quartet will perform the F minor Quartet, Op. 95, by Beethoven, David Diamond's Second Quartet and Schumann's Quartet in A major, Op. 41, No. 3.

Claudio Arrau will give a special Liszt sesquicentennial recital on Aug. 16 as the final program of the series. His program will consist of exerpts from Annees de Pelerinage, two Etudes d'Execution Transcendante, Ballade No. 2, Benediction de Dieu, and the Mephisto Waltz.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Whitestone

GETTING INSTRUCTIONS from Harry Stedman of Dalton, standing, are members of his staff of ushers at Tanglewood prior to the opening of the major concerts in the Music Shed tonight. Mr. Stedman has been head of this volunteer group for many years.

Eagle 4/19/61

Tanglewood Theater Project Will Be Started This Week

LENOX — James F. Kiley, superintendent of grounds at Tanglewood, said today that preliminary work on the reconstruction of the theater concert hall, which was damaged by heavy snows this winter, will start this week.

The east section of the theater roof collapsed late in February when tons of snow proved too much for the wooden Girders. Four steel trusses and a steel girder will replace the wooden roof supports.

The grounds crew at Tanglewood has cleared the debris of the collapsed roof in preparation for the contractor, Ernest J. Cramer of Pittsfield, to begin the reconstruction.

The contractor's preliminary work will include the installation of cement footings and steel posts for the support of the trusses and the girder.

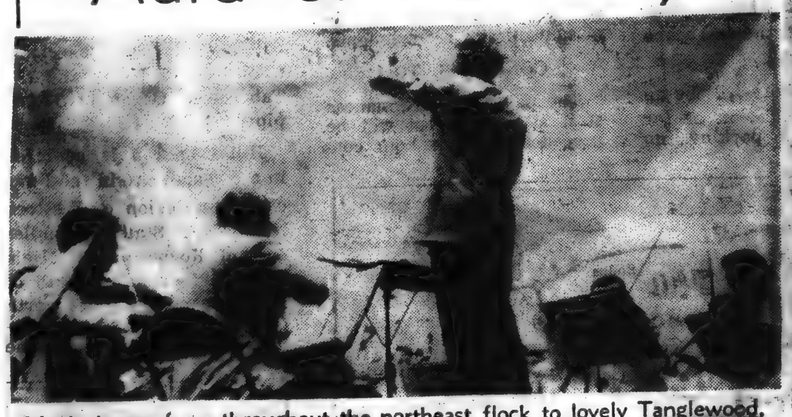
Mr. Kiley said it is hoped the reconstruction will be completed the week of May 15.

Holes will be cut through a part of the roof now intact and a cable from a crane will draw the trusses from the floor of the hall into place. Prentice Bradley, Pittsfield architect, is the designer.

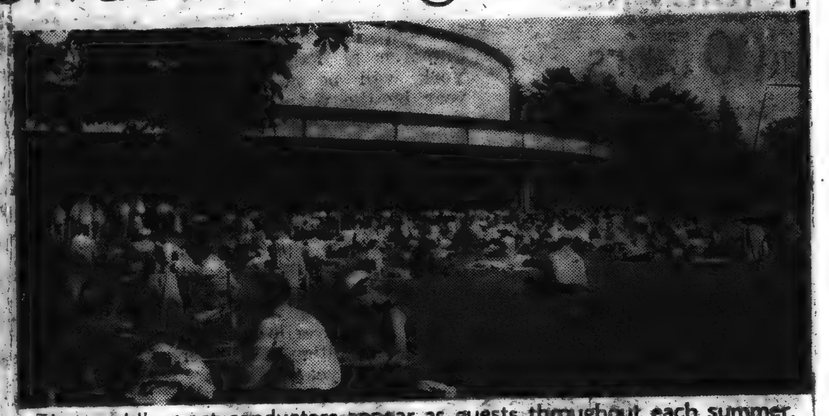
PRE-SEASON- FESTIVAL

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 67,629 S. 118,093
JUL 23 1961

Aura of Harmony Pervades Tanglewood



Music lovers from throughout the northeast flock to lovely Tanglewood, near West Stockbridge, Mass., for the annual Berkshire Music Festival. Here they await performance outside the giant music shed.



The world's great conductors appear as guests throughout each summer. "Regular" at the festival, however, is Dr. Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which summers at Tanglewood.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
JUL 4 1961

Munch Arrives for Opening Of Tanglewood Festival

Charles Munch, who is conducting the greater portion of the Boston Symphony Orchestra programs at this year's Tanglewood Festival near Lenox, Mass., arrived in this country yesterday by air from Paris. He traveled immediately to Richmond, Mass., where his personal staff has opened his summer residence.

* * *

DR. MUNCH has been vacationing in Europe since the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's winter season in late April and has only conducted one concert in that time—the London Philharmonic Orchestra in London's Royal Festival hall on June 1. Dr. Munch designated the concert as a memorial to Serge Koussevitsky and the program was attended by the widow of the orchestra's former music director.

Dr. Munch will first rehearse the Boston Symphony at Tanglewood tomorrow morning in preparation for the first three of the 21 orchestral concerts to be given during the seven-week Berkshire Festival.

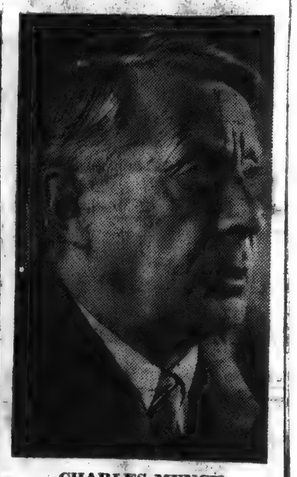
* * *

THE OPENING orchestral concerts, scheduled for Friday, Saturday and Sunday in the 6,000-seat music shed will consist of music by J. S. Bach.

The orchestral concerts will be preceded by the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs tomorrow night when the Cutis String Quartet will play in Tanglewood's 1,200-seat theater.

Nine soloists will assist in the three all-Bach concerts this weekend. Four of the soloists—Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Roger Voisin, trumpet; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; and Richard Burgin, violinist—are first-desk players from the orchestra. Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, contralto; Mac Morgan, baritone; and Lukas Foss, pianist, are former students at the orchestra's Berkshire music center.

The evening concerts at Tanglewood are at 8:30 o'clock and the Sunday afternoon program are at 2:30 o'clock.



CHARLES MUNCH
Boston Symphony Conductor

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 16 1961

1962 Tanglewood Season Extended Additional Week

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced last night that the 1962 season at Tanglewood, the final year of Dr. Charles Munch's directorship of the orchestra and the summer school of music, will be extended from seven to eight weeks, opening July 6.

The season will consist of 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and concerts by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

MUSIC EXCURSIONS

Despite its financial difficulties, the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad is operating excursions each Sunday to the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. The price of $8.75 includes the train fare, bus transportation between the railroad station in Lenox and Tanglewood, admission to the concert and tax. For children 5 to 12 years old, the cost is $6.45. Excursions leave Grand Central Terminal in the morning and return here about 10 P. M.

HERE AND THERE

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,181
JUL 17 1961

Tanglewood Music Festivals

Early in 1944 when Dr. Serge Koussevitzsky of the Boston Symphony Orchestra was asked by his board what he would like as a gift for his approaching 70th birthday, he answered: "Re-open Tanglewood this summer and let me put on a Mozart festival."

The second World War had forced Tanglewood to close for an indefinite time. The music festivals that had become well established in the 1930s, in the beautiful park near Lenox in the Berkshires, had been stopped after Pearl Harbor.

Dr. Koussevitzsky was given his wish, and a series of concerts devoted exclusively to the compositions of Mozart was offered in the smaller theater in the Tanglewood grounds. It was a great success.

Most of the best-loved works of the Austrian composer were presented, and the little theater seating about 1,200 was filled at nearly every performance. Gasoline rationing was in effect then, but music-lovers found ways of getting to Tanglewood.

Since 1944 the idea has been carried along with a series of Mozart concerts each year. Dr. Koussevitzsky lived seven years longer. After him the new director of the Boston Symphony, Charles Munch, kept up the spirit of the undertaking. About the middle of July in each year three concerts are given in one weekend: on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

We have heard lately that Dr. Munch will presently be retiring. His successor, let us hope, will continue the summer Mozart series.

The completion of the Massachusetts Turnpike brought the people of eastern Massachusetts within easier reach of Tanglewood. A drive of an hour and a quarter from the Sturbridge interchange brings one to Lee, which is only a short distance from Lenox.

Many Americans take a great deal of pleasure in going to Europe for summer music festivals. They have to look about quite a bit to find orchestras equal to the Boston Symphony, or vocalists and instrumental soloists as good as those we have at home in Massachusetts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
JUL 9 1961

Music Shed

There is no greater misnomer than that of the "Music Shed," where concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival are being given at Tanglewood.

Here are a few facts about this ingloriously named structure: It was built in 1938 at a cost of $77,768. The steel bill was $38,000.

Some 150,000 feet of firwood was ordered from the west coast for the roof. It came by boat via the Panama Canal, the Atlantic Coast and the Hudson River to Albany.

The shed covers an acre and a half of ground and seats 5,983. The wooden roof, 66,000 square feet of two-inch plank, plus three layers of tar and gravel, is held up by 78 steel piers. The main cross-girder under the roof is 207 feet long.

The stage, behind which are orchestra and soloist dressing rooms and a conductor's suite, is 93 feet wide at the front, 37½ feet wide at the rear wall and 46 feet deep at the center line. It is 176 feet from the stage to the back of the seating area.

Behind the seats is a promenade area 27 feet wide. The outer curve of the building line (the promenade area) is 350 feet long; the promenade roof is 20 feet, four inches high, the roof height at edge is 46 feet.

Some shed!

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 1 1961

BSO's Perry To Address Kiwanis on Tanglewood

LENOX—Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will address the Kiwanis Club at its 6:30 dinner-meeting tomorrow on the topic, "Tanglewood as a Business Operation."

The club reports that its recent hole-in-one contest has netted $295. A proposed future program for the club is a joint picnic at Laurel Lake with the Kiwani-Annes Club.

Shop during Lee Bargain Days Friday and Saturday. —Adv.

18

Famous Boston Symphony Celebrates 80th Birthday

Pierre Monteux is guest conductor of the Boston Symphony for a Sunday afternoon Berkshire Festival concert.

The 80th season of the Boston Symphony Orchestra is being celebrated in 1961. The Orchestra holds a seniority of two years over the Concertgebouw of Amsterdam and is junior to the pioneer orchestras of London, Leipzig, Vienna and Paris.

In 1881, an orchestra of the highest European standards was a point of aspiration in the United States. It required a man with imagination, enterprise and an intense love of music to start such a project. As a music student in Vienna, Henry Lee Higginson, of Boston, was exposed to the Viennese traditions and devotions to Beethoven, Mozart and Schubert. After his return from Europe and when he had acquired the means, Mr. Higginson proceeded to build something that his country had never known: a 'permanent' orchestra which would devote its sole energies toward ideal performances of symphonic music. He spent his fortune in this project and after thirty-seven years he was happy to leave a heritage far richer than a fortune in dollars alone.

Mr. Higginson assembled the best musicians available in the United States and Europe and he engaged a young German conductor, George Henschel. The first concert was held in the Boston Music Hall on October 22, 1881. Wilhelm Gericke became conductor in 1884; he departed in 1889 but returned to lead the Orchestra again from 1898 to 1906. Arthur Nikisch was conductor for the seasons of 1889-1893; Emil Paur succeeded him and was in charge until the close of the 1898 season. Karl Muck was appointed conductor in 1906 and, except for four seasons (1908-1912) when Max Fiedler was in charge, he was the conductor until the spring of 1918.

The First World War brought the end of an era and the Orchestra's owner bowed to inevitable change. The Orchestra, in the United States where music is not state supported, became what all orchestras had to be: a public trust, the property and responsibility of the community it served.

The newly formed Board of Trustees engaged Henri Rabaud from Paris for the 1918-1919 season. Pierre Monteux, who now returns from time to time as a valued and beloved 'conductor emeritus,' was in charge from 1919-19124.

In 1924, Serge Koussevitzsky began what was to be the longest term for a single conductor — twenty-five years. Koussevitzky brought with him the European repertoire plus an encouragement to the American composer which resulted in a new era for the Orchestra. The names of the Orchestra and its conductor seemed inseparable. when, in 1948, he retired. He died June 4, 1951 and is buried in the village of Lenox, Mass. near Tanglewood.

Charles Munch, one of the foremost musicians in France, was appointed Music Director of the Orchestra in the autumn of 1949. He is more than a French artist: Strasbourg, his native town, has two languages and lies between two cultures his mother was French, h father was Alsatian. Doct r Munch, a relative by marriage to his fellow Alsatian, Albert Schweitzer, and an inheritor of a catholic musical tradition from his family, has further enhanced the Orchestra's reputation in his eleven seasons as Music Director.

CAPITAL CITY NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER CLIPPINGS
COMPLETE NEW YORK STATE SERVICE

CAIRO HERALD
Thursday, August 10, 1961

Interior of Music Shed At Tanglewood

A view of the interior of the huge 6000 seat music shed at Tanglewood showing the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the Talbot Memorial Canopy which was installed two years ago to improve the already fine acoustics of the great shed. The Berkshire Festival has two weeks to go before the completion of the 1961 seven-week program.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,683
JUL 26 1961

Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox Is Adding to Stature Every Year

Besides Concerts, Visitors May Enjoy Rehearsals, Tours of Grounds

A trip to the home of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox is worth while even if it is only to see the spacious grounds, including the huge shed where the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs, and the other buildings.

Grounds Open

Tanglewood grounds are open for guided tours at no charge Monday through Fridays from 9 to 5. While the guides have a lunch period from 12 to 1:30 the grounds are open but visitors are on their own.

Saturday mornings an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the shed is open to the public for a small charge. The grounds are open at that time free of charge but without guides.

Sunday morning from 9 to 11 the grounds are open with no guides. The orchestra's regular concerts are Friday and Saturday nights at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon at 2:30. There are special programs some Thursday nights.

The Berkshire Festival has been in existence for 27 years, called for and made to interest the trustees of under a huge tent seating up to 5000 but that was not satisfactory, particularly during storms. Soon there was a drive to raise $100,000 to build the present cavernous shed which was completed in June of 1938.

The festival has continued to make progress each year, providing musical enjoyment for ever-increasing audiences.

A glance at the registration plates of automobiles in the parking lots on concert nights readily reveals the wide area from which the festival draws its audiences. Many of the cars bear New York State, Connecticut, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania markers as well as those from Massachusetts.

The festival has proven an added attraction for the Hudson Valley summer resorts as well as for those of the Berkshires themselves. A surprising number of festival fans by the festival. Charles Munch, daily large number of festival fans also rector of the BSO, also is head also are from New York City.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 17 1961

BSO Manager To Address Kiwanis

Thomas D. Perry, manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will speak at a meeting of the Kiwanis Club Wednesday at 12:15 p.m. at the Wendell-Sherwood Hotel. Mr. Perry will tell of the famed orchestra and its appearances in the Berkshires.

The sum of $700 has been realized to date on the circus which gave two performances last Monday at Wahconah Park.

Two steak cookouts are planned: Aug. 9 and Aug. 23 at Wild Acres.

CHICAGO, ILL.
SUN-TIMES
D. 566,218 S. 648,178
AUG 7 1961

Berkshire Festival Concerts On WFMT

FM Radio Station WFMT (98.7) will broadcast on consecutive Wednesday evenings 17 concerts from the 1961 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass.

The programs begin at 8 p.m. Wednesday when Charles Munch conducts the Boston Symphony in four Bach Suites for Orchestra.

Munch conducts 15 of the concerts. Guest conductors during the season are Aaron Copland, Hugh Ross, Pierre Monteux and Richard Burgin.

TULSA, OKLA.
WORLD
D. 95,474 S. 150,615
FEB 8 1961

DECARVALHO DISCOVERY OF KOUSSEVITSKY

Conductor Tells of Start

By PAUL EDWARDS
Of The World Staff

A member of the Brazilian congress with the red speck of the Legion d'Honneur pinned to his lapel and a Brazilian press card in his wallet came to town Tuesday to conduct the Tulsa Philharmonic Orchestra.

He is the first in a series of guest conductors to be brought here to fill out the tenure of recently departed Vladimir Golschmann.

His name is Eleazar de Carvalho. Behind his performance at the Municipal Theater Sunday afternoon will be 15 years of experience conducting the finest symphony orchestras in Europe and the Americas.

Drawing some conlusions from those 15 years, and punctuating his most enthusiastic sentences with a stubby practice baton, de Carvalho traced his professional inspiration to the tutelage of one of the world's great conductors and, perhaps unconsciously, to the street songs and beggar chants of his native Brazil.

* * *

Serge Koussevitzky, Russian-born conductor who led the Boston Symphony Orchestra for 25 years from 1924-49 and schooled many of America's outstanding conductors at the Berkshire Music Center in Tanglewood, Mass., discovered de Carvalho in 1946.

"He opened the book of conducting to me," the Brazilian said. "He was like a father. I came to him at Tanglewood unknown and he reached down from the pedestal upon which all had placed him and gave me a hand."

Koussevitzky, who was personally affronted when one of his pupils used a longer baton than his, didn't care where a talented conductor came from.

Though de Carvalho had but 10 years as a tuba player and some opera conducting to his credit when he came to the Berkshire center, the old master soon made him his assistant and then took him to Boston in October of '46 where de Carvalho made his American debut with the BSO.

—World Staff Photo

Eleazar de Carvalho with baton

* * *

In 1949, when Koussevitzky retired from the Boston orchestra at the age of 75, his first step outside of the U.S. in 25 years was taken with de Carvalho to Rio De Janiero where he was to be guest conductor for two weeks.

He stayed six, and left encouraging his pupil to "do all he could for good music in Brazil."

De Carvalho took this as an order. He founded the Academia Paulista de Musica in Sao Paulo, which he still directs, and also took over the Brazilian section of Jeunesses Musicales—a youth music organization.

* * *

De Carvalho earns his press card the hard way, writing a weekly column on music and travel for a Rio newspaper.

He likes to talk about the music of his homeland. "We have a very strong folk music there," he said. "The infusion of Jesuit priests into the country left the Indians singing street songs with Latin words, and now even beggars ask for money in the streets with a song very close to a Gregorian chant."

De Carvalho assumed command of the master conductor class at Tanglewood after Koussevitzky's death in 1951, and since then has been in greater demand. He spends the spring and early summer in Brazil, the falls in Europe and the winter in the U.S. He conducts his Berkshire class during July and August.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 371,393
JUL 4 1961

TANGLEWOOD

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday (July 7-8-9) and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 175,076
JUL 3 1961

Berkshire Festival Opens Friday Night at Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, with three orchestral concerts of music by Bach to be given on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon, July 9, in the Music Shed, and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet, assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, and Samuel Mayes, on Wednesday night in the Theater.

Nine soloists have been invited by Doctor Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening (8:30) concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert (8:30) soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin (violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

19

TIMES-UNION

Keeler's CHRONICLE

VOL. 6 MAY 1st, 1961 NO. 3

Tanglewood's A Coming!

The other-day our friendly mailman brought a very nice note from HARRY S. BEALLE, Publicity Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The amiable Mr. Bealle writes:

Dear Mr. Adler,

I am delighted to tell you that the thousands of people who wait for Tanglewood to open so that they may include a visit to Keeler's in their Berkshire jaunt will have an extra week this summer to enjoy your fine food.

Because of the big public request, we are extending the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood from the former six-week season to a seven-week season in 1961. Our first concert will break forth Wednesday evening, July 5th, and the last program will be given on Sunday afternoon, August 20.

I hope you will be able to come and hear some of our music this summer and at the same time I hope all of us have the pleasure of coming to eat some of your fine food this summer.

Sincerely,
Harry S. Bealle

We certainly are pleased to hear from Mr. Bealle and we look forward not only to welcoming the many musicians and patrons of Tanglewood, to Keeler's but to accepting his most cordial invitation to travel over to Lenox, Mass. and enjoy some of the glorious music that will pour out over the breath-taking Tanglewood grounds.
Scene at KEELER'S

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 26 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
JUL 3 1961

Boston Symphony Berkshire Festival Begins Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox Friday evening. Music director Charles Munch will arrive today via air from Paris and go immediately to his Summer residence in Richmond.

Since the end of the Symphony season last April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe. He conducted a memorial concert to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky with the London Philharmonic in the Royal Festival Hall June 1.

The first week-end of concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood will be devoted to J. S. Bach, as follows:

Friday at 8:30 p.m.—Suite in B minor, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute soloist; Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m.—"Wedding" Cantata, Adele Addison, soprano soloist; Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

Sunday at 2:30 p.m.—Magnificat, soloists Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan; Sinfonia from Easter Oratorio; Concerto No. 1, in D minor, for Clavier, Lukas Foss, soloist. The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willie Beckett, will participate in the Magnificat.

The Curtis String Quartet—Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello—will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes in Tanglewood's Theater Wednesday evening at 8:30. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163, by Franz Schubert.

Tanglewood Is Summer Home of Boston Orchestra

The music shed at Tanglewood, off Route 183 in Lenox is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which conducts the Berkshire Music Festival during the months of July and August and annually brings more than 100,000 music lovers to the area, often more than 10,000 to a single concert. Spacious lawns and gardens overlooking picturesque Stockbridge Bowl in themselves are a reward to the visitor. In addition to the main concerts, opera and chamber music programs are given weekly during the season in smaller halls at Tanglewood.

20

HUDSON, N.Y.
REGISTER STAR
D. 8,447
JUL 20 1961

Tanglewood Plans 15 'Pop' Concerts

Tanglewood, the famous summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Lenox, Mass., has come a long way since 1937, the last year that its concerts were presented in a tent.

Formal informality marked the early audiences. Today the vacationing Tanglewood enthusiasts, who surround the 6,000-seat open Music Shed during concerts, are as informal as an audience can become. To join them is, in itself, an interesting experience, and acoustically remarkable.

Inside the Shed is, of course, quieter. Seats there are preferred by people who enjoy viewing the approximalety 105-instrument orchestra and the conductor, who melds the virtuosity and varied backgrounds of its players into one.

A severe thunder storm broke up an all-Wagner program in the Tanglewood tent on August 12, 1937, roaring in and around it as the orchestra started to play the "Ride of the Valkries." The program was halted three times and its second half was changed because of damage to instruments. It has been called the $100,000 storm because subsequently that amount was raised for construction of the Music Shed. The Shed was inaugurated on August 4, 1938, with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony.

The festival, annually, draws vast crowds, last year over 190,000 people. Although there are ample parking facilities and traffic direction, it is well to land-mark the site of the family car so it can be easily found at concert's end.

210-ACRE ESTATE

The 210-acre Tanglewood estate, between Lenox and Stockbridge, is also the setting for the Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music, established in 1940. Conductor Charles Munch is director and composer Aaron Copland chairman of faculty.

Much of the well-kept and beautiful grounds with tall hemlocks, elms, pines and birches, overlook the sparkling waters of the Stockbridge Bowl.

Nathaniel Hawthorne, who named his "Tanglewood Tales" after the estate, lived there in the late 1840s.

Tanglewood was given to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky, then Boston Symphony's conductor, in 1936 by descendants of its Boston [illegible] merchant-owner.

Dr. Munch is presenting 15 Festival concerts by the full orchestra in the Shed and six chamber music concerts in the 1,200-seat Theater-Concert Hall this season.

The conductor, who is retiring at the end of the year to be succeeded by Erich Leinsdorf, was born into a musical family in Strasbourg, Alsace in 1891.

After a career as a violinist, he became a conductor in Paris in 1932 and was an overnight success. He was director of the Societe des Concerts and professor of conducting at the Paris Conservatory, the most sought-after post in Paris, from 1937 to 1945. Four years later he went to Boston.

He will conduct the majority of the concerts with the full orchestra.

Leonard Bernstein, long familiar to Tanglewood followers and TV popularizer of classical music, will conduct one of the three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Dr. Koussevitzky, conductor for 25 years and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux, Boston and San Francisco Symphony conductor emeritus, will return to Tanglewood for several concerts. Others will be Richard Burgin, Boston Symphony musician for over 40 years and its associate conductor, and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops, who have delighted two generations of college students to say nothing of their elders, will be at Tanglewood on August 3 for a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra was founded in 1881. It has been described as the orchestra that made the most beautiful music in the world.

This year's program was announced in separate schedules.

The 15 concerts by the full symphony will be presented in the Shed on July 21, 22, 23, 28, 29 30, August 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, 13, 18, 19, 20. Tickets range from $3 to $6.50.

Chamber music concerts in the Theatre Concert Hall, now in progress, are July 26, August 2, 9, 16 with tickets at $3 and $3.50.

Admissions to the lawns is $2.50 on sale two and a half hours before each concert. Admission to Saturday morning rehearsals is $1.50 for adults and 50c for children.

All evening concerts will be at 8:30 and afternoon concerts at 2:30.

Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward hte support of the center. They are permitted to attend more than 50 school musical events.

A cafteria, selling box lunches and beverages, is open at 6 p.m. on Wednesday, Friday and Saturday evenings and noon on Sundays.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Daily Item
CLINTON, Mass.
Circ. 3,437

JUN 21 1961

Music For All Tastes This Summer

BOSTON (UPI) — Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "Z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt sesquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on weekends July 7 through Aug. 20. Guest conductors for the series in the 6,000-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Arrau's Aug. 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

Elsewhere in the Berkshires, Ted Shawn will present another season of ballet at Jacob's Pillow and the Music Barn in Lenox will offer jazz and popular musicians. The country town of Great Barrington and the nearby city of Pittsfield also will be celebrating their bicentennials in July and August.

The Castle Hill concerts in Ipswich on Boston's North Shore announced a variety of artists including Dave Brubeck and the Modern Jazz Quartet.

Pianist Rudolf Serkin again will hold his Marlboro, Vt. school June 30 to Aug. 21, combining music and the arts. The University of Vermont offers the 1961 Lane Artists series. Goddard College in Plainfield, Vt., has scheduled a series of concerts July 2-Aug. 22

A summer music camp again will operate at Belgrade, Maine. The Air Force Band will play over July 4 when Calais, Maine and St. Stephen, N.B., jointly celebrate "Frontier Days," commemorating years of harmony between two nations.

The New Hampshire Music Festival, Inc. will hold its ninth season of symphony concerts, ten programs to be given at Gilford, Meredith and Wolfeboro from July 20 to Aug. 24.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Evening Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 143,950

JUL 3 1961

Boston Symphony Berkshire Festival Begins Friday

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will begin the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox Friday evening. Music director Charles Munch will arrive today via air from Paris and go immediately to his Summer residence in Richmond.

Since the end of the Symphony season last April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe. He conducted a memorial concert to Dr. Serge Koussevitzky with the London Philharmonic in the Royal Festival Hall June 1.

The first week-end of concerts in the Music Shed at Tanglewood will be devoted to J. S. Bach, as follows:

Friday at 8:30 p.m.—Suite in E minor, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute soloist; Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

Saturday at 8:30 p.m.—"Wedding" Cantata, Adele Addison, soprano soloist; Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

Sunday at 2:30 p.m.—Magnificat, soloists Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan; Sinfonia from Easter Oratorio; Concerto No. 1, in D minor, for Clavier, Lukas Foss, soloist. The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will participate in the Magnificat.

The Curtis String Quartet—Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello—will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes in Tanglewood's Theater Wednesday evening at 8:30. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163, by Franz Schubert.

The Eagle-Tribune, North Andover, Lawrence
June 20

Tanglewood Ready For Music Festival

The Berkshire Festival box office personnell and equipment moved over the weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills, in preparation for the Orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5th with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty-one Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts on July 7, 8, 9, and 14, 15 and 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30; Sunday, 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir. Doctor Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the fifteen Boston Symhony Orcestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends.

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasqual and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood (July 5th). Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The Festival ticket office, starting today, will be open as follows: Mon.-Sat. 9 a. m. to 5 p. m., Sunday, July 2: 10 a. m. to 4p. m., (Closed Sunday June 25th.) It will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5th - August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUN 25 1961

Berkshire Festival Opens Box Office

Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his Berkshire Festival staff will open their offices at Tanglewood, Lenox, tomorrow in preparation for the orchestra's seven week summer season which opens July 5 and the seven week summer school session of the Berkshire Music Center which opens July 2.

In addition to the orchestra's administrative and ticket office staffs, the offices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will also open tomorrow to assist the 200,000 Tanglewood visitors expected in Lenox this summer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

JUN 18 1961

Tanglewood Box Office Opens Soon

BOSTON — The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment will move this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, in preparation for the Orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty - one Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30; Sunday, 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart.

Dr. Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his Orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Dr. Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood (July 5). Participants in the order of concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Lisxt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The Festival Ticket Office, beginning Tuesday, will be open as follows: Monday - Saturday: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sunday July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; (Closed Sunday, June 25). The Ticket Office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 to Aug. 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

STAGE IS SET AT TANGLEWOOD—The new season of the Berkshire Festival begins Friday with a series of Bach concerts for its inaugural week-end. Above, the Boston Symphony is seen on stage of Music Shed in Lenox, Mass.

THE LARGEST SHARE—Charles Munch, who will lead major portion of concerts at the festival.

Whitestone

GUEST CONDUCTOR—Pierre Monteux will take over podium for concerts on July 23 and Aug. 4.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879

JUN 16 1961

More Soloists Are Announced At Tanglewood

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood.

He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat. Doctor Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20 when a performance of Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11th concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York on July 19th, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Doctor Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the Aug. 5th concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addision, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music on July 10.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Chronicle (e)
NORTH ATTLEBORO Mass.
Circ. 3,903

JUN 21 1961

Plan Summer Music For Every Taste

BOSTON (UPI) — Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "Z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt sesquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on weekends July 7 through Aug. 20. Guest conductors for the series in the 6,000-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Arrau's Aug. 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

Elsewhere in the Berkshires, Ted Shawn will present another season of ballet at Jacob's Pillow and the Music Barn in Lenox will offer jazz and popular musicians. The country town of Great Barrington and the nearby city of Pittsfield also will be celebrating their bicentennials in July and August.

The Castle Hill concerts in Ipswich on Boston's North Shore announced a variety of artists including Dave Brubeck and the Modern Jazz Quartet.

Pianist Rudolf Serkin again will hold his Marlboro KVt.) school June 30 to Aug. 21, combining music and the arts. The University of Vermont offers the 1961 Lane Artists series. Goodard College in Plainfield, Vt. scheduled a series of concerts July 2-Aug. 2.

A summer music camp again will operate at Belgrade, Maine. The Air Force Band will play over July 4 when Calais, Maine and St. Stephen, N.B., jointly celebrate "Frontier Days," commemorating years of harmony between two nations.

The New Hampshire Music Festival, Inc. will hold its ninth season of symphony concerts, ten programs to be given at Gilford, Meredity and Wolfeboro from July 20 to Aug. 24.

Chronicle Want Ads Bring Results

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211

JUN 25 1961

Tanglewood Open For Seven Weeks

The Fromm Music Foundation has since 1956 taken an active role in the presentation of contemporary music at Tanglewood as the sponsor of a program embracing seminars, lectures and concerts, both formal and informal.

With the expansion of the Tanglewood season, July 5th to August 20, to seven weeks this year, these activities have also been expanded. The activities include weekly lecture concerts comprising the Seminar in Contemporary Music; the widespread activity of the Fromm Fellowship Players and a single formal concert of contemporary chamber music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 48,322

JUN 18 1961

Tanglewood Season To Open July 5

The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment move this week end from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of Western Massachusetts, in preparation for the orchestra's seven-week festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of 21 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 (Friday, Saturday 8:30; Sunday, 2:30.) The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Dr. Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Dr. Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival week ends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; Aug. 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood July 5.

22

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUN 11 1961

Berkshire Festival Underway July 5th

Famed Musical Event Continues to Aug. 20

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held July 5 to August 20.

The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra.

He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the Orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

THREE CONCERTS

Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy—a summer resident of the Berkshires—will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin.

Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

BENEFIT CONCERT

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August 3rd in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on August 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed in Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30 and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m.

The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

The Berkshire Music Center—the orchestra's summer school of music—will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-August 20) of the Festival.

Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center.

Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 Mass. school events — concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,995
JUN 21 1961

To Offer Music For Every Taste At Berkshire Event

BOSTON (UPI) — Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "Z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt sesquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on weekends July 7 through Aug. 20. Guest conductors for the series in the 6,600-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Arrau's Aug. 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

Elsewhere in the Berkshires, Ted Shawn will present another season of ballet at Jacob's Pillow and the Music Barn in Lenox will offer jazz and popular musicians. The country town of Great Barrington and the nearby city of Pittsfield also will be celebrating their bicentennials in July and August.

The Castle Hill concerts in Ipswich on Boston's North Shore announced a variety of artists including Dave Brubeck and the Modern Jazz Quartet.

Pianist Rudolf Serkin again will hold his Marlboro Vt. school June 30 to Aug. 21, combining music and the arts. The University of Vermont offers the 1961 Lane Artists series. Goodard College in Plainfield, Vt. scheduled a series of concerts July 2-Aug. 22.

A summer music camp again will operate at Belgrade, Maine. The Air Force Band will play over July 4 when Calais, Maine and St. Stephen, N.B., jointly celebrate "Frontier Days," commemorating years of harmony between two nations.

The New Hampshire Music Festival, Inc. will hold its ninth season of symphony concerts, ten programs to be given at Gilford, Meredity and Wolfeboro from July 20 to Aug. 24.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUN 19 1961

BSO Begins Its Move to Tanglewood

Tickets Office Opens Tomorrow, Festival To Start July 5

TANGLEWOOD—The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment moved over the weekend from Boston to Tanglewood in preparation for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Festival.

It will open July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of 21 BSO concerts. Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood. The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart.

Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra, plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Doctor Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends.

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the July 5 chamber music concert. Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial recital.

The Festival ticket office, beginning tomorrow, will be open Monday to Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. and Sunday, July 2, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The ticket office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 to Aug. 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the festival concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUN 19 1961

NORTH ADAMS, MASSACHUSETTS

Munch Announces Other Soloists, Program Changes

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox.

He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritonee Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat. Dr. Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20 when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York on July 19 has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the Aug. 5 concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music on July 10.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709
JUN 19 1961

Tanglewood To Open On July 5

The Berkshire Festival box moved this week end from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshires Hills of Western Massachusetts, in preparation for the orchestra's seven-week festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of 21 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 (Friday, Saturday 8:30; Sunday, 2:30.) The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Dr. Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Dr. Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival week ends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; Aug. 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20.)

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUN 18 1961

TANGLEWOOD BOX OFFICE TO OPEN

BOSTON — The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment move this week end from Boston to Tanglewood, Lenox, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of Western Massachusetts, in preparation for the orchestra's seven week festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of 21 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts. The office will open Tuesday.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8.30 p. m., Sunday, 2.30 p. m.). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach, for the second three, music by Mozart. Dr. Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Dr. Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five festival week ends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; Aug. 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood July 5. Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 17 1961

Tanglewood Season

Munch Names Added Soloists, Announces Program Changes

PAGE ONE—SECTION TWO

TANGLEWOOD—Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival.

He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's "Magnificat." Doctor Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20, when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Tribute to Koussevitzky

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York July 19, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the Aug. 5 concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music July 1[illegible]

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUN 17 1961

Berkshire Festival Personnel Moves In Over This Weekend

The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment move this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate at Lenox, in preparation for the orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of 21 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Munch to Conduct

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 (Friday and Saturdays at 8:30; Sundays at 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Dr. Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his Orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Dr. Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; Aug. 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood July 5. Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Krol Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

Ticket Office

The Festival ticket office, beginning Tuesday, will be open as follows: weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday July 2, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The ticket office then will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 thru Aug. 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 173,090

JUN 10 1961

MASSACHUSETTS

This historic state has something to satisfy the taste of every vacationer. There are the lovely Berkshires in the western part of the state, the verdant countryside of Pioneer Valley in the central section, rocky shores to the north, more sandy as one goes south to delightful Cape Cod. Out at sea, there is lovely Nantucket Island, and nearer, Martha's Vineyard. Colorful vacation folders, booklets and maps can be obtained by writing the Massachusetts Department of Commerce, 150 Causeway Street, Box 11, Boston.

The Berkshires
What To Do And See

The summer season starts off with a bang with the Great Barrington bi-centennial, and don't be surprised to see bearded gentlemen in old-fashioned garb wandering about town. June 25 there'll be a parade, followed by Historical Displays July and August at the Berkshire Atheneum in Pittsfield, historical exhibition and Civil War exhibit at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, starting July 5. Bi-centennial Sunday is Sept. 3 with memorial programs, open house at historical sites and famous homes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

JUN 20 1961

Festival Box Office Now At Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival box office is now located at Tanglewood in Lennox in preparation for the Boston Symphony's seven-week festival. It opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber concerts. This will be followed on July 7 by the first of 21 Boston Symphony concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six concerts on July 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, 16 on Fridays and Saturdays at 8:30 and Sundays at 2:30. The ticket office is open on Monday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. It will be open every day from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. after July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

JUN 20 1961

Berkshire Festival Announces Changes

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood.

Soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat. For the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20 when Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given, the soloists are: contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm. Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts will be soloists in Mahler's Symphony No. 2 on Aug. 11.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
MARLBORO, Mass.
Circ. 5,660

JUN 21 1961

Plenty Of Good Music Is Scheduled For New Englanders This Summer

By JOHN A. HAHN

Boston UPI — Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "Z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt susquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on weekends July 7 through August 20. Guest conductors for the series in the 6,000-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Arau's August 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

Elsewhere in the Berkshires, Ted Shawn will present another season of ballet at Jacob's Pillow and the Music Barn in Lenox will offer jazz and popular musicians. The country town of Great Barrington and the nearby city of Pittsfield also will be celebrating their bicentennials in July and August.

The Castle Hill concerts in Ipswich on Boston's North Shore announced a variety of artists including Dave Brubeck and the Modern Jazz Quartet.

Pianist Rudolf Serkin again will hold his Marlboro KVt. school June 30 to August 21, combining music and the arts. The University of Vermont offers the 1961 Lane Artists series. Goodard College in Plainfield, Vt. scheduled a series of concerts July 2 - August 22.

A summer music camp again will operate at Belgrade, Maine. The Air Force Band will play over July 4 when Calais, Maine and St. Stephen, N. B., jointly celebrate "Frontier Days," commemorating years of harmony between two nations.

The New Hampshire Music Festival, Inc. will hold its ninth season of symphony concerts, ten programs to be given at Gilford, Meredity and Wolfeboro from July 20 to August 24.

Saturday, June 24, 1961 KINGS COURIER

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood. He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat.

Doctor Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on August 20 when a performance of Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will be given — contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the August 11th concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York on July 19th, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the August 5th concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music on July 10.

The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment move this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, in preparation for the Orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty-one Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

The Festival Ticket Office, beginning June 20, will be open as follows: Mon. - Sat.: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sun. July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., (Closed Sun., June 25). The Ticket Office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 thru August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 17 1961

Tanglewood Season

Munch Names Added Soloists, Announces Program Changes

PAGE ONE—SECTION TWO

TANGLEWOOD—Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival.

He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's "Magnificat." Doctor Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20, when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Tribute to Koussevitsky

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitsky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York July 19, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the Aug. 5 concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music July 1[0].

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)—
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

JUN 20 1961

Festixal Box Office Now At Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival box office is now located at Tanglewood in Lennox in preparation for the Boston Symphony's seven-week festival. It opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber concerts. This will be followed on July 7 by the first of 21 Boston Symphony concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six concerts on July 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, 16 on Fridays and Saturdays at 8:30 and Sundays at 2:30. The ticket office is open on Mondays through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. It will be open every day from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. after July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105

JUN 20 1961

Berkshire Festival Announces Changes

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood.

Soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat. For the Festival final concert on Aug. 20 when Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given, the soloists are: contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm. Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts will be soloists in Mahler's Symphony No. 2 on Aug. 11.

Saturday, June 24, 1961 KINGS COURIER

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood. He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat.

Doctor Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on August 20 when a performance of Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will be given — contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the August 11th concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York on July 19th, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the August 5th concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music on July 10.

The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment move this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, in preparation for the Orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty-one Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

The Festival Ticket Office, beginning June 20, will be open as follows: Mon.-Sat.: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sun. July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., (Closed Sun., June 25). The Ticket Office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 thru August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUN 17 1961

Berkshire Festival Personnel Moves In Over This Weekend

The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment move this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate at Lenox, in preparation for the orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of 21 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Munch to Conduct

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 (Friday and Saturdays at 8:30; Sundays at 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Dr. Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his Orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Dr. Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the 19 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; Aug. 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood July 5. Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Krol Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

Ticket Office

The Festival ticket office, beginning Tuesday, will be open as follows: weekdays from 9 a.m. to 5 p.m., and Sunday July 2, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The ticket office then will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 thru Aug. 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enterprise (e)
MARLBORO, Mass.
Circ. 5,660

JUN 21 1961

Plenty Of Good Music Is Scheduled For New Englanders This Summer

By JOHN A. HAHN

Boston UPI — Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "Z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt susquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on weekends July 7 through August 20. Guest conductors for the series in the 6,000-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Arau's August 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

Elsewhere in the Berkshires, Ted Shawn will present another season of ballet at Jacob's Pillow and the Music Barn in Lenox will offer jazz and popular musicians. The country town of Great Barrington and the nearby city of Pittsfield also will be celebrating their bicentennials in July and August.

The Castle Hill concerts in Ipswich on Boston's North Shore announced a variety of artists including Dave Brubeck and the Modern Jazz Quartet.

Pianist Rudolf Serkin again will hold his Marlboro (Vt.) school June 30 to August 21 combining music and the arts. The University of Vermont offers the 1961 Lane Artists series. Goodard College in Plainfield, Vt. scheduled a series of concerts July 2 - August 22.

A summer music camp again will operate at Belgrade, Maine. The Air Force Band will play over July 4 when Calais, Maine and St. Stephen, N. B., jointly celebrate "Frontier Days," commemorating years of harmony between two nations.

The New Hampshire Music Festival, Inc. will hold its ninth season of symphony concerts, ten programs to be given at Gilford, Meredith and Wolfeboro from July 20 to August 24.

CUE
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 173,090

JUN 10 1961

MASSACHUSETTS

This historic state has something to satisfy the taste of every vacationer. There are the lovely Berkshires in the western part of the state, the verdant countryside of Pioneer Valley in the central section, rocky shores to the north, more sandy as one goes south to delightful Cape Cod. Out at sea, there is lovely Nantucket Island, and nearer, Martha's Vineyard. Colorful vacation folders, booklets and maps can be obtained by writing the Massachusetts Department of Commerce, 150 Causeway Street, Box 14, Boston.

The Berkshires
What To Do And See

The summer season starts off with a bang with the Great Barrington bi-centennial, and don't be surprised to see bearded gentlemen in old-fashioned garb wandering about town. June 25 there'll be a parade, followed by Historical Displays July and August at the Berkshire Atheneum in Pittsfield, historical exhibition and Civil War exhibit at the Berkshire Museum, Pittsfield, starting July 5. Bi-centennial Sunday is Sept. 3 with memorial programs, open house at historical sites and famous homes.

24
New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,342
MAR 31 1961

Jake Jacobson's

Under the Sun

ATTLEBORO TO BOSTON TO BERKSHIRE

Spring — the season of stirring when all kinds of creatures bestir.

The creatures who stir include musicans such as those in the Boston Symphony Orchestra just concluding its 80th winter season.

Soon to move from Symphony Hall to the Hatch Memorial Shell on the bank of Boston's Charles River for the annual Esplanade Concerts.

In the summer to go west to Lenox for the annual Berkshire Festival.

In its midst, Sheldon Rotenberg, a member of the first violin section. Native of Attleboro, graduate of the local high school, a child prodigy who joined the Boston Symphony before World War II after auditioning for the late Serge Koussevitsky.

Sheldon, brother of Ernest and Henry Rotenberg, Attleboro attorneys, lives in Boston in the winter. In the summer when the orchestra moves west, Sheldon, his wife, Hilda and two children head for Pittsfield, located north of Lenox.

Eyes west. Lenox 100 plus miles from Attleboro. There this year the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, its music director, will extend its season to run for seven weeks instead of six, from July 5 to August 20.

Lenox — situated in the hills of western Massachusetts. In Lenox is Tanglewood, the orchestra's 210-acre estate of ancient hemlocks, formal gardens, tall pines and wide vista.

While a visit to Tanglewood during the concert season is something you'll not want to miss here's another suggestion. Take a trip to Tanglewood now — in the spring — or after Labor Day when there is no music there except from the birds and the spheres. When the long afternoon rays of sun stretch across the wide expanse of lawns. When there is time to walk through the grounds, unhurried, and observe and enjoy the scenery of the southern end of Berkshire valley.

While music is one way to get to Tanglewood — here's another way — the highway.

Rte. 1 from Attleboro to Rte. 128 then horth to Rte. 2 and transfer to Rte. 2 for the westward journey. If you are in a hurry I would suggest the Massachusetts Turnpike, but neither spring nor autumn is the time to hurry.

If you have a weekend a leisurely trip over Rte. 2 — known from Greenfield to Williamstown as the Mohawk Trail — will provide you with some of the most inspiring mountain scenery in the Bay tate.

An overnight stay in Williamstown with its fine motels and restaurants is recommended before switching from Rte. 2 to Rte. 7 which will bring you to Lenox.

Charles Munch by the Japan Broadcasting Corp.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815
OCT 15 1960

Tanglewood Fete To Run 7 Weeks

BOSTON (UPI)—The annual Berkshire Music Festival season will be extended to seven weeks effective this year, it was announced Friday.

Henry B. Cabot of Boston, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, said the season would be extended from six weeks and would run July 1 through Aug. 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Morning Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 191,991
MAY 31 1961

Tanglewood have been received that the extra week has been added to take the season to Aug. 20. Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Arthur Fiedler, Aaron Copland, Pierre Monteaux and Eugene Ormandy will be among the guest conductors with Charles Munch.

BOSTON'S Cabots and Lowells will be part of the international audience that will have seven weeks at the Berkshire Festival this Summer instead of the usual six-week season. Thomas Perry of the Boston Symphony board reports that so many requests for tickets for the orchestra's traditional Summer season at

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700
OCT 20 1960

Boston Symphony Extends Season At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra has announced that its Berkshire Festival season next summer will last seven weeks instead of the six of previous years.

Henry B. Cabot of Boston, president of the trustees of the orchestra, revealed the change in schedule to the annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony in Boston recently.

The extra week will be added at the end of the normal season, it was explained. The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held Sunday, July 1. The first in the series of the Bach - Mozart concerts will be July 7, 8 and 9. Under the new seven - week plan, the Festival will draw to a close on Sunday, Aug. 20.

This is the biggest change in the Festival schedule since the season was extended in 1954 to include six weeks of Shed concerts.

The popularity of the Bach-Mozart concerts after the 1957 season, caused the BSO to shift some of the performances to the Music Shed. Throughout the 1958, 1959 and 1960 seasons this proved to be a good move, and during those years attendance has increased at all concerts given during the so - called "small concerts."

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 869,958 S. 1,186,625
MAY 14 1961

Busy Schedule of Summer Music Festivals Across U.S.

By Thomas Willis

It seems safe to say that wherever you happen to be in America this summer, it won't be too far from a center of musical activity. With all returns by no means in, Massachusetts, Puerto Rico, Colorado, and California, have been heard from, as well as several places in between.

Here, for your vacation planning, are some scheduled events, with addresses in case you wish more information. Each is, of course, subject to the usual possibility of change.

• • •

Near Lenox, Mass., at Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony orchestra will be holding its 1961 Berkshire Music Festival, this year extended from six to seven weeks starting July 5. Fifteen concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra, six more by a chamber orchestra of symphony members, and seven chamber music programs are on the schedule.

Charles Munch, whose retirement is not scheduled until the end of the 1962 festival, will do most of the conducting, beginning with the six opening concerts of Bach and Mozart by the chamber orchestra July 7 thru 16. Guest conductors include Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland, Leonard Bernstein, Arthur Fiedler, and Richard Burgin. Mr. Bernstein is to conduct Aug. 12, at one of three concerts observing the 10th anniversary of Serge Koussevitsky's death. Mr. Ormandy will be making his first appearance at the festival July 29.

Soloists include Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, Seymour Lipkin, Isaac Stern, and Adele Addison. The chamber music series offers the Budapest and Curtis String Quartets and the New York Pro Musica. The opera workshop, directed by Boris Goldovsky, presents Paisiello's comedy, "King Theodor in Venice," Aug. 7 and 8.

Further information from Festival Ticket Office, Symphony hall, Boston 15.

• • •

In the Rocky mountain region, the Aspen, Colo., music festival will take place June 28 thru Sept. 3, with concerts week days by faculty and guests and Sundays by the Aspen Symphony orchestra under the direction of Izler Solomon, its regular director, Carlos Chavez, Walter Susskind, and Darius Milhaud. Other guests incl Kirchner, the Julliard String Quartet, and the New York Pro Musica.

Eugene Ormandy

Charles Munch

Serge Koussevitzky

The faculty, all of whom take part in the concert series, includes Adele Addison, Hans Hotter, Grant Johannesen, Ruggiero Ricci, Leopold Simoneau, Jennie Tourel, Beveridge Webster, Ray Still, and Philip Farkas.

Until June 1, the address is Norman Singer, executive director, Aspen Musical Associates, 111 W. 57th st., New York City.

• • •

To the south the International Institute of Music, whose director is Roy Harris, will be held July 23 thru Aug. 9 at the Inter-American university, San German, Puerto Rico. Recitals, chamber music, choral concerts, and lectures by Janos Starker, Nicholas Slonimsky, Jesus Maria Sanroma, Warner Lawson, Sidney and Theresa Harth, and Victor Aitay. Further information from the Institute office, San German, P. R.

• • •

On California's Monterey peninsula, the Carmel Bach Festival will be held July 14 thru 23, under the direction of Sandor Salgo. Daily concerts by orchestra, chorus, and soloists, including Brunetta Mazzolini, McHenry Boatwright, Alice Ehlers, Joanna Hodges, and Ludwig Altmann, will include the Art of Fugue, the Mass in B minor, and several cantatas, as well as Isaac's Missa Carminum, Handel's "Saul," symphonies by Haydn and Brunetti, and madrigals by Marenzio Gesualdo, and Monteverdi. Write the Carmel Bach Festival, P. O. Box 503, Carmel-by-the-Sea, Cal.

• • •

Concluding a bit closer home, the Peninsula Music Festival at Fish Creek, Wis., will be held Aug. 5 thru 20 with Thor Johnson as director. Soloists will be Richard Cassily, John Browning, Sidney Harth, Patricia Neway, and Robert Marcellus. Opera is being presented for the first time, with productions of Gluck's "The Reformed Drunkard" and Pierne's "Sophie Arnould" listed. Write the Peninsula Arts association, Ephraim, Wis.

APRIL 27, 1961 58 NEW YORK POST THURSDAY

Berkshire Festival Will Open July 5

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The seven-week festival will include 15 concerts by the 104-man Boston Symphony, six concerts by a chamber orchestra and seven chamber music concerts.

Conductors will be Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin. Leonard Bernstein has been invited to conduct, too. Among the soloists will be pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin, violinist Isaac Stern and soprano Adele Addison.

The Budapest String Quartet, the Curtis Quartet and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven chamber ensembles.

The orchestral programs will be presented in the 600-seat Music Shed Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30 and Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber recitals will be held in the 120-seat Theater-Concert Hall Wednesdays at 8:30 p. m.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
WORLD-TELEGRAM & SUN
D. 448,828 SAT. 173,691
JUN 20 1961

Excellent Resorts Nestle in Berkshire Mountains

Every summer since 1934, beginning in the first week of July and running through the end of August, hundreds of thousands of persons who can't get enough of it congregate in the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts for a somewhat mystifying schedule of music (symphonic, chamber-type and jazz) and dance (mostly interpretive).

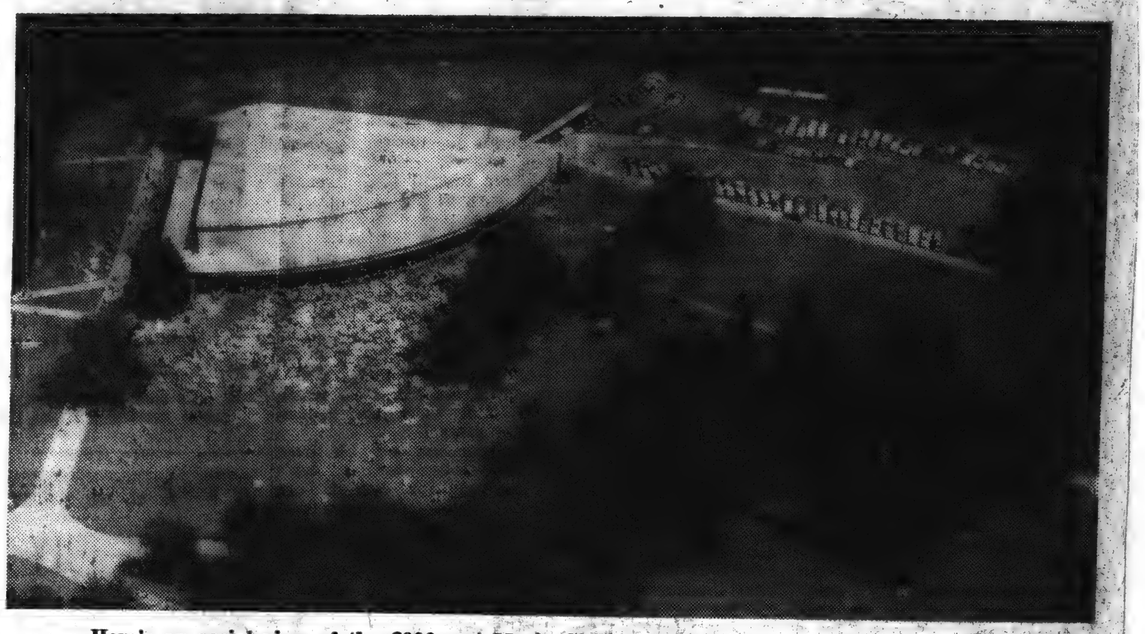
These delightful goings-on all perhaps too loosely under the catch-all title of the Berkshire Festival, but you'll hear bits and pieces of the offerings referred to as Tanglewood Music Festival, the Berkshire Symphonic Festival or Music at Tanglewood; and the rest variously described as the Jacob's Pillow Dance Festival or the Ted Shawn Dance Festival, and then—for the jazz portion—the Jazz Festival or Jazz in the Berkshires.

In any event the great midsummer program goes on in a spacious area called Tanglewood, at one time a private estate near the center of Lenox, Mass., but largely in the town of Stockbridge; and the area is surrounded by excellent resorts, the managements of which know in detail what's going on where.

Jug End Barn.

We've rounded up details on some of the better-known resorts—old-time hotels, popular "country-type" places with luxury appointments and family-type inns—which are within easy traveling distance to the music-and-dance activities.

Immensely popular with the "younger crowd" is the Jug



Here's an aerial view of the 6000-seat Music Shed, with its outside overflow of music lovers, at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The music-and-dance season in the Berkshires runs this summer from July 5 through Aug. 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Crier
WESTPORT, Conn.
Bi-Weekly
Circ. 6,005

MAY 14 1961

Festival Program . . .

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 through Aug. 20 and will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members, devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky and Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts and Richard Burgin, one concert. Eugene Ormandy will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestra works.

Among the soloists the pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Mail orders for tickets are now being accepted at the festival ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
APR 2 1961

21 Concerts Will Be Given At 1961 Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give twenty-one concerts between July 5 and Aug. 20 in the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which has been extended from six to seven weeks.

A chamber orchestra of its members will play in programs devoted to Bach and Mozart on the first two Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons of the series, and the full orchestra will be heard on the remaining five Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays. There will also be a chamber music series on Wednesday nights and two special events, a concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler on Thursday, Aug. 3, and a gala benefit for the Berkshire Music Center on Thursday, Aug. 17.

Munch to Conduct

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's music director, will conduct most of the concerts. Leonard Bernstein, music director of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct Aug. 12, and Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will make his Tanglewood debut July 29. Three concerts, on July 23, Aug. 4 and 19, will be conducted by Pierre Monteux, who celebrates his eighty-sixth birthday April 4. Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony's concertmaster and associate conductor, will direct the concert of Aug. 11, and Aaron Copland will conduct two of his works on July 28.

The list of festival soloists includes Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot - Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin, pianists; Isaac Stern, violinist; Adele Addison, soprano, and six members of the Boston Symphony.

Among the sixteen works to be heard for the first time at Tanglewood are three concertos and a cantata by Mozart, Bela Bartok's Viola Concerto and Rhapsody No. 1 for violin and orchestra; Francis Poulenc's "Gloria" and works by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger, Franz Liszt, Walter Piston, Ottorino Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero and Giovanni Battista Viotti.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

N. H. Sunday News
MANCHESTER, N. H.
Circ. 39,656

APR 2 1961

Berkshire Festival July 5-August 20

BOSTON, April 1—The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5-August 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchester of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,453
APR 1 1961

Boston Symphony Will Play at Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held this year from July 5 through Aug. 20. Extended from six to seven weks the festival will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart series and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. Leonard Bernstein will conduct three concerts; Pierre Monteux, will conduct three concerts and Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first festival apeparance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Soloists at the festival include pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Six memmbers of the Boston Symphony Orchestra have been invited to be soloists at the festival and 16 compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for this summer.

* * *

TWO BERKSHIRE Music Center benefits have been announced —Arthur Fiedler with the Boston Pops on Aug. 3 and a second program on Aug. 17. Seven ensembles are scheduled for the chamber music series.

The festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat music shed Friday and Saturdays at 8:30 p.m. and Sunday at 2:30 p.m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 11,200-seat theater-concert hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for the Berkshire Festival are now being accepted at the festival ticket office at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189
APR 2 1961

Ormandy to Make First Bow at Berkshire Fete

Lenox, Mass. — (UPI) — Eugene Ormandy, conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will make his first appearance this year at the Berkshire Music Festival which opens a seven-week season July 5.

A summer resident of the Berkshire, he will conduct one concert.

Other guest condustors in the 1961 festival will be Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux and Composer Aaron Copland. Richard Burgin, concermaster of the Boston Symphony, will conduct a program.

Soloists during the festival will include violinist Isaac Stern, pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin, and soprano Adele Addison.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
APR 1 1961

26

Bernstein, Ormandy Are Among Conductors At Extended Tanglewood Festival Season

TANGLEWOOD — Leonard Bernstein and Eugene Ormandy will be among the guest conductors at the Berkshire Festival this summer during the Boston Symphony Orchestra's concerts which will be heard between July 5 and Aug. 20.

Leonard Bernstein

The Festival, extended this season from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member BSO, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with the full orchestra in the Music Shed.

Koussevitzky Memorial

He has invited Mr. Bernstein, conductor of the New York Philharmonic, to conduct one of the three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Dr. Serge Koussevitsky, the former music director of the BSO and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin, the BSO concertmaster, one, Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of Monterey and conductor of the Philadelphia Symphony Orchestra one, and Aaron Copland, two of his own orchestral works.

Soloists Listed

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Pops Returning

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1,200-seat Theater-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

Eugene Ormandy

The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music, will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-Aug. 20) of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

The summer program:

July 7: Munch: Bach Suites Nos. 3, 2 (Dwyer), 1, 4.

July 8: Munch, Bach Brandenberg Concerti Nos. 3, 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin); Cantata No. 202 (Addison); Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 6, 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss).

July 9: Munch: Bach Sinfonia from Easter Cantata; Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss); Magnificat (Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

July 14: Munch: Mozart Symphony No. 36, K. 425, "Linz"; Serenade for Wind Instruments in C minor, K. 388; Adagio and Fugue for String Instruments in C minor, K. 546; Symphony No. 40, in G minor, K. 550.

July 15: Munch: Mozart Bassoon Concerto in B-flat, K. 191 (Walt); Flute Concerto in G major, K. 313 (Dwyer); Sinfonia Concertante, in E-flat, K. 1976 (Cioffi, Gomberg, Stagliano, Walt).

July 16: Munch: Mozart Symphony No. 29, in A major, K. 201; Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466 (Lipkin); Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," K. 469 (Hugh Ross, conductor, Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

July 21: Munch: Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture; Brahms Symphony No. 1; "Poulenc "Gloria" for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra (Addison, Festival Chorus).

July 22: Munch: Schumann "Genoveva" Overture; Schumann Symphony No. 1; Beethoven Violin Concerto (Stern).

July 27: Monteux: Respighi Antique Dances and Arias; Vietti Violin Concerto No. 22 in A minor (Stern); De Falla Dances from the Three Cornered Hat; Bartok Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin (Stern); Strauss "Rosenkavalier" Suite.

July 28: Copland Preamble for a Solemn Occasion, "Appalachian Spring" (conducted by the composer); Munch: Ravel "Daphnis et Ghois" complete (Festival Chorus).

July 29: Ormandy: Strauss "Don Juan"; Beethoven Symphony No. 3; Roussel "Bacchus et Ariane"; Brahms Symphony No. 2.

July 30: Munch: Beethoven Symphony No. 4; Liszt Piano Concerto No. 2 in A major (Janis); Foss Three New England Sketches; Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1 in E-flat major (Janis).

Aug. 3: Boston Pops at Tanglewood; Arthur Fiedler, conductor.

Aug. 4: Monteux: Beethoven "Fidelio" Overture; Schumann Piano Concerto (Istomin); Strauss Dance from "Salome"; Sibelius Symphony No. 2.

Aug. 5: Munch: Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 3 (Henriot-Schweitzer); Franck Symphony in D minor.

Aug. 6: Munch: Beethoven Symphony No. 7; Bartok Viola Concerto (de Pasquale); Respighi "Pines of Rome."

Aug. 11: Burgin: Haydn Symphony No. 88; Mahler Symphony No. 2 (Festival Chorus and soloists).

Aug. 12: Bernstein, Shapero Adagietto, from Symphony for Classical Orchestra; Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms (Festival Chorus); Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 5.

Aug. 13: Munch: Hanson Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44; Honegger Symphony No. 1; Beethoven Symphony No. 1.

Aug. 17: Gala Evening—Berkshire Music Center Benefit Program.

Aug. 18: Munch: Mendelssohn Octet for Strings; Debussy La Mer; Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4 (Arrau).

Aug. 19: Monteux: Stravinsky "Petrouchka" Suite; Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 3 (Graffman); Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6.

Aug. 20: Munch: Berlioz "Romeo and Juliette" (Festival Chorus and soloists).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUN 22 1961

Soloists Added To Festival Program

Revisions Also Announced By Dr. Munch

Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan Invited To Join July 9 Performance of Bach's "Magnificat."—"Trio By Roussel" To Be Replaced.

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox.

He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat. He has also selected his singers for the festival's final concert on August 20 when a performance of Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will be given— contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the August 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York on July 19, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, Time Cycle, which was originally announced as part of the August 5 concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music on July 10.

The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment moved last week from Boston to Tanglewood. Starting this past Monday the office is open Monday through Saturday, 9:00 a. m. to 5:00 p. m.; it will be closed Sunday; open Sunday, July 2, 10:00 a. m. to 4:00 p. m., and beginning July 5 it will be open 9 to 6 every day and open through intermission on concert nights. Mail and telephone orders will be accepted for the festival concerts.

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
D. 16,291
APR 1 1961

Bernstein Invited By Charles Munch To Conduct Concert

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5-August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include fifteen concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the Orchestra's Music Director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former musical director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy—a summer resident of the Berkshires—will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Henegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on August 17.

The Budapest Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p. m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p. m.

The Berkshire Music Center—the Orchestra's summer school of music—will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-August 20) of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted by the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Post
WALLINGFORD, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 4,136
JUN 8 1961

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy—a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Isaac Stern

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 869,958 S. 1,186,625
APR 3 1961

Notes

Boston Symphony orchestra conductors at the Berkshire Festival July 5—Aug. 20 are Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy. Soloists include the pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin, violinist Isaac Stern and soprano Adele Addison. . . .

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815

APR 1 1961

Programs Are Revealed For Berkshire Festival

Boston Orchestra's Season at Lenox Extended to Seven Weeks, July 5 to Aug. 20

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be held July 5 to Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Bernstein to Conduct

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires—will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited eight members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, William Schuman, Respighi, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Pops On Aug. 3

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second center benefit evening will be Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed Friday and Saturday nights at 8:30, and Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theater - Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p. m.

The Berkshire Music Center—the orchestra's summer school of music—will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-Aug. 20) of the festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events —concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the festival ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

* * *

Programs Listed

Orchestral programs for the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. (Programs subject to change).

Note: First Tanglewood performances indicated by asterisk.

Month of July

7: Munch: Bach Suites Nos. 3, 2 (Dwyer), 1, 4.

8: Munch: Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 3, 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin); Cantata No. 202 (Addison); Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 6, 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss).

9: Munch: Bach Sinfonia from Easter Cantata; Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss); Magnificat (Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

14: Munch: Mozart Symphony No. 36, K. 423, "Linz"; Serenade for Wind Instruments in C minor, K. 388; Adagio and Fugue for String Instruments in C minor, K. 546; Symphony No. 40, in G minor, K. 550.

15: Munch: Mozart Bassoon Concerto in B-flat, K. 191* (Walt); Flute Concerto in G major, K. 313* (Dwyer); Sinfonia Concertante, in E-flat, K. 297b (Cioffi, Gomberg, Stagliano, Walt).

16: Munch: Mozart Symphony No. 29, in A major, K. 201; Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466* (Lipkin); Cantata "Davidde Penitente," K. 469* (Hugh Ross, conductor, Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

21: Munch: Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture; Brahms Symphony No. 1; Poulenc "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra* (Addison, Festival Chorus).

22: Munch: Schumann "Genoveva" Overture; Schuman Symphony No. 7;* Beethoven Violin Concerto (Stern).

23: Monteux: Respighi Antique Dances and Airs;* Viotti Violin Concerto No. 22 in A minor (Stern); DeFalla Dances from the Three Cornered Hat; Bartok Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin* (Stern); Strauss "Rosenkavalier" Suite.

28: Copland Preamble for a Solemn Occasion,* "Appalachian Spring" (conducted by the composer); Munch: Ravel "Daphnis et Chloe," complete (Festival Chorus).

29: Ormandy: Strauss "Don Juan"; Harris Symphony No. 3; Roussel "Bacchus et Ariane"; Brahms Symphony No. 2.

30: Munch: Beethoven Symphony No. 4; Liszt Piano Concerto No. 2 in A major* (Janis); Piston Three New England Sketches;* Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1 in E-flat major (Janis).

Month of August

3: Boston Pops at Tanglewood; Arthur Fiedler, conductor.

4: Monteux: Beethoven "Fidelio" Overture; Schumann Piano Concerto (Istomin); Strauss Dance from "Salome";* Sibelius Symphony No. 2.

5: Muneh: Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 2 (Henriot-Schweitzer); Franck Symphony in D minor.

6: Munch: Beethoven Symphony No. 7; Bartok Viola Concerto* (de Pasquale); Respighi "Pines of Rome."

11: Burgin: Haydn Symphony No. 88; Mahler Symphony No. 2 (Festival Chorus and soloists).

12: Bernstein: Shapero Adagietto, from Symphony for Classical Orchestra;* Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms (Festival Chorus); Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 5.

13: Munch: Hanson Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44; Honegger Symphony No. 1;* Beethoven Symphony No. 3.

17: Gala Evening—Berkshire Music Center Benefit Program.

18: Munch: Mendelssohn Octet for Strings; Debussy La Mer; Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4 (Arrau).

19: Monteux: Stravinsky "Petrouchka" Suite; Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2 (Graffman); Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6.

20: Munch: Berlioz "Romeo et Juliette" (Festival Chorus and soloists).

* * *

Composers represented and number of compositions by each to be performed: Bach 12; Mozart 10; Beethoven 7; Brahms 3; R. Strauss 3; Bartok 2; Copeland 2; Liszt 2; Respighi 2; Schumann 2; Stravinsky 2; Tchaikovsky 2; one composition by each of the following: Berlioz, Debussy, De Falla, Franck, Haydn, Hanson, Harris, Honegger, Mahler, Mendelssohn, Piston, Poulenc, Prokofiev, Rachmaninoff, Ravel, Roussel, Schuman, Shapero, Sibelius, Viotti.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
FEB 26 1961

Longest

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Tanglewood will have its longest season thus far this summer, since both the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center have added a seventh week to their sessions at Lenox, Mass. The Boston Symphony will offer its customary Bach and Mozart programs on Friday and Saturday and Sunday afternoons, July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16, and the full orchestra will give fifteen concerts, instead of the previous twelve, on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays from July 21 through Aug. 20. The center will begin its 1961 operations on Sunday, July 2.

Charles Munch will again conduct most of the festival concerts. The guest leaders and the programs are expected to be chosen within the next two or three weeks. The festival schedule also includes the usual weekly chamber music series.

This summer's guests in the center's composition department will be Wolfgang Fortner, a German, and Roberto Gerhard, a Spaniard. Their visit has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's international affairs program. Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty, and Lukas Foss will again teach in this department. Eleazar de Carvalho will return as head of the department of instrumental music, with Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein as advisers.

The Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support of the center's contemporary music program, which will include a concert by Boston Symphony musicians and guest artists and a series of seven seminars. Twenty-three members of this orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral and chamber music classes; Hugh Ross will head the choral department and G. Wallace Woodworth will direct the department of listening and analysis. Catalogues and application forms may be obtained from the center's registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. New York auditions for instrumentalists wishing to join the orchestral and chamber music sessions are scheduled for March 10.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,912 S. 1,014,829
MAY 7 1961

Berkshire Festival Set for 7 weeks

The Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., has been lengthened a week and will be held July 5 to Aug. 20. There will be 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony, six Bach-Mozart chamber concerts and seven other chamber programs.

Charles Munch will conduct most of the concerts and the Bach-Mozart programs. Guest leaders will include Pierre Monteux, Leonard Bernstein (Aug. 12), Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires (July 29), and Aaron Copland. Soloists will include Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, Seymour Lipkin, Isaac Stern and Adele Addison.

Orchestral programs will be given in the 6000-seat Music Shed at 8:30 Fridays and Saturdays, and at 2:30 Sundays. Chamber recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall at 8:30 Wednesdays.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUN 30 1961

Munch Is Due By Air From Paris Monday

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will arrive in the United States Monday by air from Paris and will go at once to his summer home in Richmond to prepare for the Berkshire Music Festival which opens at Tanglewood, Lenox, next weekend.

Since the close of the orchestra's winter season in late April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe except for one concert with the London Philharmonic Orchestra in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1 which he designated as a memorial concert to Serge Koussevitzky and which was attended by the widow of the orchestra's former music director.

Munch will first rehearse his Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Wednesday morning in preparation for the first three of the 21 orchestral concerts to be given at Tanglewood during the seven-week Berkshire Festival. The opening orchestral concerts, scheduled for Friday-Saturday-Sunday, July 7, 8 and 9, in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, will consist of music by J. S. Bach. These orchestral concerts will be preceded by tthe first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs on July 5 when the Curtis String Quartet is heard in Tanglewood's 1,200-seat theater.

Munch has invited nine soloists to assist him in the three all-Bach concerts. Four of the soloists—flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Roger Voisin, trumpet, Ralph Gombert, Oboe, and violinist Richard Burgin—are first-desk players from his orchestra and four—soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, baritone Mac Morgan and pianist Lukas Foss—are former students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center.

Morning Eagle-Tribune
LAWRENCE, Mass.
Comb. Circ. 40,409
JUN 20 1961

Music! Music! Music! In N.E. This Summer

BOSTON (UPI) — Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt Sesquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on week ends July 7 through Aug. 20. Guest conductor for the series in the 6,000-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Arrau's Aug. 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

Elsewhere in the Berkshires, Ted Shawn will present another season of ballet at Jacob's Pillow and the Music Barn in Lenox will offer jazz and popular musicians. The county town of Great Barrington and the nearby city of Pittsfield also will be celebrating their bicentennials in July and August.

The Castle Hill concerts in Ipswich has announced a variety of artists including Dave Brubeck and the Modern Jazz Quartet; Duke Ellington; duo-pianists Ferrante and Teicher; Odetta; The Weavers; The Kingston Trio; guitarist Carlos Montoya, and concert pianist Leon Fleischer, all in week end concerts.

Music also will be important in Northern New England. Pianist Rudolf Serkin again will hold his Marlboro (Vt.) school June 30 to Aug. 21, combining music and the arts. The University of Vermont offers the 1961 Lane Artists Series. Goodard College in Plainfield, Vt., scheduled a series of concerts July 2-Aug. 22. The town of Manchester and St. Michael's College in Winooski Park also are the sites of summer-long musical and dramatic programs in the Green Mountain state.

A summer music camp again will operate at Belgrade, Me., the Air Force band will play over July 4th when Calais Me. and St. Stephen, N.B., jointly celebrate "Frontier Days," commemorating years of harmony between two nations.

The New Hampshire Music Festival, Inc will hold its ninth season of symphony concerts, ten programs to be given at Gilford, Meredith and Wolfboro from July 20 to August 24. Thomas Nee, director of the Minneapolis Civic Orchestra, will conduct the programs which climax with performances of Faure's Requiem and the Beethoven Fantasy for chorus, piano and orchestra.

Jazz and folk music again will be featured in Rhode Island with details still to be worked out.

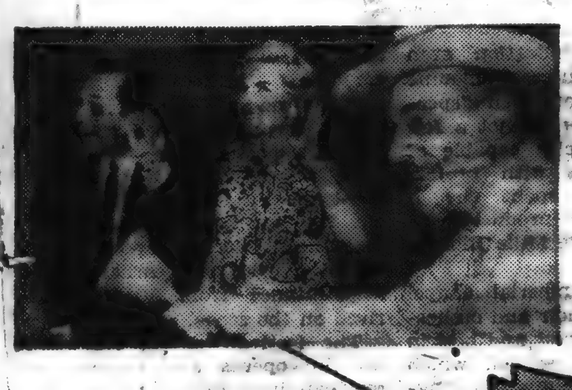
The summer music tents will be busier than ever this season, principally in Eastern Massachusetts. The Carousel in Framingham will present "an evening with Danny Kaye" as one attraction. Victor Borge, Jose Greco and his dancers will appear at the North Shore Music Theater which also will present "The Great Waltz," "Destry," "West Side Story" and other musicals. "West Side Story," "Flower Drum Song" and "Take Me Along" are among the South Shore Music Circus attractions.

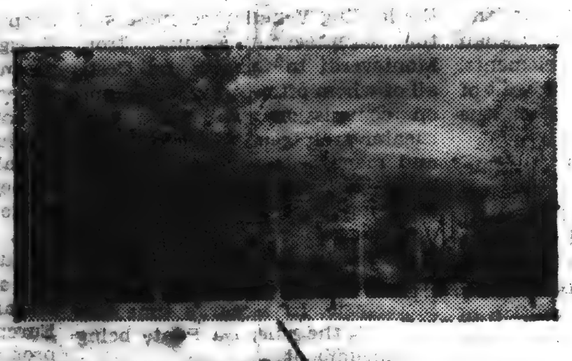
In Boston, Arthur Fiedler will conduct a series of free outdoor concerts on the Charles river esplanade. The Arts Center Theater will present the American premiere of Benjamin Britten's Opera, "The Turn of the Screw" starring Patricia Neway.

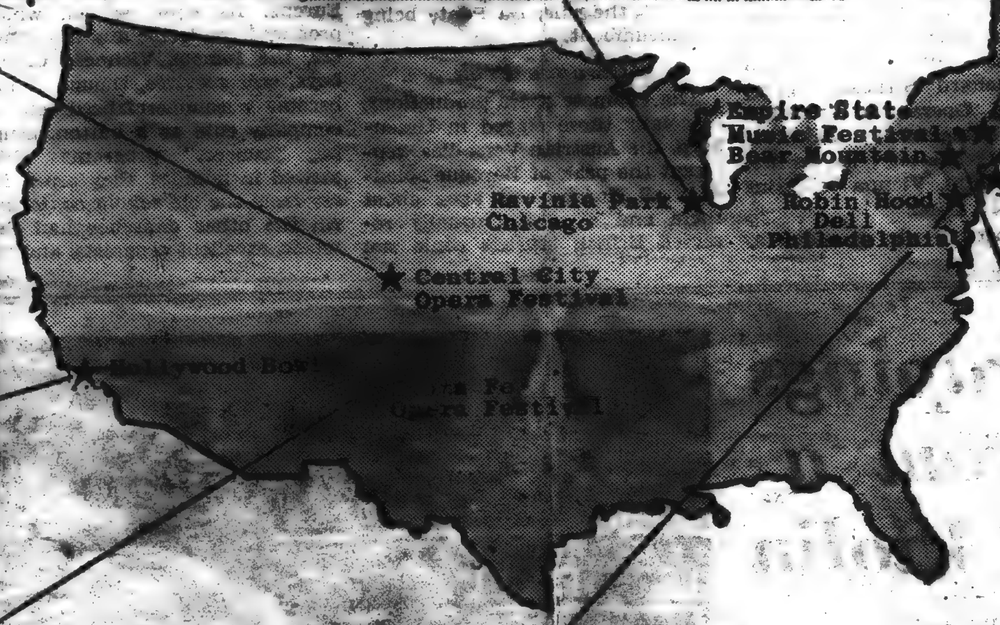
28

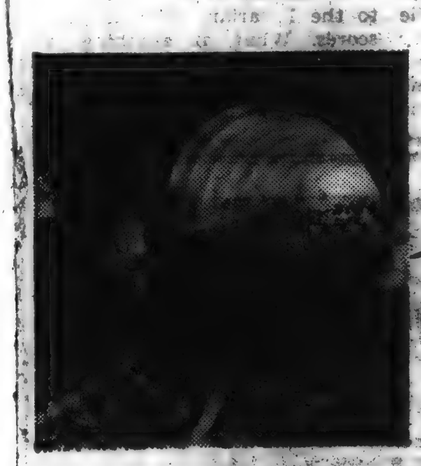
NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
JUN 25 1961

Coast-to-Coast Schedule of Music Festivals









SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
UNION-STAR
D. 35,771
APR 1 1961

Variety of Concerts Slated at Tanglewood

BOSTON, April 1—Fifteen concerts will be given by the Boston Symphony Orchestra during the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., July 5-Aug. 20.

The schedule also includes six concerts by a chamber orchestra of members of the Boston Symphony devoted to music of Bach and Mozart and seven chamber music concerts. The festival has been extended from six to seven weeks.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for this year's festival. These include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart cantata, Bartok's "Viola Concerto" and "Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra," Poulenc's "Gloria" and compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Shapero and Viotti.

The majority of the concerts with full orchestra and the Bach-Mozart series will be conducted by Charles Munch. Others who will conduct during the festival are Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and Aaron Copland.

Two benefit concerts will take place. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops Aug. 3. The second benefit will be held Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles which will present the chamber music series.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUN 18 1961

Tanglewood Box Office Opens Tuesday in Lenox

The Berkshire Festival box office moves this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills, in preparation for the seven week Festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty-one Boston Symphony concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16.

The first three concerts will consist of music by Bach, for the second three, music by Mozart. Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his Orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir con-Munch has invited several conductors and soloists to join him in the fifteen concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends.

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood. Participants in this series include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The Festival ticket office, beginning Tuesday will be open as follows: Mon. - Sat.: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sun. July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; (Closed Sun., June 25). The ticket office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 - August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
JUL [illegible]

Munch Prepares For Berkshire Music Festival

LENOX, Mass. — Charles Munch arrived in the United States Monday via air from Paris and went to Richmond, Mass., where his personal staff has opened his summer residence. Since the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's winter season in late April, Munch has been vacationing in Europe except for one concert with the London Philharmonic Orchestra in London's Royal Festival Hall.

Munch will first rehearse his Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Wednesday morning in preparation for the first three of the 21 orchestral concerts to be given at Tanglewood during the seven - week Berkshire Festival. The opening orchestral concerts scheduled for Friday - Saturday-Sunday (July 7-8-9) in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, will consist of music by J. Bach. These orchestral concerts will be preceded by the first seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs on July 5 when the Curtis String Quartet is heard in Tanglewood's 1,200-seat Theatre.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 1 1961

Chamber Program, Bach Concerts Open 1961 Festival Next Week

TANGLEWOOD — Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday.

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening 8:30 concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

Soloists Saturday

At the Saturday concert at 8:30 soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin, trumpet; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Richard Burgin, violin, and Lukas Foss, piano, will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 when Dr. Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier, the D minor, with Mr. Foss as soloist.

The Curtiss String Quartet made up of Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola, and Orlando Cole, cello, will be joined by violist de Pasquale and cellist Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1,200-seat Theater Wednesday evening. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163, by Franz Schubert.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center — those who make voluntary contributions to the school are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week: the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday, 8:30 p.m., Music Shed; a seminar in contemporary music, Friday, July 7, 3:15, Chamber Music Hall, and Berkshire Music Center chamber music, Sunday, July 9, 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

Press (e)
BRISTOL, Conn.
Circ. 14,008
APR 1 1961

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 186,189
JUL 2 1961

Berkshire Music Festival to Open

THE BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the 210-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., will begin Wednesday and last through Aug. 20.

Nineteen concerts by the full orchestra will be given in addition to six chamber orchestra concerts, seven chamber music recitals and two concert evenings.

Charles Munch will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and guest conductors include Leonard Bernstein, Eugene Ormandy, Pierre Monteux and Richard Burgin.

Arthur Fiedler and his Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 and pianist Claudio Arrau will be on hand for an Aug. 16 recital which will conclude the chamber music series.

Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts are scheduled for July 7, 8, 9, 14, 15, 16, 21, 22, 23, 28, 29 and 30 and Aug. 4, 5, 6, 11, 12, 13 and 20. All dates are subject to change.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026
APR 1 1961

1961 Tanglewood Festival Scheduled July 5-Aug. 20

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held July 5-Aug. 20.

The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

To Honor Koussevitzky

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

16 New Compositions

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1,200-seat theater-concert hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

Music Center

The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music, will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-Aug. 20) of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events — concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 427,983
JUN 18 1961

Program Revisions, Added Soloists At Tanglewood

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood.

He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat. Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20 when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given —contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11th concert as one of the three in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York July 10, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the Aug. 5 concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music July 10.

Boston Symphony Seven Week Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 to August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include fifteen concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's Music Director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full Orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the Orchestra's former Music Director and first Director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteaux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozardt Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August 3rd in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on August 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Music are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

The Berkshire Music Center — the Orchestra's summer school of music — will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2 - August 20) of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than fifty school events — concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

36 Tribune 4/2/61

21 Concerts Will Be Given At 1961 Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra will give twenty-one concerts between July 5 and Aug. 20 in the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., which has been extended from six to seven weeks.

A chamber orchestra of its members will play in programs devoted to Bach and Mozart on the first two Friday and Saturday nights and Sunday afternoons of the series, and the full orchestra will be heard on the remaining five Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays. There will also be a chamber music series on Wednesday nights and two special events, a concert by the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler on Thursday, Aug. 3, and a gala benefit for the Berkshire Music Center on Thursday, Aug. 17.

Munch to Conduct

Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony's music director, will conduct most of the concerts. Leonard Bernstein, music director of the New York Philharmonic, will conduct Aug. 12, and Eugene Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra, will make his Tanglewood debut July 29. Three concerts, on July 23, Aug. 4 and 19, will be conducted by Pierre Monteux, who celebrates his eighty-sixth birthday April 4. Richard Burgin, the Boston Symphony's concertmaster and associate conductor, will direct the concert of Aug. 11, and Aaron Copland will conduct two of his works on July 28.

The list of festival soloists includes Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot - Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin, pianists; Isaac Stern, violinist; Adele Addison, soprano, and six members of the Boston Symphony.

Among the sixteen works to be heard for the first time at Tanglewood are three concertos and a cantata by Mozart, Bela Bartok's Viola Concerto and Rhapsody No. 1 for violin and orchestra; Francis Poulene's "Gloria" and works by Aaron Copland, Arthur Honegger, Franz Liszt, Walter Piston, Ottorino Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero and Giovanni Battista Viotti.

30

Citizen (e)
WINSTED, Conn.
Circ. 3,592

MAR 30 1961

MUSIC FESTIVAL AT TANGLEWOOD STARTS JULY 5

Berkshire Festival Extended From Six to Seven Weeks — Includes 15 Concerts

The Boston Symphony orchestra's 1961 Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 to Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony orchestra to be soloists at the festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for violin and orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music center. A second center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17.

The Budapest quartet, the Curtis quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday at 2:30 p. m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1,200-seat theater-concert hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p. m.

The Berkshire Music center, the orchestra's summer school of music, will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-Aug. 20) of the festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the friends of the Berkshire Music center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood, will be accepted starting Saturday at the Festival ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

APR 2 1961

Berkshire Programs

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held July 5-August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members in music by Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. Leonard Bernstein is to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts and Richard Burgin one. Eugene Ormandy will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

★ ★ ★

Among the soloists are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern and soprano Adele Addison each will be soloists twice.

Six members of the orchestra to be soloists are Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17.

★ ★ ★

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Mr. de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

165 [illegible]

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
FLATBUSH LIFE
W. 12,500

JUN 24 1961

Academy Tanglewood outing set July 23

The Brooklyn Academy of Music will run its fifth annual "Sunday at Tanglewood" excursion on July 23. The all-inclusive ticket includes round trip transportation, a box lunch on the Tanglewood grounds and a reserved seat inside the Music Shed for the concert of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Pierre Monteux, the octogenarian conductor who has had a busy European spring season, and who opened the Lewisohn Stadium season last Tuesday night, will conduct. The soloist will be Isaac Stern, world-renowned American violin virtuoso.

Mrs. Monroe D. Stein of The Women's Committee for The Boston Symphony Orchestra Concerts in Brooklyn is the Chairman of the "Sunday at Tanglewood" committee this year. Mrs. J. Vincent Keogh is Co-Chairman. Nearly a thousand residents of New York City have participated in the four excursions sponsored by the Academy. It is the largest musical journey originating within the city. The day's cost is $12, unless one is a 1961-62 Academy Member entitled to a reduction of $1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,001

APR 1 1961

1961 Berkshire Festival Dates

Dates for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, have been announced. They are July 5-Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the orchestra, six concerts by the chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy—a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071

OCT 14 1960

Festival Season Extended To Seven Weeks in 1961

The Berkshire Festival season at Tanglewood next year will be seven weeks long instead of six, it was announced today by Henry B. Cabot of Boston, president of the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Mr. Cabot revealed the new plans at the annual meeting of the Friends of the Boston Symphony in Boston yesterday afternoon before releasing the announcement to the public.

The extra week will be added at the end of the normal season, it was explained. The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held Sunday, July 1. The first in the series of the Bach-Mozart concerts will be July 7, 8 and 9. Under the new seven-week plan, the Festival will draw to a close on Sunday, Aug. 20.

This is the biggest change in the Festival schedule since the season was extended in 1954 to include six weeks of Shed concerts.

The popularity of the Bach-Mozart concerts after the 1957 season, caused the BSO to shift some of the performances to the Music Shed. Throughout the 1958, 1959 and 1960 seasons this proved to be a good move, and during those years attendance has increased at all concerts given during the so-called "small concerts."

The over-all attendance at the 1960 Festival, which marked the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 25th anniversary in the Berkshires, was 173,579.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958

APR 1 1961

Bernstein And Ormandy To Join Guest Conductor List At Tanglewood For Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival wil be extended to seven weeks this summer, running from July 5 to Aug. 20. There will be 28 concerts, 15 of them by the full Boston Symphony Orchestra. In addition, the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school, will present some 50 musical programs.

The Festival, held at Tanglewood in Lenox, will be conducted for the most part under the baton of Charles Munch, musical director of the orchestra. A number of outstanding conductors will appear as guests, however, among them Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and concertmaster Richard Burgin.

As is customary, the season will open with six Bach-Mozart concerts. It will include, in midweek, seven chamber music concerts, with the Budapest Quartet, the New York Pro Musica, and the Curtis Quartet among the groups scheduled.

Charles Munch will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts by a chamber orchestra, and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy—a summer resident of the Berkshires—will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianist Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicola Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Pisto, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 12.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p. m.

The Berkshire Music Center—the orchestra's summer school of music—will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
MILFORD, Mass.
Circ. 7,995

JUL 3 1961

TO OPEN SEASON

LENOX, Mass. (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this Friday with Charles Munch conducting.

The orchestra will present concerts of Bach music Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Munch was expected to arrive today from Europe where he has been vacationing since the end of the symphony season in April.

31

Boston Symphony Sets Tanglewood Schedule

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Berkshire Festival on its 210-acre estate, Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., will open July 5 with the Curtis Quartet, Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes in the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts.

Participants in these concerts will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial recital.

The first of the 21 Boston Symphony concerts will come July 7.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts the first two weekends, and most of the later ones with the full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and Aaron Copland to conduct also.

Danny Kaye will take over the orchestra July 13 in a pension fund benefit concert. After his first guest conducting engagement in Boston's Symphony Hall Apr. 3, 1957, the 104 laugh-weary members of the orchestra made Danny Kaye an honorary member, the only person ever so honored by the 81-year-old orchestra.

* * *

THE FESTIVAL ticket office, moved from Boston to Tanglewood this weekend, is open as follows: Monday-Saturday: 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.; Sunday, July 2: 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.; (closed Sunday, June 25). The ticket office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5-Aug. 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail and telephone (Lenox 600) orders also will be accepted.

The schedule for the Boston Symphony Tanglewood concerts follows with soloists in parenthesis and asterisks to indicate first performances at Tanglewood:

* * *

7-7—MUNCH: Bach, Suites 3, 2 (Dwyer), 1, 4.

7-8—Munch: Bach, Brandenburg Concerti 3, 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin); Cantata 202 (Addison); Brandenburg Concerti 6, 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss).

7-9—Munch: Bach, Sinfonia from Easter Cantata; Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss); Magnificat (Tanglewood Choir and Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler, Mac Morgan).

* * *

7-14 — MUNCH: Mozart, Symphony 36, K425, "Linz;" Serenade for Wind Instruments in C minor, K388; Adagio and Fuge for String Instruments in C minor K546; Symphony 40 in G minor K550.

7-15 — Munch: Mozart, *Bassoon Concerto in B flat K191 (Walt); *Flute Concerto in G major K313 (Dwyer); Sinfonia Concertante in E flat K297b (Cioffi, Gomberg, Staglino Walt).

7-16 — Munch: Mozart, Symphony 29 in A major K201; *Piano Concerto 20 in D minor K466 (Lipkin); *Cantata "Dividde Penitente" K469 (Hugh Ross, conductor, Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

* * *

7-21—MUNCH: Beethoven, "Coriolani" Overture; Brahms, Symphony 1; *Poulenc, "Gloria" for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra (Addison, Festival Chorus).

7-22 — Munch: Schumann "Genoveva" Overture; Schuman, *Symphony 7; Beethoven, Violin Concerto (Stern).

7-23 — Monteux: *Respighi, Antique Dances and Airs; *Viotti, Violin Concerto 22 in A minor (Stern); De Falla, Dances from the Three Cornered Hat; *Bartok, Rhapsody 1 for Violin (Stern); Strauss, "Rosenkavalier" Suite.

* * *

7-28 — COPLAND: *Preamble for a Solemn Occasion, "Appalachian Spring (conducted by composer); Munch: "Daphnis et Chloe" (Festival Chorus).

7-29 — Ormandy: Strauss "Don Juan;" Harris, Symphony 3; Roussel, "Bacchus et Ariane;" Brahms, Symphony 2.

7-30 — Munch: Beethoven, Symphony 4; *Liszt, Piano Concerto 2 in A major (Janis); Piston, *Three New England Sketches; Liszt, Piano Concerto 1 in E flat major (Janis).

* * *

8-3 — BOSTON POPS at Tanglewood, Arthur Fiedler conducting.

8-4—Monteux: Beethoven, "Fidelio" Overture; Schumann, Piano Concerto (Istomin).

8-5 — Munch: Brahms, Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Prokoviev, Piano Concerto 2 (Henriot-Schweitzer); Franck, Symphony in D minor.

8-6 — Munch: Beethoven, Symphony 7; Bartok, *Viola Concerto (De Pasquale); Respighi, "Pines of Rome."

* * *

8-11 — BURGIN: Haydn, Symphony 88; Mahler, Symphony 2 (Festival Chorus and soloists, Nancy Carr and Eunice Alberts).

8-12—Bernstein: Shapero, *Adagietto, from Symphony for Classical Orchestra; Stravinsky, Symphony of Palms (Festival Chorus); Tchaikovsky, Symphony 5.

8-13 — Munch: Hanson, Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44; Honegger, *Symphony 1; Beethoven, Symphony 3.

* * *

8-17 — GALA EVENING: Berkshire Music Center Benefit.

8-18 — Munch: Mendelssohn, Octet for Strings; Debussy, La Mer; Beethoven, Piano Concerto 4 (Arrau).

8-19 — Monteux: Stravinsky, "Petrouchka" Suite; Rachmaninoff, Piano Concerto 2 (Graffman); Tchaikovsky, Symphony 6.

8-20 — Munch: Berlioz, "Romeo et Juliette" (Festival Chorus and soloists Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Donald Gramm).

Bernstein Steamed Up

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W: 10,215
JUN 24 1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood. He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat.

Doctor Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on August 20 when a performance of Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will be given — contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the August 11th concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York on July 19th, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the August 5th concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music on July 10.

The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment move this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, in preparation for the Orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty-one Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

The Festival Ticket Office, beginning June 20, will be open as follows: Mon. - Sat.: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sun. July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., (Closed Sun., June 25). The Ticket Office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 thru August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
JUL 2 1961

BERKSHIRE COUNTY MARKS 200TH YEAR

Special to The New York Times.

FITTSFIELD, Mass., July 1 —Berkshire County opens a two-month observance of its 200th anniversary this weekend. A display of early Americana is being held at the Berkshire Museum here.

The Labor Day week-end will be marked by religious services, dancing, parades and a bicentennial play.

The county, which borders on Vermont, New York and Connecticut, is the westernmost in Massachusetts. Pittsfield, the largest city, and Great Barrington, the largest town, are also 200 years old this year.

The county has inspired such writers as Herman Melville, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Sinclair Lewis. Lenox, the summer headquarters of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been a music center since 1918.

Near-by Dalton, long a papermaking center, is the site of the Crane Government Mill, which turns out the stock used for United States currency and securities. Pittsfield, once an early textile center, more recently has turned to electronics and is the home of a major plant of the General Electric Company.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D: 317,264 S: 257,590
APR 27 1961

Berkshire Festival Will Open July 5

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The seven-week festival will include 15 concerts by the 104-man Boston Symphony, six concerts by a chamber orchestra and seven chamber music concerts.

Conductors will be Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin. Leonard Bernstein has been invited to conduct, too. Among the soloists will be pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin, violinist Isaac Stern and soprano Adele Addison.

The Budapest String Quartet, the Curtis Quartet and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven chamber ensembles.

The orchestral programs will be presented in the 600-seat Music Shed Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30 and Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber recitals will be held in the 120-seat Theater-Concert Hall Wednesdays at 8:30 p. m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Enosburg Standard
ENOSBURG FALLS, Vermont
Weekly Independent
Circ. 1,050

APR 20 1961

Tanglewood Dates Set

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 to August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 11 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a mapority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

rs

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 98,806
JUL 1 1961

Tanglewood Set

The 1961 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open Friday night. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bach's Suites 1-4.

Next Saturday, also at 8:30 P. M., Munch will conduct Bach's Brandenburg Concertos 2, 3, 5, and 6. The Bach week-end concludes Sunday at 2:30 P. M. with Bach's "Sinfonia" from "Easter Cantata", Piano Concerto in D Minor, and the "Magnificat".

July 13 will be a benefit concert for the Boston Symphony's pension fund. Comedian Danny Kaye will conduct and clown with the orchestra. Kaye has experience at this sort of thing. Four years ago he headed the orchestra in a similar laugh program, and the orchestra made him an honorary members.

CIVIL ENGINEERING
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 47,850
APR 1961

Deserved praise for a great engineer

TO THE EDITOR: I very much appreciate the fine tribute to my deceased husband, Joseph Franz, in the article, "Engineers Do Appreciate Culture" (Jan. issue p. 82). Mr. M. D. Morris, the author, must have spent much time and trouble in securing the information on my husband's work in designing and building the Tanglewood Music Shed at Stockbridge, Mass. This was a great challenge, involving much that could mean failure or success.

When Serge Koussevitzky walked around the colonnade to listen to the music that was coming from his musicians on the stage, all he could say was "It's marvelous, it's marvelous!" Thus the accomplishment of Joseph Franz was pronounced a success.

My husband, a registered professional engineer, was very versatile. Although he did some civil engineering, his work was mostly in the electrical field. There his accomplishments were many, including the first outdoor hydroelectric plant, which received world-wide recognition. He also built the Laurel Hill Bridge and the Jacobs Pillow Dance Theater.

EMILIA R. FRANZ

Stockbridge, Mass.

THE HARTFORD TIMES 39
Saturday, June 24, 1961

Boston Symphony Sets Tanglewood Schedule

THE Boston Symphony Orchestra's seven-week Berkshire Festival on its 210-acre estate, Tanglewood, at Lenox, Mass., will open July 5 with the Curtis Quartet, Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes in the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts.

Participants in these concerts will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial recital.

The first of the 21 Boston Symphony concerts will come July 7.

• • •

CHARLES MUNCH, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts the first two weekends, and most of the later ones with the full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and Aaron Copland to conduct also.

Danny Kaye will take over the orchestra July 13 in a pension fund benefit concert. After his first guest conducting engagement in Boston's Symphony Hall Apr. 3, 1957, the 104 laugh-weary members of the orchestra made Danny Kaye an honorary member, the only person ever so honored by the 81-year-old orchestra.

• • •

THE FESTIVAL ticket office, moved from Boston to Tanglewood this weekend, is open as follows: Monday-Saturday: 9 a. m. to 5 p. m.; Sunday, July 2: 10 a. m. to 4 p. m.; (closed Sunday, June 25). The ticket office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5-Aug. 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail and telephone (Lenox 600) orders also will be accepted.

The schedule for the Boston Symphony Tanglewood concerts follows with soloists in parenthesis and asterisks to indicate first performances at Tanglewood:

• • •

7-7—MUNCH: Bach, Suites 3, 2 (Dwyer), 1, 4.

7-8—Munch: Bach, Brandenburg Concerti 3, 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Volsin); Cantata 202 (Addison); Brandenburg Concerti 6, 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss).

7-9—Munch: Bach, Sinfonia from Easter Cantata; Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss); Magnificat (Tanglewood Choir and Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler, Mac Morgan).

• • •

7-14 — MUNCH: Mozart, Symphony 36, K425, "Linz;" Serenade for Wind Instruments in C minor, K388; Adagio and Fuge for String Instruments in C minor K546; Symphony 40 in G minor K550.

7-15 — Munch: Mozart, *Bassoon Concerto in B flat K191 (Walt); *Flute Concerto in G major K313 (Dwyer); Sinfonia Concertante in E flat K297b (Cioffi, Gomberg, Staglino Walt).

7-16 — Munch: Mozart, Symphony 29 in A major K201; *Piano Concerto 20 in D minor K466 (Lipkin); *Cantata "Dividde Penitente" K469 (Hugh Ross, conductor, Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

• • •

7-21—MUNCH: Beethoven, "Coriolani" Overture; Brahms, Symphony 1; *Poulenc, "Gloria" for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra (Addison, Festival Chorus).

7-22 — Munch: Schumann, "Genoveva" Overture; Beethoven, *Symphony 7; Beethoven, Violin Concerto (Stern).

7-23 — Monteux: *Respighi, Antique Dances and Airs; *Viotti, Violin Concerto 22 in A minor (Stern); De Falla, Dances from the Three Cornered Hat; *Bartok, Rhapsody 1 for Violin (Stern); Strauss, "Rosenkavalier" Suite.

• • •

7-28 — COPLAND: *Preamble for a Solemn Occasion, "Appalachian Spring (conducted by composer); Munch: "Daphnis et Chloe" (Festival Chorus).

7-29 — Ormandy: Strauss "Don Juan;" Harris, Symphony 3; Roussel, "Bacchus et Ariane;" Brahms, Symphony 2.

7-30 — Munch: Beethoven, Symphony 4; *Liszt, Piano Concerto 2 in A major (Janis); Piston, *Three New England Sketches; Liszt, Piano Concerto 1 in E flat major (Janis).

• • •

8-3 — BOSTON POPS at Tanglewood, Arthur Fiedler conducting.

8-4—Monteux: Beethoven "Fidelio" Overture; Schumann, Piano Concerto (Istomin).

8-5 — Munch: Brahms, Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Prokoviev, Piano Concerto 2 (Henriot-Schweitzer); Franck, Symphony in D minor.

8-6 — Munch: Beethoven, Symphony 7; Bartok, *Viola Concerto (De Pasquale); Respighi, "Pines of Rome."

• • •

8-11 — BURGIN: Haydn, Symphony 88; Mahler, Symphony 2 (Festival Cherus and soloists, Nancy Carr and Eunice Alberts).

8-12—Bernstein: Shapero, *Adagietto, from Symphony for Classical Orchestra; Stravinsky, Symphony of Palms (Festival Chorus); Tchaikovsky, Symphony 5.

8-13 — Munch: Hanson, Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44; Honegger, *Symphony 1; Beethoven, Symphony 3.

• • •

8-17 — GALA EVENING: Berkshire Music Center Benefit.

8-18 — Munch: Mendelssohn, Octet for Strings; Debussy, La Mer; Beethoven, Piano Concerto 4 (Arrau).

8-19 — Monteux: Stravinsky, "Petrouchka" Suite; Rachmaninoff, Piano Concerto 2 (Graffman); Tchaikovsky, Symphony 6.

8-20 — Munch: Berlioz, "Romeo et Juliette" (Festival Chorus and soloists Florence Kopleff, John McCollum, Donald Gramm).

Bernstein Steamed Up

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W: 10,215
JUN 24 1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood. He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat.

Doctor Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on August 20 when a performance of Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will be given — contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the August 11th concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York on July 19th has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Claussen's Trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the August 5th concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music on July 10.

The Berkshire Festival box office personnel and equipment move this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, in preparation for the Orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty-one Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

The Festival Ticket Office, beginning June 20, will be open as follows: Mon. - Sat.: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sun. July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m., (Closed Sun., June 25). The Ticket Office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 thru August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
JUL 2 1961

BERKSHIRE COUNTY MARKS 200TH YEAR

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSFIELD, Mass., July 1 —Berkshire County opens a two-month observance of its 200th anniversary this weekend. A display of early Americana is being held at the Berkshire Museum here.

The Labor Day week-end will be marked by religious services, dancing, parades and a bicentennial play.

The county, which borders on Vermont, New York and Connecticut, is the westernmost in Massachusetts. Pittsfield, the largest city, and Great Barrington, the largest town, are also 200 years old this year.

The county has inspired such writers as Herman Melville, Nathaniel Hawthorne, Henry Wadsworth Longfellow, Oliver Wendell Holmes and Sinclair Lewis. Lenox, the summer headquarters of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, has been a music center since 1918.

Near-by Dalton, long a papermaking center, is the site of the Crane Government Mill, which turns out the stock used for United States currency and securities. Pittsfield, once an early textile center, more recently has turned to electronics and is the home of a major plant of the General Electric Company.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D: 317,264 S: 257,590
APR 27 1961

Berkshire Festival Will Open July 5

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The seven-week festival will include 15 concerts by the 104-man Boston Symphony, six concerts by a chamber orchestra and seven chamber music concerts.

Conductors will be Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Richard Burgin. Leonard Bernstein has been invited to conduct, too. Among the soloists will be pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin, violinist Isaac Stern and soprano Adele Addison.

The Budapest String Quartet, the Curtis Quartet and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven chamber ensembles.

The orchestral programs will be presented in the 660-seat Music Shed Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30 and Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber recitals will be held in the 120-seat Theater-Concert Hall Wednesdays at 8:30 p. m.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Enosburg Standard
ENOSBURG FALLS, Vermont
Weekly Independent
Circ. 1,050
APR 20 1961

Tanglewood Dates Set

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 to August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 11 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a mapority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemoeate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

HACKENSACK, N.J.
RECORD
D. 98,806
JUL 1 1961

Tanglewood Set

The 1961 Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will open Friday night. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bach's Suites 1.

Next Saturday, also at 8:30 P. M., Munch will conduct Bach's Brandenburg Concertos 2, 3, 5, and 6. The Bach week-end concludes Sunday at 2:30 P. M. with Bach's "Sinfonia" from "Easter Cantata", Piano Concerto in D Minor, and the "Magnificat".

July 13 will be a benefit concert for the Boston Symphony's pension fund. Comedian Danny Kaye will conduct and clown with the orchestra. Kaye has experience at this sort of thing. Four years ago he headed the orchestra in a similar laugh program, and the orchestra made him an honorary members.

Deserved praise for a great engineer

TO THE EDITOR: I very much appreciate the fine tribute to my deceased husband, Joseph Franz, in the article, "Engineers Do Appreciate Culture" (Jan. issue p. 82). Mr. M. D. Morris, the author, must have spent much time and trouble in securing the information on my husband's work in designing and building the Tanglewood Music Shed at Stockbridge, Mass. This was a great challenge, involving much that could mean failure or success.

When Serge Koussevitzky walked around the colonnade to listen to the music that was coming from his musicians on the stage, all he could say was "It's marvelous, it's marvelous!" Thus the accomplishment of Joseph Franz was pronounced a success.

My husband, a registered professional engineer, was very versatile. Although he did some civil engineering, his work was mostly in the electrical field. There his accomplishments were many, including the first outdoor hydroelectric plant, which received world-wide recognition. He also built the Laurel Hill Bridge and the Jacobs Pillow Dance Theater.

EMILIA R. FRANZ
Stockbridge, Mass.

CIVIL ENGINEERING
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 47,850
APR 1961

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,283,658
JUL 2 1961

32

STAGE IS SET AT TANGLEWOOD—The new season of the Berkshire Festival begins Friday with a series of Bach concerts for its inaugural week-end. Above, the Boston Symphony is seen on stage of Music Shed in Lenox, Mass.

THE LARGEST SHARE—Charles Munch, who will lead major portion of concerts at the festival.

Whitestone

GUEST CONDUCTOR—Pierre Monteux will take over podium for concerts on July 23 and Aug. 4.

BUFFALO, N.Y.
COURIER EXPRESS
D, 159,741 S, 301,966
JUL 2 1961

In the Realm of Music

Parks Department's Concert Series W

By KENNETH GILL

PARK CONCERTS—George M. Martin, commissioner of parks, announces that Buffalo's Department of Parks will again sponsor a summer Pop Concert series in the municipal parks beginning with a concert at Delaware Park at 9 tonight at the Soccer Field. A second concert will be given at 8:30 p.m. Tuesday at Riverside Park.

As it did last year, the orchestra will play from the stage of the City's own modern Bandwagon.

This year the department has engaged the services of the Buffalo Community Orchestra for the July half of the series, and the Buffalo Municipal Orchestra for the August portion.

CONDUCTOR — The Buffalo Community Orchestra will perform under the baton of Peter Gorecki, choirmaster at St. Stanislaus Church and choral director of the Chopin Singing Society, the Polish Singing Circle, the Schwaebischer Maennerchoir and the Kalina Singers.

The latter half of the summer series will be conducted by David Cheskin. Cheskin's Buffalo Municipal Orchestra will be performing for the sixth successive season.

SINGER — Gorecki's first two concerts at the helm of the Buffalo Community Orchestra will feature lyric soprano, Theresa Dybas. Her selections for both events will include arias from Puccini's "La Boheme," and Friml's "Firefly," and a medley of tunes from Kern's "Show Boat." The orchestra plays works of Sousa, Herbert, Rossini, Romberg, Brahms, and Tschaikowsky, along with the conductor's own arrangement of "God Bless America."

Peter Gorecki

Edward Tucholka will serve as announcer for the Buffalo Community Orchestra.

TANGLEWOOD — Tanglewood and the Berkshire Festival concerts open at full pace this week with the first Boston Symphony Orchestra concert on Friday evening and the first Chamber Music concert on Wednesday evening.

Charles Munch conducts the first three concerts for this weekend with the programs comprised of music by Bach.

Guest soloists will be pianists Lucas Foss and Seymour Lipkin and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. The opening Chamber Music Concert will feature the Curtis Quartet joined by Joseph De Pasquale and Samuel Mays of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for Brahms Sextet in B-flat, Op. 18, and the Schubert Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

LINWOOD MUSIC — The opening rehearsal for the Linwood Chamber Orchestra will be held at 8 tonight in the Music Barn. Thereafter rehearsals will be on Tuesday evenings, plus a dress rehearsal on Friday, Aug. 4, with the Linwood Music School Chorus.

Evan Whallon, conductor of the Columbus Symphony, is the new music director at Linwood this summer, and he will be conducting all the orchestra rehearsals.

Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUL 6 1961

BERKSHIRE MUSIC IS TOPIC OF ARTICLE

High Fidelity Magazine's July Issue Features Area Places

The July issue of the High Fidelity magazine, published by the Publishing House on State Road here, features an article titled "Summer Music in the Berkshires" a picture essay with the text written by Jay Rosenfeld, of Pittsfield, and the pictures taken by Clemens Kalischer of Stockbridge.

Featured in the article are scenes from the Tanglewood music festival in Lenox, the South Mountain music hall in Pittsfield, Jacob's Pillow of the Dance in Becket; Music Mountain in Falls Village, Conn., and Music Inn, in Lenox.

Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and Serge Koussevitzky, the latter the late director of the Boston Symphony orchestra are hailed for their work to make the area a music center of more than just local importance.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 19,114
APR 1 1961

Extended Season Announced For '61 Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 - August 20, it was announced today in Boston. The Festival extended from six to seven weeks, will include fifteen concerts by the orchestra, six by a chamber orchestra ensemble of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra and has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, and Richard Burgin, one. Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland will conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among soloists appearing will be pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are slated to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August 3rd in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on August 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre - Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

The Berkshire Music Center—the Orchestra's summer school of music—will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2 - August 20) of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than fifty school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets for the 1961 Festival concerts are now being received at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
D: 321,461 S. 383,206
JUL 2 1961

IN U.S. SUMMER FESTIVALS

American Musicians Gain New Prominence

By DON HENAHAN
Chicago News Music Critic

If you throw out the rodeos and the cotton-picking contests, the list of summer festivals in the United States dwindles.

Granting Ravinia honorary status because of its age, only it, Tanglewood, Santa Fe, and Aspen are of first-class status, with a few lesser events definitely worth investigating, such as Fish Creek and Central City, Colo.

One trend to be reckoned with is the growing reluctance of major European musicians to tour in this country during the summer. Faraway places by the score bid high for even the smaller fry among them, let alone the von Karajans and Sutherlands.

As a result, however, the American artist has been coming into his own in his country.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been especially successful at using American-based talent. This season (July 5-Aug. 20) its soloists include Gary Graffman, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, Seymour Lipkin, Isaac Stern, Adele Addison, Lukas Foss, and half a dozen members of the Boston Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct a series of concerts commemorating the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, and other concerts will be led by Aaron Copland, Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, and Richard Burgin.

The Fromm Music Foundation, a Chicago-based organization, again will continue its support of the Berkshire Music Center's contemporary composer program.

The foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet and other instrumentalists who are Fromm Fellows, in a series of seven seminars on today's music. There also will be a concert performed by members of the Boston Symphony and guest artists.

The Music Center will be in operation this season from today to Aug. 20. Like the festival itself, the center's program has been extended from six to seven weeks.

At the Aspen Music Festival in Aspen, Colo. (June 28-Sept. 3), musicians living in the United States also will be the major attractions.

COPLAND STERN

Composers Leon Kirchner, Carlos Chavez, Darius Milhaud, and Charles Jones will take part. Conductors include Izler Solomon and Walter Susskind.

Artists include Jennie Tourel, Adele Addison, Leopold Simoneau, Hans Hotter, Ruggiero Ricci, Beveridge Webster, the Juilliard Quartet and the New York Pro Musica.

The Santa Fe opera, which opened June 28, and which will last nine weeks, will have Paul Hindemith, Igor Stravinsky, and Douglas Moore on hand when these composers' works are presented at the New Mexico festival.

Scheduled are Stravinsky's "Persephone" and "Oedipus Rex," Hindemith's "The News of the Day," Moore's "The Ballad of Baby Doe," Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier," "La Boheme," "Carmen," and "The Marriage of Figaro." Hindemith and Stravinsky will conduct heir own works.

The Carmel Bach Festival, at Carmel-by-the-Sea, Calif. (July 14-July 23) lists works of Bach, Monteverdi, Handel, Haydn, and Mozart. Even without good music, this is one of the globe's most enticing areas for the traveler.

Fish Creek, up in Wisconsin's Door County, plans its ninth annual festival (Aug. 5-20) under the direction of Thor Johnson. This is another spot that makes its own music, but the concerts look inviting too.

The nine-concert series will feature Richard Cassily, Sidney Harth, John Browning, Patricia Neway and Robert Marcellus. Opera makes its first appearance this summer, with Robert Gay conducting U.S. premiere performances of Gluck's "The Reformed Drunkard" and Herne's "Sophie Arnould."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D, 668 802 S, 812,836
JUN 18 1961

TANGLEWOOD IN DOLDRUMS

By MILES KASTENDIECK

WHAT'S new at Tanglewood this Summer? Frankly, the answer is nothing much. Perhaps this fact matters little to the audiences that now gravitate to the Music Shed each season, but it disturbs discriminating music lovers more and more.

●

WHAT REALLY cau dismay springs from the progression in policy. A f years ago the Berkshire F tival attempted to give program some unity. To sure, this meant Beethov one Summer, but at lea some effort had been ma to shape the course of even When Berlioz was the pivot composer, the Festival ma even more sense. Settling th for the great composer week ends in recent seasons it still clung to an idea.

Now there is no policy.

The Boston Symphony gives a series of concerts for seven weekends, all of them in the Shed. The programs reflect no venturesome spirit, the Festival reveals no vestige of a theme. Since the demand for tickets showed an increase early in the season, people obviously accept this old status quo.

●

SUCH circumstances do not excuse the Berkshire Festival management. They owe it to the art itself to do something for it. A glance at the fifteen programs the Boston Symphony will play makes gathering a baker's half-dozen of truly contemporary works an arduous effort. Actually, Pulenc's "Gloria" is the only one of note (July 21). Bartok's Violin Rhapsody (July 23) and Viola-Concerto (Aug. 6) probably qualify as most venturesome!

Of course, this was the Summer to stage a Liszt celebration. One concert will take note of his anniversary: that of July 30, when Byron Janis plays the First and Second Piano Concertos. The composer has not been completely slighted otherwise. Cauldio Arrau will give a Liszt Sesquicenntenial Recital on Aug. 16. Certainly the composer deserved a better fate.

●

THE BACH and Mozart weekends continue to open the orchestral series. Now that they have been moved from the intimacy of the theatre concert halls, little reason remains for adhering to these two composers. Handel and Haydn would fit the special signature of the Festival. Even so, centainly the Bach programs appear hidebound.

Something should be done to shake the Berkshire Festival out of its lethargy. As a musical event of national importance it should show more responsibility to music.

Miles Kastendieck reviews musical events in weekday issues of the Journal-American.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
VILLAGER
W. 27,000
JUN 22 1961

Music Trains To 'Tanglewood'

Throughout the world the name "Tanglewood" means one of the greatest summer music festival centers. On the beautiful estate, located in Lenox in the heart of the Berkshire Hills of Massachusetts, the Berkshire Music Festival presents six weeks of symphony concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Center School, where young musicians of promise receive advanced instruction in their chosen field. The triangular "shed" where music of the masters is played, and the spacious lawns, offer listening posts for thousands. The 1961 season opens Sunday, July 9.

The New Haven Railroad has announced that 7 "Music Sunday" excursions are scheduled from New York, every Sunday from July 9 through August 20. The "package" rate includes round trip transportation and general admission to the Music Festival.

The "music Sunday" Excursion Train will leave Grand Central Terminal at 8:28 a.m. with return time set for 10:12 p.m. at Grand Central. Packaged tickets, on sale only at Grand Central and 125th St. Station ticket offices go on sale the Monday preceding the date of each "Music Sunday" excursion.

The music of Bach, Mozart, Strauss, Liszt, Beethoven and many other composers will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch, with conductor Hugh Ross handling the baton on July 16, and Pierre Monteux on July 23.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
APR 2 1961

Boston Symphony Announces Plans for Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Many Invited

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert, Eugene Ormandy—a summer resident of the Berkshires—will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Mr. Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

First for Festival

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second center benefit evening will be Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8.30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2.30. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8.30 p. m.

Music Center

The Berkshire Music Center—the orchestra's summer school of music—will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-Aug. 20) of the festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,847
MAR 31 1961

Extend Season At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloists at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 festival.

MIAMI, FLA.
HERALD
D. 321,461 S. 383,206
JUL 2 1961

IN U.S. SUMMER FESTIVALS

American Musicians Gain New Prominence

By DON HENAHAN
Chicago News Music Critic

If you throw out the rodeos and the cotton-picking contests, the list of summer festivals in the United States dwindles.

Granting Ravinia honorary status because of its age, only it, Tanglewood, Santa Fe, and Aspen are of first-class status, with a few lesser events definitely worth investigating, such as Fish Creek and Central City, Colo.

One trend to be reckoned with is the growing reluctance of major European musicians to tour in this country during the summer. Faraway places by the score bid high for even the smaller fry among them, let alone the von Karajans and Sutherlands.

As a result, however, the American artist has been coming into his own in his country.

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been especially successful at using American-based talent. This season (July 5-Aug. 20) its soloists include Gary Graffman, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, Seymour Lipkin, Isaac Stern, Adele Addison, Lukas Foss, and half a dozen members of the Boston Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct a series of concerts commemorating the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, and other concerts will be led by Aaron Copland, Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, and Richard Burgin.

The Fromm Music Foundation, a Chicago-based organization, again will continue its support of the Berkshire Music Center's contemporary composer program.

The foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet and other instrumentalists who are Fromm Fellows, in a series of seven seminars on today's music. There also will be a concert performed by members of the Boston Symphony and guest artists.

The Music Center will be in operation this season from today to Aug. 20. Like the festival itself, the center's program has been extended from six to seven weeks.

At the Aspen Music Festival in Aspen, Colo. (June 28-Sept. 3), musicians living in the United States also will be the major attractions.

COPLAND STERN

Composers Leon Kirchner, Carlos Chavez, Darius Milhaud, and Charles Jones will take part. Conductors include Izler Solomon and Walter Susskind.

Artists include Jennie Tourel, Adele Addison, Leopold Simoneau, Hans Hotter, Ruggiero Ricci, Beveridge Webster, the Juilliard Quartet and the New York Pro Musica.

The Santa Fe opera, which opened June 28, and which will last nine weeks, will have Paul Hindemith, Igor Stravinsky, and Douglas Moore on hand when these composers' works are presented at the New Mexico festival.

Scheduled are Stravinsky's "Persephone" and "Oedipus Rex," Hindemith's "The News of the Day," Moore's "The Ballad of Baby Doe," Strauss's "Der Rosenkavalier," "La Boheme," "Carmen," and "The Marriage of Figaro." Hindemith and Stravinsky will conduct their own works.

The Carmel Bach Festival, at Carmel-by-the-Sea, Calif. (July 14-July 23) lists works of Bach, Monteverdi, Handel, Haydn, and Mozart. Even without good music, this is one of the globe's most enticing areas for the traveler.

Fish Creek, up in Wisconsin's Door County, plans its ninth annual festival (Aug. 5-20) under the direction of Thor Johnson. This is another spot that makes its own music, but the concerts look inviting too.

The nine-concert series will feature Richard Cassily, Sidney Harth, John Browning, Patricia Neway and Robert Marcellus. Opera makes its first appearance this summer, with Robert Gay conducting U.S. premiere performances of Gluck's "The Reformed Drunkard" and Herne's "Sophie Arnould."

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 638 802 S. 812,836
JUN 18 1961

TANGLEWOOD IN DOLDRUMS

By MILES KASTENDIECK

WHAT'S new at Tanglewood this Summer? Frankly, the answer is nothing much. Perhaps this fact matters little to the audiences that now gravitate to the Music Shed each season, but it disturbs discriminating music lovers more and more.

●

WHAT REALLY causes dismay springs from the retrogression in policy. A few years ago the Berkshire Festival attempted to give its program some unity. To be sure, this meant Beethoven one Summer, but at least some effort had been made to shape the course of events. When Berlioz was the pivotal composer, the Festival made even more sense. Settling then for the great composer weekends in recent seasons it still clung to an idea.

Now there is no policy.

The Boston Symphony gives a series of concerts for seven weekends, all of them in the Shed. The programs reflect no venturesome spirit, the Festival reveals no vestige of a theme. Since the demand for tickets showed an increase early in the season, people obviously accept this old status quo.

●

SUCH circumstances do not excuse the Berkshire Festival management. They owe it to the art itself to do something for it. A glance at the fifteen programs the Boston Symphony will play makes gathering a baker's half-dozen of truly contemporary works an arduous effort. Actually, Pulenc's "Gloria" is the only one of note (July 21). Bartok's Violin Rhapsody (July 23) and Viola Concerto (Aug. 6) probably qualify as most venturesome!

Of course, this was the Summer to stage a Liszt celebration. One concert will take note of his anniversary: that of July 30, when Byron Janis plays the First and Second Piano Concertos. The composer has not been completely slighted otherwise. Cauldio Arrau will give a Liszt Sesquicenntenial Recital on Aug. 16. Certainly the composer deserved a better fate.

●

THE BACH and Mozart weekends continue to open the orchestral series. Now that they have been moved from the intimacy of the theatre concert halls, little reason remains for adhering to these two composers. Handel and Haydn would fit the special signature of the Festival. Even so, centainly the Bach programs appear hidebound.

Something should be done to shake the Berkshire Festival out of its lethargy. As a musical event of national importance it should show more responsibility to music.

Miles Kastendieck reviews musical events in weekday issues of the Journal-American.

N.Y.

...ains To ...wood'

...the world the name ... means one of the ...mmer music festival. ...n the beautiful estate, ...n Lenox in the heart of ...kshire Hills of Massachu... The Berkshire Music Festival ...nts six weeks of symphony ...certs by the Boston Symphony ...rchestra in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Center School, where young musicians of promise receive advanced instruction in their chosen field. The triangular "shed" where music of the masters is played, and the spacious lawns, offer listening posts for thousands. The 1961 season opens Sunday, July 9.

The New Haven Railroad has announced that 7 "Music Sunday" excursions are scheduled from New York, every Sunday from July 9 through August 20. The "package" rate includes round trip transportation and general admission to the Music Festival.

The "music Sunday" Excursion Train will leave Grand Central Terminal at 8:28 a.m. with return time set for 10:12 p.m. at Grand Central. Packaged tickets, on sale only at Grand Central and 125th St. Station ticket offices go on sale the Monday preceding the date of each "Music Sunday" excursion.

The music of Bach, Mozart, Strauss, Liszt, Beethoven and many other composers will be played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch, with conductor Hugh Ross handling the baton on July 16, and Pierre Monteux on July 23.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
APR 9 1961

Boston Symphony Announces Plans for Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Many Invited

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts. Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Mr. Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

First for Festival

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second center benefit evening will be Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8.30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2.30. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8.30 p. m.

Music Center

The Berkshire Music Center—the orchestra's summer school of music—will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-Aug. 20) of the festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078; Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,847
MAR 31 1961

Extend Season At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts. Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloists at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 festival.

34

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Bee
NEWTOWN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 5,920
MAR 31 1961

Berkshire Festival In Summer Plans

Boston Symphony Will Be At Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 -August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, and Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert, and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts, and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Mr Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra; plus cmpositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on August 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1,200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music, will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks, July 2 - August 20, of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events, concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival ticket office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press-Herald (m)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 53,559
JUN 21 1961

Arrau Among Famed Artists To Play At Berkshire Festival

BOSTON (UPI) — Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "Z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt sesquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on weekends July 7 through Aug. 20. Guest conductors for the series in the 6,000-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Arrau's Aug. 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

Elsewhere in the Berkshires, Ted Shawn will present another season of ballet at Jacob's Pillow and the Music Barn in Lenox will offer jazz and popular musicians. The country town of Great Barrington and the nearby city of Pittsfield also will be celebrating their bicentennials in July and August.

The Castle Hill concerts in Ipswich on Boston's North Shore announced a variety of artists including Dave Brubeck and the Modern Jazz Quartet.

Pianist Rudolf Serkin again will hold his Marlboro, Vt., school June 30 to Aug. 21, combining music and the arts. The University of Vermont offers the 1961 Lane Artists series. Goodard College in Plainfield, Vt. scheduled a series of concerts July 2-Aug. 22.

A summer music camp again will operate at Belgrade, Maine. The Air Force Band will play over July 4 when Calais, Maine and St. Stephen, N.B., jointly celebrate "Frontier Days," commemorating years of harmony between two nations.

The New Hampshire Music Festival, Inc. will hold its ninth season of symphony concerts, ten programs to be given at Gilford, Meredity and Wolfeboro from July 20 to Aug. 24.

The State Police remind us that we can do something about the shocking death and injury toll on our streets and highways . . . by regulating our driving to these words of warning: Slow Down and Live!

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
APR 6 1961

Tanglewood Season To Have Extra Week

Festival Opens July 5 and Closes August 20

Charles Munch Invites Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to Participate In Extended Program This Summer At Lenox.

The Boston Symphony Orcestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held July 5 to August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts and Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy—a summer resident of the Berkshires—will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and Soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria" for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra, plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second center benefit evening will be on August 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000 seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theater-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

The Berkshire Music Center—the orchestra's summer school of music—will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-August 20) of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral, and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
JUN 17 1961

Music

Additional Soloists for Tanglewood Festival

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — Dr. Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the 1961 Festival at Tanglewood. He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's "Magnificat." Dr. Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on August 20 when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

John McCollum

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the August 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitsky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's "Symphony No. 2."

The Festival is scheduled to open July 5 with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of 21 Boston Symphony orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15 and 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30; Sunday, 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. The director's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir, conducted by Hugh Ross. Dr. Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the 15 Boston Symphony orchestra concerts sheduled for the final five Festival weeke-nds (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUN 18 1961

ADELE ADDISON AT TANGLEWOOD

Additional Soloists Are Announced

BOSTON—Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Festival at Tanglewood.

To Join Choir

He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's "Magnificat." Dr. Munch has also selected his singers for the festival's final concert Aug. 20 when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced for the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York July 19, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the Aug. 5 concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music July 0.

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.
TRIBUNE
D. 229,764 S. 655,759
APR 23 1961

The Boston Symphony's Berkshire festival at Lenox, Mass., has been extended from six to seven weeks this year, running from July 5 to Aug. 20. Conductor Charles Munch will again be in charge. Of among the guest maestros will be Eugene Ormandy, making his first festival appearance.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861
JUL 2 1961

Music Outing

The Brooklyn Academy of Music has set July 23 for its fifth annual "Sunday at Tanglewood" excursion to the Music Shed at Lenox, Mass. The day's program will have violinist Isaac Stern as soloist in front of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, led by Pierre Monteux.

See Saturday's Real Estate pages

35

Tribune 3/24/61

Longest Berkshire Season

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

Tanglewood will have its longest season thus far this summer, since both the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center have added a seventh week to their sessions at Lenox, Mass. The Boston Symphony will offer its customary Bach and Mozart programs on Friday and Saturday and Sunday afternoons, July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16, and the full orchestra will give fifteen concerts, instead of the previous twelve, on Fridays, Saturdays and Sundays from July 21 through Aug. 20. The center will begin its 1961 operations on Sunday, July 2.

Charles Munch will again conduct most of the festival concerts. The guest leaders and the programs are expected to be chosen within the next two or three weeks. The festival schedule also includes the usual weekly chamber music series.

This summer's guests in the center's composition department will be Wolfgang Fortner, a German, and Roberto Gerhard, a Spaniard. Their visit has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's international affairs program. Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty, and Lukas Foss will again teach in this department. Eleazar de Carvalho will return as head of the department of instrumental music, with Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein as advisers.

The Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support of the center's contemporary music program, which will include a concert by Boston Symphony musicians and guest artists and a series of seven seminars. Twenty-three members of this orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral and chamber music classes; Hugh Ross will head the choral department and G. Wallace Woodworth will direct the department of listening and analysis. Catalogues and application forms may be obtained from the center's registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. New York auditions for instrumentalists wishing to join the orchestral and chamber music sessions are scheduled for March 16.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
APR 9 1961

Music

Berkshire Festival Gains a Week

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will be held July 5 - Aug. 20. Extended from six to seven weeks, the festival will include 15 concerts by the 104-member orchestra, six by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony players devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of programs for full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein (Aug. 12) to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky.

Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts (July 23 and Aug 4-19), and concert-master Richard Burgin will conduct on Aug. 11.

Eugene Ormandy, a summer resident of the Berkshires, will conduct the concert of July 29, and Aaron Copland on July 28.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special program to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, Curtis quartet with Joseph de Pasquale (viola) and Samuel Mayes (cello), and New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series on Wednesday evenings.

A total of 69 works will be performed at the orchestral concerts. Of these, 16 have not previously been heard at Tanglewood. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart cantata ("Davidde Penitente," K.469); Bartok's Violin Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria" for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra; and Walter Pistons "Three New England Sketches" (July 30, Munch conducting) commissioned by the Worcester Music Festival and played at the 100th anniversary in 1959.

Among the soloists who will appear at Tanglewood this summer are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinists Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison at two concerts.

Further information and mail order for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUN 30 1961

Munch to Arrive In U. S. Monday

LENOX — Charles Munch will arrive in the United States Monday via air from Paris and travel immediately to Richmond where his personal staff has opened his summer residence. Since the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's winter season in late April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe.

Munch will first rehearse his Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Wednesday morning in preparation for the first three of the 21 orchestral concerts to be given at Tanglewood during the seven-week Berkshire Festival.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUN 25 1961

FESTIVAL OFFICES OPEN TOMORROW

LENOX — Thomas D. Perry, Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his Berkshire Festival staff will open their offices at Tanglewood Monday in preparation for the orchestra's seven week summer school session of the Berkshire Music Center which opens July 2.

In addition to the orchestra's administrative and ticket office staffs, the offices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will also open tomorrow to assist the 200,000 Tanglewood visitors expected in Lenox this summer.

In addition to the 28 Berkshire Festival concerts, visitors to the 210-acre Tanglewood estate may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by voluntary contribution toward the support of the center. Members of the friends are then invited to attend the more than 50 school events which will include concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,450

JUN 8 1961

Tanglewood Season Extended To Seven Weeks

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 — August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include fifteen concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the Orchestra's music Director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the Orchestra's former Music Director and first Director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphoney Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schumann, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August 3rd in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on August 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30 p.m. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 — August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include fifteen concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, who leads the Boston organization through most of its programs, arrived this week from Europe where he has been a vacationist since the close of the Boston Symphony's season in April. He began rehearsals of the symphonic group this morning in preparation for the Bach presentations.

The 6,000-seat Tanglewood shed is an amazing structure in beautiful setting. It covers one and one-half acres with a 93-feet stage that has a depth of 46 feet at the center line. The promenade area which extends for 350 feet behind the seats has a depth of 27 feet.

The structure, opened in 1938, cost $77,768 and was designed by Eliel Saarinen. The original plans were modified by Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, who also directed construction with Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology in charge of the acoustical studies. The 150,000 feet of firwood used in the roof came from the West Coast.

The Talbot Memorial Stage canopy was dedicated in 1959, this replacing the original shell. In 1960, a smaller enclosure of demountable panels was constructed for chamber orchestral concerts.

Outstanding musicians are heard during the Tanglewood programs, and three years ago the feature soloists included Amsterdam Metropolitan Tenor Albert DaCosta.

AMSTERDAM, N.Y.
RECORDER & DEMOCRAT
D. 13,783

JUL 5 1961

Music Festival Begins Friday At Tanglewood

The Berkshire Festival concerts at Tanglewood, which draw a liberal patronage of music lovers from Amsterdam and the Mohawk Valley communities, will open Friday when the Boston Symphony will present three programs of Bach. The seven-weeks festival season will include 21 orchestra concerts.

Conductor Charles Munch, who leads the Boston organization through most of its programs, arrived this week from Europe where he has been a vacationist since the close of the Boston Symphony's season in April. He began rehearsals of the symphonic group this morning in preparation for the Bach presentations.

The 6,000-seat Tanglewood shed is an amazing structure in beautiful setting. It covers one and one-half acres with a 93-feet stage that has a depth of 46 feet at the center line. The promenade area which extends for 350 feet behind the seats has a depth of 27 feet.

The structure, opened in 1938, cost $77,768 and was designed by Eliel Saarinen. The original plans were modified by Joseph Franz of Stockbridge, who also directed construction with Richard D. Fay of Massachusetts Institute of Technology in charge of the acoustical studies. The 150,000 feet of firwood used in the roof came from the West Coast.

The Talbot Memorial Stage canopy was dedicated in 1959, this replacing the original shell. In 1960, a smaller enclosure of demountable panels was constructed for chamber orchestral concerts.

Outstanding musicians are heard during the Tanglewood programs, and three years ago the feature soloists included Amsterdam Metropolitan Tenor Albert DaCosta.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 47,164

JUN 20 1961

Varied Summer Music Offerings In New England

BOSTON (UPI) — Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "Z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt sesquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on weekends July 7 through Aug. 20. Guest conductors for the series in the 6,000-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Arrau's Aug. 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

36

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Press (e)
MIDDLETOWN, Conn.
Circ. 16,722
JUN 20 1961

New England Prepares To Strike Up the Music

By JOHN A. HAHN

BOSTON, June 20. (UPI)—Music for every taste and mood from concert piano by Claudio Arrau to the "Z's" in jazz await only the downbeat of a conductor and the ears of an audience in New England this summer.

Arrau, in a tribute to the Franz Liszt Sesquicentennial, will be one of many famed artists appearing during the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, perhaps the most celebrated of New England summer musical events.

Charles Munch will lead the Boston Symphony in his next-to-last season as director of the festival on weekends July 7 through Aug. 20. Guest conductors for the series in the 6,000-seat shed will include Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic and Eugene Ormandy of the Philadelphia orchestra. Arrau's Aug. 16 recital will conclude a series of seven chamber music programs.

Elsewhere in the Berkshires, Ted Shawn will present another season of ballet at Jacob's Pillow and the Music Barn in Lenox will offer jazz and popular musicians. The county town of Great Barrington and the nearby city of Pittsfield also will be celebrating their bicentennials in July and August.

The Castle Hill concerts in Ipswich on Boston's North Shore announced a variety of artists including Dave Brubeck and the modern jazz quartet; Duke Ellington; duo-pianists Ferrante and Teicher; Odetta; The Weavers; The Kingston Trio; guitarist Carlos Montoya; and concert pianist Leon Fleischer, all in weekend concerts.

Music also will be important in northern New England. Pianist Rudolf Serkin again will hold his Marlboro (Vt.) school June 30 to Aug. 21, combining music and the arts. The University of Vermont offers the 1961 Lane Artist series. Goodard college in Plainfield, Vt. scheduled a series of concerts July2 -Aug. 22. The town of Manchester and St. Michael's College in Winooski Park also are the sites of summer-long musical and dramaitc programs in the Green Mountain state.

A summer music camp again will operate at Belgrade, Maine. The Air Force Band will play over July 4th when Calais, Maine and St. Stephen, N.B., jointly celebrate "Frontier Days," commemorating years of harmony between two nations.

The New Hampshire Music Festival, Inc. will hold its ninth season of Symphony concerts, ten programs to be given at Gilford, Meredith and Wolfeboro from July 20 to Aug. 24. Thomas Nee, director of the Minneapolis Civic Orchestra, will conduct the programs which climax with performances of Faure's Requiem and the Beethoven Fantasy for chorus, piano and orchestra.

Jazz and folk music again will be featured in Rhode Island with details still to be worked out.

The summer music tents will be busier than ever this season, principally in eastern Massachusetts. The Carousel in Framingham will present "An Evening With Danny Kaye" as one attraction. Victor Borge, Jose Greco and his dancers will appear at the North Shore Music Theater which also will present "The Great Waltz," "Destry," "West Side Story" and other musicals. "West Side Story," "Flower Drum Song" and "Take Me Along" are among the South Shore Music Circus attractions.

In Boston, Arthur Fielder will conduct a series of free outdoor concerts on the Charles River esplanade. The Arts Center Theater will present the American premier of Benjamin Britten's opera, "The Turn of the Screw," starring Patricia Neway.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News (e)
SOUTHBRIDGE, Mass.
Circ. 5,181
JUN 21 1961

Music At Tanglewood

By IRENE JARRY
News Music Columnist

The Tanglewood Berkshire Festival, which is considered the best festival in America, will be held July 5 through August 20 at Lenox, Mass., with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Musically, for students and professionals alike, Tanglewood has one of the most glamorous settings. Besides having the best and most varied music America can offer, it has a marvelous scenic country setting. Tanglewood, with its 200 acres of beautiful lawns, gardens, great trees, and lake shore, is the summer home of the Boston Symphony. It is there that the principals of the orchestra, together with a distinguished faculty including some of the best composers of America and Europe, hold the annual session of the Berkshire Music Center, a school for "living and working in music!" New composers and compositions are born here. They have a large choral group, forums, chamber music, opera, and every other type of musical activity. It is the final roster for talent. One encounters artists, actors, writers, and personalities; it is fast becoming to the American people what the famous European festivals have meant.

YOU can walk around the grounds before a concert; visit the school and music store with its many unusual scores, and brush up against men like Milhaud, Copland, and Bernstein, who are either visiting or teaching. Tanglewood also has a literary and a historical meaning. It was the meeting place of Emerson, Holmes, Melville, and Hawthorne. The latter lived here in 1850; it was here that he first imagined his "Tanglewood Tales", which he told to his children; he also wrote "The House of Seven Gables" here. The "Little Red House" in which he lived and worked has been rebuilt in replica.

There will be 68 pieces of music played this summer at Berkshire, so you have a wide choice. The first 2 weeks will be devoted again to Bach and Mozart. The other five will contain popular symphonies. Three important contemporary pieces, the Poulenc "Gloria", the Schuman (contemporary) "Seventh Symphony", and the Foss "Time Cycle", will be conducted by Munch and Bernstein (the latter cannot be "beat" in the moderns). Mr. Bernstein will also do the Stravinsky "Symphony of Psalms", Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony", and Bartok's viola concerto. Soloists will include Janis, Lipkin, Stern, Istomin, Morgan, and many others.

* * * *

CHARLES Munch will conduct many of the concerts, but he has also invited Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteuz, and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the concerts to be given during the five final weeks. The Festival Chorus, which includes many of the students and several outstanding soloists, will also appear.

Chamber music is supposedly the quintessence of fine music, and Munch has announced the programs for the seven concerts starting July 5 with the Curtis quartet playing Brahms and Schubert; July 12, the Budapest quartet playing Milhaud's quartet, a Haydn and a Beethoven; July 19, the Beaux Arts Trio of N.Y. with a trio by Roussel, a Beethoven, and a Schubert; July 29, the N.Y. Pro Musica playing early Renaissance masters; Aug. 2, the Boston Fine Arts quartet with de Pasquale (viola) as guest; Aug. 9, the Kroll quartet with Beethoven, Schumann, and David Diamand quartets.

* * * *

PIANISTS are looking forward to the August 16 concert; Claudio Arrau will play a special Liszt Sesquicentennial recital. This along with the chamber music will be given in the Little Theatre, next to the big open amphitheatre.

Hope you can arrange to hear some of these.

Happy listening!

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 29,071
MAR 28 1961

A Welcome Extension Of the Musical Season

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's decision to lengthen the Berkshire Festival season by one week this summer and by still another week in 1962 is evoking applause in the Berkshires. From any angle it is examined, it is good news.

Seven weeks of fine symphonic music this summer instead of the usual six clearly is a big gain in terms of enjoyment. Those who attend Tanglewood concerts, sporadically or on a regular basis, will have wider opportunities. For them, the summer will be that much richer.

For a good many others besides, the longer season will be welcome. It will help spread out the summer so that activity will not concentrate so heavily in the six-week period starting with the Fourth of July. In so doing, it will relieve the county's post-Tanglewood letdown, which has traditionally occurred in mid-August when the BSO has been withdrawn.

This will please innkeepers, resort owners and operators of other summer attractions. The longer season should help even out the tourist trade—raising the low spots, lowering some of the highs—while bringing in a larger total volume of business. By 1962, the tourist summer in the Berkshires, as elsewhere in New England, should be at its height from Independence Day straight through to Labor Day.

The longer Tanglewood season is part of a program of augmented activity for the Boston Symphony Orchestra all the way around. As symphony officials have announced, the winter season of 63 Symphony Hall concerts in Boston will be increased to 70; and beginning with the 1961-62 season, the orchestra will be at work 50 weeks a year. From the instrumentalists' standpoint, too, that is good news.

A serious problem for most symphony orchestras is finding year-round employment for the players. Most topflight American orchestras, the BSO excepted, are part-time organizations which play for only 20 or 30 weeks a year. In between, the musicians must seek positions elsewhere, to the detriment of the orchestra itself and their own morale. One reason why the Boston orchestra can maintain such a high level of performance year after year is its year-round employment: It can get and keep good men.

From just about every standpoint, then, the extended season is a welcome innovation. We believe it will prove a sound move for the orchestra. We know it will enhance the enjoyment of summers in the Berkshires.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 371,393
JUL 4 1961

ARRIVING BY PLANE from Paris today, Dr. Charles Munch, celebrated director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will go directly to Richmond, Mass., where his personal staff has opened his summer home. Since the close of Symphony's winter season in late April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe.

He conducted one concert — a memorial to Serge Koussevitsky—with the London Philharmonic Orchestra in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1. Mrs. Koussevitsky, widow of the Orchestra's former director, was in the audience.

Wednesday morning Dr. Munch will rehearse his orchestra at Tanglewood in preparation for the first three of the 21 concerts to be given during the 7-week Berkshire Festival. The opening concert is Friday in the 6000-seat music shed.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUN 29 1961

Dr. Munch Will Arrive On Monday

BSO Conductor's First Concert In Shed July 7

TANGLEWOOD — Dr. Charles Munch will arrive in the U.S. Monday via air from Paris and travel immediately to Richmond, where his personal staff has opened his summer residence.

Since the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's winter season in late April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe except for one concert with the London Philharmonic Orchestra in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1 which he designated as a memorial concert to Serge Koussevitzky and which was attended by the widow of the orchestra's former music director, Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky.

Dr. Munch will first rehearse his Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Wednesday morning in preparation for the first three of the 21 orchestral concerts to be given at Tanglewood during the seven-week Berkshire Festival. The opening orchestral concerts, scheduled for Friday-Saturday-Sunday (July 7-8-9) in the 6,000-seat Music Shed, will consist of music by J. S. Bach. These orchestral concerts will be preceded by the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs on July 5 when the Curtis String Quartet is heard in Tanglewood's 1,200-seat Theater.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

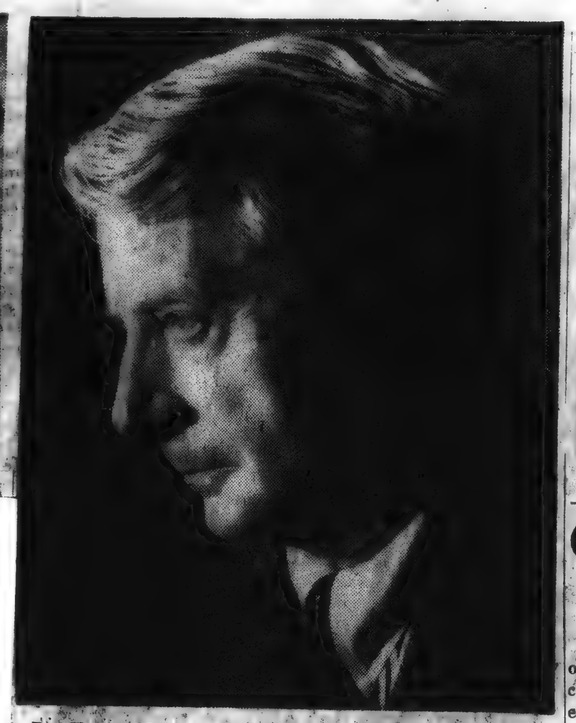
JUL 2 1961

BERKSHIRE MUSIC FESTIVAL TO OPEN 1961 SEASON WEDNESDAY EVENING

DORIOT A. DWYER

ADELE J. ADDISON

FLORENCE KOPLEFF



Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in its opening 1961 concert Friday evening at Tanglewood. Nine soloists, six pictured above, will participate in the first week-end program of the Berkshire Music Festival.

LUKAS FOSS

MAC MORGAN

RALPH GOMBERG

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 24 1961

Festival Office Opens Monday

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his Berkshire Festival staff will open their offices at Tanglewood in Lenox, Monday, in preparation for the orchestra's seven week summer season which opens July 5 and the seven week summer school session of the Berkshire Music Center which opens July 2.

In addition to the orchestra's administrative and ticket office staffs, the offices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will also open Monday to assist the 200,000 Tanglewood visitors expected in Lenox this summer.

In addition to the 28 Berkshire Festival concerts, visitors to the 210-acre Tanglewood estate may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by voluntary contributions toward the support of the Center. Members of the Friends are then invited to attend the more than 50 school events which will include concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Dr. Charles Munch has invited nine soloists to assist him in the Boston Symphony Orchestra's three all-Bach concerts to be given at Tanglewood Friday, Saturday and Sunday. Four of the soloists—flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Roger Voisin trumpet, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and violinist Richard Burgin—are first-desk players from his orchestra and four — soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, baritone Mac Morgan and pianist Lukas Foss—are former students at the orchestra's Berkshire Music Center.

Tanglewood Topics

Dr. Charles Munch will arrive in the United States Monday via air from Paris and travel immediately to Richmond, Mass., where his personal staff has opened his summer residence. Since the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's winter season in late April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe except for one concert with the London Philharmonic Orchestra in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1 which he designated as a memorial concert to Serge Koussevitzky and which was attended by the widow of the orchestra's former music director.

Dr. Munch will first rehearse his Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Wednesday morning in preparation for the first three of the 21 orchestral concerts to be given at Tanglewood during the seven-week Berkshire Festival.

The opening orchestral concerts, scheduled for Friday-Saturday-Sunday in the 6000-seat Music Shed, will consist of music by J. S. Bach. These orchestral concerts will be preceded by the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs on the 5th when the Curtis String Quartet is heard in Tangelwood's 1200-seat theater, held at 3:30 p. m. today in the Theater at Tanglewood. The public is invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood Gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the center. Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

Charles Munch Invites Nine Soloists For First Week End at Tanglewood

LENOX—The Berkshire Hills will come alive with the sound of music as Dr. Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Friday evening at 8.30. The extended season officially opens with three orchestral concerts by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday. A concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes Wednesday evening at 8.30 will open the chamber music series.

Nine Soloists

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts in the Music Shed. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert (8.30 p. m.) soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten" and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin, trumpet, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Richard Burgin, violin and Lukas Foss, piano, will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6 in the Music Shed.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season next Sunday afternoon at 2.30 in the Music Shed when Dr. Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Mr. Foss as soloist.

The Curtis String Quartet—Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello—will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1200-seat Theater Wednesday evening at 8.30. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C Major, Op. 163 by Franz Schubert.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—those who make voluntary contributions to the school—are invited to three events at Tanglewood this week: The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday, 8.30 p. m., Music Shed; a seminar in contemporary music, Friday, 3.15 p. m., Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday, the 9th, 10 a. m., Chamber Music Hall.

INTERNATIONAL MUSICAN
NEWARK, N.J.
MONTHLY 244,271

JUN 1961

SYMPHONIC Thor Johnson will conduct the Festival Orchestra at the Ninth Annual Peninsula Music Festival (Fishcreek, Wisconsin), August 5 through August 20. This orchestra is made up of members of major symphony orchestras from all over the United States. . . . The Casals Festival (June 9-28) in San Juan, Puerto Rico, will have an orchestra of sixty-two musicians. . . . The Redlands Bowl Symphony Orchestra will be directed by Harry Farbman at this California Festival, opening June 27 . . . The Boston Symphony is the nucleus for the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, held July 5 to August 20, and directed by Charles Munch. Other conductors will be Pierre Monteux, Eugene Ormandy and Richard Burgin. Arthur Fiedler will conduct the Boston Pops in a special concert August 3 to benefit the Berkshire Music School . . . The Vancouver International Festival will have the Festival Symphony Orchestra conducted by Zubin Mehta, and, in a Gershwin program, by Alexander Smallens. The CBC Chamber Orchestra will be conducted by Victor Feldbrill, Gerhard Samuel and John Avison, and the Festival Chamber Orchestra by Nicholas Goldschmidt and Glenn Gould . . . The Stratford Music Festival (Ontario) has the National Festival Orchestra . . . The Hartford (Connecticut) Festival of Music (July 5, 12, 19, 26) will have Robert Brawley conducting its Festival Orchestra. It is presented outdoors on the terrace of the Connecticut Life Insurance Company . . . The New Hampshire Music Festival offers symphony concerts in Meredith, Wolfeboro, Gilford and other centers during the summer . . . Emerson Buckley will conduct the Naumburg Orchestra in a concert series in Central Park, New York City, Memorial Day, July Fourth, July 31 and Labor Day . . . The Aspen (Colorado) Festival Orchestra will be conducted by Izler Solomon, who is also director of the festival (June 28-September 3).

37

38

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,078
JUN 14 1961

Around The Clock

Tanglewood To Offer Rich Orchestral Fare

By WAYNE A. SMITH

Dangling a fistful of free tickets to Tanglewood with an invitation to take one or all is like tossing a hunk of raw beef to a hungry dog. We're that dog.

This is the time when all men, and some women, who devote part of their hours to scribbling messages to newspaper readers about the wonderful world of music get invitations something like this:

"Dear Mr. Smith. Today is the first day of real spring weather in Boston and it has caused us to think about the summer at Tanglewood. Enclosed is some new propaganda on the Festival. Would you please let me know, at your earliest convenience, which concerts you will wish to review."

Spring? Indeed. And sure as life, summer cannot be far behind.

-o- -o- -o-

THIS YEAR the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival on the 210 - acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge in the heart of the beautiful Berkshire hills will run from July 5 through Aug. 20. This represents an extension from six to seven weeks. Years ago when the festival was launched it consisted of only two programs.

At the 1961 Festival there will be 15 concerts by the full orchestra plus six chamber orchestra concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, seven chamber music recitals and two gala benefit evenings.

Charles Munch will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. Among his guests will be Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct one of the three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director, and the first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will return to Tanglewood to conduct several concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct, Eugene Ormandy will make his first Berkshire Festival appearance, and many outstanding soloists have been invited to participate.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. The second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17. Programs and ticket information for these benefit programs will be available in mid - July.

All orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat music shed. Chamber music recitals will be in the 1,200-seat theater - concert hall. And those who prefer may listen to concerts from the great lawn which adjoins the shed and the theater.

-o- -o- -o-

THERE ARE A FEW critics who get to hear all, or almost all, of the programs opening July 5 and running through Aug. 20 and including a total of 45 concerts. They are the ones who are not troubled with selection. Those of us, however, who have other duties, plus the problem of transportation and communication, find ourselves betwixt and between desire and the realities of the profession.

In our case the simplest solution has been to say we'll go only on Sundays, and then, of course, there's inevitably something even more exciting on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, or Saturday.

The season this year has been divided into seven series, opening with the chamber music concert on July 5, and continuing into the second week with more of this. The first will be devoted mainly to Bach, and the second, to Mozart.

Series 3 will open on July 17 with a composers' forum, followed by series 4 on July 24; 5, on July 31; 6, on Aug. 7; and 7, on Aug. 14.

All Wednesday evening programs will be at 8:30 in the theater. And for those who cannot attend formal concerts there will be open rehearsals again on Saturday mornings at 10 beginning July 8 and extending through Aug. 19.

-o- -o- -o-

WHAT IS THERE for Sundays at 2:30?

Fortunately, this is one of the most interesting days, combined with Saturday evenings, and promises such fare as Bach on July 9; Mozart on July 16; Respighi, Viotti, DeFalla, Bartok and Strauss on July 23; Beethoven, Liszt, and Piston on July 30; Beethoven, Bartok, and Respighi on Aug. 6; Hanson, Honegger, and Beethoven, on Aug. 13; and Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" with the Festival Chorus closing the Festival on Aug. 20.

Soloists this summer feature such outstanding artists as Byron Janis, who last winter at Smith College captivated a large audience with his extraordinary technique at the piano. There also will be Eugene Istomin, Aaron Copland, Monteux, Isaac Stern, and Bernstein among musical luminaries, not to mention the ever-popular Claudio Arrau, another giant at the piano, as well as Ormandy and Burgin.

Selection is, indeed, difficult. Or should we say it is made simple by a choice of such extraordinary musical wealth amid surroundings of such superb beauty?

Look and Learn

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUN 4 1961

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 488,161
JUL 2 1961

A Chance to Hear Contemporaries

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

While the Boston Symphony's programs in this summer's Berkshire Festival are characterized mainly by conservatism, contemporary music will play a more important part in the activities of the Berkshire Music Center during the festival period at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The projects in this field which the Fromm Music Foundation is sponsoring for a sixth consecutive Tanglewood season include seven Friday afternoon seminars in contemporary music, a concert on Monday afternoon, July 10, and the performances of the Fromm Fellowship Players.

Each Friday session will include a lecture by a composer followed by a performance of some of his characteristic chamber works. The composers taking part are Roberto Gerhard, July 7; Billy Jim Layton, July 14; William Schuman, July 21; Yehudi Wyner, July 18; Seymour Shifrin, Aug. 4; Wolfgang Fortner, Aug. 11, and Salvatore Martirano, Aug. 18. The concert on July 10 will feature works by the four composers on the 1961 Center faculty: Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss and Messrs. Fortner and Gerhard, Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle" will be played for the first time in its chamber music version. Admission is free.

Members of the Boston Symphony will take part in this concert under Richard Burgin's direction. This summer's Fromm Fellowship Players, who will be heard in the Friday seminars and the Sunday night Composers' Forums, includes the Lenox Quartet, the Dorian Woodwind Quintet and Marianne Weltman, soprano. The group will also be available for demonstrations and illustrations in the Center's student composition classes.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday News
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 11,756
JUN 18 1961

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 67,629 S. 118,093
AUG 16 1961

Tanglewood Extends '62 Season by Week

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced that the 1962 season at Tanglewood, the final year of Dr. Munch's directorship of the orchestra and the summer school of music, will be extended from seven to eight weeks, opening July 6.

The season will consist of 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and concerts by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

Tomorrow, the Gala Evening for the benefit of the Music Center scholarship fund will be presented. Every department of the school will be represented with performances of opera, a program by the Tanglewood Choir and student orchestras conducted by Dr. Munch, Eleazar de Carvalho and Aaron Copland.

Friday night in the big shed with the full orchestra conducted by Dr. Munch, works by Mendlessohn, Debussy and the piano concerto, No. 4 with Claudio Arrau as guest soloist will be offered. Saturday night's concert will be directed by Pierre Monteaux and will include works by Stravinsky, the Piano Concerto No 2 by Rachmaninoff with Gary Graffman as soloist, concluding with the "Pathatique" Symphony by Tchaikowsky.

The final concert will be presented Sunday at 2:30 when the program will be devoted to Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette," with three soloists and the festival chorus.

Berkshire Festival Set To Open Soon on Estate

LENOX, Mass. —The Berkshire Festival's box office personnel and equipment moved this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, in preparation for the orchestra's seven-week festival, which opens July 5.

On that date, the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts will be held, to be followed on Friday, July 7, by the first of 21 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the ifrst six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9; and 14, 15, 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30 p.m.; Sunday, 2:30 p.m.).

The program for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart.

Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of the orchestra, plus pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists, and the Tanglewood Choir, conducted by Hugh Ross.

Berkshire Festival Extended Additional Week This Year

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported today by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The increase in sales compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Perry added.

He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through August 20.

This has allowed travelers who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

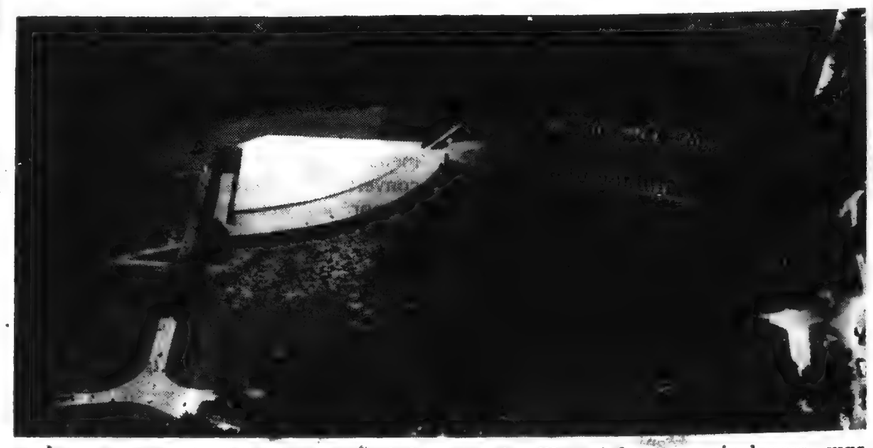
Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16).

He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekgust 4-5-6, 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

CIVIL ENGINEERING
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 47,850
JAN 1961



Tanglewood music shed in the Berkshires, a familiar sight to music lovers, was built in 1938 by civic-minded civil engineer Joseph Franz. Photo courtesy of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

38

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Recorder-Gazette (e)
GREENFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 13,078
JUN 14 1961

Around The Clock

Tanglewood To Offer Rich Orchestral Fare

By WAYNE A. SMITH

Dangling a fistful of free tickets to Tanglewood with an invitation to take one or all is like tossing a hunk of raw beef to a hungry dog. We're that dog.

This is the time when all men, and some women, who devote part of their hours to scribbling messages to newspaper readers about the wonderful world of music get invitations something like this:

"Dear Mr. Smith. Today is the first day of real spring weather in Boston and it has caused us to think about the summer at Tanglewood. Enclosed is some new propaganda on the Festival. Would you please let me know, at your earliest convenience, which concerts you will wish to review."

Spring? Indeed. And sure as life, summer cannot be far behind.

-o- -o- -o-

THIS YEAR the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival on the 210-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge in the heart of the beautiful Berkshire hills will run from July 5 through Aug. 20. This represents an extension from six to seven weeks. Years ago when the festival was launched it consisted of only two programs.

At the 1961 Festival there will be 15 concerts by the full orchestra plus six chamber orchestra concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, seven chamber music recitals and two gala benefit evenings.

Charles Munch will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. Among his guests will be Leonard Bernstein, who will conduct one of the three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director, and the first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will return to Tanglewood to conduct several concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct, Eugene Ormandy will make his first Berkshire Festival appearance, and many outstanding soloists have been invited to participate.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. The second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17. Programs and ticket information for these benefit programs will be available in mid-July.

All orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat music shed. Chamber music recitals will be in the 1,200-seat theater - concert hall. And those who prefer may listen to concerts from the great lawn which adjoins the shed and the theater.

-o- -o- -o-

THERE ARE A FEW critics who get to hear all, or almost all, of the programs opening July 5 and running through Aug. 20 and including a total of 45 concerts. They are the ones who are not troubled with selection. Those of us, however, who have other duties, plus the problem of transportation and communication, find ourselves betwixt and between desire and the realities of the profession.

In our case the simplest solution has been to say we'll go only on Sundays, and then, of course, there's inevitably something even more exciting on Wednesday, Thursday, Friday, or Saturday.

The season this year has been divided into seven series, opening with the chamber music concert on July 5, and continuing into the second week with more of this. The first will be devoted mainly to Bach and the second to Mozart.

Series 3 will open on July 17 with a composers' forum, followed by series 4 on July 24; 5, on July 31; 6, on Aug. 7; and 7, on Aug. 14.

All Wednesday evening programs will be at 8:30 in the theater. And for those who cannot attend formal concerts there will be open rehearsals again on Saturday mornings at 10 beginning July 8 and extending through Aug. 19.

-o- -o- -o-

WHAT IS THERE for Sundays at 2:30?

Fortunately, this is one of the most interesting days, combined with Saturday evenings, and promises such fare as Bach on July 9; Mozart on July 16; Respighi, Viotti, DeFalla, Bartok and Strauss on July 23; Beethoven, Liszt, and Piston on July 30; Beethoven, Bartok, and Respighi on Aug. 6; Hanson, Honegger, and Beethoven on Aug. 13; and Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" with the Festival Chorus closing the Festival on Aug. 20.

Soloists this summer feature such outstanding artists as Byron Janis, who last winter at Smith College captivated a large audience with his extraordinary technique at the piano. There also will be Eugene Istomin, Aaron Copland, Monteux, Isaac Stern, and Bernstein among musical luminaries, not to mention the ever-popular Claudio Arrau, another giant at the piano, as well as Ormandy and Burgin.

Selection is, indeed, difficult. Or should we say it is made simple by a choice of such extraordinary musical wealth amid surroundings of such superb beauty?

Jack and Leon

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUN 4 1961

Berkshire Festival Extended Additional Week This Year

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported today by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The increase in sales compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Perry added.

He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through August 20.

This has allowed travelers who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16).

He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weeks (August 4-5-6, 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will be...

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD-TRIBUNE
D. 336,647 S. 486,161
JUL 2 1961

A Chance to Hear Contemporaries

By FRANCIS D. PERKINS

While the Boston Symphony's programs in this summer's Berkshire Festival are characterized mainly by conservatism, contemporary music will play a more important part in the activities of the Berkshire Music Center during the festival period at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The projects in this field which the Fromm Music Foundation is sponsoring for a sixth consecutive Tanglewood season include seven Friday afternoon seminars in contemporary music, a concert on Monday afternoon, July 10, and the performances of the Fromm Fellowship Players.

Each Friday session will include a lecture by a composer followed by a performance of some of his characteristic chamber works. The composers taking part are Roberto Gerhard, July 7; Billy Jim Layton, July 14; William Schuman, July 21; Yehudi Wyner, July 28; Seymour Shifrin, Aug. 4; Wolfgang Fortner, Aug. 11, and Salvatore Martirano, Aug. 18. The concert on July 10 will feature works by the four composers on the 1961 Center faculty: Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss and Messrs. Fortner and Gerhard. Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle" will be played for the first time in its chamber music version. Admission is free.

Members of the Boston Symphony will take part in this concert under Richard Burgin's direction. This summer's Fromm Fellowship Players, who will be heard in the Friday seminars and the Sunday night Composers' Forums, includes the Lenox Quartet, the Dorian Woodwind Quintet and Marianne Weltmann, soprano. The group will also be available for demonstrations and illustrations in the Center's student composition classes.

Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday News
BURLINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 11,756
JUN 18 1961

Berkshire Festival Set To Open Soon on Estate

LENOX, Mass. The Berkshire Festival's box office personnel and equipment moved this weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts, in preparation for the orchestra's seven-week festival, which opens July 5.

On that date, the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts will be held, to be followed on Friday, July 7, by the first of 21 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9; and 14, 15, 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30 p.m.; Sunday, 2:30 p.m.).

The program for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart.

Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of the orchestra, plus pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists, and the Tanglewood Choir, conducted by Hugh Ross.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 67,629 S. 118,093
AUG 16 1961

Tanglewood Extends '62 Season by Week

Trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra announced that the 1962 season at Tanglewood, the first year of Dr. Munch's directorship of the orchestra and the summer school of music, will be extended from seven to eight weeks, opening July 6.

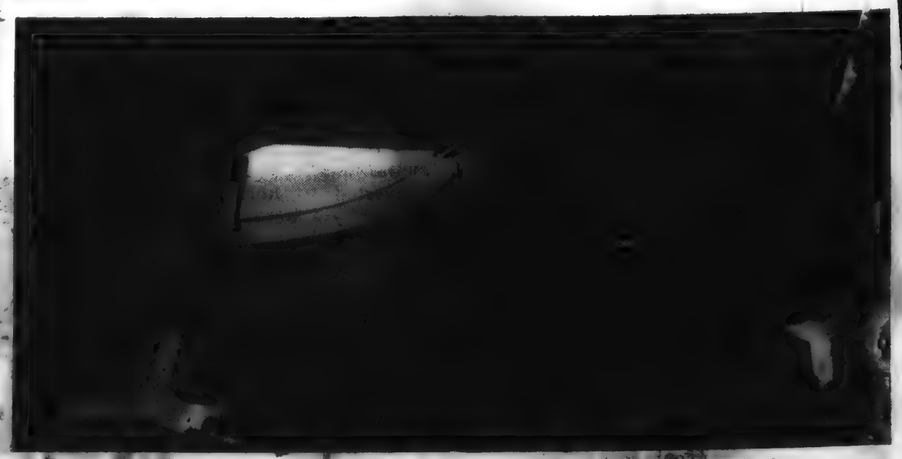
The season will consist of 24 weekend concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra plus a chamber music series on Wednesday evenings and concerts by students of the Berkshire Music Center.

Tomorrow, the Gala Evening for the benefit of the Music Center scholarship fund will be presented. Every department of the school will be represented with performances of opera, a program by the Tanglewood Choir and student orchestras conducted by Dr. Munch, Eleazar de Carvalho and Aaron Copland.

Friday night, in the big shed with the full orchestra conducted by Dr. Munch, works by Mendlessohn, Debussy and the piano concerto, No. 4 with Claudio Arrau as guest soloist will be offered. Saturday night's concert will be directed by Pierre Monteux and will include works by Stravinsky, the Piano Concerto No. 2 by Rachmaninoff with Gary Graffman as soloist, concluding with the "Pathatique" Symphony by Tchaikowsky.

The final concert will be presented Sunday at 2:30 when the program will be devoted to Berlioz's "Romeo et Juliette," with three soloists and the festival chorus.

CIVIL ENGINEERING
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 47,850
JAN 1961



Tanglewood music shed in the Berkshires, a familiar sight to music lovers, was built in 1936 by civic-minded civil engineer Joseph Franz. Photo courtesy of Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447
APR 2 1961

Boston Symphony Tells Tanglewood Plans

Special to The Standard-Times

LENOX, April 1 — The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held July 5 - Aug. 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy — a Summer resident of the Berkshires — will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis (who just gave a concert in New Bedford) and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart cantata; Bartok's "Viola Concerto" and his "Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra"; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's archestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday at 8:30 p. m. and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1,200-seat Theater-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30 p. m.

The Berkshire Music Center—the orchestra's Summer school of music — will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2 - Aug. 20) of the Festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the Center.

Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events — concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Orchestral Programs and Conductors for the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood

(Programs Subject to Change)

First Tanglewood performances indicated by boldface.

July 7—MUNCH: Bach Suites Nos. 3, 2 (Dwyer), 1, 4.

July 8—MUNCH: Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 3, 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin); Cantata No. 202 (Addison); Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 6; 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss).

July 9—MUNCH: Bach Sinfonia from Easter Cantata; Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss); Magnificat (Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

July 14—MUNCH: Mozart Symphony No. 36, K. 425, "Linz;" Serenade for Wind Instruments in C minor, K. 388; Adagio and Fugue for String Instruments in C minor, K. 546; Symphony No. 40, in G minor, K. 550.

July 15—MUNCH: Mozart Bassoon Concerto in B-flat, K. 191 (Walt); Flute Concerto in G major, K. 313 (Dwyer); Sinfonia Concertante, in E-flat, K. 297b (Cioffi, Gomberg, Stagliano, Walt).

July 16—MUNCH: Mozart Symphony No. 29, in A major, K. 201; Piano Concerto No. 20, in D minor, K. 466 (Lipkin); Cantata, "Davidde Penitente," K. 469 (Hugh Ross, conductor, Tanglewood Choir and soloists).

July 21—MUNCH: Beethoven "Coriolan" Overture; Brahms Symphony No. 1; Poulenc "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra (Addison, Festival Chorus).

July 22—MUNCH: Schumann "Genoveva" Overture; Schuman Symphony No. 7; Beethoven Violin Concerto (Stern).

July 23—MONTEUX: Respighi Antique Dances and Airs; Viotti Violin Concerto No. 22 in A minor (Stern); De Falla Dances from the Three Cornered Hat; Bartok Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin (Stern); Strauss "Rosenkavalier" Suite.

July 28—COPELAND Preamble for a Solemn Occasion, "Appalachian Spring" (conducted by the composer); MUNCH: Ravel "Daphnis et Chloe," complete (Festival Chorus).

July 29—ORMANDY: Strauss "Don Juan;" Harris Symphony No. 3; Roussel "Bacchus et Ariane;" Brahms Symphony No. 2.

July 30—MUNCH: Beethoven Symphony No. 4; Liszt Piano Concerto No. 2 in A major (Janis); Piston Three New England Sketches; Liszt Piano Concerto No. 1 in E-flat major (Janis).

Aug. 3—Boston Pops at Tanglewood; Arthur Fiedler, conductor.

Aug. 4—MONTEUX: Beethoven "Fidelio" Overture; Schumann Piano Concerto (Istomin); Strauss Dance from "Salome;" Sibelius Symphony No. 2.

Aug. 5—MUNCH: Brahms Variations on a Theme by Haydn; Prokofiev Piano Concerto No. 2 (Henriot-Schweitzer); Franck Symphony in D minor.

Aug. 6—MUNCH: Beethoven Symphony No. 7; Bartok Viola Concerto (de Pasquale); Respighi "Pines of Rome."

Aug. 11—BURGIN: Haydn Symphony No. 88; Mahler Symphony No. 2 (Festival Chorus and soloists).

Aug. 12—BERNSTEIN: Shapero Adagietto, from Symphony for Classical Orchestra; Stravinsky Symphony of Psalms (Festival Chorus); Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 5.

Aug. 13—MUNCH: Hanson Elegy for Serge Koussevitzky, Op. 44; Honegger Symphony No. 1; Beethoven Symphony No. 3.

Aug. 17—Gala Evening — Berkshire Music Center Benefit Program.

Aug. 18—MUNCH: Mendelssohn Octet for Strings; Debussy La Mer; Beethoven Piano Concerto No. 4 (Arrau).

Aug. 19—MONTEUX: Stravinsky "Petrouchka" Suite; Rachmaninoff Piano Concerto No. 2 (Graffman); Tchaikovsky Symphony No. 6.

Aug. 20—MUNCH: Berlioz "Romeo et Juliette" (Festival Chorus and soloists).

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
APR 2 1961

Berkshire Festival

The Boston Symphony orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the Orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full Orchestra.

He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the Orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one. Eugene Ormandy, Summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert, and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

The Soloists

Among the soloists will be Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts, and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two.

Charles Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled for the 1961 Festival. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," works by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood Aug. 3, in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763
JUL 6 1961

Extend Tanglewood

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, will continue through Aug. 20.

The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 1 1961

Tanglewood Notes

The source of our first collection of Tanglewood notes is Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Mr. Perry, relaxed and cheerful, has just one major problem as the Festival and Berkshire Music Center prepare for their first week. It seems to be that his office phone doesn't work. Everything else, he insists, is perfectly routine.

* * *

The 80 new Baldwin pianos safely arrived and are now in the hands of Armando Maida, piano tuner extraordinary. "There's a man who works against adversity," says Mr. Perry. It seems that, while a man with sufficient courage could tune a piano in a boiler factory, it is virtually impossible to tune one when there is another musical sound. In general, there is a certain amount of musical noise at Tanglewood during the summer. Mr. Maida's solution is early morning and late afternoon rounds, daily.

Middlebrook

Thomas D. Perry Jr.

Mr. Perry's regular staff for the management of the symphony is about 30 people, but it naturally increases during the summer, with the move from Boston. How many people does he add during the summer? One January, when the treasurer was making out government tax forms, he announced that there were 600 of them. "Such a number," says Mr. Perry, "is ridiculous. I can't for the life of me imagine who they are." Featherbedding in a symphony?

* * *

The whole Tanglewood operation is running smoothly, as usual, but also as usual, the Music Center school is almost "something of a convulsion." It is a school for performers, and since there are four flutes in an orchestra, there should be four flutes in the school. "We try to come out even," says Mr. Perry. Have they? He doesn't know, but has hopes.

* * *

From the signs and surprise nature of the public announcement, Danny Kaye's July 13 concert is causing much interest. "It was a sudden thing. He found that he was going to be in the East, and offered to help us. He is very sensitive to music; untrained, but a virtuoso, a really brilliant performer." Who says there's no appreciation among the different arts?

* * *

The manager of the Symphony may have few convulsions, but James R. Kiley, head of the permanent grounds staff at Tanglewood, has had his share this year. "One Sunday around noon," Mr. Perry recalls, "I got a call from him. The roof of the Theater had fallen in under a heavy weight of snow." It's being fixed under Mr. Kiley's supervision. The distinctive, wood arch-supported roof is being replaced by a more conventional, steel supported one. There is a point where art, architectural or otherwise, must yield to the reality of a Berkshire winter.

* * *

Whatever the manager of the BSO may claim, not everything at Tanglewood runs smoothly. In the news office, there is a large red sign: "Endow a seat today!" The drive has been a total failure. the office has a shaky stool, a chair with a slope designed to precipitate the unwary onto the roomy floor, and one usable office seat, occupied by press representative Harry Beal. Berkshire Week wishes him luck in his drive for more seats.

—Jonathan Middlebrook

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6, • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
APR 16 1961

40

The Lively Arts—

Tanglewood Ho!

By T. H. Parker

If you hear a piper piping these days, it is very likely to be the spring peeper rehearsing the same old piccolo concerto with which the Palaeobatrachidae entertained their friends in the time of the Oligocene swamps.

This is the season of the year when Nature carries on her experiments in la musique concrete, begun long before Pierre Schaeffer and the boys at Radiodiffusion Francaise in Paris got in on the act. But the time is not far off when we shall have to return to more traditional entertainment. The nights will be filled with music and the cares that infest the day will still be nagging the back of the minds of audiences assembled to listen to the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. The word for it is Life, sometimes confused with the pursuit of happiness.

Not given to innovations, it is therefore news that the Berkshire Music Festival will be extended from six to seven weeks this year, running from July 5 to August 20. During this time there will be 15 concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six programs by a chamber group of BSO players presenting the music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

★

Charles Munch will conduct the Bach-Mozart programs and a majority of the full-orchestra events. And Leonard Bernstein will return to lead one of the three evenings commemorating the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, long the music director of the Boston Symphony and founder of the Berkshire Music Festival.

In addition, Eugene Ormandy, now a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first festive appearance to conduct one concert.

The rest of the faces on the podium will be familiar enough—Pierre Monteux, Richard Burgin, and Aaron Copland.

Most of the membership of the Berkshire Festival Soloists Club will also be heard. Among the pianists now running over preparatory scales are Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin, the last two recent commuters to the Bushnell Memorial, Hartford.

Isaac Stern will be back to demonstrate the glories of the violin, and Adele Addison is to sing at two concerts.

From within its own rank and file, the Boston Symphony will offer as additional soloists its concertmaster Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin and Sherman Walt.

The repertoire will include 16 works not previously performed at Tanglewood. Besides three Mozart concerti and a Mozart cantata, they are Bartok's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody for Violin and Orchestra Opus 68; Poulenc's "Gloria" for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra; William Schuman's Seventh Symphony; Respighi's "Antique Airs and Dances"; the Viotti Violin Concerto No. 22; Copland's "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion"; the Liszt Piano Concerto No. 2; Piston's "Three New England Sketches"; Dance from "Salome" by Strauss; the Adagietto from Shapero's Symphony for Classical Orchestra; and Honegger's First Symphony.

As for the rest of the programs, the Festival seems to have continued the plan of the last few years which grouped the repertoire around a central core of works by one composer. Looking over the list, this year's festival will present seven Beethoven compositions, three by Brahms and all the others represented by two or less items. However the news release from the Boston Symphony makes no special mention of a "Beethoven year."

Thus far three ensembles have been picked for the chamber music series. These are the Budapest and Curtis Quartets, and the New York Pro Musica.

This season there will be two special benefit concerts at Tanglewood. The tradition of importing Arthur Fiedler to conduct a pops program will be continued, of course, and a subsequent event will also be held for the Berkshire Music Center, the summer school of the Festival.

The main orchestral concerts are to be presented in the big music shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30 o'clock, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber music recitals are scheduled for the theater-concert hall on Wednesdays at 8:30.

The music center will be in session all during the seven weeks of the Festival.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W 15 7'9
APR 8 1961

Music-Art-Drama

(Continued from Page 6)

sent a season of seven operas in six performances. Carlo Moresco will conduct.

During the spring season, which runs until Saturday, May 13, seven other Metropolitan opera artists will perform at the Academy. Guido G. Salmaggi, General Director of the Brooklyn Opera Company, has engaged Kurt Adler, conductor; Desire Defrere, stage director; Kurt Baum and Alessio De Paolis, tenors; Louis Sgarro and Salvatore Baccaloni, bassos, all of the Metropolitan.

Following "Il Trovatore", the Brooklyn Opera Company will present "Tosca" on Friday evening, April 14, "Carmen" on Saturday evening, April 22, "Madama Butterfly" on Saturday evening, April 29, "La Boheme" on Saturday evening, May 6, and the double bill of "Cavalleria Rusticana" and "I Pagliacci" on Saturday evening, May 13.

Tickets for "Il Trovatore" and for all the other operas in the spring season at The Brooklyn Academy of Music, now are on sale at the box office, 30 Lafayette Avenue. Prices are $1.50, $2.00, $2.50, $3.00 and $3.50. All mail orders must include a stamped self-addressed envelope for return of tickets.

●

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5 - August 20. The Festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include fifteen concerts by the 104-member Boston Symphony Orchestra, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the Orchestra's Music Director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full Orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, the Orchestra's former Music Director and first Director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct one concert. Eugene Ormandy—a summer resident of the Berkshires—will make his first Festival appearance to conduct one concert and Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear at the Festival are pianists Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis and Seymour Lipkin. Violinist Isaac Stern will be heard at two concerts and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist at two concerts.

Mail orders for tickets to concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the 1961 Berkshire Festival, Tanglewood, are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

Tanglewood Is Summer Home of Boston Orchestra

SPRINGFIELD UNION JUL 30 1961

The music shed at Tanglewood, off Route 183 in Lenox is the summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, which conducts the Berkshire Music Festival during the months of July and August and annually brings more than 100,000 music lovers to the area, often more than 10,000 to a single concert. Spacious lawns and gardens overlooking picturesque Stockbridge Bowl in themselves are a reward to the visitor. In addition to the main concerts, opera and chamber music programs are given weekly during the season in smaller halls at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUN 17 1961

Added Soloists Chosen For Berkshire Festival

LENOX—Charles Munch has announced additional soloists and program revisions for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 festival at Tanglewood.

He has invited soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan to join the Tanglewood Choir in the July 9 performance of Bach's Magnificat. Dr. Munch has also selected his singers for the festival's final concert on Aug. 20 when a performance of Berlioz' Romeo and Juliet will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Koussevitzky Tribute

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

The Trio by Roussel, originally announced by the chamber music concert by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York on July 19, has been withdrawn and will be replaced by Chausson's Trio. Dr. Munch also announced that Lukas Foss' composition, "Time Cycle," which was originally announced as part of the Aug. 5 concert, has been withdrawn from that program but will be performed, by soprano Adele Addison, as part of the Fromm Foundation's concert of contemporary chamber music on July 10.

The festival box office personnel and equipment move this week end from Boston to Tanglewood.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8.30; Sunday, 2.30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach, for the second three, music by Mozart. Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross.

Chamber Music

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood July 5. Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The festival ticket office, beginning June 20, will be open as follows: Monday through Saturday: 9 to 5; Sunday, July 10 to 4. The ticket office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5 to Aug. 20 and remain open through intermission on concert nights.

Mass. Widow

Colgate Alum. Storm

Roberto Gerhard (left) and Wolfgang Fortner, invited teachers at this year's Tanglewood summer school

THE GUARDIAN Thursday July 27 1961

AT TANGLEWOOD

by Colin Mason

Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed at Tanglewood

One of the lawns overlooking Lake Mahkeenac

THE nearest description of Tanglewood in terms of English institutions is a combination of Glyndebourne, Dartington, and the Proms. The estate near Lenox, Massachusetts, from which Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales" took their name, was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936. Since then the orchestra's annual festival there has grown from one week to seven (from next year it is to be eight), and since 1940 has been combined with a summer school of a level and scope probably unrivalled anywhere else in America or indeed in any other continent.

To observe the festival properly one should go after the second week. My visit this month was over the first weekend, when only the first-desk players are there, playing Bach while the rest of the orchestra is having a well-earned breather after a long winter season followed immediately by twelve weeks of slogging at nightly "Pops" and Esplanade Concerts. (The first-desk players are able to take their holiday during these twelve gruelling weeks.) A weekend of Bach (including the four suites in the first programme, four of the Brandenburg concertos in the second, and the D minor Piano Concerto and the Magnificat in the third) is exactly the thing to hear at Tanglewood, but it is not music that fully displays the virtues either of the orchestra or of its conductor, Charles Munch, who is soon to retire. Nor does it draw as large an audience as the later concerts which are given by the full orchestra.

The famous "Shed," a concert hall with a roof but no walls, which was built in 1938 because the orchestra and audience had been drenched in a violent storm the year before, seats 6,000. The lawns around it seat another 9,000, and for the later concerts these are the numbers that attend, willing to pay admission prices even higher than for the orchestra's winter concerts in Boston, which are already higher than average.

With the exception of a chamber concert every Wednesday, given by a well-known quartet or other ensemble, the festival is confined to the weekends, and the rest of the week is devoted to the school. The school was founded by Koussevitzky to give young musicians experience of concerted playing, and this is still its main function, though there are now departments of composition and of "listening and analysis" (a superior brand of music-appreciation). The standard for admission is high, and no tuition in solo playing or singing is offered in the school curriculum (though students may make arrangements with the instructors for private lessons if they wish). Except in the department of listening and analysis all students must enrol for the full term, and the extension of the term to eight weeks next year is planned because it is felt that at present, with a six-week term, the students are forced to break up just as they reach the stage when they could get the greatest benefit from the school.

Most of the teaching staff are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and each one coaches a group of students in the performance of one major chamber work each week. The twenty works chosen for the second week of the school this year included string quartets by Haydn, Mozart, Tchaikovsky, and Debussy, trios by Beethoven and Schubert, piano quintets by Franck and Schumann, and wind quintets by Schoenberg and Fricker. At the end of each week, on Sunday morning, there is a public concert in which two or three of the ensembles perform the work they have prepared. Different works are chosen for rehearsal each week, and the players are all regrouped, so that by the end of the school every student has thoroughly learnt six or seven parts.

Instrumentalists may also, or alternatively, work in the orchestral department, where students learn something of the professional orchestral player's repertory and life, rehearsing three hours a day, six days a week, under Eleazar de Carvalho (or occasionally under an outstanding student conductor), for a public concert every Thursday. The student orchestra may also be called on to play for the opera department—a job they do grudgingly, regarding opera, as the young and earnest often do, as an inferior branch of music. In this department young singers are similarly given a taste of working conditions in opera. Besides one major complete production with orchestra each year, many single scenes from standard operas are given on stage, mostly with piano accompaniment. It was too early in the season for there to be anything to show yet in this department, but the standard may be guessed at from a glance at the repertory of past years, which included the first American productions of "Peter Grimes," "Albert Herring," and Mozart's "Zaide," and many other complete operas from "Iphigenia in Tauris" to Copland's "The Tender Land."

The smallest department in the school and the only one in which individual lessons are given is that of composition, directed by the chairman of the teaching board, Aaron Copland. Usually, at least one well-known composer from abroad is invited to teach, and this year there are two—Roberto Gerhard and Wolfgang Fortner. This too is a practical school, and with the help of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago fellowships are provided for eleven players who are at the disposal of the composition department to play the works of the students at the so-called "composers' forum" every Monday, and also to play at the "seminar in contemporary music" every Friday, at each of which a distinguished visiting composer gives an introductory talk to a performance of one or two of his works.

Something over 400 students can be taken each year, and the average number is around this, though this year it is down by about a hundred. The fees are not high ($220 for the seven weeks' tuition, $215 for board and lodging), and any student who is unable to pay can get a scholarship for the asking, on the understanding that he will repay the money when he can afford to. In fact 90 per cent of the students are excused their tuition fees, and about 10 per cent are excused the dormitory charges. A few of them emerge sadder as well as wiser, having discovered that the musician's life is not for them, but the majority get many times their borrowed money's worth out of the school, and finish the course much better qualified than at the beginning to make their way in their profession and to earn the money out of which to pay back their debt.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
TIMES-DEMOCRAT
SAT. 51,223 SUN. 60,820

JUL 2 1961

42

Catching The Beat In The Music World

BY INA WICKHAM

"How many of us ever stop to think
"Of music as a wonderous magic link
"With God, taking sometimes the peace of prayer —
"When words have failed us 'neath the weight of care
"Music that knows no country, race or creed,
"But gives to each, according to his need"
—Anonymous

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood, Mass., the 210 acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire hills will be held from July 5 through August 20. The festival this year is extended from six to seven weeks. Fifteen concerts by the full orchestra as well as six chamber music concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, seven chamber music recitals and two gala benefit evenings will be included.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the Bach - Mozart programs and a majority of the concerts with the full orchestra. Among his guests will be Leonard Bernstein who will conduct one of the three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra's former music director and the first director of music of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will return to conduct several concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct and Eugene Ormandy will make his first appearance at the Berkshire Festival. Many outstanding soloists will appear.

* * *

ARTHUR FIEDLER and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood for a special concert Aug. 3 to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. The second benefit evening will be Aug. 17. The orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000 seat music shed. The chamber music recitals will be in the 1200 seat theater - concert hall. Those who prefer may hear the concerts from the Great Lawn which adjoins the shed and the theater. The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood will be in session for the seven weeks of the festival. Charles Munch is director of the center and Aaron Copland is his chairman of the faculty.

* * *

PEGGY GRANVILLE - Hicks, the composer who made history as the first woman ever to have an opera commissioned, produced and recorded, will add another page to music archives this summer. This will be the world premiere of her opera "Nausicaa" at the 1961 Athens festival. It is the story of a Mediterranean princess who figured in the Odyssey. The debut will take place Aug. 20 in the Stone theater built by Herod of Attica in 161 A.D. a semi - ruined theater lying on the southern slope of the Athenian Acropolis, still almost intact.

* * *

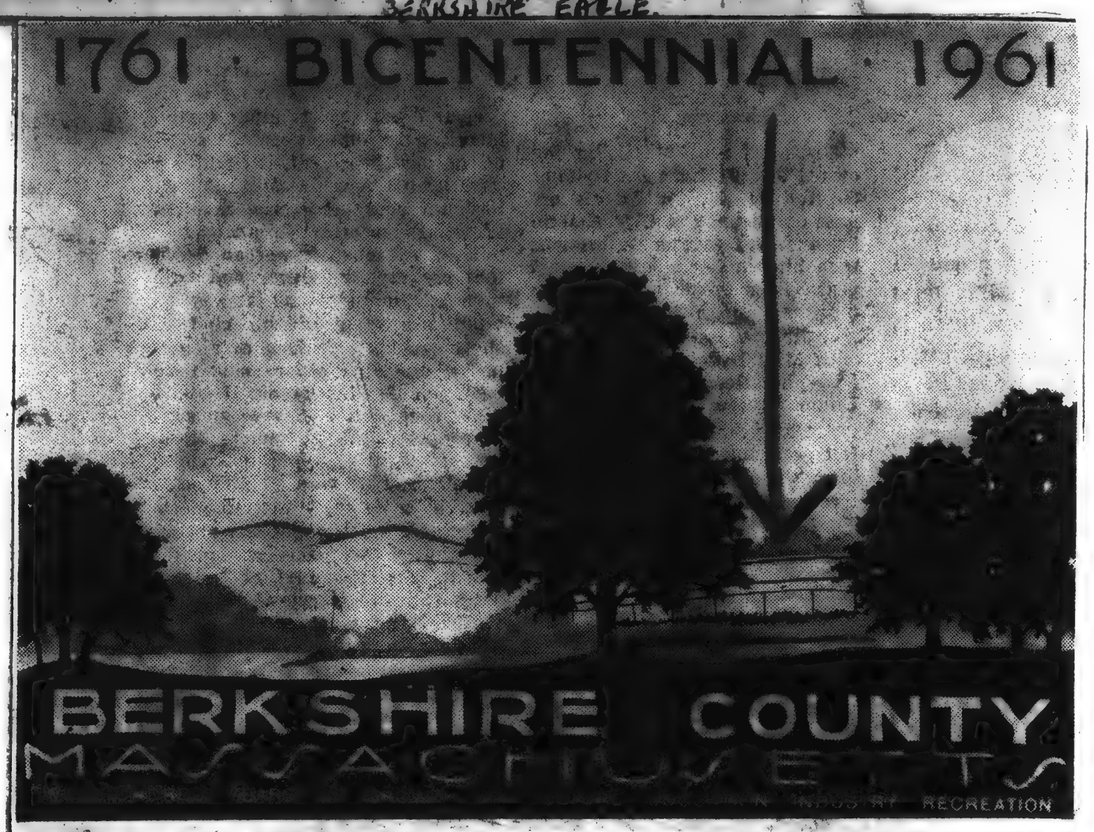
PHILIP HART, associate manager of the Chicago Symphony orchestra will assume the post of concert manager at Juilliard School of Music in New York next season. He will assume his post in September

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

APR 1 1961

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Wednesday, March 8, 1961.
BERKSHIRE EAGLE.



BERKSHIRE BICENTENNIAL is noted by the County Commissioners by a reproduction of this drawing as a letterhead on its stationery. The art work is that of Andrew Flagg, dean of men and art teacher at the North Adams State College. Some firms have indicated that a "slug" of the reproduction will be used on their business envelopes and stationery to promote the observance.

Tanglewood Season Announced

Guest Conductors, Soloists Named for Longer Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held from July 5 through Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the passing of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin one, and Eugene Ormandy will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert. Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear are Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot - Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, and Seymour Lipkin, pianists. Isaac Stern, violinist, will be heard at two concerts, and Adele Addison, soprano, will be soloist at two concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin, and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartók's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra, plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1,200-seat Theater Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30.

The Berkshire Music Center — the orchestra's summer school of music — will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-Aug. 20) of the festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary contribution toward support of the center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

12-60

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861

JUL 23 1961

Take to the Hills—Berkshire

The music is longhair but the listeners strike an informal note as they sprawl on the greensward before the music shed at the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

DAVENPORT, IOWA
TIMES-DEMOCRAT
SAT. 51,223 SUN. 60,829
JUL 2 1961

42

Catching The Beat In The Music World

BY INA WICKHAM

"How many of us ever stop to think
"Of music as a wonderous magic link
"With God, taking sometimes the peace of prayer —
"When words have failed us 'neath the weight of care
"Music that knows no country, race or creed,
"But gives to each, according to his need"
—Anonymous

THE BOSTON Symphony orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival, at Tanglewood, Mass., the 210 acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge in the Berkshire hills will be held from July 5 through August 20. The festival this year is extended from six to seven weeks. Fifteen concerts by the full orchestra as well as six chamber music concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, seven chamber music recitals and two gala benefit evenings will be included.

* * *

CHARLES MUNCH will conduct the Bach - Mozart programs and a majority of the concerts with the full orchestra. Among his guests will be Leonard Bernstein who will conduct one of the three concerts to commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, the orchestra's former music director and the first director of music of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will return to conduct several concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct and Eugene Ormandy will make his first appearance at the Berkshire Festival. Many outstanding soloists will appear.

* * *

ARTHUR FIEDLER and the Boston Pops will be at Tangelwood for a special concert Aug. 3 to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. The second benefit evening will be Aug. 17. The orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000 seat music shed. The chamber music recitals will be in the 1200 seat theater - concert hall. Those who prefer may hear the concerts from the Great Lawn which adjoins the shed and the theater. The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood will be in session for the seven weeks of the festival. Charles Munch is director of the center and Aaron Copland is his chairman of the faculty.

* * *

PEGGY GRANVILLE - Hicks, the composer who made history as the first woman ever to have an opera commissioned, produced and recorded, will add another page to music archives this summer. This will be the world premiere of her opera "Nausicaa" at the 1961 Athens festival. It is the story of a Mediterranean princess who figured in the Odyssey. The debut will take place Aug. 20 in the Stone theater built by Herod of Attica in 161 A.D. a semi - ruined theater lying on the southern slope of the Athenian Acropolis, still almost intact.

* * *

PHILIP HART, associate manager of the Chicago Symphony orchestra will assume the post of concert manager at Juilliard School of Music in New York next season. He will assume his post in September

Pittsfield, Massachusetts, Wednesday, March 8, 1961.

BERKSHIRE BICENTENNIAL is noted by the County Commissioners by a reproduction of this drawing as a letterhead on its stationery. The art work is that of Andrew Flagg, dean of men and art teacher at the North Adams State College. Some firms have indicated that a "slug" of the reproduction will be used on their business envelopes and stationery to promote the observance.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267
APR 1 1961

Tanglewood Season Announced

12-60

Guest Conductors, Soloists Named for Longer Festival

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held from July 5 through Aug. 20. The festival, extended from six to seven weeks, will include 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony, six concerts by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony members devoted to music of Bach and Mozart, and seven chamber music concerts.

Charles Munch, the orchestra's music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with full orchestra. He has invited Leonard Bernstein to conduct one of three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the passing of Serge Koussevitzky, the orchestra's former music director and first director of the Berkshire Music Center.

Pierre Monteux will conduct three concerts, Richard Burgin one, and Eugene Ormandy will make his first festival appearance to conduct one concert. Aaron Copland has been invited to conduct two of his own orchestral works.

Among the soloists who will appear are Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot - Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, and Seymour Lipkin, pianists. Isaac Stern, violinist, will be heard at two concerts, and Adele Addison, soprano, will be soloist at two concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited six members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra to be soloists at the Festival: Richard Burgin, Gino Cioffi, Joseph de Pasquale, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Ralph Gomberg, James Stagliano, Roger Voisin, and Sherman Walt.

Sixteen compositions not previously performed at Tanglewood have been scheduled. They include three Mozart concertos and a Mozart Cantata; Bartók's Viola Concerto and his Rhapsody No. 1 for Violin and Orchestra; Poulenc's "Gloria," for soprano solo, chorus and orchestra, plus compositions by Copland, Honegger, Liszt, Walter Piston, Respighi, William Schuman, Richard Strauss, Harold Shapero, and Viotti.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on Aug. 3 in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. A second Center benefit evening will be on Aug. 17.

The Budapest Quartet, the Curtis Quartet with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes as assisting artists, and the New York Pro Musica are among the seven ensembles scheduled for the chamber music series.

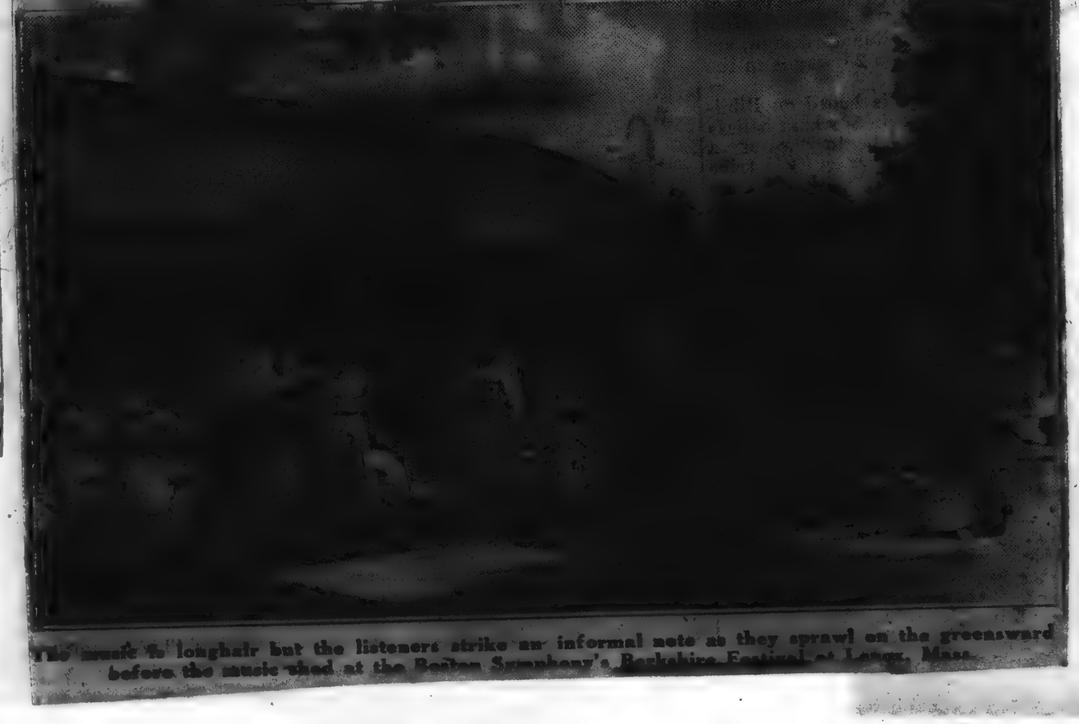
The Festival's orchestral programs will be presented in the 6,000-seat Music Shed on Friday and Saturday evenings at 8:30, and on Sunday afternoons at 2:30. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1,200-seat Theater-Concert Hall on Wednesdays at 8:30.

The Berkshire Music Center — the orchestra's summer school of music — will be in session at Tanglewood for the seven weeks (July 2-Aug. 20) of the festival. Tanglewood visitors may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by a voluntary [illegible] support of the center. Members of the Friends are permitted to attend more than 50 school events—concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

Mail orders for tickets are now being accepted at the Festival Ticket Office, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

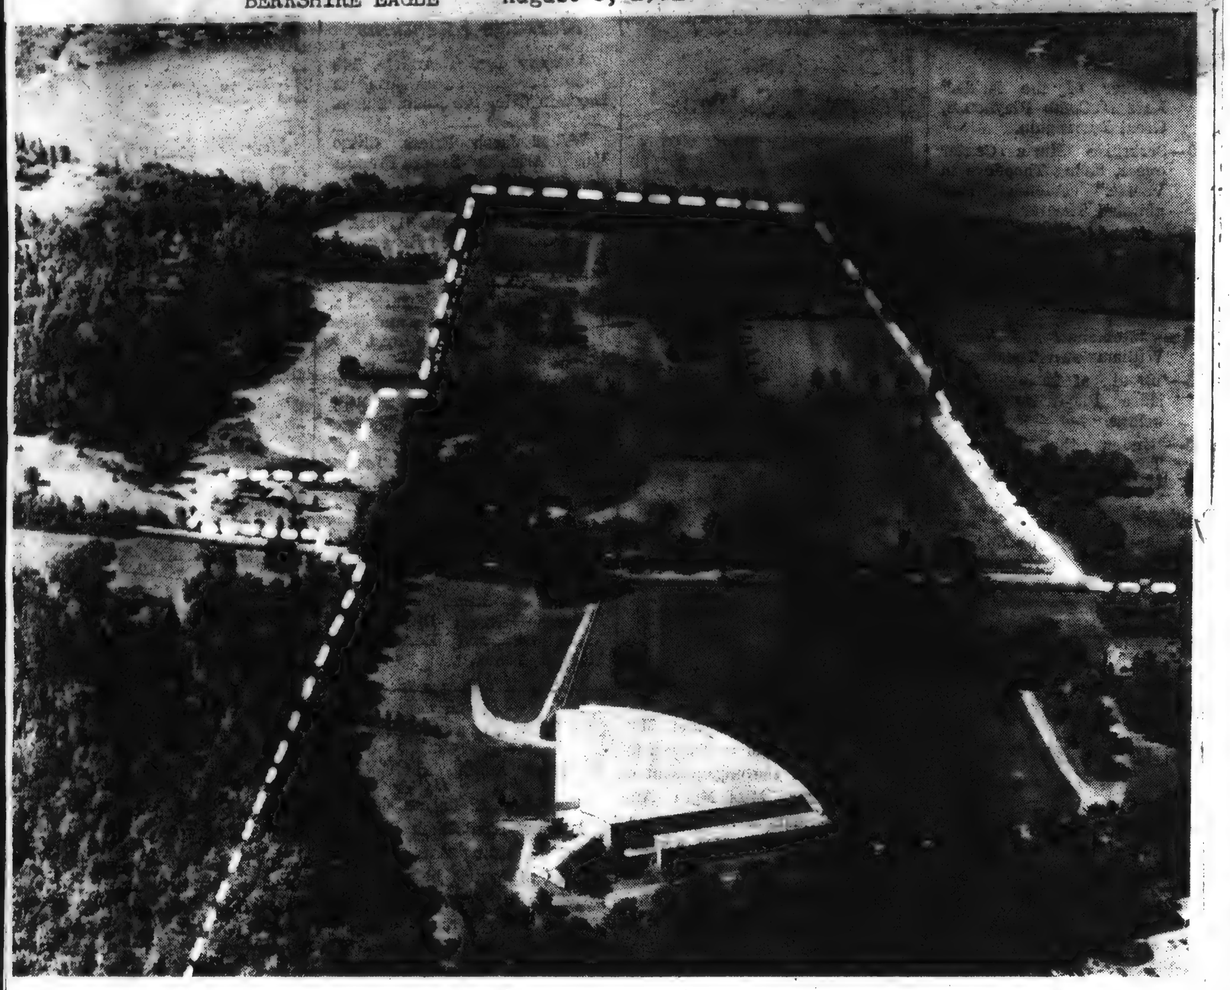
NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861
JUL 23 1961

Take to the Hills—Berkshire



This music is longhair but the listeners strike an informal note as they sprawl on the greensward before the music shed at the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Lenox, Mass.

BERKSHIRE EAGLE August 8, 1961



Fowler-Koladza Aerial Photo

TANGLEWOOD TRACT extending from the concert grounds all the way to Stockbridge Bowl (seen in background) has been altered by acquisition of the barns on the extension of the property at left. The barns have been converted for use as practice studios. The added property was made contiguous with the rest of Tanglewood tract by a swap with Stockbridge Bowl Association, owner of Bullard Park, at left background. A strip of Bullard Park divided the barns from other Tanglewood land. In return for the strip, Tanglewood has built a new roadway (off photo at left), into Bullard Park for SBA.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 67,629 S. 118,093
MAY 14 1961

An Olympic size swimming pool on the cliffs of the Helderberg Mountains, 15 miles west of Albany, brings visitors to John Boyd Thacher State Park.

Tanglewood Symphonies Set

The 1961 Berkshire Nights of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., have been extended from four to five concerts.

Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony, will conduct three of the concerts. All will begin in the Music Shed at 8:30 p.m.

Composer Aaron Copland will conduct two of his own works as part of the July 28 concert; Pierre Monteux will be guest conductor on Aug. 4; Richard Burgin will conduct the Aug. 11 concert; the Festival Chorus will participate in the performance of major choral works at the concerts on July 21, 28 and Aug. 11; Eugene Istomin will be piano soloist at the Aug. 4 concert; and pianist Claudio Arrau will be soloist at the final Friday concert on Aug. 18.

Here are the programs (subject to change):

July 21 — Beethoven: "Coriolan" Overture; Brahms: Symphony No. 1; Poulenc: Gloria (Adele Addison, Festival Chorus); Charles Munch, conductor.

July 28 — Copland: "Preamble"; Copland: "Appalachian Spring" (conducted by the composer); Ravel: "Daphnis et Chloe" (Festival Chorus); Charles Munch, conductor.

August 4—Beethoven: "Fidelio" Overture; Schumann: Piano Concerto (Istomin); Strauss: Dance from "Salome"; Sibelius: Symphony No. 2; Pierre Monteux, conductor.

August 11—Haydn: Symphony No. 88; Mahler: Symphony No. 2 (Festival Chorus & Soloists); Richard Burgin, conductor.

August 18—Mendelssohn: Octet for Strings; Debussy: "Le Mer"; Beethoven: Piano Concerto No. 4 (Arrau); Charles Munch, conductor.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Patriot-Ledger (e)
QUINCY, Mass.
Circ. 47,164
JUL 3 1961

Boston Symphony To Open Tanglewood Berkshire Festival

LENOX (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox this Friday with Charles Munch directing.

The orchestra will present three concerts of Bach music to be given on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Munch was expected to arrive today from Europe where he has been vacationing since the end of the Symphony season in April.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 2 1961

Tanglewood Conductors

A symphony orchestra is dominated by its conductor, and its playing to a considerable extent reflects his individuality. The conductor controls volume and tempo, timbre and nuance. Proper balance among the instrumental choirs is his responsibility, for he alone can hear them as a whole, and his interpretation of the music must prevail, otherwise there is only chaos. The man on the podium runs the show.

In the annual Berkshire Festival opening this week at Tanglewood interest centers even more than usual on the conductors. While Charles Munch will again bear the bulk of the burden, ably assisted again by Pierre Monteux, Leonard Bernstein will guest-conduct one concert and Eugene Ormandy another, each on a Saturday night. In addition Hugh Ross, Lukas Foss, Aaron Copland and the Boston Symphony's esteemed and accomplished concertmaster Richard Burgin will conduct one apiece, Foss and Copland directing their own works.

The energetic Mr. Bernstein, under seven-year contract as music director of the New York Philharmonic, returns to the familiar scenes of his musical training and apprenticeship to help commemorate the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitsky, founder of the Berkshire Music Center, who early recognized and encouraged the exceptional Bernstein talents. Mr. Ormandy, leader of the velvety Philadelphia Orchestra for more than a quarter century, will be making his Tanglewood debut. And Arthur Fiedler will again lead the Boston "Pops" Orchestra in a benefit concert.

Though not actively engaged in this year's festival, still another conductor is indirectly involved; for a little more than a year from now Erich Leinsdorf is to succeed Dr. Munch as head of the Boston Symphony and, as such, music director at Tanglewood. Whether Mr. Leinsdorf will have a hand in the preparation of next summer's Tanglewood programs, and perhaps in their presentation as well, remains to be seen.

With this year's festival continuing for seven weeks instead of the usual six, the summer school of music's session can be prolonged. Again the Bach Mozart series features the first two weeks in the Music Shed and the Wednesday night chamber music programs are impressive. Marking the 150th anniversary of the birth of Franz Liszt in October, both of his piano concertos are to be performed by Byron Janis on the last Sunday in July; other outstanding pianists to be heard include Seymour Lipkin, Eugene Istomin, Claudio Arrau and Gary Graffman, and the violinist Isaac Stern will make two appearances.

Wise artistic direction through the years has brought the Berkshire Festival to pre-eminence among summer music enterprises in this country, and kept it there; its standards are of the highest and have never been relaxed. Tanglewood's beauteous, edifying existence is one of Western Massachusetts' rarest distinctions.

44

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 + RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 29 1961

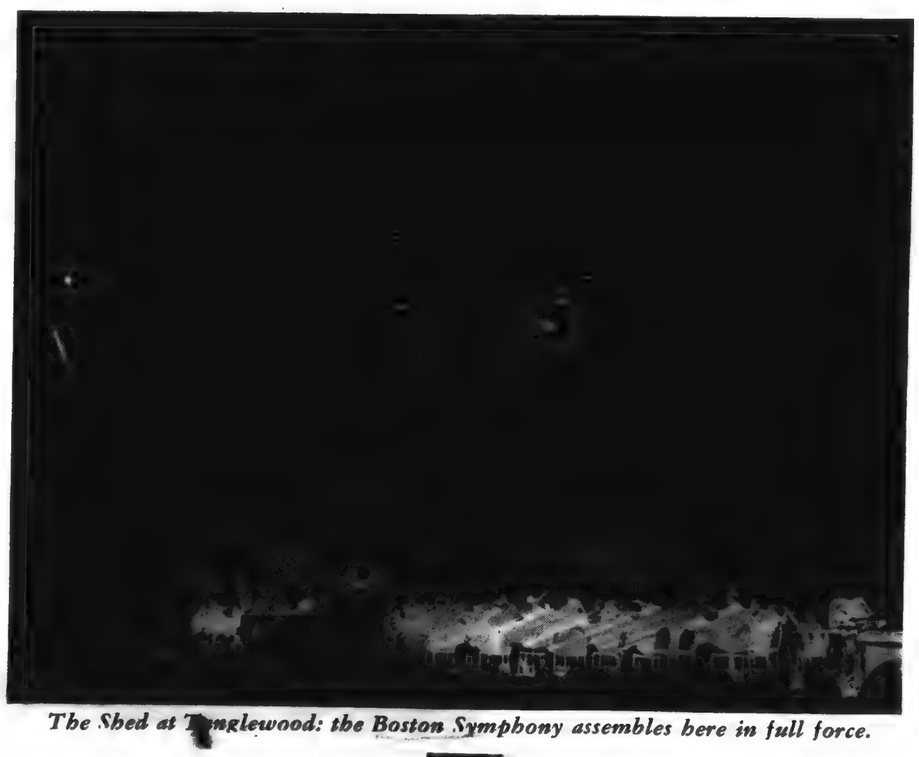
VIOLINIST'S VIEW of famous Lake Taal in the Philippine island of Luzon is one of 30 photographs by Minot A. Beale, longtime member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, going on exhibition Tuesday for a month at the Berkshire Museum. The pictures were taken during last spring's tour of the BSO to the Far East, which also took in Formosa, Japan, Australia.

165 Church Street

HIGH FIDELITY
GREAT BARRINGTON, MASS.
MONTHLY 110,268

JUL 1961

1961



The Shed at Tanglewood: the Boston Symphony assembles here in full force.

45

TANGLEWOODS BIG PROBLEM: THE

by EGON STADELMAN

Only a few weeks separate us fr
tant annual music festival. An Tanglewood, there will begin on around a series of concerts of sands of music lovers will enjo and the program of which consis

The BSO whose reins Charles Mun son, has been closely identifie ter of a century. Under the di part in the musical festival fo it has become unthinkable that the program. For the great pre concerts of the BSO have become Compared with them, all other o chamber music concerts which al secondary importance, at least concerned. This in itself is n that the majority of concert-go sic, and classical works to tho fore not surprising that this y part of its Tanglewood programs vely few modern works are found of them are indubitably Francis Cycle", William Shuman's "Seven
"Symphony of Psalms". The rest exception of works which most m less frequently, and almost all in the past winter season. Amo of Bela Bartok's and Gustav Mah

This fact -- far more than the composers -- has angered a numb logists. The directors of the Tanglewood Festival by their pr not only the same composers, bu works, of making it almost impo repertories of the Berkshire F of placing insufficient emphasi one has normally less opportuni it is said -- is becomi and the greatest responsibility unimaginative and routine progr

Thomas D. Perry, the manager of these accusations. Music festi first class performances of valu offer the unusual. It was neve particularly original programing lack of time makes it impossible festival too many works with whi

Musikfestspiele — aber wie?

Tanglewoods grosses Problem: Die Gestaltung seiner Programme

Von EGON STADELMAN

Nur wenige Wochen trennen uns noch von der Eröffnung der bedeutendsten Musikfestspiele, die alljährlich im Sommer in den Vereinigten Staaten stattfinden. Am 7. Juli beginnt in Tanglewood, in der lieblichen Hügellandschaft von Massachusetts, das Berkshire Festival, in dessen Mittelpunkt eine Serie von Konzerten des Boston Symphonie Orchestra steht. Zehntausende von Musikliebhabern werden auch in diesem Jahr die Konzerte genießen, die am 20. August ihren Abschluß finden werden, und deren Programm aus 67 verschiedenen Werken bestehen wird.

*

Das Boston Symphony Orchestra, dessen Leitung Charles Munch im nächsten Jahre niederlegen wird, ist mit dem Berkshire Festival seit einem Vierteljahrhundert fest verknüpft. 1936 nahm es unter der Leitung von Serge Koussevitsky zum ersten Male an den Musikfestspielen teil, und seither sind seine Darbietungen aus dem Programm der Festspiele nicht mehr fortzudenken. Für die weitaus meisten Besucher von Tanglewood sind die Konzerte der Boston Symphony identisch mit dem Berkshire Festival; im Vergleich zu ihnen sind alle anderen Darbietungen — wie etwa die ebenfalls in Tanglewood stattfindenden Kammermusikkonzerte — von untergeordneter Bedeutung, zumindest was die Majorität des Publikums betrifft. Das ist nicht weiter erstaunlich, denn es ist eine bekannte Tatsache, daß die Mehrzahl der Konzertbesucher lieber symphonische Werke hört als Kammermusik, und auch lieber klassische Werke als solche zeitgenössischer Komponisten. Es kann daher nicht wunder nehmen, daß das Boston Symphony Orchestra auch in diesem Jahre wieder den weitaus größten Teil seiner Tanglewood-Programme klassischen Kompositionen widmen wird. Nur verhältnismäßig wenig moderne Werke finden sich in diesen Programmen. Die wichtigsten von ihnen sind zweifellos Francis Poulencs "Gloria", Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle", William Shumans "Seventh Symphony" und Igor Stravinskys "Symphony of Psalms". Der Rest der Darbietungen wird fast ausnahmslos aus Werken bestehen, die die meisten Musikliebhaber schon mehr oder weniger häufig gehört haben, und die fast alle auch während der vergangenen Wintersaison bereits von dem Boston Symphony Orchestra zu Gehör gebracht wurden. Zu den wenigen Ausnahmen gehören ein Viola-Concerto von Bela Bartok und Gustav Mahlers "Auferstehungs-Sinfonie".

*

Diese Tatsache — weit mehr als die Bevorzugung klassischer Komponisten, die man als fast unvermeidlich bezeichnen kann — ist es, die letzthin eine Reihe von Musikfreunden und professionellen Musikkennern in Harnisch gebracht hat. Man wirft den Leitern der Boston Symphony vor, daß sie die Tanglewood-Festspiele durch ihre Programmgestaltung herabwürdigen, daß sie immer und immer wieder nicht nur die gleichen Komponisten, sondern auch allzu häufig die gleichen Werke spielen, daß sich das Repertoire des Berkshire Festival kaum von dem der regulären Wintersaison unterscheidet, und daß nicht genügend Wert darauf gelegt wird, um auch Kompositionen zu Gehör zu bringen, die man weniger häufig Gelegenheit hat zu hören. Die Festspiele in Tanglewood, so wird behauptet, werden immer uninteressanter und banaler, und die Hauptverantwortung dafür trägt die einfallslose und schablonenhafte Programmgestaltung des Boston Symphony Orchestra.

*

Thomas D. Perry, der Manager des Orchesters, hat sich gegen diese Vorwürfe energisch zur Wehr gesetzt. Musikfestspiele, so entgegnet er, sind dazu da, um wertvolle musikalische Werke erstrangig aufzuführen, nicht aber um Ungewöhnliches zu bieten. Es war niemals beabsichtigt, so erklärt Mr. Perry, das Programm des Berkshire Festival besonders originell zu gestalten, und im übrigen verbiete Zeitmangel, in das Repertoire für die Festspiele allzuviele Werke aufzunehmen, mit denen das Orchester nicht bereits vertraut ist. Diese Einwedung ist zweifellos durchaus berechtigt. Eine wirklich gute Konzertaufführung setzt zahlreiche Proben voraus, und die Spielzeit der Bostoner Symphoniker ist ohnehin länger als die aller anderen amerikanischen Sinfonieorchester, denn sie umfaßt zurzeit nicht weniger als 50 Wochen.

*

Trotzdem wäre zu fragen, ob nicht doch ein Mittelweg gefunden werden kann, der auch den anspruchsvolleren Besuchern der Tanglewood-Festspiele gerecht wird, ohne einerseits die Kräfte des Boston Symphony Orchestra übermäßig zu beanspruchen und andererseits der Popularität ihrer iere-ter tit

30 to cal sico-

ain ne and of compositions which glewood Festival in -- teresting and banal, ffairs lies with the energetically denied e -- in order to give and not in order to rry explains -- to do

Festival. Moreover, the repertory of the not already farmiliar.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
JUN 4 1961

Berkshire Festival

An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is reported by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks, beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends.

The Festival Chorus and several soloists also will appear in many of these concerts.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUN 3 1961

Ticket Sales Up At Tanglewoo

LENOX (UPI) — The Bost Symphony Orchestra report Friday night an increase about $9000 in ticket sales ov last year for the 1961 Berkshi festival at Tanglewood.

The festival begins July 5 a lasts through Aug. 20.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3
JUN 4 1961

Tanglewood

An increase of $9,0 sales for the Boston Orchestra's 1961 Ber tival at Tanglewood, L is reported today by Perry, the orchestra' The boost, compared last year, includ series subscriptio gency, Inc.

ond 2-4200

Mass.

Jay

e staff of the Orchestra will Tanglewood in preparation for ven-week sum-
opens July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341
JUN 3 1961

BRIEFS

TANGLEWOOD SALES

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported Friday night an increase in about $9,000 in ticket sales over last year for the 1961 Berkshire festival at Tanglewood. The festival begins July 5 and lasts through Aug. 20.

gency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUN 4 1961

INCREASED SALE FOR LENOX TICKETS

BOSTON — An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported Saturday by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two festival weekends (July 7-9, 14-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends. The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

gency, Inc.
ond 2-4200
nn.
3,147
61 it ning ons

Sees ase
00 in ticket ymphony Or-ire Festival
ported to the . Perry, the es, compared ear, includes subscriptions, le thinks the icket buyers extension of the Festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two festival weekends (July 7-9, 14-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends. The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

TANGLEWOODS BIG PROBLEM: THE SHAPING OF ITS PROGRAMS

by EGON STADELMAN

Only a few weeks separate us from the opening of America's most important annual music festival. In the lovely hills of Massachusetts, at Tanglewood, there will begin on July 7 the Berkshire Festival, centering around a series of concerts of theBSO. This year again, tens of thousands of music lovers will enjoy the concerts which end on August 20 and the program of which consists of 67 different works.

*

The BSO whose reins Charles Munch will relinquish after next year's season, has been closely identified with the Berkshire Festival for a quarter of a century. Under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky it took part in the musical festival for the first time in 1936, and since then it has become unthinkable that its performances should not form part of the program. For the great preponderance of visitors to Tanglewood the concerts of the BSO have become identical with the Berkshire Festival. Compared with them, all other offerings -- suchas, for instance, the chamber music concerts which also take place at Tanglewood -- are of secondary importance, at least as far as the majority of the public is concerned. This in itself is not astonishing because it is a known fact that the majority of concert-goers prefer symphonic works to chamber music, and classical works to those of contemporary composers. It is therefore not surprising that this year again the BSO will devote the greater part of its Tanglewood programs to classical compositions. Only relatively few modern works are found in these programs. The most important of them are indubitably Francis Poulenc's "Gloria", Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle", William Shuman's "Seventh Symphony", and Igor STravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms". The rest of the offerings will consist without exception of works which most music lovers have already heard more or less frequently, and almost all of which have been performed by the BSO in the past winter season. Among the few exceptionsare a viola concerto of Bela Bartok's and Gustav Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony".

*

This fact -- far more than the almost inevitable preference for classical composers -- has angered a number of music lovers and professional musicologists. The directors of the BSO are being accused of demeaning the Tanglewood Festival by their programming, of playing over and over again not only the same composers, but also -- all too frequently -- the same works, of making it almost impossible to detect any difference between the repertories of the Berkshire Festival and the regular winter season, and of placing insufficient emphasis on the performance of compositions which one has normally less opportunity to hear. The Tanglewood Festival is -- it is said -- is becoming increasingly uninteresting and banal, and the greatest responsibility for this state of affairs lies with the unimaginative and routine programming of the BSO.

*

Thomas D. Perry, the manager of the orchestra, has energetically denied these accusations. Music festivals exist -- says he -- in order to give first class performances of valuable musical works,and not in order to offer the unusual. It was never intended -- Mr. Perry explains -- to do particularly original programing for the Berkshire Festival. Moreover, lack of time makes it impossible to introduce into the repertory of the festival too many works with which the orchestra is not already familiar.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Review
DARIEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,147

JUN 15 1961

Current and Coming Attractions

Tanglewood Sees Large Increase

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported to the Review by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He thinks the extra interest by ticket buyers may be due to the extension of the Festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through August 20. This will allow those who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the Orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-20-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20). The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Doctor Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUN 4 1961

INCREASED SALE FOR LENOX TICKETS

BOSTON — An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported Saturday by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two festival weekends (July 7-9, 14-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends. The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

JUN 4 1961

Berkshire Festival

An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is reported by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks, beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends.

The Festival Chorus and several soloists also will appear in many of these concerts.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUN 3 1961

Ticket Sales Up At Tanglewood

LENOX (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported Friday night an increase of about $9000 in ticket sales over last year for the 1961 Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

The festival begins July 5 and lasts through Aug. 20.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,22 .86

JUN 4 1961

Tanglewood Up

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is reported today by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The boost, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542

JUN 24 1961

Along the Way

The administrative staff of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its offices at Tanglewood in Lenox Monday in preparation for the orchestra's seven-week summer season which opens July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341

JUN 8 1961

BRIEFS

TANGLEWOOD SALES

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported Friday night an increase in about $9,000 in ticket sales over last year for the 1961 Berkshire festival at Tanglewood. The festival begins July 5 and lasts through Aug. 20.

TANGLEWOODS BIG PROBLEM: THE SHAPING OF ITS PROGRAMS

by EGON STADELMAN

Only a few weeks separate us from the opening of America's most important annual music festival. In the lovely hills of Massachusetts, at Tanglewood, there will begin on July 7 the Berkshire Festival, centering around a series of concerts of theBSO. This year again, tens of thousands of music lovers will enjoy the concerts which end on August 20 and the program of which consists of 67 different works.

#

The BSO whose reins Charles Munch will relinquish after next year's season, has been closely identified with the Berkshire Festival for a quarter of a century. Under the direction of Serge Koussevitzky it took part in the musical festival for the first time in 1936, and since then it has become unthinkable that its performances should not form part of the program. For the great preponderance of visitors to Tanglewood the concerts of the BSO have become identical with the Berkshire Festival. Compared with them, all other offerings -- suchas, for instance, the chamber music concerts which also take place at Tanglewood -- are of secondary importance, at least as far as the majority of the public is concerned. This in itself is not astonishing because it is a known fact that the majority of concert-goers prefer symphonic works to chamber music, and classical works to those of contemporary composers. It is therefore not surprising that this year again the BSO will devote the greater part of its Tanglewood programs to classical compositions. Only relatively few modern works are found in these programs. The most important of them are indubitably Francis Poulenc's "Gloria", Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle", William Shuman's "Seventh Symphony", and Igor STravinsky's "Symphony of Psalms". The rest of the offerings will consist without exception of works which most music lovers have already heard more or less frequently, and almost all of which have been performed by the BSO in the past winter season. Among the few exceptionsare a viola concerto of Bela Bartok's and Gustav Mahler's "Resurrection Symphony".

#

This fact -- far more than the almost inevitable preference for classical composers -- has angered a number of music lovers and professional musicologists. The directors of the BSO are being accused of demeaning the Tanglewood Festival by their programming, of playing over and over again not only the same composers, but also -- all too frequently -- the same works, of making it almost impossible to detect any difference between the repertories of the Berkshire Festival and the regular winter season, and of placing insufficient emphasis on the performance of compositions which one has normally less opportunity to hear. The Tanglewood FEstival is -- it is said -- is becoming increasingly uninteresting and banal, and the greatest responsibility for this state of affairs lies with the unimaginative and routine programming of the BSO.

#

Thomas D. Perry, the manager of the orchestra, has energetically denied these accusations. Music festivals exist -- says he -- in order to give first class performances of valuable musical works,and not in order to offer the unusual. It was never intended -- Mr. Perry explains -- to do particularly original programing for the Berkshire Festival. Moreover, lack of time makes it impossible to introduce into the repertory of the festival too many works with which the orchestra is not already farmiliar.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Review
DARIEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,147
JUN 15 1961

Current and Coming Attractions

Tanglewood Sees Large Increase

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported to the Review by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He thinks the extra interest by ticket buyers may be due to the extension of the Festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through August 20. This will allow those who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the Orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20). The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Doctor Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will be[gin] July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUN 4 1961

INCREASED SALE FOR LENOX TICKETS

BOSTON — An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported Saturday by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two festival weekends (July 7-9, 14-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends. The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
JUN 4 1961

Berkshire Festival

An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is reported by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks, beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends.

The Festival Chorus and several soloists also will appear in many of these concerts.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUN 3 1961

Ticket Sales Up At Tanglewood

LENOX (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported Friday night an increase of about $9000 in ticket sales over last year for the 1961 Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

The festival begins July 5 and lasts through Aug. 20.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861
JUN 4 1961

Tanglewood Up

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is reported today by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The festival, compared to this time last year, [illegible] many more series subscriptions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542
JUN 2 4 1961

Along the Way

The administrative staff of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its offices at Tanglewood in Lenox Monday in preparation for the orchestra's seven-week summer season which opens July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341
JUN 3 1961

BRIEFS

TANGLEWOOD SALES

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported Friday night an increase in about $9,000 in ticket sales over last year for the 1961 Berkshire festival at Tanglewood. The festival begins July 5 and lasts through Aug. 20.

This contention is undoubtedly thoroughly justified. A really good performance presupposes numerous rehearsals and the playing season of the BSO members is already longer than that of all other American symphony orchestras. It extends over no fewer than fifty weeks.

#

Nonetheless, it may be questioned if a middle ground could not be found that would do justice to the more demanding of the Tanglewood visitors without, on the one hand, overly straining the BSO, or, on the other hand, diminishing the popularity of its concerts. It goes without saying that music festivals must remain popular and not be designed to attract merely a small circle of music lovers. Quite apart from everything else, the Berkshire FEstival is a commercial undertaking whose entire structure requires the greatest possible income or at least avoidance of a deficit. Apart from that, however, the artistic mission of the Tanglewood Festival consists in the first place of bringing music "to the people". Whoever has attended one of the concerts of the BSO in the Berkshires knows that this is not an empty phrase. It may be truethat to get his money's worth, the intellectual music lover will have to attend the chamber music performances and the special performances of modern music which take place at Tanglewood. The majority of the audience undoubtedly wants precisely what the symphony concerts offer.

It is here that the real nub of the problem lies. Is it the primary business of the Tanglewood Festival to please its audience or to educate it musically? And can one please, without avoiding a certain lack of originality ? (sic!!)

#

Every connoisseur of music literature knows that there is no dearth of classical works which are effective with the [larger] public and yet are performed -- at least here in the United States -- very rarely, if at all. A bit more freshness and enterprising vigor would neither hurt the popularity of the Berkshire Festival nor put an unreasonable burden on the BSO. Naturally that would presuppose corresponding programming for the regular winter season since it would be impossible to impose upon the orchestra a repertory especially devised for the Festival. In other words: The freshening up of the BSO's regular repertory would automatically also benefit the festival at Tanglewood.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Review
DARIEN, Conn.
Weekly Circ. 3,147
JUN 15 1961

Current and Coming Attractions

Tanglewood Sees Large Increase

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported to the Review by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He thinks the extra interest by ticket buyers may be due to the extension of the Festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through August 20. This will allow those who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the Orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20). The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Doctor Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will be [illegible] July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486
JUN 4 1961

Berkshire Festival

An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is reported by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks, beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends.

The Festival Chorus and several soloists also will appear in many of these concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUN 3 1961

Ticket Sales Up At Tanglewood

LENOX (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported Friday night an increase of about $9000 in ticket sales over last year for the 1961 Berkshire festival at Tanglewood.

The festival begins July 5 and lasts through Aug. 20.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
DAILY NEWS
D. 2,021,395 S. 3,221,861
JUN 4 1961

Tanglewood Up

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., is reported today by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The boost, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542
JUN 2 4 1961

Along the Way

The administrative staff of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its offices at Tanglewood in Lenox Monday in preparation for the orchestra's seven-week summer season which opens July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,341
JUN 3 1961

BRIEFS

TANGLEWOOD SALES

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra reported Friday night an increase in about $9,000 in ticket sales over last year for the 1961 Berkshire festival at Tanglewood. The festival begins July 5 and lasts through Aug. 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUN 4 1961

INCREASED SALE FOR LENOX TICKETS

BOSTON — An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported Saturday by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two festival weekends (July 7-9, 14-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends. The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836
JUN 4 1961

46

TUNING UP!

Summer Music Gets Ready

By MILES KASTENDIECK

JUNE comes bustin' out all over with plans for summer music.

Of course the 44th successive season of the famed Stadium concerts at Lewisohn Stadium on the City College campus and the Guggenheim Memorial Concerts in Central and Prospect Parks have been an integral part of summer music long before New York became a Summer Festival. New Yorkers take their continuance in stride.

●

THE TWO immediate attractions outside of town have issued opposite announcements. Unless the sum of $50,000 is raised within the next two weeks the Empire State Music Festival now held in Bear Mountain-Harriman State Park will be compelled to cancel its 7th season.

On the other hand, an increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood attests growing interest in this summer attraction. The Caramoor June Festival in Westchester has planned its usual weekend programs.

●

WITH THREE-QUARTERS of its budget on hand and its program ready, the Empire State Festival hangs in the balance. That this worthy enterprise should falter would be most unfortunate. Not only has it found an excellent site to hold its season of opera, concerts, and ballet at Bear Mountain, but it has distinguished itself each year in presenting worthwhile novelties. Since it has been a stimulating factor in the whole summer picture, it should, therefore, open as scheduled on July 14 and run through Aug. 14.

●

THE BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL has been extended an extra week to allow travelers planning an August vacation the opportunity to hear the Bostonians at Tanglewood. The extra interest indicated in the advance sales suggests endorsement of the new policy. Beginning July 5 the Festival continues for several weeks through Aug. 20.

As adopted last summer Stadium Concerts will follow a four-per-week pattern. Events have been scheduled for Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Saturday nights from June 20 through Aug. 5. The Guggenheim Memorial Concerts will find the Goldman Band playing on the Central Park Mall beginning June 21 and in Brooklyn the following night. Brooklyn concerts are on Thursday and Saturday; the Central Park Concerts are on other nights except Tuesday.

●

WHILE THESE events are of immediate interest, others coming later in the summer will undoubtedly be announced. Summer music continues to thrive.

Miles Kastendieck reviews musical events in weekday issues of the Journal-American.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUN 4 1961

Much Advance Interest In Berkshire Festival

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported today by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The increase, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest to the extension of the season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through August 20. This has allowed travelers who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the orchestra perform in its summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends, July 7-8-9 and 14-15-16. He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends, July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20. The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Doctor Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUN 8 1961

Festival Ticket Sale Ahead of Last Year

Increase Believed Due To Seven-Week Season

Advance Sale To Date $9000 Ahead of Same Time In 1960.—Munch Will Conduct Six Bach, Mozart Concerts With Boston Symphony.—Six Noted Conductors To Be Guests.

An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is reported by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks, beginning July 5 and continuing through August 20. This has allowed travelers who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20). The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

THE TOWN CRIER, WESTPORT • FAIRFIELD • WESTON, CONN.

E SPOTLIGHT:

At Tanglewood . . .

Charles Munch has invited Eugene Ormandy, Aaron Copland and Byron Janis to be his guests at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Tanglewood concerts this week in Lenox, Mass.

Mr. Ormandy, music director of the Philadelphia Orchestra and a summer resident of the Berkshires, will make his first Tanglewood appearance Saturday evening, July 29, at 8:30, when he conducts the orchestra in a program to include "Don Juan" by Richard Strauss, the Third Symphony by Roy Harris, Roussel's "Bacchus et Ariane" and the Symphony No. 2 by Brahms.

Mr. Copland, chairman of the faculty of the Berkshire Music Center, will conduct two of his own compositions as the opening works at the Friday evening, July 28, at 8:30 concert, the "Preamble for a Solemn Occasion," and his ballet, "Appalachian Spring." Mr. Munch will conduct Ravel's "Daphnis et Chloe," with the festival chorus as the closing work at this concert.

At the Sunday afternoon concert, July 30, at 2:30, Dr. Munch has invited Byron Janis to perform two piano concerti by Franz Liszt — No. 1 in E-flat major and No. 2 in A major. Walter Piston's "Three New England Sketches" and Beethoven's Symphony No. 4 will also be heard.

The fourth concert of the chamber music series will be given by the New York Pro Musica in the Tanglewood Theatre Wednesday, July 26, at 8:30. Directed by Noah Greenberg with ten vocalists and instrumentalists, the program will consist of vocal and instrumental compositions by the early Renaissance masters Heinrich Isaac, Ludwig Senfl and Orlando Lassus, and the Glogauer Liederbuch.

The Berkshire Music Center opera department, under the direction of Boris Goldovsky, will present scenes from well-known operas for the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center Tuesday evening, July 25, at 8:30 and Sunday evening, July 30, at 8:30 in the theatre. Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are also invited to the following this week: Composer's Forum Monday, July 24, 8:30 p.m., Chamber Music Hall; Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Thursday, July 27, 8:30 p.m., Music Shed; Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday July 28, 3:15, and Berkshire Music Center chamber music Sunday morning, July 30, 10 a.m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
MAY 27 1961

Tanglewood Ticket Sales Are Brisk

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood is reported by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the Festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20. This has allowed travelers who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Ormandy to conduct some of the fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; Aug 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20.) The festival chorus and several soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUN 3 1961

Increase of $9,000 In Ticket Sales For '61 Tanglewood

An increase of $9,000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, was reported today by Thomas D. Perry, the orchestra's manager. The increase in sales, compared with this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the Festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through Aug. 20. This has allowed travelers who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Bach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and Eugene Normandy to conduct some of the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends (July 21-22-23, 28-29-30; Aug. 4-5-6, 11-12-13, 18-19-20). The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

Dr. Munch has also invited eminent chamber music ensembles and soloists to perform at the seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts which will begin July 5.

USIS - PANAMA

Berkshire Festival Dream Of Few Now Pleasure Of Millions

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 532,078 S. 907,027
APR 23 1961

1961

Berkshire Fete

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held July 5-Aug. 20. The programs include 15 concerts by the Boston Symphony, six chamber concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, and seven other chamber music concerts.

Conductors will be Charles Munch, Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Richard Burgin, Eugene Ormandy and Aaron Copland. Soloists are Claudio Arrau, Lukas Foss, Gary Graffman, Nicole Henriot-Schweitzer, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, Seymour Lipkin, Isaac Stern, and Adele Addison in addition to six members of the orchestra.

Nathaniel Hawthorne, in 1848, moved to the tiny village of Lenox in the Berkshire Hills of western Massachusetts where he lived in a little red cottage on the edge of the estate named Tanglewood which belonged to William Aspinwall Tappan. A Boston banker and merchant, Mr. Tappan had bought several farms near Lenox, an area famed for its beauty, and incorporated them into a gentleman's estate.

While a Bershire resident, Hawthorne began work on "The House of Seven Gables", wrote "The Wonder Book" edited and wrote the preface for a third edition of his "Twice Told Tales", and planned "Tanglewood Tales" (named after the estate) as a supplement to "The Wonder Book".

In describing the view from Tanglewood, Hawthorne wrote: "There is a glen between this house and the lake lake through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain, looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified foliage of its woods; and beyond Monument the dome of Taconic, whose round head is more distinct than ever in winter, when its snow patches are visable but which generally is a dark blue unvaried mountain top."

The beauty of the countryside and the area's literary (Longfellow, Holmes and Melville were also sometime resident) have continued to attract distinguished residents through the years, Thus it is not surprising that when in the summer of 1934 the residents desired 'to hear symphony music under the stars' they held three out-of-door concerts, performed by members of the New York Philharmonic conducted by Doctor Henry Hadley, at one of the estates at Interlake near Stockbridge.

In the autumn of 1934 the protagonists for concerts in the Berkshires incorporated The Berkshire Symphonic Festival and, after another successful series of concerts in the summer of 1935 Serge Koussevitzky and the Boston Symphony Orchestra were invited to participate in the 1936 Festival.

In the winter of 1936 the descendants of William Aspinwall Tappan offered Tanglewood as a gift to Doctor Koussevitzgy and the Orchestra. Its 210 acres of lawn and meadow with magnificient hemlocks, elms, pines and birches and with the view little changed since Hawthorne described it caused Doctor Koussevizky to state: "This is wonderful. We make beautiful music here. Festivals of music grow up for various purposes on a scale commensurate with their surroundings."

In the summer of 1937, with the advent of Tanglewood as its new home, the Festival was expanded from one week to two and six concerts were given in a tent on the grounds. It was at the second concert of the season that the oftentold story of "The $100,000 Storm" occured. In his boob, "Music Under the Moon", John G. W. Mahanna relates:

"History was made at Tanglewood on the opening night of the second series — August 12, 1937. The bigget crowd in the history of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival has been attracted to Tanglewood for an all-Wagner program.

"When the orchestra started to play the 'Ride of the Valkries,' the heavens opened up, lightning streaked through the sky, thunder clapped overhead and heavy ranis bombarded the canvas roof of the tent. The roar it created within the shelter completely drowned out the music coming from the stage.

"Koussevitzky surrendered to the elements, and, as one critc described the incident, 'even the French horns were shipping water.'

"The audience was in fine humor, even though many sitting near the main poles were drenched. Dr. Koussevitzky started a second time when the storm quieted a moment, but before the trumpet reached its second call in the introduction of the 'Rienzi' overture, rain pelted the canvas roof again, compelling the conductor to wave his arms in submission. The applause from the audience was a mixed expression of pity and happy sympathy.

"The orchestra started a third time and Dr. Koussevitzky succeeded in carrying the musician through the first half of the program. At intermission, the Boston Symphony Orchestra manager, Mr. Judd since retired, mounted the platform to announce a few changes in the second half, made necessary because of the damage to some instruments by the storm.

"Just as the concert ended, Miss Robinson Smith summer resident of the Berkshires and leader in the formation of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival made her way to the front of the tent, climbed up on the stake and declared to the audience:

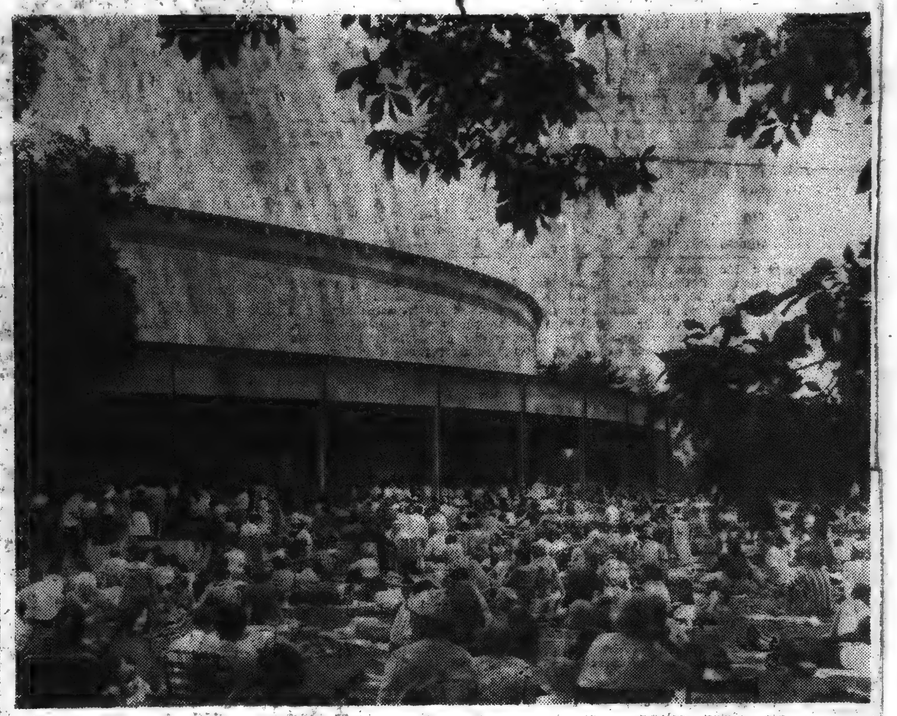
'The storm has proved conclusively the need for a shed. We must raise the necessary $100,000 to build it.'

The Festival Committee was successful in raising the funds which allowed the 6037-capacity Music Shed to be build and to be inaugurated with a performance of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony at the opening concert of the 1938 Festival on August 4, 1938.

By 1941 the annual Festival had increased in size and scope sufficient to draw 95,000 visitors during the summer. A Theatre-Concert Hall, adaptable for both operatic and concert performances (capacity: 1200), a smaller Chamber Music Hall (capacity: 500), and five small studios had been built and the Orchestra's summer school of music, named the Berkshire Music Center, had been established.

The 1959 Berkshire Festival, which marked the 25th anniversary of the founding of the original Berkshire Symphonic Festival and the 22nd year of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's participation, had approximately 182,000 visitors during the six week season. The first two weekends of concrets, given by a chamber orchestra of Boston Symphony Orchestra players, were devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart. There followed four weekends of concerts by the full orchestra; each week the program, placed emphasis on the works of one composer or period: Tchaikovsky, Brahms, Romantic Composer, Beethoven. Six Chamber Music Concerts were given during the season, six rehearsals of the Orchestra were opened to the public as a benefit to the Orchestra's Pension Fund, a concert and five lectures were presented under the auspices of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago and a series of lectures titled Aspects of New Music was given. The Berkshire Music Center was in session concurrent with the Festival and it offered thirty-two concerts and lectures, some of them noted above, to the visitors who were enrolled as Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

Music in the Berkshrie has developed, in a quarter-century, from the dream of a few to the pleasure of millions.



A Berkshire Festival audience enjoys a Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood.

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15 370
JUN 10 1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

TANGLEWOOD—An increase of $9000 in ticket sales for the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was reported last week by Thomas D. Perry, the Orchestra's manager.

The increase in sales, compared to this time last year, includes many more series subscriptions, Mr. Perry added. He attributed the extra interest on the part of the ticket buyers to the extension of the Festival season and to the programs which Charles Munch and his guest conductors and soloists will present.

The 1961 Festival has been extended from six weeks to seven weeks beginning July 5 and continuing through August 20. This has allowed travelers who plan an August vacation more opportunity to hear the Orchestra perform in its famed summer residence in the Berkshires.

Charles Munch will conduct six concerts of music by Baach and Mozart in the first two Festival weekends (July 7-8-9, 14-15-16). He has invited Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin, Aaron Copland, Arthur Fiedler, Pierre Monteux and ugene Ormandy o conduct some of the fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts which will be given in the five final weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20). The Festival Chorus and several outstanding soloists will also appear in many of these concerts.

—o—

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,460
JUN 4 1961

TICKET SALES GOOD FOR SYMPHONY

Smarting under the blast levelled at the coming Berkshire Music Festival by The New York Times critic, Harold C. Schonberg, a few weeks ago, the Boston Symphony's manager, Thomas D. Perry, has hastened to announce that ticket sales are substantially ahead of the figures at this time last year. Perry says that the increase of advance sales, including many more series subscriptions amounts to some $9,000.

Schonberg categorically denounced the Boston Symphony's concerts and programs scheduled for this summer. He said that the coming programs have no unity, no theme, no adventure, and hardly any novelties. And as for the scheduled conductors and soloists, the New York writer claimed that there would be no new faces among them. "Recent festivals," said Schonberg, "are about as festive as a ballroom after the ball is over!"

The Boston manager has perhaps won the first round though Schonberg never maintained that attendance would be affected one way or another by a sameness in this season's programs. In any case, Perry attributes the increase in sales to a great interest on the part of ticket buyers in the programs themselves, though he does admit that the extension of the festival's season this year has undoubtedly helped to bring about the increase in advance sales.

48

PRE-SEASON - BERKSHIRE CENTRE

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 814,169 S. 1,254,635
MAR 4 1961

BERKSHIRE CENTER TO HOLD AUDITIONS

New York and Philadelphia will be the scene of auditions next week for instrumentalists who want study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Berkshire Music Center next summer.

The center, operated by the Boston Symphony since 1940 at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., will be in session from July 2 to Aug. 20, concurrently with the orchestra's Berkshire Festical. Charles Munch directs the center, Aaron Copland is faculty chairman.

The New York auditions will be held next Friday, from 1:30 to 4 P. M. in Room 503 of the Juilliard School of Music, 120 Claremont Avenue. In Philadelphia, they will be held on Thursday, from 3 to 5 P. M. at the New School of Music, Pine and Eighteenth Streets.

String, woodwind, brass and percussion players and pianists are eligible. They should, if possible, notify the Registrar of the Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Application forms will be available at the auditions.

Auditions for harp students must be arranged by appointment through the Registrar in Boston.

Applicants accepted for the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra will be eligible for tuition grants and other awards.

Globe 4/9/61

Berkshire Center String Fellowships

Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, announces that additional fellowships and scholarships are available at Tanglewood this Summer to students of stringed instruments.

This is the first time since the establishment of the Summer school of music in 1940 that additional fellowships have been available to these students. The new fellowships and scholarships, which include tuition and living expenses for the seven-week school session, have a value of up to $500.

Dr. Munch says the program, begun last year, of seminars for string players will be continued. Designed to explore the problems of solo and ensemble playing as encountered by players of stringed instruments, the seminars are led by Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and William Kroll, first violin of the Kroll Quartet.

Information may be secured by addressing the Registrar, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,912 S. 1,014,829
APR 9 1961

Tanglewood news

Additional fellowships and scholarships are available at Tanglewood this summer to students of stringed instruments. The season extends from July 2 through Aug. 20. Further information may be obtained by writing to: The Registrar, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

MAR 16 1961

BSO Auditions For Summer Study Mar. 20th

Auditions will be held on Monday, March 20, from 2 to 4 p.m. in Symphony Hall, Boston for instrumentalists who wish tc apply for summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The audition committee, which includes many of the twenty-three Boston Symphony Orchestra members who serve on the Center's instrumental faculty, will hear string, woodwind, brass timpani, percussion piano and harp auditions.

Continued on Page Five

Berkshire Music Center Orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. There are also many other scholarships and several instrumental prize awards offered in the names of such distinguished artists interested in the Music Center as Jascha Heifetz, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding. Fellowships are also available for instrumentalists interested in the performance of contemporary music (Fromm Fellowships) and advanced players of stringed instruments (String Fellowship).

Those planning to attend the auditions should if possible, notify the Registrar of the Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Catalog and application forms will be available at the auditions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 156,267

MAR 13 1961

Tanglewood Auditions

Auditions will be held Monday afternoon, March 20, from 2 to 4 in Symphony Hall, for instrumentalists who wish to apply for summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The audition committee, including many of the 23 Boston Symphony Orchestra members who serve on the Center's instrumental faculty, will hear string, woodwind, brass, timpani, percussion, piano, and harp auditions.

Applicants accepted in the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. There are also many other scholarships and several instrumental prize awards.

Those planning to attend the auditions should, if possible notify the Registrar of the Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Catalogs and application forms will be available at the auditions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958

MAR 11 1961

BERKSHIRE CENTER
SYMPHONY TRYOUTS
IN BOSTON MARCH 20

BOSTON (UPI) — Auditions for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center will be held in Symphony Hall March 20, it was announced Friday.

Applicants accepted for the center orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund.

Auditions are held for musicians seeking to study in orchestra and chamber music performance. The center will begin at Lenox July 2 and continue through Aug. 20.

Montague's town clerk, Lawrence M. Killelea, has started his 25th year in office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 176,513

APR 12 1961

Tanglewood Awards Up

Additional fellowships and scholarships are available at Tanglewood this summer to students of stringed instruments for the first time since the establishment of the summer school in 1940, Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, announces.

The new fellowships and scholarships, which include tuition and living expenses for the seven-week school session, have a value up to $500.

Dr. Munch has also announced the program, begun last year, of seminars for string players will be continued this summer. Designed to explore the problems of solo and ensemble playing as encountered by players of stringed instruments, the seminars are led by Richard Burgin, associate conductor and concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and William Kroll, first violin of the Kroll Quartet.

String players are encouraged to apply for the String Fellowships and Scholarship admission to the Center which will be in session at Tanglewood from July 2 through Aug. 20. Information may be secured by addressing the Registrar, Berkshire Music Center, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 81,815

MAR 11 1961

Berkshire Center Symphony Tryouts In Boston March 20

BOSTON (UPI) — Auditions for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center will be held in Symphony Hall March 20, it was announced Friday.

Applicants accepted for the center orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund.

Auditions are held for musicians seeking to study in orchestra and chamber music performance. The center will begin at Lenox July 2 and continue through Aug. 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Globe
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 416,486

MAR 12 1961

Tanglewood Auditions

Auditions will be held Monday, Mar. 20, from 2 to 4 p.m. in Symphony Hall, for instrumentalists who wish to apply for Summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood.

The audition committee, which includes many of the 23 Boston Symphony Orchestra members who serve on the Center's instrumental faculty, will hear string, woodwind, brass, timpani, percussion, piano and harp auditions.

Applicants accepted for the Music Center Orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund. There are also many other scholarships and several instrumental prize awards offered in the names of such distinguished artists interested in the Music Center as Jascha Heifetz, Gregor Piatigorsky and Albert Spalding. Fellowships are also available for instrumentalists interested in the performance of contemporary music (Fromm Fellowships) and advanced players of stringed instruments (String Fellowships).

Those planning to audition should, if possible, notify the Registrar of the Music Center at Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. Catalog and application forms will be available at the auditions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 289,111

MAR 12 1961

Berkshire Auditions March 20

Auditions will be held on Monday, March 20, from 2 to 4 p.m. in Symphony Hall, Boston, for instrumentalists who wish to apply for summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The audition committee will hear string, woodwind, brass, timpani, percussion, piano and harp auditions.

The Center, founded in 1940 in fulfillment of the wish of Serge Koussevitzky, will be in session from July 2 to August 20. The Orchestra's Berkshire Festival will be held at the same time. Charles Munch is Director of the Center and Aaron Copland is chairman of faculty.

The department of instrumental music faculty includes Eleazar de Carvalho with Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein as advisers. Richard and William Kroll head the orchestral playing and chamber music faculty with assistance from many members of the Orchestra.

CUMBERLAND, MD.
NEWS
D: 11,736
MAR 29 1961

Tanglewood Auditions To Be April 6

Auditions will be held April 6 in Baltimore, for applicants to the 1961 session of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood. They will be from 3 to 5 p. m., at Peabody's Conservatory of Music, Charles Street and Mt. Vernon Place, for instrumentalists.

The Berkshire Music Center will be in session July 2 to August 20. The festival will be at the same time.

Applicants accepted in the center's orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship fund. Other scholarships, instrumental prize awards and fellowships also are available for instrumentalists.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D: 883,213 S: 1,199,862
MAR 12 1961

Auditions for orchestra and chamber music study at the Berkshire Music center, the Boston Symphony's summer home at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., will be held from 2 to 4 p. m. Monday, March 20, in Symphony hall, Boston. The faculty committee will hear string, woodwind, brass, tympani, percussion, piano, and harp candidates. Dates of the session are July 2 to Aug. 20, the same as the Berkshire Music festival. The instrumental faculty will include Eleazar de Carvalho, Richard Burgin, and William Kroll, with Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky, and Leonard Bernstein as advisers. Applicants accepted at the audition are eligible for several tuition and scholarship grants. Those planning to attend the auditions should, if possible, notify the music center registrar, Symphony hall, Boston 15.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026
MAR 13 1961

'61 Music Center Auditions March 20

BOSTON — Auditions for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center will be held in Symphony Hall March 20, it was announced yesterday.

Applicants accepted for the center orchestra are eligible for tuition grants from the Tanglewood Revolving Scholarship Fund.

Auditions are held for musicians seeking to study in orchestra and chamber music performance. The center will begin at Lenox July 2 and continue through Aug. 20.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,557 S. 1,033,048
FEB 26 1961

Berkshire auditions

Auditions will be held Thursday afternoon, March 9, at the New School of Music, for instrumentalists who wish to apply for summer study in orchestra and chamber-music performance at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

PHILADELPHIA, PA.
INQUIRER
D. 618,557 S. 1,033,048
MAR 5 1961

NEW YORK, N.Y.
HERALD TRIBUNE
D. 325,065 S. 505,121
MAR 5 1961

Berkshire Auditions

Members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will hold auditions for instrumentalists who wish to study in the orchestra and chamber music classes of the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from 1:30 to 4 p. m. this Friday, March 10, in Room 203 of the Juilliard School of Music, 120 Claremont Ave. Pianists and players of string, wind and percussion instruments will be heard at that time. Appointments for harp students can be arranged through the center's registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15, Mass. All candidates should notify the registrar in advance, if this is possible.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,427
MAR 5 1961

Music

Composers

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both prominent in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, this summer.

In making the announcement, Berkshire Festival management quotes authorities who state that Fortner "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers" — and calls Gerhard "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her Golden Age."

They will join Copland and Lukas Foss in the Center's composition department. Fortner and Gerhard's seven-week teaching visit to the Berkshires has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program.

Among their predecessors, since the school was established in 1940, have been Paul Hindemith, Bohuslav Martinu, Nikolai Lopatnikoff, Arthur Honegger, Samuel Barber, Darius Milhaud, Olivier Messiaen, Jacques Ibert, Luigi Dallapiccola, Carlos Chavez, Ernst Toch, and Roger Sessions.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635
MAR 12 1961

COMPOSERS: Wolfgang Fortner of Germany and Roberto Gerhard of Spain will be the foreign composers teaching this summer at the Berkshire Music Center. They are being brought to this country on a seven-week teaching visit through a grant from the Ford Foundation's international affairs program.

HEMIDEMISEMIQUAVERS: Gounod's "Romeo et Juliette" will open the first spring opera season of the San Francisco Opera on May 2. "Bohème," "Martha," "Traviata," "The Magic Flute" and "Carmen" will be the other operas of the repertory. Each will have a single performance. . . . Eddy Manson, who has composed some scores for prize-winning films, will lead his Symphony No. 1 in its première on Thursday with the Florida Symphony in Orlando. . . . Charles Munch will lead Howard Hanson's "Elegy in memory of Serge Koussevitzky" with the London Philharmonic in a concert the orchestra will give in June in Koussevitzky's memory.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664
MAR 5 1961

THE MUSIC BEAT

Though he is not yet celebrated in this country, the Spanish composer, Roberto Gerhard, has been honored by an invitation to spend the summer at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, as a visiting professor. Perhaps this will lead to the performance of some of Gerhard's music, which rates high among some enthusiasts for the special school of writing.

Mrs. August Belmont, longtime head of the Metropolitan Opera Guild, will be honored by the National Arts Club at a dinner Thursday when she will receive the annual award for a person who has "made an outstanding contribution in furthering music in the New York area."

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
BAY NEWS
W: 11,909
MAR 4 1961

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both world leaders in the field of contemparary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

Mr. Forner, who authorities have declared "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers," and Mr. Gerhard, called "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her golden Age," will join Mr. Copland and Lukas Foss in the Center's composition department. Operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the Center will be in operation from July 2 to August 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 6 1961

Whitestone

VISITING COMPOSERS at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this summer are Wolfgang Fortner, left, and Roberto Gerhard, whose works will be discussed at seminars tomorrow and Aug. 11 in chamber music hall. Music will be performed by Fromm Players.

First Seminar at Tanglewood To Feature Gerhard's Music

TANGLEWOOD — The first seminar in contemporary music of the Tanglewood season tomorrow at 3:15 will feature a lecture and the music of Roberto Gerhard. Mr. Gerhard, one of two visiting composers along with Wolfgang Fortner, will present two pieces of his own work for discussion during the seminar. The music will be performed by the Fromm Players in the chamber music hall.

Following Mr. Gerhard's lecture, his Woodwind Quintet will be the first musical offering, and the concluding work is to be the Nonet scored for flute, oboe, clarinet, French horn, tuba, trumpet, trombone, and accordion.

The visits of the guest composers to Tanglewood have been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program, and continues the Berkshire Music Center's policy of augmenting its regular composition staff with outstanding composers from throughout the world.

Mr. Gerhard, born in Valls, Tarragona, Spain, occupies a unique position in contemporary music being recognized as the heir to the musical tradtions of Felipe Pedrell, the leader of the modern Spanish music revival, and Arnold Schoenberg. Though he has spent a number of years in the United Kingdom his music remains essentially Spanish in character.

The seminar in contemporary music of Aug. 11 will be devoted to the work of Wolfgang Fortner at which time Mr. Fortner will discuss his style of composition using selected pieces as examples.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N.Y.
JOURNAL
D. 28,986 S. 30,153
FEB 26 1961

Musicians to Teach At Berkshire Center

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both world leaders in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copeland to teach at the Berkshire Music center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

They will join Mr. Copeland and Lukas Foss in the center's composition department. Operated by the Boston Symphony orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the center will be in operation from July 2 to Aug. 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks. Mr. Fortner and Mr. Gerhard's seven week teaching-visit has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program.

The center's dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has made known that the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's department of instrumental music. Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisers to the department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the department of choral music and Harvard university's Professor G. Wallace Woodworth will, for the second season, head the department of listening and analysis.

TORN PAGE

50

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
AUG 13 1961

RELOCATED SPANIARD

Tanglewood Teacher Is Catalonian Briton

By RAYMOND ERICSON

WITH a Swiss father, a French mother, Spain as a birthplace, an Austrian wife and twenty-five years' residence in England, Roberto Gerhard considers himself an international person. At the same time he notes proudly in impeccable English: "My mother tongue is Catalonian; therefore I am Catalonian."

This paradox extends to the music of the composer, who this summer is a guest teacher—together with the German Wolfgang Fortner—at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Mr. Gerhard spent some seven years working with Felipe Pedrell, the Spanish musicologist. Then, as a pupil of Arnold Schoenberg in Vienna and Berlin from 1923 to 1928, he was grounded in the twelve-tone style. Today he uses most of the latest compositional techniques, including electronic music, that are universal property. Yet people tell him that his most advanced music has a Spanish flavor, however slight. "This always surprises me," Mr. Gerhard says, "for the Spanish influence is unconscious. I would not deliberately write Spanish music."

Sixty-five years old and of medium height, Mr. Gerhard has a manner courteous, serious and philosophical. He is articulate about his work, using clear, precise English and formal phraseology. This accounts for the one criticism he had of American students, whom he admires greatly.

"The vocabulary in the books I read enters the language I speak. This does not seem to be the case with young Americans. The other day I used the word 'hiatus,' and I could see a look of consternation come over their faces."

Talented Students

Other qualities in his pupils call forth praise, however. "My only experiences in this country have been teaching for four months at the University of Michigan in Ann Arbor and this summer at Tanglewood. I do not like to generalize about your large and varied nation from such brief contact. But those I have taught have been extremely talented, eager to get to the bottom of problems, and open-minded to the most advanced ideas."

Although he voiced criticism of some aspects of the Center and of the Boston Symphony Orchestra programs at the Berkshire Festival ("provincial" was his word), Mr. Gerhard had unqualified approval for the work of the Fromm Music Foundation at Tanglewood.

In his own course at the center, Mr. Gerhard has been discussing the question of rhythm in contemporary music. "Schoenberg and Webern revolutionized composing in terms of melody and harmony. In the light of what they accomplished, they could not be expected to solve all problems, which included that of rhythm. In recent years, composers such as Boulez have tried various solutions, but I do not think any one of them has succeeded."

Teaching interferes with his composing, Mr. Gerhard admits. "In the classroom or the lecture hall I naturally produce my own ideas about composition. For me this is like tearing up these ideas by their roots and holding them up for exhibition. When this happens, I can no longer use them. This is not a bad thing. I believe it is good for a composer to go through this process from time to time, clearing his system of what he knows."

English Activities

In England, where he settled after Generalissimo Francisco Franco came to power in Spain, Mr. Gerhard makes his home in Cambridge. He does not teach at the university there, however; he only accepts pupils privately and then seldom more than one at a time.

Besides spending his time in composition he also functions on a screening panel for the British Broadcasting Corporation. "The BBC receives approximately a hundred scores each week from all over the world—Poland, Japan, Australia, America—and we study them all, recommending those we find deserving for performance on the radio."

Besides an opera, "The Duenna," adapted from Sheridan's play, a symphony, several ballets, two concertos, and considerable chamber music, Mr. Gerhard has composed incidental music for plays, films, radio and television. "Composers should accept commissions of this kind," he remarks, "in order to raise the level of workmanship in these media."

As a Spaniard, Mr. Gerhard pronounces his name as if it

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D: 47,453
FEB 28 1961

Two Foreign Composers To Teach at Tanglewood

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both world leaders in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this summer.

* * *

THE CENTER WILL be in operation from July 2 to Aug. 20, extended from six to seven weeks.

Fortner, who authorities have declared "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers," and Gerhard, called "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her golden age," will join Copland and Lukas Foss in the center's composition department.

The center is operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Fortner and Gerhard's seven-week teaching-visit to the Berkshire has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's international affairs program.

* * *

COPLAND, CHAIRMAN of the center's faculty, has announced that the Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956 at Tanglewood, in behalf of the center's contemporary music program. The foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet, other Fromm fellows, a series of seven seminars on various aspects of contemporary music and a concert of contemporary chamber music performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

Ralph Berkowitz, the center's dean, has announced that Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, again will head the school's department of instrumental music. Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisers to the department.

* * *

RICHARD BURGIN and William Kroll will be assisted by 23 members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross again will have charge of the department of choral music and Harvard University's Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth will, for the second season, head the department of listening and analysis.

A complete catalog and student application forms for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the registrar at Symphony hall, Boston, 15.

Globe 2/26/61

Fortner and Gerhard Join Berkshire Center Faculty

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, leaders in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, next Summer.

They will join Mr. Copland and Lukas Foss in the Center's composition department.

Operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the Center will be in operation from July 2 to Aug. 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks.

Messrs. Fortner and Gerhard's teaching-visit has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program and follows the school's policy of guest professors each year.

The Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tanglewood in behalf of the Center's contemporary music program. The Foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet, other Fromm Fellows, a series of seven seminars on various aspects of contemporary music and a concert of contemporary chamber music performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

Brazilian conductor Eleazar de Carvalho again will head the school's department of instrumental music. Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisors to the department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross again will be in charge of the department of choral music and Harvard University's Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth, for the second season, will head the department of listening and analysis.

A complete catalogue and student application forms for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
MAR 2 1961

Foreign Composers To Teach At Center

Fortner, Gerhard to Join Composition Section

Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program and Fromm Music Foundation Aid Contemporary Music Program At Boston Symphony Orchestra's Summer School of Music.

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both world leaders in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox this summer.

Mr. Fortner, who authorities have declared "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers," and Mr. Gerhard, called "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her Golden Age," will join Mr. Copland and Lukas Foss in Center's composition department. Operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the Center will be in operation from July 2 to August 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks.

Messrs. Fortner and Gerhard's seven week teaching-visit to the Berkshires, which has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program, follows the school's policy of guest professors each year to augment the staff of the composition department.

Among their predecessors, since the school was established in 1940, have been Paul Hindemith, Bohuslav Martinu, Nikolai Lopatnikoff, Arthur Honegger, Samuel Barber, Darius Milhaud, Oliver Messiaen, Irving Fine, Jacques Ibert, Luigi Dallapiccola, Carlos Chavez, Ernst Toch, Roger Sessions, Boris Blacher, Goffredo Petrassi, Milton Babbitt, Leon Kirchner and Luciano Berio.

Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty and head of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tanglewood in behalf of the Center's contemporary music program. The Foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet, other Fromm Fellows, a series of seven seminars on various aspects of contemporary music and a concert of contemporary chamber music performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

The Center's dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar De Carvalho, will again head the school's department of instrumental music Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisors to the department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestra playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the department of choral music and Harvard University's Professor G. Wallace Woodworth will, for the second season, head the department of listening and analysis.

A complete catalogue and student application forms for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

The office of the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood in Lenox will be open, as usual, early in June this year.

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,958
MAR 7 1961

Two Famous Men Join Berkshire Music Center

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both prominent in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, this summer.

In making the announcement, Berkshire Festival management quotes authorities who state that Fortner "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers" — and calls Gerhard "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her Golden Age."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,026
FEB 27 1961

Fortner, Gerhard Invited to Teach At Music Center

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both world leaders in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, this summer.

Mr. Fortner

Mr. Fortner, who authorities have declared "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers," and Mr. Gerhard, called "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her Golden Age," will join Mr. Copland and Lukas Foss in the Center's composition department. Operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the Center will be in operation from July 2 to Aug. 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks.

Messrs. Fortner and Gerhard's seven-week teaching-visit to the Berkshires has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program. It follows the school's policy of guest professors each year to augment the staff of the composition department. Among their predecessors, since the school was established in 1940, have been Paul Hindemith, Bohuslav Martinu, Nikolai Lopatnikoff, Arthur Honegger, Samuel Barber, Darius Milhaud, Oliver Messiaen, Irving Fine, Jacques Ibert, Luigi Dallapiccola, Carlos Chavez, Ernst Toch, Roger Sessions, Boris Blacher, Goffredo Petrassi, Milton Babbitt, Leon Kirchner and Luciano Berio.

Fromm Foundation

Aaron Copeland, chairman of the faculty and head of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tanglewood in behalf of the Center's contemporary music program. The Foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet, other Fromm Fellows, a series of seven seminars on various aspects of contemporary music and a concert of contemporary chamber music performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

The Center's dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's department of instrumental music; Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisers to the department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the department of choral music and Harvard University's Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth will, for the second season, head the department of listening and analysis.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger &
Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

FEB 23 1961

51

Berkshire Festival

DR. MUNCH INVITES TWO COMPOSERS TO TANGLEWOOD SCHOOL

1961 Music Festival Of Boston Symphony To Run From July 2 To Aug. 20

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both world leaders in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch, Music Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Aaron Copland, famed American composer, to teach at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., this summer.

Mr. Fortner, who authorities have declared "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers" and Mr. Gerhard, called "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her Golden Age," will join Mr. Copland and Lukas Foss in the Center's composition department. Operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the Center will be in operation from July 2 to August 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks.

Messrs. Fortner and Gerhard's seven week teaching-visit to the Berkshires, which has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs program, follows the school's policy of guest professors each year to augment the staff of the composition department. Among their predecessors, since the school was established in 1940, have been Paul Hindemith, Bohuslav Martinu, Nikolai Lopatnikoff, Arthur Honegger, Samuel Barber, Darius Milhaud, Oliver Messiaen Irving Fine, Jacques Ibert, Luigi Dallapiccola, Carlos Chavez, Ernst Toch, Roger Sessions, Boris Blacher, Goffredo

Continued on Page Three

13

...d from Page One

Petrassi, Milton Babbitt, Leon Kirchner and Luciano Berio.

Aaron Copland, chairman of he faculty and head of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tangelwood in behalf of the Center's contemporary music program. The Foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet, other Fromm Fellows, a series of seven seminars on various aspects of contemporary music and a concert of contemporary chamber music performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

The Center's Dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's department of instrumental music; Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisors to the department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the department of choral music and Harvard University's Professor G. Wallace Woodworth will, for the second season, head the department of listening and analysis.

A complete catalogue and student application forms for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 112,664

FEB 26 1961

World Music Leaders To Be at Tanglewood

Wolfgang Fortner, Roberto Gerhard Will Join Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss

BOSTON—Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both world leaders in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, this summer.

Seven-Week Season

Mr. Fortner, who authorities have declared "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers," and Mr. Gerhard, called "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her golden age," will join Mr. Copland and Lukas Foss in the center's composition department. Operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the center will be in operation from July 2 to Aug. 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks.

Messrs. Fortner and Gerhard's seven week teaching-visit to the Berkshires, which has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program, follows the school's policy of guest professors each year to augment the staff of the composition department.

Among their predecessors, since the school was established in 1940, have been Paul Hindemith, Bohuslav Martinu, Nikolai Lopatnikoff, Arthur Honegger, Samuel Barber, Darius Milhaud, Oliver Messiaen, Irving Fine, Jacques Ibert, Luigi Dallapiccola, Carlos Chavez, Ernst Toch, Roger Sessions, Boris Blacher, Goffredo Petrassi, Milton Babbitt, Leon Kirchner and Luciano Berio.

Continue Support

Mr. Copland, chairman of the faculty and head of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tanglewood in behalf of the Center's contemporary music program. The foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet, other Fromm Fellows, a series of seven seminars on various aspects of contemporary music and a concert of contemporary chamber music performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

The center's dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's department of instrumental music; Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisers to the department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the department of choral music and Harvard University's Professor G. Wallace Woodworth will, for the second season, head the department of listening and analysis.

A complete catalog and student application forms for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

sive for touring. Monitor 3/3/61

Tanglewood Teachers

Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, internationally known in the field of contemporary music, have been invited to teach at the Berkshire Music Center this summer; they will join Aaron Copland and Lukas Foss in the Center's composition department. Operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its annual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.), the Center will be in operation from July 2 to August 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks.

Mr. Copland, as chairman of the faculty, has also announced the Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tanglewood in behalf of the Center's contemporary music program. The Foundation, in addition to its fellowships, will sponsor a series of seven seminars on various aspects of contemporary music and a concert of contemporary chamber music performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

The Center's Dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's department of instrumental music; Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky, and Leonard Bernstein are advisers to the department.

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the department of choral music and Harvard University's G. Wallace Woodworth will, for the second season, head the department of listening and analysis.

A complete catalogue and student application forms are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

Sunday Standard-Times
NEW BEDFORD, Mass.
Circ. 51,447

FEB 26 1961

2 Composers Will Teach

Fortner, Gerhard Due at Tanglewood

Special to The Standard-Times

BOSTON, Feb. 25 — Wolfgang Fortner and Roberto Gerhard, both world leaders in the field of contemporary music, have been invited by Charles Munch and Aaron Copland to teach at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, this Summer.

Mr. Fortner, who authorities have declared "ranks today as one of the leading and perhaps the most progressive and intellectual of contemporary German composers," and Mr. Gerhard, called "the most significant composer Spain has produced since her Golden Age," will join Mr. Copland and Lukas Foss in the Center's composition department.

Operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in conjunction with its anual Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, the Center will be in operation from July 2 to Aug. 20 this year, extended from six to seven weeks.

Grant Given

Messrs. Fortner and Gerhard's seven week teaching-visit to the Berkshires, which has been made possible through a grant from the Ford Foundation's International Affairs Program, follows the school's policy of guest professors each year to augment the staff of the composition department.

Among their predecessors, since the school was established in 1940, have been Paul Hindemith, Bohuslav Martinu, Nikolski Lopatnikoff, Arthur Honegger, Samuel Barber, Darius Milhaud, Oliver Messiaen, Irving Fine, Jacques Ibert, Luigi Dallapiccola, Carlos Chavez, Ernst Toch, Roger Sessions, Boris Blacher, Goffredo Petrassi, Milton Babbitt, Leon Kirchner and Luciano Berio.

Aaron Copland, chairman of the faculty and head of the composition department at the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the Fromm Music Foundation will continue its support, begun in 1956, at Tanglewood in behalf of the Center's contemporary music program. The Foundation will sponsor the Lenox Quartet, other Fromm Fellows, a series of seven seminars on various aspects of contemporary music and a concert of contemporary chamber music performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

The Center's Dean, Ralph Berkowitz, has announced the Brazilian conductor, Eleazar de Carvalho, will again head the school's department of instrumental m...

Pierre Monteux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Leonard Bernstein are advisers to the department.

Orchestra Men Aid

Twenty-three members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra will assist Richard Burgin and William Kroll in the orchestral playing and chamber music classes. Hugh Ross will again be in charge of the department of choral music and Harvard University's Prof. G. Wallace Woodworth will, for the second season, head the department of listening and analysis.

A complete catalog and student application forms for the 1961 Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood are available from the Registrar, Symphony Hall, Boston 15.

Auditions will be held in Philadelphia March 9, New York March 10 and Boston March 20 for instrumentalists who wish to apply for Summer study in orchestra and chamber music performance at the Berkshire Music Center.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUL 19 1961

Three Student Conductors Win Tanglewood Test

The competition for places the active conducting class Tanglewood has concluded a the winners will make their fir appearance with the Berkshi Music Center Orchestra at its se ond concert of the season Satu day afternoon. Some 20 hopef conductors entered the intensiv work of the first days of the M sic Center's session. This grou was narrowed to six from whic the three winners were selecte

Two of the young conductor are from Paris. They are Serg Fornier and Roland Chagnon Also selected was Jacob Kapla of New York City. Mr. Fornie and Mr. Chagnon have each wo the frist prize in conducting offer ed by the Paris Conservatory while Mr. Kaplan has recentl served on the faculty of the Jul liard School of Music and Unio Theological Seminary.

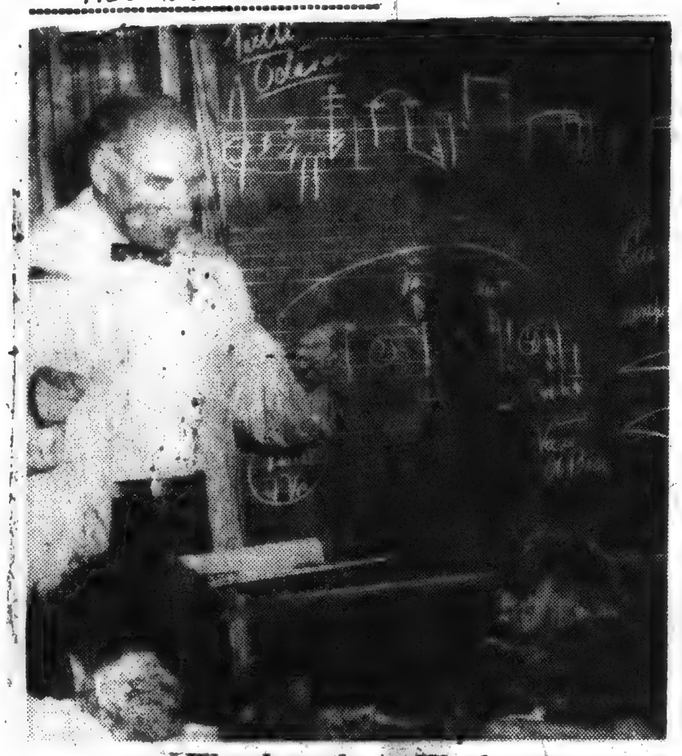
Saturday afternoon's program will open with the Overture to the Marriage of Figaro conducted by Jacob Kaplan. Serge Fornier will conduct the first two movements of the Spmphony No. 99 by Haydn, and his colleague Roland Chagnon will conduct the final two movements.

The concluding work of the program will be a complete performance of the Fifth Symphony of Prokofieff to be conducted by Eleazar de Garvalho, head of the department of instrumental music.

CHARLOTTE, N.C.
OBSERVER
D. 161,914 S. 179,913

AUG 27 1961

52



Woodworth At Work

Music Taught With A Glow

By DICK BANKS
Observer Arts Editor

"Culture is activity of thought, receptiveness to beauty and humane feeling," in the words of Alfred North Whitehead, one of those writers always being quoted.

The alertness, the glow this definition suggests applies to G. Wallace Woodworth, Ditson professor of music at Harvard.

"Boom, boom, boom! Listen to those kettledrums," he will say, with an expression of ecstasy.

Three notes of Beethoven in the right place with the right softness, the proper rhythm. Away goes Professor Woodworth to Cloud Nine.

He will refer to "the violin's heavenly embroidery" in Beethoven's Violin Concerto in D Major.

★ ★ ★

ENTHUSIASM — like this sells music. Couple this youthfulness with knowledge, and you have a teacher.

At Harvard and during the summer at Berkshire Music Center, near Lenox, Mass., where I knew him, Woodworth has a ball, explaining music in simple terms, trying like Socrates to make young people think.

As a lecturer he works with a phonograph, a recording of a classic, a blackboard, chalk, knocking out themes on a piano, diagramming form on the blackboard as he picks his way through the recording with halts for comment, phrase by phrase.

He'll say, "Listen to this with your physical body, not just your ears."

★ ★ ★

DISCUSSING form: "Music is always going somewhere. Watch for the themes, the unusual ideas in the music. Get hold of them at their first appearance. Watch for the repetitions and variants of the the ideas. Watch for the objectives the music is going toward. Watch for the dynamics (changes in loudness or softness). Notice the orchestration (how the music is apportioned to the instruments). Watch the tonalities (keys) and modulations (changes of key in a composition).

"How do you recognize themes in music? Form is expressed in sections in time. All music must be followed phrase by phrase as a process in time.

"Be aware of objectives reached, of points of arrival. Note the appearance of new ideas or the manipulation or expression of old ideas, new tonalities, new textures (the weaving of melodic lines with vertical chords), changes in orchestration."

Woodworth likes to quote Whitehead: "Classic art is action weaving itself into a pattern of persuasive beauty."

Of rests in a Beethoven quartet: "Did you ever hear such a dramatic use of silence! Nothing is so impressive in music as no music at all."

★ ★ ★

CHAMBER MUSIC he terms "in a sense the aristocratic kind of music," a more restricted art.

To get the most from chamber music, he will continue, listen for solo passages and accompaniment, for duets and trios, for dialogues of one instrument with another, for the beauty of long - held notes in the bass. The charm of mingled melodies.

This brings us to Woodworth's gift for drawing on his backboard a picture of the music and what a plan ought to show:

"Phrases and sections, the objectives — points of arrival, points of articulation (where the music is joined together), proportions in time, ideas, orchestration, dynamics."

★ ★ ★

A CRITIC, says Woodworth, is first of all a reporter, noting the exciting and touching things that happen. He is a teacher-editor in a position to do much more good for music before a concert than after. He's an evaluator of performance and composition, an aesthetic philosopher.

He needs a gift for writing.

Above all he is a champion of music: "I know some critics who hate music. Olin Downes was a great man, except that he hated Twentieth Century music.

"The critic must love music, radiate his love, teach people to love it.

"Don't hold back. As to how much knowledge you need to be a critic — start where you are!"

★ ★ ★

A NATIVE of Boston, Prof. Woodworth has been organist, choirmaster, and conductor of the Radcliffe Choral Society. He has an honorary doctor of literature degree from Miami University and an honorary doctor of music degree from New England Conservatory of Music.

He began as a teacher at Harvard when he got his master's degree there in 1926.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
AUG 5 1961

Tanglewood Students To Present Concert

The student chamber music concert at Tanglewood tomorrow morning at 10 will consist of three works prepared under the direction of members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Opening the concert will be Mozart's Quartet No. 2, scored for violin, viola, cello, and piano. Clarence Knudson, principal second violin of the orchestra, coached the students preparing this piece. Following the Mozart will be the Hindemith Quintet for flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon, and horn, prepared under the supervision of Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Principal flute of the Boston Symphony.

The concluding work on the program will be the Trio No. 1 for violin, cello, and piano by Mendelssohn, which was coached by Bernard Zighera, the orchestra's pianist and harpist.

This concert by the students of the Berkshire Music Center is presented under the auspices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Donations to this organization support the scholarship funds of the Music Center.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 10 1961

Fromm Concert On Saturday Free to Public

TANGLEWOOD — The Fromm Fellowship players at Tanglewood will present a special concert in the Chamber Music Hall on Saturday at 3 p.m. This group of musicians is especially selected for their ability to perform contemporary music. The Fromm group consists of a string quartet, wind quintet, and a vocalist.

Trio for Strings — Ben-Zion Orgad (Tel Aviv, Israel)
Epigram and Evolution — Roger Reynolds (Ann Arbor, Mich.)
Three Studies for Piano — Billy Jim Layton (Cambridge, Mass.)
Two Sonnets (Shakespeare) for Voice and Chamber Ensemble — J. Brodbin Kennedy (New York, New York)
Allan Miller: Conductor
(Wechsler Commission, 1961—First Performance)
Divertimento — Celso Garrido-Lecca (Santiago, Chile)

The Fromm Fellowship players include Peter Marsh, violin; Theodora Mantz, violin; Paul Hersh, viola; Donald McCall, violoncello; John Perras, flute; David Perkett, oboe; Arthur Bloom, clarinet; Jane Taylor, bassoon; William Brown, French horn; Paul Jacobs, piano, and Marianne Weltman, soprano.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 10 1961

...board president. ...ing for such a program.

Choir Singers Talk About Music

Carl Ericson, left, of 116 Normandy Rd., Longmeadow and Mrs. Calliope Shenas of 220 Maple St., members of the Tanglewood Choir that performed Sunday afternoon at the Berkshire Music Festival, talk over the program with Willis Beckett, associate choral director. Ericson and Mrs. Shenas are studying at the Festival's choral department.

Arrive at Tanglewood Concert

Carrying lawn chairs and a program, Alan Witherspoon and his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Neal Witherspoon of 35 Dartmouth St., arrive for the Sunday afternoon concert at Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The family was among many others that enjoyed the concert from the lawn outside the Music Shed.

Program at Tanglewood Attracts Out-of-Staters

LENOX—A check by The Union Sunday afternoon of some of the 4448 persons who attended the Bach concert at Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood revealed that a relatively few were from Western Massachusetts.

Visitors in Majority

The majority of those asked said they were from New York State and Connecticut.

A festival spokesman said attendance figures showed smaller crowds for a Bach concert compared with the turnouts for a Beethoven or Brahms program.

He said he believes that residents of this area, able to attend most the concerts, will wait for their particular favorites. He added that more vacationers each year appear to be attracted to this area and that many persons have summer homes here. Parking lot checks in the past have shown cars from all the states in attendance during some three-day week-end programs, he said.

Tops Last Year

Officials said the 4448 attendance for the first Sunday afternoon concert of the new season was 430 persons more than the same Sunday last year. The three-day week-end total was 15,384, a total of 1101 more compared to last year's opening week end.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
AUG 6 1961

Tanglewood's Role Expands

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

THE IMPRINT of Tanglewood on the musical life of this country is increasing with greater solidity and importance each season. The activity of the Berkshire Music Center continues to expand in a neatly balanced program which allows equal time for creative writing and creative performance among the serious young musicians of this generation. To a believer in the value of contemporary efforts in composition, a visit to Tanglewood will provide tonic enough to last through a long winter of listening to the familiar tried and true scores.

It is refreshing to report that among the young performing musicians, Rhode Island has three registered at the Center this summer. Two are veterans of other summers there, both clarinetists from Pawtucket. It was very pleasant to meet Edward Avedesian and Craig Watjen again and to catch up on the news of their progress. Plans for their future careers are yet in a stage of exciting planning with an abundance of "ifs" included. If there is an appropriation for music and a symphony orchestra in the plans for Brasilia, the new capital of Brazil, there may be some New Englanders in it. Both boys are finished with graduate school and have this added documentation to reinforce their enviable positions at the threshold of new careers.

Meantime at Tanglewood, they have been assigned the newest barn to supervise and they are living there as caretakers. They did such a fine job last year in the old barn, that they were promoted. The old barn, incidentally, is being used for the Wallace Woodworth classes which outgrew their former quarters in the Little Red Schoolhouse. The Rhode Island clarinetists are members of the Berkshire Music Center Symphony and are performing in various small chamber music groups, as the various programs are presented.

A newcomer to the list of Rhode Island students at the Center is a trumpet player, John Di Petrillo, the 22-year-old son of the Anthony Di Petrillos of Sandringham Avenue, Providence. John is a former member of the Rhode Island Philharmonic Youth Orchestra in which he played principal trumpet. He is also one of the young musicians who has played with the parent group as an apprentice. His appraisal of his experience with the Youth Orchestra was brief and heart warming. "It was invaluable," he said.

John won a scholarship to Miami University in Florida. His freshman year there was interesting and profitable, for e played with the Miami Symphony Orchestra under Fabian Sevitzky, a nephew of Serge Koussevitzky.

At the end of the one year scholarship, John came north to enroll at the Boston Conservatory of Music. He will begin his third year there as a senior, in the fall. His trumpet teacher there is Gerard Goguen, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. His teacher in Providence was Achille Olivieri. At Tanglewood his classes include solfege, sight-reading and transposition. It may well have been excellence in these subjects which won him the coveted honor to play trumpet, when required, with the Fromm Foundation Players, the professional organization which is performing all the difficult contemporary music at the "Aspects of New Music" seminars which occur weekly. This place, John gained in auditions under Roger Voisin, in which the five trumpet students who are enrolled, tried out.

The daily schedule of work requires orchestra practice from 9:30 to 12:30 in the big shed, chamber music practice sessions from 1:30 to 3:30 and any required practice with the Fromm Players from 3:30 to 5. John lives at the Lenox School, the student dormitory, and finds that the exchange of ideas with other students is no small part of the interesting Berkshire experience.

Aaron Copland continues to be a vital influence at Tanglewood. It has been interesting to refer to his essays on music, collected in the book, "Copland on Music" and find him saying, "Whatever form of new music is contemplated, one thing is certain: Without generosity of spirit one can understand nothing. Without openness, warmth, good will, the lending of one's ears, nothing new in music can possibly reach us."

It is also interesting to hear the comments of these young people about the newest of scores which are being heard at Tanglewood. One of Aaron Copland's newest, Nonet for Solo Strings, was heard at the opening chamber music program in July. The players were seated in a square formation, three to a side, with the composer-conductor seated with his back to the audience, poring over an immense score on the desk and directing the progress of his calculated sound.

On the same program, we had heard and seen Lukas Foss conduct his Time Cycle for Soprano and Four Instruments. Adele Addison sang, while cello, clarinet and much skillfully timed punctuation from all sorts of percussion instruments assisted the basic piano part played by the composer. Foss is a remarkable musician. He interpolated notes on the celesta, placed at right angles to his piano keyboard, he held the ensemble together by conducting with head and hands and he mouthed all the texts inaudibly.

MUSIC JOURNAL
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 22,000
1961 Annual

LORNA COOKE deVARON, Conductor of New England Conservatory Chorus, Tour Chorus and Chamber Singers (145 voices), Boston, Massachusetts. B. Western Springs, Illinois. Received her Bachelor of Arts degree from Wellesley College and Master of Arts from Radcliffe College. Served as assistant conductor to G. Wallace Woodworth at Harvard University and Radcliffe College. Conducted choruses of Bryn Mawr College and has conducted choruses and taught choral conducting at the New England Conservatory of Music since 1947. Also teaches choral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center since 1953. Member of Pi Kappa Lambda. Her present chorus has sung regularly with Boston Symphony Orchestra for the past ten years

Opera Gets A Shot Of Vitality

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS

By DICK BANKS
Courier Arts Editor

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. —Opera has taken refuge in colleges and other educational institutions — and there it is experiencing vitality and creativity, according to quick-tongued, alert, musicianly Boris Goldovsky.

Goldovsky's name is synonymous with opera at Tanglewood. Charles Munch's school is the rolling green Berkshire hills for youngsters with unusual musical talents and advanced training.

The Russian - born pianist and conductor handles his student singers and conductor-stage managers at Tanglewood in rubbers privacy.

You feel you're catching authorities certainly, and de partables possibly if you venture into Goldovsky's domain of one side of Tanglewood. He works in an enclosed stage with one side open, a frame structure where sets are built, and with rehearsal halls for individual coaching scattered through the wooded hinterland of his exclusive territory.

You hear elegant voices, and it's like the sirens calling to Ulysses, except that in your case there is no wax in your ears and you're not bound to a mast.

If you get closer, you find Goldovsky there, in one casual pose or another, joining his students in having a good time talking, practicing, rehearsing, arguing — polishing their skill in the complex variety of arts that make up modern opera.

"Opera in colleges and universities," said Goldovsky in an interview, "has certain economic advantages which explain in part why there are now more than 600 opera workshops in such institutions in the United States.

"You don't pay the singers; the young conductors, the musicians, or the stagehands. Quite a few of these workshops are swirmly good.

"As for Tanglewood, I think at least half of all the outstanding American singers have received some training here at one time or another.

"You ask about the technique in which singers do not watch the conductor.

"This method of not watching a conductor is in use very widely today and under certain conditions had been found to be necessary:

"For instance, in producing television opera, conductors and performers were in different rooms, and the singers couldn't watch.

"With this method, most of the cues are auditory. There is communication between singers and conductor in musical cues.

"It works well when orchestra and performers have had careful rehearsal, when the singers have not been working under too many different conductors and directors — and when their repertoire is limited.

"Besides the music, singers watch other singers. One singer will give the cues at times for the other singers on stage.

"My experience is that portion of the fibre glass unpainted.

"Fibre glass is absolutely indestructible. It can be reused indefinitely. I know that I have used fibre glass flats over and over in 15 operas.

"Stage hands don't object to these. They like aluminum flats framed in wood, since wood slides better.

"Can I conceive of a work of high artistic merit in which visual dramatic action would transtend in importance orchestral music and singing?

"No.

"I think that opera is what it is. The main aesthetic stimulus comes from the music. When you get away from that, you get into musical comedy and movies with music in the background."

"Translucency is also one of its qualities. Instead of building a window in the wall of a room, you can leave a the ear is more sensitive than the eye. Even when choruses do watch the conductor, you find them sometimes failing to be in tempo with the leading singers.

BORIS GOLDOVSKY

"As for variety of interpretation under this method, it calls for an enormously unified attitude. Nowadays we have available large numbers of gifted artists. We think of singers as artists in their own right. At one time all singers were considered stupid.

"It's like ensemble or chamber music. The other night you heard the Budapest String Quartet, all leading, all following. These people hear and understand each other so well.

"So it is with our opera. If one of our singers one night is led to give his role a new interpretation, the conductor and the other singers must be responsive to this.

"But all this requires certain conditions. You must have only brilliant people around: actors as well as intelligent, well trained, healthy people.

"I have been experimenting with a small electronic device for each performer to wear — to convey the beat by sense of touch from conductor to performer.

"It is true there are times when the music does not give the performer enough information."

Goldovsky, son of violinist Lea Luboschutz, was born in Moscow. He's 35. At 12, he appeared as piano soloist with the Berlin Philharmonic in 1921.

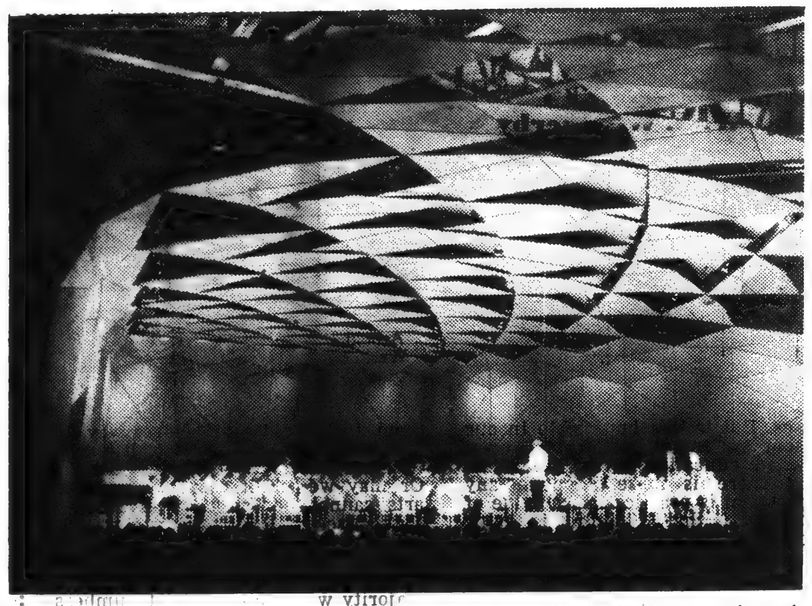
He studied piano with his uncle Pierre Luboschutz, later in Berlin with Schnabel and with Dohanyi.

Goldovsky came to the United States in 1930. The New England Opera Company, which he founded in 1946, has visited both Charlotte and Rock Hill.

Goldovsky said on his tour next season with "The Barber of Seville" he will have performances in Greenville, S.C., and Columbia late in November.

"Yes," continued Goldovsky, "operas being written at the present time are encouraging in terms of quantity. I know for a fact that at least 100 operas are being written.

54



Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD

school and festival

by Colin Mason

The nearest description of Tanglewood in terms of English institutions is a combination of Glyndebourne, Dartington, and the Proms. The estate near Lenox, Massachusetts, from which Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales" took their name, was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936. Since then the orchestra's annual festival there has grown from one week to seven (from next year it is to be eight), and since 1940 has been combined with a summer school of a level and scope probably unrivalled anywhere else in America or indeed in any other continent.

To observe the festival properly one should go after the second week. My visit this year was over the first weekend, when only the first-desk players are there, playing Bach while the rest of the orchestra is having a well-earned breather after a long winter season followed immediately by twelve weeks of slogging at nightly "Pops" and Esplanade Concerts. A weekend of Bach is exactly the thing to hear at Tanglewood, but it is not music that fully displays the virtues either of the orchestra or of its conductor, Charles Munch, who is soon to retire. Nor does it draw as large an audience as the later concerts which are given by the full orchestra.

The famous "Shed," a concert hall with a roof but no walls, which was built in 1938 because the orchestra and audience had been drenched in a violent storm the year before, seats 6,000, and the lawns around it seat another 9,000.

With the exception of a chamber concert every Wednesday, given by a well-known quartet or other ensemble, the festival is confined to the weekends, and the rest of the week is devoted to the school. The school was founded by Koussevitzky to give young musicians experience of concerted playing, and this is still its main function, though there are now departments of composition and of "listening and analysis" (a superior brand of music-appreciation).

Most of the teaching staff are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and each one coaches a group of students in the performance of one major chamber work each week. At the end of each week, on Sunday morning, there is a public concert in which two or three of the ensembles perform the work they have prepared.

Instrumentalists may also, or alternatively, work in the orchestral department, where students learn something of the professional orchestral player's repertory and life, rehearsing three hours a day, six days a week, under Eleazar de Carvalho (or occasionally under an outstanding student conductor), for a public concert every Thursday. The student orchestra may also be called on to play for the opera department. In this department young singers are similarly given a taste of working conditions in opera. Besides one major complete production with orchestra each year, many single scenes from standard operas are given on stage, mostly with piano accompaniment.

The smallest department in the school and the only one in which individual lessons are given is that of composition, directed by the chairman of the teaching board, Aaron Copland. Usually, at least one well-known composer from abroad is invited to teach, and this year there are two—Roberto Gerhard and Wolfgang Forther. This too is a practical school, and with the help of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago fellowships are provided for eleven players who are at the disposal of the composition department to play the works of the students at the so-called "composers' forum" every Monday, and also to play at the "seminar in contemporary music" every Friday, at each of which a distinguished visiting composer gives an introductory talk to a performance of one or two of his works.

Something over 400 students can be taken each year, and the average number is around this, though this year it is down by about a hundred. The fees are not high ($220 for the seven weeks' tuition, $215 for board and lodging), and any student who is unable to pay can get a scholarship for the asking, on the understanding that he will repay the money when he can afford to.

One of the lawns overlooking Lake Mahkeenac

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 10 1961

Sing in Choir at Tanglewood

Four Pittsfield women who sang in the Tanglewood Choir at Sunday afternoon's concert at the Berkshire Music Festival are, from the left, Mrs. Freda Sass, Miss Carol Sykes, Mrs. Sally Aaronson and Mrs. Mary Violet. All four are studying at the festival's choral department.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Christian Science
Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 9 1961

Japanese Honors Boston Music Heritage

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Miss Kazuko Tatsumura brought greetings to Boston Tuesday from her home town and Boston's sister city, Kyoto, Japan.

Taking time out from her studies at Tanglewood in the Berkshires in Massachusetts, Miss Tatsumura acted for Mayor Gizo Takayama of Kyoto in presenting to Deputy Mayor Henry A. Scagnoli a porcelain salt and pepper set and silk place mats designed at her father's Tatsumura Silk Textile Design Institute.

It was Mayor Takayama who several years ago first noted the similarities between Boston and Kyoto. Kyoto is the famed center of culture, religion, and historical treasure in Japan.

At the ceremonies Mr. Scagnoli gave Miss Tatsumura a copy of "Boston, a Topographical History" by Walter Muir Whitehall.

Currently studying at Tanglewood under G. Wallace Woodworth of the music department at Harvard University, Miss Tatsumura—whose name when liberally translated means "Peace in a Heavenly Village"—is an accomplished musicologist.

A graduate of Toho Music College in Tokyo she wrote her thesis on Bela Bartok and has written articles on various musical subjects.

One of her favorite jobs is translating, for sale in Japan, record jackets for recordings produced in the United States.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

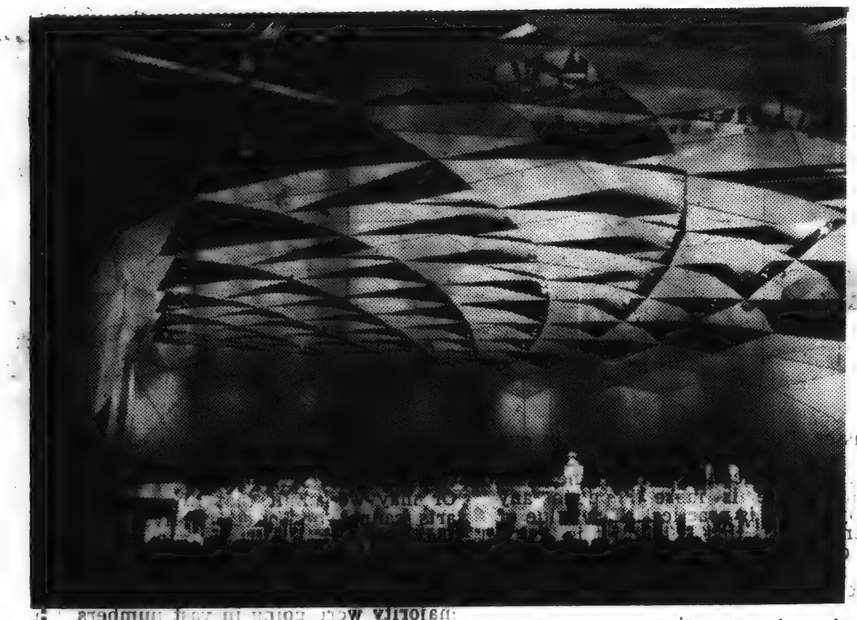
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUN 20 1961

BSO Remodeling Bullard Barn

LENOX—A barn on the former Mrs. Mary Reynolds Bullard's estate on Hawthorne Street, which was recently purchased by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is being remodeled to be used for classrooms in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Center.

Located across Hawthorne Street from Tanglewood, the barn will contain five studios when alterations are completed. A three-storied structure is planned, with the largest studios on the first and third floors. The second floor is expected to contain three smaller studios.

54



Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Shed at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD

school and festival

by John Mason

The nearest description of Tanglewood in terms of English institutions is a combination of Glyndebourne, Dartington, and the Proms. The estate near Lenox, Massachusetts, from which Hawthorne's "Tanglewood Tales" took their name, was presented to the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1936. Since then the orchestra's annual festival there has grown from one week to seven (from next year it is to be eight), and since 1940 has been combined with a summer school of a level and scope probably unrivalled anywhere else in America or indeed in any other continent.

To observe the festival properly one should go after the second week. My visit this year was over the first weekend, when only the first-desk players are there, playing Bach while the rest of the orchestra is having a well-earned breather after a long winter season followed immediately by twelve weeks slogging at nightly "Pops" and Esplanade Concerts. A weekend of Bach is exactly the thing to hear at Tanglewood, but it is not music that fully displays the virtues either of the orchestra or of its conductor, Charles Munch, who is soon to retire. Nor does it draw as large an audience as the later concerts which are given by the full orchestra.

The famous "Shed," a concert hall with a roof but no walls, which was built in 1938 because the orchestra and audience had been drenched in a violent storm the year before, seats 6,000, and the lawns around it seat another 9,000.

With the exception of a chamber concert every Wednesday, given by a well-known quartet or other ensemble, the festival is confined to the weekends, and the rest of the week is devoted to the school. The school was founded by Koussevitzky to give young musicians experience of concerted playing, and this is still its main function, though there are now departments of composition and of "listening and analysis" (a superior brand of music-appreciation).

Most of the teaching staff are members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and each one coaches a group of students in the performance of one major chamber work each week. At the end of each week, on Sunday morning, there is a public concert in which two or three of the ensembles perform the work they have prepared.

Instrumentalists may also, or alternatively, work in the orchestral department, where students learn something of the professional orchestral player's repertory and life, rehearsing three hours a day, six days a week, under Eleazar de Carvalho (or occasionally under an outstanding student conductor), for a public concert every Thursday. The student orchestra may also be called on to play for the opera department. In this department young singers are similarly given a taste of working conditions in opera. Besides one major complete production with orchestra each year, many single scenes from standard operas are given on stage, mostly with piano accompaniment.

The smallest department in the school, and the only one in which individual lessons are given is that of composition, directed by the chairman of the teaching board, Aaron Copland. Usually, at least one well-known composer from abroad is invited to teach, and this year there are two—Roberto Gerhard and Wolfgang Fortner. This too is a practical school, and with the help of the Fromm Music Foundation of Chicago fellowships are provided for eleven players who are at the disposal of the composition department to play the works of the students at the so-called "composers' forum" every Monday, and also to play at the "seminar in contemporary music" every Friday, at each of which a distinguished visiting composer gives an introductory talk to a performance of one or two of his works.

Something over 300 students can be taken each year and the average number is around this, though this year it is down by about a hundred. The fees are not high ($220 for the seven weeks' tuition, $215 for board and lodging), and any student who is unable to pay can get a scholarship for the asking, on the understanding that he will repay the money when he can afford to.

One of the lawns overlooking Lake Mahkeenac

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 10 1961

Sing in Choir at Tanglewood

Four Pittsfield women who sang in the Tanglewood Choir at Sunday afternoon's concert at the Berkshire Music Festival are, from the left, Mrs. Freda Sass, Miss Carol Sykes, Mrs. Sally Aaronson and Mrs. Mary Violet. All four are studying at the festival's choral department.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
AUG 9 1961

Japanese Honors Boston Music Heritage

By a Staff Writer of The Christian Science Monitor

Miss Kazuko Tatsumura brought greetings to Boston Tuesday from her home town and Boston's sister city, Kyoto, Japan.

Taking time out from her studies at Tanglewood in the Berkshires in Massachusetts, Miss Tatsumura acted for Mayor Gizo Takayama of Kyoto in presenting to Deputy Mayor Henry A. Scagnoli a porcelain salt and pepper set and silk place mats designed at her father's Tatsumura Silk Textile Design Institute.

It was Mayor Takayama who several years ago first noted the similarities between Boston and Kyoto. Kyoto is the famed center of culture, religion, and historical treasure in Japan.

At the ceremonies Mr. Scagnoli gave Miss Tatsumura a copy of "Boston, a Topographical History" by Walter Muir Whitehall.

Currently studying at Tanglewood under G. Wallace Woodworth of the music department at Harvard University, Miss Tatsumura—whose name when liberally translated means "Peace in a Heavenly Village"—is an accomplished musicologist.

A graduate of Toho Music College in Tokyo she wrote her thesis on Bela Bartok and has written articles on various musical subjects.

One of her favorite jobs is translating, for sale in Japan, record jackets for recordings produced in the United States.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUN 20 1961

BSO Remodeling Bullard Barn

LENOX—A barn on the former Mrs. Mary Reynolds Bullard's estate on Hawthorne Street, which was recently purchased by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is being remodeled to be used for classrooms in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Center.

Located across Hawthorne Street from Tanglewood, the barn will contain five studios when alterations are completed. A three-storied structure is planned, with the largest studios on the first and third floors. The second floor is expected to contain three smaller studios.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUN 17 1961

TANGLEWOOD CLASSROOMS will be located in this barn recently acquired by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Hawthorne Street opposite the music center. The barn was part of the estate of the late Mary Reynolds Bullard which was sold to John Harding and then to the BSO. Partitions and new flooring will be part of the remodeling project. Gray

BSO To Convert Former Barn For Use as Classroom Space

LENOX — A barn on the former Mrs. Mary Reynolds Bullard's estate on Hawthorne Street, which was recently purchased by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is being remodeled to be used for classrooms in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Center.

Located across Hawthorne Street from Tanglewood, the barn will contain five studios when alterations are completed. A three-storied structure is planned, with the largest studios on the first and third floors. The second floor is expected to contain three smaller studios.

Classes Growing Larger

More classroom space is needed because of the increasing size of classes each year at the BMC. The barn will be left essentially in its rough, rustic condition except for necessary alterations, such as wall partitions on the second floor and some flooring. Incandescent lighting will be installed. The customary studio furniture, such as chairs and music stands, will be introduced later.

The idea of converting the barn into studios was conceived by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The carpentry at the barn is being done by Ernest J. Cramer, Pittsfield contractor, and is expected to be completed by July 1.

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
D. 16,291

JUL 1 1961

Berkshire Music Center Opening Is Scheduled on Sunday

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p. m. Sunday in the theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The public may attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the center. Raymond S. Wilkins, Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 8,236

AUG 25 1961

Scholarship Awarded Bradford Composer

Peter Lewis of Bradford has returned home after seven weeks at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires.

He attended the Tanglewood Music Festival and School under a scholarship and while there, received a Drechsler commission to compose chamber music to be presented next season.

Lewis received his bachelor of arts degree from the University of California at Santa Barbara and his masters degree from UCLA. He continued his studies in composition last year at Brandeis University.

This October, he will participate in a composers' forum at the New York City Public Library.

UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER-DISPATCH
D, 45,903 S. 56,915

JUN 12 1961

MAESTRO'S TOUCH—Hugh Ross, famous choral conductor, rehearsed yesterday with chorus of 106 selected from area high schools. Watching at Munson-Williams-Proctor Institute were area school and church chorus choir directors.

Potential Is Praised

Internationally famous choral director Hugh Ross said this weekend that the Utica area had excellent music potential.

Ross was in Utica to take part in a clinic and festival at the Munson - Williams-Proctor Institute sponsored by Utica College and arranged by Jose Serebrier, conductor of the Utica Symphony Orchestra.

Throughout Saturday Ross worked with area conductors and an adult chorus selected from church and private choirs and choruses.

Ross commented: "They are much better than you should expect from a much larger area."

Yesterday he rehearsed publicly a chorus made up of boys and girls from Utica Free Academy, Proctor High School, New Hartford Central, Whitesboro Central, Sauquoit Valley Central, Rome Free Academy and Camden Central.

Ross has conducted his own choruses with the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra. He was also guest conductor with the Minneapolis, Pittsburg and Buffalo Symphony Orchestras and the British Broadcasting Corp.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783

JUL 1 1961

At Tanglewood

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held tomorrow at 3:30 P.M. in the Theater at Tanglewood. The public is invited to attend and to remain for tea in the Tanglewood gardens.

Charles Munch will arrive here Monday from Paris and will go directly to his summer home at Richmond. Wednesday he will have his first rehearsal with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the week-end concerts July 7-9.

These orchestral concerts will be preceded by the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs July 5. The Curtis String Quartet will be heard in the 1200-seat theater.

Berkshire Music Center

"Music under the Moon" was the first name given to the Berkshire Music Festival by its founder, Dr. Henry Hadley. This festival and the Berkshire Music Center, where Delta Omicron offers each year the Mabel Dunn Hopkins Memorial Tuition Scholarship, are coordinated and are frequently referred to as "Tanglewood." Actually "Tanglewood" is the name of the historic 200-acre estate, on which is located the famous shed which seats 6000 and where the original residence provides studios and classrooms for the Music Center. It was to this estate that the noted author Nathaniel Hawthorne fled for refuge when driven out of Salem by politics. In describing the view at "Tanglewood" he wrote, "There is a glen between this house and the lake through which winds a little brook with pools and tiny water falls over great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and is filled with trees, so that it is all a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain, looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods; and beyond Monument the dome of Taconic which is generally a dark blue unvaried mountain top."

Whitestone

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Students from abroad are encouraged to come to Tanglewood, and many pursuing a period of study in the United States often begin in the cosmopolitan and democratic atmosphere of Tanglewood.

Whitestone

LINDA SANFORD, Mu, and SHARON MULLIGAN

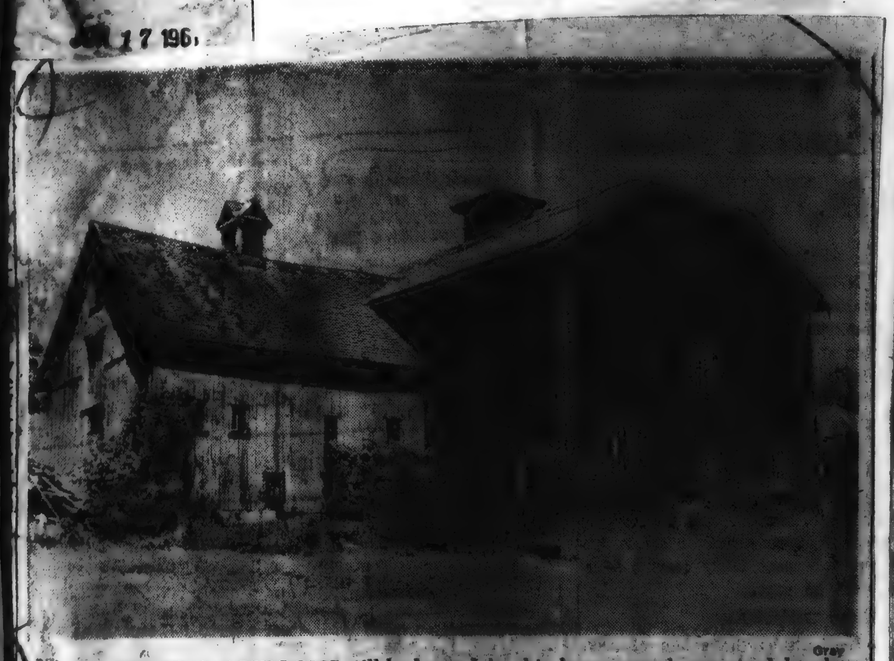
Sharon Mulligan, a violinist from Delta Xi, received the scholarship for the 1960 six-week session. Concerning her experiences at Tanglewood Sharon wrote, "Tanglewood is the most marvelous place to learn about music and being a professional musician . . . it seems impossible to learn so much in such a short time. I will always be grateful to Delta Omicron."

Assistant in the Press and Publicity Department at Tanglewood is Mu alumna, Linda Sanford.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUN 17 196



TANGLEWOOD CLASSROOMS will be located in this barn recently acquired by the Boston Symphony Orchestra on Hawthorne Street opposite the music center. The barn was part of the estate of the late Mary Reynolds Bullard which was sold to John Harding and then to the BSO. Partitions and new flooring will be part of the remodeling project.

BSO To Convert Former Barn For Use as Classroom Space

LENOX — A barn on the former Mrs. Mary Reynolds Bullard's estate on Hawthorne Street, which was recently purchased by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is being remodeled to be used for classrooms in conjunction with the Berkshire Music Center.

Located across Hawthorne Street from Tanglewood, the barn will contain five studios when alterations are completed. A three-storied structure is planned, with the largest studios on the first and third floors. The second floor is expected to contain three smaller studios.

Classes Growing Larger

More classroom space is needed because of the increasing size of classes each year at the BMC. The barn will be left essentially in its rough, rustic condition except for necessary alterations, such as wall partitions on the second floor and some flooring. Incandescent lighting will be installed. The customary studio furniture, such as chairs and music stands, will be introduced later.

The idea of converting the barn into studios was conceived by Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The carpentry at the barn is being done by Ernest J. Cramer, Pittsfield contractor, and is expected to be completed by July 1.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
WESTERLY, R. I.
Circ. 8,236
AUG 25 1961

Scholarship Awarded Bradford Composer

Peter Lewis of Bradford has returned home after seven weeks at Tanglewood, summer home of the Boston Symphony in the Berkshires.

He attended the Tanglewood Music Festival and School under a scholarship and while there, received a Drechsler commission to compose chamber music to be presented next season.

Lewis received his bachelor of arts degree from the University of California at Santa Barbara and his masters degree from UCLA. He continued his studies in composition last year at Brandeis University.

This October, he will participate in a composers' forum at the New York City Public Library.

KINGSTON, N.Y.
FREEMAN
D. 18,291
JUL 1 1961

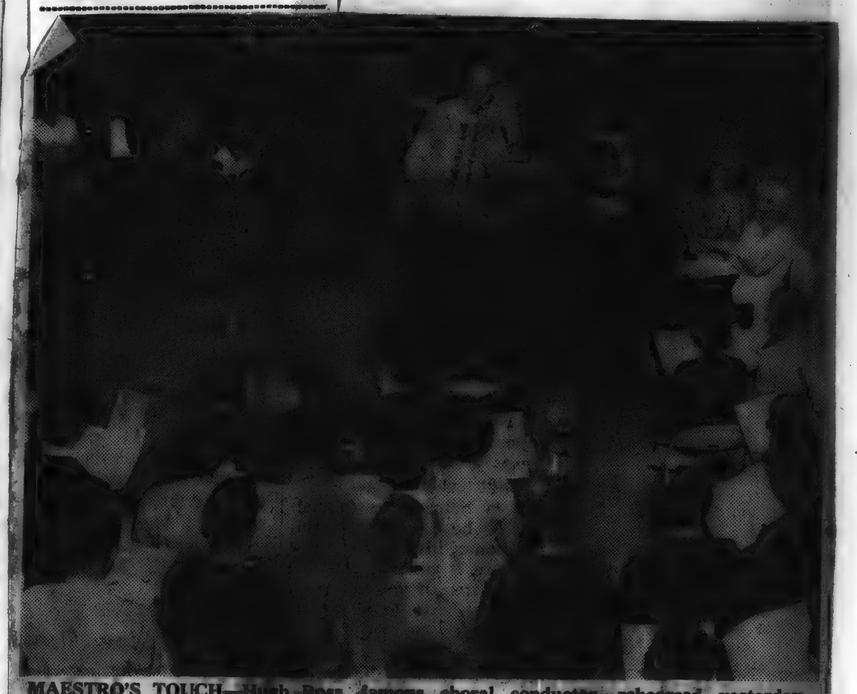
Berkshire Music Center Opening Is Scheduled on Sunday

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p. m. Sunday in the theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. The public may attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the center. Raymond S. Wilkins, Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

55
UTICA, N.Y.
OBSERVER-DISPATCH
D. 45,903 S. 56,915
JUN 12 1961



MAESTRO'S TOUCH—Hugh Ross, famous choral conductor, rehearsed yesterday with chorus of 106 selected from area high schools. Watching at Munson-Williams-Proctor Institute were area school and church chorus choir directors.

Potential Is Praised

Internationally famous choral director Hugh Ross said this weekend that the Utica area had excellent music potential.

Ross was in Utica to take part in a clinic and festival at the Munson - Williams-Proctor Institute sponsored by Utica College and arranged by Jose Serebrier, conductor of the Utica Symphony Orchestra.

Throughout Saturday Ross worked with area conductors and an adult chorus selected from church and private choirs and choruses.

Ross commented: "They are much better than you should expect from a much larger area."

Yesterday he rehearsed publicly a chorus made up of boys and girls from Utica Free Academy, Proctor High School, New Hartford Central, Whitesboro Central, Sauquoit Valley Central, Rome Free Academy and Camden Central.

Ross has conducted his own choruses with the New York Philharmonic, the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Philadelphia Orchestra. He was also guest conductor with the Minneapolis, Pittsburg and Buffalo Symphony Orchestras and the British Broadcasting Corp.

Berkshire Music Center

"Music under the Moon" was the first name given to the Berkshire Music Festival by its founder, Dr. Henry Hadley. This festival and the Berkshire Music Center, where Delta Omicron offers each year the Mabel Dunn Hopkins Memorial Tuition Scholarship, are coordinated and are frequently referred to as "Tanglewood." Actually "Tanglewood" is the name of the historic 200-acre estate, on which is located the famous shed which seats 6000 and where the original residence provides studios and classrooms for the Music Center. It was to this estate that the noted author Nathaniel Hawthorne fled for refuge when driven out of Salem by politics. In describing the view at "Tanglewood" he wrote, "There is a glen between this house and the lake through which winds a little brook with pools and tiny water falls over great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and is filled with trees, so that it is all a dense shadow of obscurity. Beyond the lake is Monument Mountain, looking like a headless sphinx wrapped in a Persian shawl, when clad in the rich and diversified autumnal foliage of its woods; and beyond Monument the dome of Taconic which is generally a dark blue unvaried mountain top."

Whitestone

BERKSHIRE MUSIC CENTER

Students from abroad are encouraged to come to Tanglewood, and many pursuing a period of study in the United States often begin in the cosmopolitan and democratic atmosphere of Tanglewood.

Sharon Mulligan, a violinist from Delta Xi, received the scholarship for the 1960 six-week session. Concerning her experiences at Tanglewood Sharon wrote, "Tanglewood is the most marvelous place to learn about music and being a professional musician . . . it seems impossible to learn so much in such a short time. I will always be grateful to Delta Omicron."

Whitestone

LINDA SANFORD, Mu, and SHARON MULLIGAN

Assistant in the Press and Publicity Department at Tanglewood is Mu alumna, Linda Sanford.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
JUL 1 1961

At Tanglewood

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held tomorrow at 3:30 P.M. in the Theater at Tanglewood. The public is invited to attend and to remain for tea in the Tanglewood gardens.

Charles Munch will arrive here Monday from Paris and will go directly to his summer home at Richmond. Wednesday he will have his first rehearsal with the Boston Symphony Orchestra in preparation for the week-end concerts July 7-8.

These orchestral concerts will be preceded by the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs July 5. The Curtis String Quartet will be heard in the 1200-seat theater.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.
PANTAGRAPH
D: 40 166 S. 35 986

AUG 2 7 1961

Jan Bach of Forrest Wins Music Award

Jan Bach, son of the J. N. Bachs of Forrest, has been named co-winner of the $250 Koussevitzky Tanglewood Composition Prize for 1961 at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

The award is named in honor of Serge Koussevitzky, famed Russian born conductor, who founded the Berkshire center and guided it through its early years.

Mr. Bach, who studied under Composer Roberto Gerhard at the center, returned to Forrest Wednesday. He plans to work toward his doctorate in music composition at the University of Illinois this fall.

The Koussevitzky prize for the best composition of the summer was shared by Roger Reynolds of Detroit, Mich. Compositions were judged by the center's composition faculty headed by Aaron Copland.

The winning compositions were played at Composers' Forums by the Fromm Players, a group of young musicians dedicated to the playing of contemporary music and sponsored by the Fromm Music Foundation.

The Koussevitzky award is one of several won by the Forrest musician. At 19, he won first prize of $1,000 in the 1956 Student Composers competition. In 1960 he won a $400 prize in a national contest for choral compositions.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564

JUL 6 1961

MORNING CONCERTS OPEN NEXT SUNDAY

Berkshire Music Center Programs To Be Given Each Week

The Berkshire Music Center's initial Sunday morning chamber music concert will be given in the Chamber Music Hall at Tanglewood Lenox, this Sunday (July 9) at 10:00 These concerts, always one of the highlights of the student performances, are presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Funds received by the Friends support the many activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music.

Opening the program will be the Haydn String Quartet, Opus 33, Number 3, which has been coached by Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Louis Speyer, the orchestra's English horn, has directed the preparation of the Hindemith Wind Quintet, and Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony, prepared the final work of the porgram, the Schumann Piano Quintet.

Because of the extended season of the Berkshire Fstival and the Berkshire Music Center, there will be seven concerts in this series on each Sunday of the season, concluding on August 20.

WASHINGTON, D.C.
STAR
D. 273,405 S. 310,373

MAY 6 1961

Music Scholarship To Rockville Youth

Michael Stoughten, 18, of 13105 Atlantic avenue, Rockville, a student and cellist at Manhattan School of Music in New York City, has received a scholarship grant for orchestral and chamber music study this summer with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood, Mass.

The award was made on the basis of an audition with Samuel Mays, first cellist of the Boston orchestra. Michael is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Stoughten, and a pupil of David Wells, cellist in residence at Princeton University and a Manhattan faculty member.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973

JUL 1 1961

Music Center Opening Will Be Tomorrow

Exercises for 300 Students Will Be in Theater At Tanglewood

LENOX — The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3.30 p. m. tomorrow in the theater at Tangelwood here. The public is invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tangelwood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. Students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the center. Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (m)
WATERVILLE, Me.
Circ. 18,382

JUL 1 1961

Bonnin Given Scholarship To Summer Session

Reginald Bonnin, Jr., son of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Bonnin, has been awarded a full scholarship for the summer session at the Berkshire Music Center, Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where he will study under the supervision of members of the Boston Symphony orchestra and perform under some of the nationally known Symphony conductors.

He has completed his second year at the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, where he is a member of the New England Conservatory orchestra and wind ensemble. He is also a regular member of the Portland Symphony orchestra.

Mr. and Mrs. Bonnin and son Richard will accompany Reginald to Lenox, Mass. today.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553

AUG 2 7 1961

Lewis Wins Award

PETER LEWIS, 28, of Ashaway, who was a student in composition at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood this summer, is one of four award winners.

He was given the Samuel Wechsler Award last week there. The award is a commission to write a composition to be played by the Fromm Players next season at Tanglewood. It must be for at least eight instruments.

Mr. Lewis has a B.A. degree from the University of California, Santa Barbara, and his M.A. degree from U.C.L.A. He held a teaching fellowship at Brandeis University in 1959-60.

His compositions, which have not yet been published, are a string quartet, a piano trio, two orchestral works and several songs. One of his latest songs was sung at a composers forum this summer at the Berkshire Music Center.

THE EDWARD DENISH BAND, with Alfred Archambeault as its guest conductor, will give a band concert today at 2 p.m. at Roger Williams Park. The concert is sponsored by the Musicians Trust Fund.

The program:

Rhode Island March	Brown
Grand Selection from "Excelsior"	Marenco
Tales from the Vienna Woods	Strauss
Seventy-Six Trombones from "Music Man"	Willson
After Sunset, Intermezzo	Pryor
Begin the Beguine	Porter
INTERMISSION
French National Denis March	Turlet
Finale, Fourth Movement from "New World Symphony"	Dvorak
Entr'acte et Valse from "Coppelia"	Delibes
La Caravane, Oriental March	Asch
Chinese Wedding Procession	Hosmer
Illinois March	Woods
National Anthem	Keye

IN

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 614,169 S. 1,254,635

DEC 2 1960

FOUR COMPOSERS SPONSOR CONCERT

Works Performed at Judson Hall—Valerie Lamoree Sings 2 Song Cycles

Four composers who have been scholarship winners at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass., in past summers sponsored a program in Judson Hall last night for the performance of their works. It was a concert that did credit to each composer.

The youngest of the quartet, 26-year-old John Brodkin Kennedy, was represented—appropriately or otherwise—by his "Songs of Innocence." The composer accompanied Valerie Lamoree, soprano, in the performance of this cycle, a setting of six poems by William Blake.

Mr. Kennedy's was the most conservative work on the program, sometimes harmonically simple, and conventional in the writing for voice. But the music avoided clichés and remained abnigborthrou gh its fresh shifts in harmonic and rhythmic movement.

By design or not, another song cycle, this one called "Chansons Innocentes," was the work of the oldest of thecomposers, Salvatore Martirano, who is 33. Miss Lamoree was again the soloist, with Mr. Martirano at the piano, in this cycle, which employs three poems by e. e. cummings and an Italian lullaby from the fifteenth century.

A more imaginative and subtle composer than his younger colleague, Mr. Martirano produced a highly sophisticated work. In two of the songs the soprano sang unaccompanied, with a piano prelude or postlude appended. The voice was required to slide, make enormous leaps, touch a note gently, but the vocal line complemented cummings' lines wittily and sensitively, and the lullaby ("Ninna Nanna") was very beautiful. Neither of the songs cycles would have seemed so good, probably, without the invaluable performances of Miss Lamoree.

Karl Korte's Oboe Quintet and Ezra Sims' String Quartet completed the program. Both composers are 32, but there the resemblance seems to end. The Oboe Quintet was a lyrical, quiet, richly scored work, integrated in form. Mr. Sims' piece was intense in feeling and expression, but its ingenious and special instrumental effects seemed self-consciously employed.

The Lenox Quartet played the Sims work, and, with the assistance of Melvin Kaplan, oboist, the Korte work.

Mr. Kennedy's "Songs of Innocense" was given its première on this occasion.

RAYMOND ERICSON

and Pasquale.

Berkshire Scholarships

Charles Munch, Director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, announces that additional fellowships and scholarships are available at Tanglewood this summer to students of stringed instruments. This is the first time since the establishment of the summer school of music in 1940 that additional Fellowships have been available. The awards, which include tuition and living expenses for the seven week school session, have a value up to $500.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sentinel (m)
WATERVILLE, Me.
Circ. 18,382

AUG 2 1961

Bonnin Plays With Symphony At Tanglewood

A Skowhegan young man had the honor of playing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra recently at Tanglewood.

Reginald Bonnin, Jr., was a member of the percussion section when the Boston Symphony played a concert the night of July 28, Charles Munch directing.

Son of Mr. and Mrs. Reginald Bonnin, Winter Street, he is studying this summer at Tanglewood on a scholarship. His teacher, Everett Firth, is a member of the Symphony and plays in the percussion section.

Bonnin will be a junior in the fall at the New England Conservatory of Music.

DETROIT, MICH.
FREE PRESS
D: 501,115 S: 522,202

AUG 2 7 1961

Music Prize Shared by Detroiter

The highest award for composing at the Berkshire Music Center was shared by a young Detroiter, Roger Reynolds, with an Illinois student.

Reynolds, of 14603 Longacre, is a student at the University of Michigan, where his compositions were featured last season in the first Contemporary Music Festival and the "Once" series of avant-garde compositions.

Reynolds

He has been studying this summer at the Berkshire Music Center with Roberto Gerhard, the Tanglewood composer in residence.

* * *

THE AWARD Reynolds shares is the Koussevitsky Tanglewood Composition Prize, named in honor of the founder the Berkshire Festival, Serge Koussevitsky.

The co-winner is Jan M. Bach, of Forrest, Ill.

Both had compositions performed at Tanglewood during the summer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Back Bay Ledger & Beacon Hill Times
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,500

APR 6 1961

Dr. Munch Announces Scholarship Program

Charles Munch, director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's Berkshire Music Center, announces additional Fellowships and Scholarships are available at Tanglewood this summer to students of stringed instruments.

This is the first time since the establishment of the summer school of music in 1940 that additional Fellowships have been available to these students. The new Fellowships and Scholarships, which include tuition and living expenses for the seven week school session, have a value of up to $500.

Doctor Munch has also announced the program, begun last year, of seminars for string players will be continued this summer. Designed to explore the problems of solo and ensemble playing as encountered by players of stringed instruments, the seminars are led by Richard Burgin, Associate Conductor and Concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and William Kroll, first violin of the Kroll Quartet.

String players are encouraged

Continued on Page Three

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973

AUG 4 1961

Springfield, Mass.

TWO IN AREA STUDYING AT TANGLEWOOD

Mrs. Shenas, W. G. Wrzesien Attend Berkshire Music Center

LENOX—For several weeks each summer the Berkshire Music Festival turns this scenic community into the musical capital of the world when the Boston Symphony comes to Tanglewood, its summer home.

An orchestra without peer, the Boston Symphony not only plays the greatest of musical works, but shares its artistry when its members teach aspiring students from around the globe at its school, the Berkshire Music Center.

Among Students

Among the center's 400 students are two local residents making good use of their proximity to Tanglewood's 200 acres where the school is located, along with the orchestra's 6000-seat music shed, magnet for 190,000 visitors last year.

They are Mrs. Calliope Shenas of 220 Maple St., Springfield, who is a teacher of voice at the MacDuffie School and Springfield Conservatory and soloist at both Trinity Methodist Church and Sinai Temple, and William G. Wrzesien of 357 Chicopee St., Chicopee, a clarinetist who is a student at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston.

Although Mrs. Shenas and Mr. Wrzesien are in different departments, they have like comments to make about the school: "It is demanding and strenuous," but "stimulating and practical," a unique experience that will prove valuable in their careers.

A typical day in the lives of both means practice, practice, practice and rehearsal after rehearsal since the school's aim is "to train performers through performances."

Mrs. Shenas, housewife and mother of two sons, Stephen, 11, and William, 12½, is in the department of choral music. She is residing at the Lenox School, dorm for the Berkshire Music Center, and scarcely has time to leave here to visit with her family.

"One day," she said, "We spent 10 full hours singing, and although that was longer than usual, we're singing and practicing most of the time."

On Scholarships

Like Bill Wrzesien, Mrs. Shenas is here on scholarship and relishes the contacts with the musical greats. "These men inspire," their students say, so that many hours of rehearsing never become tediuous, although after one busy day, Mrs. Shenas caught a cold, lost her voice and had to be dosed with medicine. The sympathy fellow students displayed days later showed what a calamity this can be for a singer.

The choral department prepares for several public concerts during the season. As a choral leader, Mrs. Shenas is also a member of the Tanglewood Choir, a select group which gives separate concerts and also forms the nucleus of the Festival Chorus, made up of students from all departments. Like the choral department and the choir it too performs with the Boston Symphony, and for its concert Tuesday, Mrs. Shenas was assigned the only major solo, the "Gloria" in the Sammartini "Magnificat."

Most of Mrs. Shenas' previous musical training has been in the solo field. A contralto, she started her voice study late, after receiving a bachelor's degree in zoology at Wellesley—at the Longy School of Music and in her third year there was married. In 1954, she made her Town Hall debut and since has done concert work all over this country.

She doesn't have a New York agent now, but did up until about a year ago, and perhaps will again, but for the present, teaching and homemaking are demanding enough. Compared to her schedule at Tanglewood, however, she finds life back in Springfield easier since she can set her own pace and here she must keep to a fairly rigid program.

She did manage to steal part of an evening, however, to have dinner with another Springfielder, Adele Addison, an old friend, and they enjoyed comparing notes on the Berkshire Music Center as it was when Miss Addison studied here and as it is today.

Founded by Koussevitzky

The school was founded by Serge Koussevitzky in 1940 and except for the years during World War II when it was closed, has expanded yearly. Today, under Charles Munch's direction, the school has seven departments covering chamber music, composition, orchestra and conducting, opera, choral music and listening and analysis.

Its faculty comprises some of the world's outstanding musicians among them former students like Leonard Bernstein and Eleazar de Carvalho.

Studying in both the orchestra and chamber music courses is Bill Wrzesien who is also the librarian for the student orchestra. Twenty years old, he has already been singled out by his instructors as showing promise and one of his greatest thrills since coming to Tanglewood is having his conductors praise him to his clarinet teacher, Rosario Mazzeo, a member of the Boston Symphony and also on the faculty at New England Conservatory. His talent has also been noted by his having been chosen a member of a quartet which has played new compositions written this season at Tanglewood by special students on a fellowship from the Fromm Music Foundation.

Bill decided on a career in music after being in the Chicopee High School Band. He first attended Hartt College and after a year transferred to the conservatory where he will return for his senior year in September.

Attending the Berkshire Music Center meant giving up his job in the Storrowton Music Tent orchestra where he has played other summers, and although he misses seeing the shows and old friendships, he finds the concentrated study and practice and the new contacts broadening and invaluable.

For both Bill and Mrs. Shenas, however, the high light of their stay here is knowing Charles Munch and watching him at work. They call the gifted conductor who will soon retire "delightful, inspiring, a genius."

LOUISVILLE, KY.
TIMES
D. 174,191

JUL 31 1961

Private Groups

David McClure, 314 Brunswick Road, was elected to the Baptist Sunday School Board's book store committee during a meeting of the Board at Ridgecrest, N. C. . . . Bennett Penn, organist and choir director for St. Paul Methodist Church here, conducted the Tanglewood Choir in its first concert of the summer season at Lenox, Mass. Penn is studying choral conducting at the Berkshire Music Center, a summer-music workshop maintained by the Boston Symphony Orchestra . . . Thomas A. Ballantine, vice-president of the Yellowstone Distillery Company, has been reappointed to the education committee of the United States Chamber of Commerce. . . . The Kentucky State Council of Epsilon Sigma Alpha, international sorority, will present $249 to Children's Hospital Wednesday. Miss Diane Dawson, 5640 Southern Parkway, treasurer of the chapter, will make the presentation.

ROME, N.Y.
SENTINEL
D. 18,742

JUN 8 1961

Scholarship Awarded to Robert Pecci

Robert Pecci, instructor of string music in the Rome Public Schools, has been awarded a scholarship to study symphonic conducting at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., from June 29 to Aug. 29.

The competitive award originates from the RCA Victor Division of Radio Corp. of America and the Rockefeller Foundation and is sponsored by the Boston Symphony Orchestra for talented young conductors of the United States.

Pecci also will play in the violin section of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, which gives concerts regularly at Tanglewood during the summer.

Robert Pecci

The seminar offers the opportunity for discussion with famous conductors, including Eugene Ormandy, of the Philadelphia Symphony, and Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic, and Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Sunday Telegram
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 95,106

MAY 28 1961

And now for a progress report on Jimmy Foss, Sanford's drummer-boy whose education plans were shattered last fall together with his leg in an automobile crash. You will remember that Jimmy was confined to bed for more than six months, and at one time faced a serious operation which never had to be done. Well, the news is still good. He has been awarded one of six full scholarships in percussion at Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. Competition for entrance to the internationally known music camp is tough, and although no figures are available as to the odds Jimmy overcame to win his scholarship, they were very high. And so the long hours of drilling on a drumming pad while bed-ridden has paid off. This summer he will be playing music and receiving direction from some of the top conductors, such as Charles Munch of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Leonard Bernstein of the New York Philharmonic. And in the fall it will be back to studies when he enters the New England Conservatory in Boston.

AURORA, ILL.
BEACON-NEWS
D. 30,418 S. 31,704

57

JUL 27 1961

Lee Robert Wins Fellowship To Berkshire Music Center

Miss Lee Robert, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Clifford J. Robert of 421 Jackson Street, recently won a string fellowship to Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Mass. The much coveted fellowships are available to advanced players based on demonstrated proficiency and are for private study on the instrument chosen and for assisting the faculty of that department. All expenses are paid for the seven-week period.

Lee also won the Naftzger young artist cash award in the instrumental division at Wichita University last semester. The competition was state wide and the judges were Guy Frazer Harrison, conductor of the Oklahoma City Symphony and Clyde Roller, conductor of the Amarillo Texas Symphony. Roller's comments on the judges sheet were "Real viola tone" and "beautiful style of playing." Harrison wrote "A well controlled performance, displaying very good intonation, tone and style."

She also won the Mu Phi Epsilon Alumni cash music scholarship awarded by the Wichita chapter of that national music sorority, and was cited for highest honor on honors day, receiving 3.87 out of a possible 4 average.

Lee conducted the Wichita University Symphony on television station KARD in the Dvorak Concerto for violin wth Marjorie Bacher as soloist. Lee served as principal violist with the 93 piece symphony and was the only girl chosen to conduct. She played also with the professional Wichita Symphony Orchestra which presented 14 concerts last season featuring Nathan Milstein and Jerome Hines among the soloists.

MISS LEE ROBERT

She studied piano and appeared as soloist in two recitals and as piano accompanist in public concerts for James Ceasar, violinist and concertmaster of the professional Wichita Symphony; for Joshua Missal, her viola instructor and principal violist of the symphony; and for Roger Roller, solo oboist of the symphony.

She appeared as viola soloist in two recitals and with a trio and quartet in many concerts at the university and on television during the past season.

Lee served as program chairman for Mu Phi Epsilon, honorary music sorority and as junior representative on the cabinet of the Associated Women Students. She is a member of the Newman Club and of Kappa Delta Pi national honorary education society. She had 20 private pupils she taught on four different instruments on Saturdays in a suburb of Wichita.

READING, PA.
EAGLE
D. 48,302 S. 68,401

JUN 5 1961

Berkshire Music Center Scholarship Is Awarded

Joseph J. Dylewski To Attend 7-Week Course at School

Joseph J. Dylewski, 1321 Muhlenberg St., has been awarded the annual scholarship by the Wyomissing Institute of Fine Arts to the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

This scholarship is given annually either to a student at the Institute or to another qualified student from Berks County. The award is sponsored by Mrs. Emily Hiester Harden, of Hilo, Hawaii, who taught piano at the institute before her marriage.

The scholarship covers full tuition and expenses for the seven-week season (June 15 to August 25) of the Berkshire Music Center, a project of the Boston Symphony. It affords the student a course of study, rehearsals, classes and performances, as well as attendance at the series of concerts given by the Boston Symphony. Charles Munch, Boston Symphony conductor, is the director and the principal players from the orchestra form the nucleus of the faculty.

Dylewski, son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph S. Dylewski, is a graduate of Central Catholic High School, and studied clarinet with Gerald Hasbrouck. He has been soloist with the Philharmonic and Ringgold bands of Reading. While in the military service, he was soloist and arranger with a Marine division throughout Japan, Hawaii, and the United States.

JOSEPH J. DYLEWSKI

He studied flute and oboe with Joseph Viola in Boston, and saxophone with Joseph Allard in New York. Last August he attended Pierre Monteux's school of conducting in Maine.

He also studied composition and conducting in Boston, and is at present a scholarship student at the Juilliard School of Music in New York City. His compositions include works for chamber orchestra and wind quintet. One of his compositions was performed by the Reading Woodwind Quintet last December. The other works have been performed in New York City and elsewhere.

58

FARMINGTON, N.M.
TIMES
D. 7,966 S. 8,146
JUN 12 1961

Tuition Scholarship Awarded to Judi Turano

Another musical scholarship honor has been given to Miss Judi Turano, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Turano, 918 North Allen.

The 1961 graduate of the University of New Mexico has been awarded a tuition scholarship by Boris Gildovsky of the Metropolitan Opera Company, to study opera with him this summer at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

The festival will begin July 2 and continue through Aug. 20.

The Berkshire Music Center was founded in 1940 by members of the Boston Symphony, who form the nucleus of the center's faculty with Charles Munch as music director of the symphony and Aaron Copland as chairman of the faculty.

Special guests and advisers this year will include Leonard Bernstein, Pierra Monteaux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Isaac Stern.

Miss Turano also was the 1961 national voice winner of the Student Auditions of the National Federation of Music Clubs. With that honor went a fellowship to continue graduate studies at the university next fall.

Miss Turano plans to leave late this month with her parents and four sisters to visit another daughter and sister, Sister Ruth Angelo, who is a novice at the Kentucky headquarters of the Ursuline order of nuns. From there the singer will go to Tanglewood.

LE ROY, N.Y.
GAZETTE-NEWS
W. 1,848
JUN 29 1961

Former LeRoy Girl Has Received Musical Award

Mrs. Elizabeth Artman Hagenah of Stockbridge, Mass., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Artman of the Warsaw Rd., has been extended a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. She will participate in the Tanglewood 1961 Berkshire Festival from July 5th until Aug. 20th. Mrs. Hagenah was selected for the scholarship after auditioning before a committee in New York City.

At the 1961 Festival, fifteen concerts by full orchestra will be given plus six chamber orchestra concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, seven chamber music recitals, and two gala benefit evenings.

Charles Munch is the music director and among his guests will be Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Richard Burgin, Eugene Normandy. Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood, August 3rd in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center.

Court: Helen Jennings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Jennings, 2300 West Apache; Fred Roundy, Blanco; Mrs. Joe Musgrove and baby daughter, Farmington; Robert and William Tenison, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Tenison, 360 Sunset; Mrs. Fred Burns and baby daughter, 809 West Apache; Charles Howard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Howard, 3400 Hutton Road; Commodore Perry, 1336 Smith Lane; Herman Dozier, 801 East Bloomfield Road; Pat Stewart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Heber Stewart, 4008 Beckland; Kenneth Britton, 2109 East 17th; Jewell Kennedy, 1305 Camino Contenta; Louise Salt Tesegi Ariz.; Ethel Salt Tesegi Ariz.; Martha Austin Tesegi Ariz.

June 11—Kenneth Hilliard, son of Mrs. Alice Hilliard 521 South Miller; Mrs. Raymond Robinson and baby daughter, Bloomfield; Mrs. John Dodge and baby daughter, 914 Walnut; Mrs. Roy Nickeson and son, Jimmy, Farmington; Perry McCain, Aztec; Mrs. James Priddy and baby son, Bloomfield; Denise Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Miller, 2305 East 12th; Mrs. Darold Dole, 6501 Valley View.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 28 1961

Opera Scenes At Theater Sunday Night

TANGLEWOOD — The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center has announced the scenes for the Recital of Opera scenes for the "Recital of Opera in the theater on Sunday evening at 8:30.

Boris Goldovsky, head of the department, has supervised the productions with the assistance of Robert Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, and Felix Wolfes.

The program will begin with the Finale from Act I of "Cosi Fan Tutte" which will be followed by a complete performance of Act III of "Werther." Also to be heard are the final scene from "Eugene Onegin" and Scene I from Act III of "La Giocanda."

Completing the recital, the third of the season, will be the one-act opera, "11 Campanello." The performances of the Opera Department are presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
D 50,810 S. 51,790
JUL 2 1961

MUSIC MEDLEY

Miss Miner Wins Music Scholarship

Third Grant to Aid Juilliard Studies

Janice Miner, Kalamazooan who studied oboe at New England Conservatory in Boston with a scholarship, has left for Lenox, Mass., to attend the Berkshire Music Center with a second scholarship.

She has earned a third, too—for Juilliard School of Music in New York, where she'll continue working toward a master's degree this fall. She graduated from the University of Michigan a year ago.

Miss Miner is the daughter of Mrs. Carlyle Miner, 1219 Cherry. She has played in Kalamazoo's Junior Symphony and the Symphony Orchestra and been a staff member of the National Music Camp.

* * *

THE CHOIRS OF St. Monica Catholic Church have made an LP recording of parts of Daniel E. Connor's "Mass of St Cecelia," and other works.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
JUN 24 1961

FROMM UNIT AIDS BERKSHIRE FETE

Contemporary Composers to Join Tanglewood Events

Contemporary composers from this country and abroad are expected to contribute much to the vitality of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. As a result of the participation of the Fromm Music Foundation, a series of seminars, lectures and concerts devoted to new music will occur throughout the seven-week season, which begins Wednesday.

Each Friday afternoon during the season a composer will lecture on his music and musical thought. The lecture will be followed by a concert of his music, performed by musicians who have been brought to the Berkshire Music Center under Fromm Foundation fellowships.

Among the seven composers who will conduct these seminars this summer, four are Americans still in their thirties: Billy Jim Layton, Salvatore Martirano, Seymour Shifrin and Yehudi Wyner. All are working on works commissioned by the foundation to be performed during the 1961-62 season.

The older generation is represented by Roberto Gerhard and Wolfgang Fortner, European composers who are in residence at Tanglewood this year, and by the American composer, William Schuman.

Free Chamber Music

In addition to these lecture-concerts, the Fromm Foundation will also sponsor a free concert of contemporary chamber music, to be given on July 10. This concert will honor the four composers-in-residence at the Berkshire Center — Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss, Mr. Gerhard and Mr. Fortner.

This program will include the first performance of the chamber version of Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle," a work that won the 1961 New York Music Critics Circle Award in its orchestral version.

A group of young musicians chosen by the Fromm Foundation will form the nucleus for performances at the seminars and concerts. These Fromm Fellowship Players will also participate at the Berkshire Center in student composition classes, giving young composers the chance to hear their "homework" as it is created.

The musicians include the four members of the recently formed Lenox String Quartet: Theodora Mantz and Peter Marsh, violinists; Paul Hersh, violist, and Donald McCall, 'cellist.

Also included are five players who have formed a new group, the Dorian Woodwind Quintet: John Perras, flutist; David Perkett, oboist; Arthur Bloom, clarinetist; Jane Taylor, bassoonist, and William Brown, French horn. Paul Jacobs, pianist, and Marianne Weltmann, soprano, complete the list of fellowship musicians.

This will mark the sixth consecutive year that the Fromm Foundation has participated in the Tanglewood program. The foundation is based in Chicago, and is headed by Paul Fromm. It is widely known for its liberal support of young composers, without regard for "difficulty" of musical style.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
POST-STANDARD
D. 100,126 S. 103,723
JUL 28 1961

Raleigh Directs First Concert

Stuart Raleigh of 2500 Bellevue Ave., former student in the School of Music, Syracuse University, conducted the first concert by the Tanglewood Choir Lenox, Mass., at the first concert of this season on July 18. He conducted "Eternitie," by Jan Meyerowitz, a piece scored for chorus, winds and brass instruments.

During the summer at the Berkshire Music Center, Raleigh studies choral conducting under Hugh Ross, head of the department, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett. On several occasions this season he will sing with the Festival Chorus in performances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its regular Berkshire Festival concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
JUL 8 1961

Music

Seek Federal Interest And Aid in Arts

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — A call for an immediate White House conference on the role of government in the arts was made recently by Harold Weston, chairman of the National Council on the Arts and Government, at the seventh international conference of arts councils, which was held in Philadelphia.

Eleanor Steber

Howard Lindsay is honorary chairman, and among those who are serving as members of the executive committee are composer Norman Dello Joio and Metropolitan Opera star, Eleanor Steber.

The council is the first national organization in the United States to include representatives of all major art fields, and to be concerned primarily with governmental activities and legislation related to the arts. It is entirely nonpolitical and nonpartisan.

Mr. Weston, a painter, said the close personal interest in the arts shown by both the President and Mrs. Kennedy has already had an "exhilarating influence" on American cultural life.

"The president's leadership in calling a conference would not only reaffirm this interest," he further stated, "but also would symbolize at the highest level that the welfare of the arts is a national concern for which the government must carry a share of the responsibility."

The National Council already has submitted to the White House a comprehensive plan for such a conference.

THE FROMM FOUNDATION will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood Monday evening at 8:30 in the Theatre. The concert, to which the public is invited (no admission charge), will honor the four composers in residence on the 1961 Berkshire Music Center faculty at Tanglewood: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Roberto Gerhard. The concert will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

The program will include the first American performance of Mr. Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (Frank Pelleg, soloist) and of Mr. Fortner's Third String Quartet. Mr. Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber version—prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival—of Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

The Budapest String Quartet, Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins: Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello, will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series on Wednesday (July 12) at 8:30 in the Theatre. Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Horblit award of $1,000 has been made to the American composer, Alexei Haieff. Established by Bostonia, Mark M. Horblit, in 1947, the purpose of the award is to "foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States by providing for awards to be conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and thus to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

Three compositions by this year's winner have been played by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Included are the Piano Concerto; Ballet and the Symphony No. 2. The Concerto received the New York Critics Circle award in 1952, and the Symphony No. 2 was the choice for the first American International Music Fund award.

58

FARMINGTON, N.M.
TIMES
D. 7,966 S. 8,146
JUN 12 1961

Tuition Scholarship Awarded to Judi Turano

Another musical scholarship honor has been given to Miss Judi Turano, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Angelo Turano, 918 North Allen.

The 1961 graduate of the University of New Mexico has been awarded a tuition scholarship by Boris Gildovsky of the Metropolitan Opera Company, to study opera with him this summer at the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Mass.

The festival will begin July 2 and continue through Aug. 20.

The Berkshire Music Center was founded in 1940 by members of the Boston Symphony, who form the nucleus of the center's faculty with Charles Munch as music director of the symphony and Aaron Copland as chairman of the faculty.

Special guests and advisers this year will include Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteaux, Gregor Piatigorsky and Isaac Stern.

Miss Turano also was the 1961 national voice winner of the Student Auditions of the National Federation of Music Clubs. With that honor went a fellowship to continue graduate studies at the university next fall.

Miss Turano plans to leave late this month with her parents and four sisters to visit another daughter and sister, Sister Ruth Angelo, who is a novice at the Kentucky headquarters of the Ursuline order of nuns. From there the singer will go to Tanglewood.

Court: Helen Jennings, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bob Jennings, 2300 West Apache; Fred Roundy, Kansas; Mrs. Joe Musgrove and baby daughter, Farmington; Robert and William Tenison, sons of Mr. and Mrs. Robert Tenison, 360 Sunset; Mrs. Fred Burns, and baby daughter, 302 West Apache; Charles Howard, son of Mr. and Mrs. Wayne Howard, 3400 Hutton Road; Commodore Perry, 1336 Smith Lane; Herman Dozier, 807 East Bloomfield Road; Pat Stewart, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Heber Stewart, 4008 Beckland; Kenneth Britton, 2109 East 17th; Jewell Kennedy, 1305 Camino Contento; Louise Salt, Tesegi Ariz.; Ethel Salt Tesegi Ariz.; Martha Austin Tesegi Ariz.

June 11—Kenneth Hilliard, son of Mrs. Alice Hilliard 521 South Miller; Mrs. Raymond Robinson and baby daughter, Bloomfield; Mrs. John Dodge and baby daughter, 914 Walnut; Mrs. Roy Nickeson and son, Jimmy, Farmington; Peter McCann, Aztec; Mrs. James Priddy and baby son, Bloomfield; Denise Miller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Donald Miller, 2805 East 12th; Mrs. Derold Dole, 6501 Valley View.

LE ROY, N.Y.
GAZETTE-NEWS
W. 1,848
BURRELLE'S Press Clips CERTIFIED
JUN 29 1961

Former LeRoy Girl Has Received Musical Award

Mrs. Elizabeth Artman Hagenah of Stockbridge, Mass., daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William A. Artman of the Warsaw Rd., has been extended a scholarship to the Berkshire Music Center, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. She will participate in the Tanglewood 1961 Berkshire Festival from July 5th until Aug. 20th. Mrs. Hagenah was selected for the scholarship after auditioning before a committee in New York City.

At the 1961 Festival, fifteen concerts by full orchestra will be given plus six chamber orchestra concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, seven chamber music recitals, and two gala benefit evenings.

Charles Munch is the music director and among his guests will be Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Richard Burgin, Eugene Normandy. Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood, August 3rd in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center.

KALAMAZOO, MICH.
GAZETTE
D 50,810 S. 51,790
JUL 2 1961

MUSIC MEDLEY

Miss Miner Wins Music Scholarship

Third Grant to Aid Juilliard Studies

Janice Miner, Kalamazooan who studied oboe at New England Conservatory in Boston with a scholarship, has left for Lenox, Mass., to attend the Berkshire Music Center with a second scholarship.

She has earned a third, too—for Juilliard School of Music in New York, where she'll continue working toward a master's degree this fall. She graduated from the University of Michigan a year ago.

Miss Miner is the daughter of Mrs. Carlyle Miner, 1219 Cherry. She has played in Kalamazoo's Junior Symphony and the Symphony Orchestra and been a staff member of the National Music Camp.

* * *

THE CHOIRS OF St. Monica Catholic Church have made an LP recording of parts of Daniel E. Connor's "Mass of St Cecelia," and other works.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 28 1961

Opera Scenes At Theater Sunday Night

TANGLEWOOD — The Opera Department of the Berkshire Music Center has announced the scenes for the Recital of Opera scenes for the "Recital of Opera in the theater on Sunday evening at 8:30.

Boris Goldovsky, head of the department, has supervised the productions with the assistance of Robert Evans, Thomas Philips, Frederic Popper, Arthur Schoep, and Felix Wolfes.

The program will begin with the Finale from Act I of "Cosi Fan Tutte" which will be followed by a complete performance of Act III of "Werther." Also to be heard are the final scene from "Eugene Onegin" and Scene I from Act III of "La Giocanda."

Completing the recital, the third of the season, will be the one-act opera, "11 Campanello." The performances of the Opera Department are presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
TIMES
D. 644,175 S. 1,293,658
JUN 24 1961

FROMM UNIT AIDS BERKSHIRE FETE

Contemporary Composers to Join Tanglewood Events

Contemporary composers from this country and abroad are expected to contribute much to the vitality of the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass. As a result of the participation of the Fromm Music Foundation, a series of seminars, lectures and concerts devoted to new music will occur throughout the seven-week season, which begins Wednesday.

Each Friday afternoon during the season a composer will lecture on his music and musical thought. The lecture will be followed by a concert of his music, performed by musicians who have been brought to the Berkshire Music Center under Fromm Foundation fellowships.

Among the seven composers who will conduct these seminars this summer, four are Americans still in their thirties: Billy Jim Layton, Salvatore Martirano, Seymour Shifrin and Yehudi Wyner. All are working on works commissioned by the foundation to be performed during the 1961-62 season.

The older generation is represented by Roberto Gerhard and Wolfgang Fortner, European composers who are in residence at Tanglewood this year, and by the American composer, William Schuman.

Free Chamber Music

In addition to these lecture-concerts, the Fromm Foundation will also sponsor a free concert of contemporary chamber music, to be given on July 10. This concert will honor the four composers-in-residence at the Berkshire Center — Aaron Copland, Lukas Foss, Mr. Gerhard and Mr. Fortner.

This program will include the first performance of the chamber version of Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle," a work that won the 1961 New York Music Critics Circle Award in its orchestral version.

A group of young musicians chosen by the Fromm Foundation will form the nucleus for performances at the seminars and concerts. These Fromm Fellowship Players will also participate at the Berkshire Center in student composition classes, giving young composers the chance to hear their "homework" as it is created.

The musicians include the four members of the recently formed Lenox String Quartet: Theodora Mantz and Peter Marsh, violinists; Paul Hersh, violist, and Donald McCall, cellist.

Also included are five players who have formed a new group, the Dorian Woodwind Quintet: John Perras, flutist; David Perkett, oboist; Arthur Bloom, clarinetist; Jane Taylor, bassoonist, and William Brown, French horn. Paul Jacobs, pianist, and Marianne Weltmann, soprano, complete the list of fellowship musicians.

This will mark the sixth consecutive year that the Fromm Foundation has participated in the Tanglewood program. The foundation is based in Chicago, and is headed by Paul Fromm. It is widely known for its liberal support of young composers, without regard for "difficulty" of musical style.

SYRACUSE, N.Y.
POST-STANDARD
D. 100,126 S. 103,723
JUL 28 1961

Raleigh Directs First Concert

Stuart Raleigh of 2500 Bellevue Ave., former student in the School of Music, Syracuse University, conducted the first concert by the Tanglewood Choir, Lenox, Mass., at the first concert of this season on July 18. He conducted "Eternitie," by Jay Meyerowitz, a piece scored for chorus, winds and brass instruments.

During the summer at the Berkshire Music Center, Raleigh studies choral conducting under Hugh Ross, head of the department, Alfred Nash Patterson and Willis Beckett. On several occasions this season he will sing with the Festival Chorus in performances with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at its regular Berkshire Festival concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
JUL 8 1961

Music

Seek Federal Interest And Aid in Arts

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL — A call for an immediate White House conference on the role of government in the arts was made recently by Harold Weston, chairman of the National Council on the Arts and Government, at the seventh international conference of arts councils, which was held in Philadelphia.

Eleanor Steber

Howard Lindsay is honorary chairman, and among those who are serving as members of the executive committee are composer Norman Dello Joio and Metropolitan Opera star, Eleanor Steber.

The council is the first national organization in the United States to include representatives of all major art fields, and to be concerned primarily with governmental activities and legislation related to the arts. It is entirely nonpolitical and nonpartisan.

Mr. Weston, a painter, said the close personal interest in the arts shown by both the President and Mrs. Kennedy has already had an "exhilarating influence" on American cultural life.

"The president's leadership in calling a conference would not only reaffirm this interest," he further stated, "but also would symbolize at the highest level that the welfare of the arts is a national concern for which the government must carry a share of the responsibility."

The National Council already has submitted to the White House a comprehensive plan for such a conference.

THE FROMM FOUNDATION will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood Monday evening at 8:30 in the Theatre. The concert, to which the public is invited (no admission charge), will honor the four composers in residence on the 1961 Berkshire Music Center faculty at Tanglewood: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Roberto Gerhard. The concert will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

The program will include the first American performance of Mr. Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (Frank Pelleg, soloist) and of Mr. Fortner's Third String Quartet. Mr. Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber version—prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival—of Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

The Budapest String Quartet, Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello, will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series on Wednesday (July 12) at 8:30 in the Theatre. Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's 1961 Horblit award of $1,000 has been made to the American composer, Alexei Haieff. Established by Bostonia, Mark M. Horblit, in 1947, the purpose of the award is to "foster and promote the writing of symphonic compositions by composers resident in the United States by providing for awards to be conferred in recognition of meritorious work in that field, and thus to enlarge and enrich the fund of good music suitable for rendition by symphony orchestras."

Three compositions by this year's winner have been played by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Included are the Piano Concerto; Ballet and the Symphony No. 2. The Concerto received the New York Critics Circle award in 1952, and the Symphony No. 2 was the choice for the first American International Music Fund award.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 5 1961

Annabelle Bernard, Negro Soprano, To Sing At Private Recital Monday at Music Barn

New Orleans Girl Has Triumphed Over Prejudice Mrs. Edgar B. Stern, Philanthropist, Is Her Sponsor

By LOUISE SWEENEY

A Negro soprano whose father is a Mississippi barber will be guest artist Monday in the town where members of her race have difficulty getting haircuts.

New Orleans-born Annabelle Bernard will sing in Lenox Monday, when Mrs. Edgar B. Stern and Boris Goldovsky present her in a private recital at Music Barn. (Just this week, a Negro student at the Berkshire Music Center had difficulty getting a haircut in Lenox; Tanglewood students picketed the barber shop in question.)

The triumph of talent over prejudice is no new story to Annabelle, who has been lauded by her own home-town newspaper, the New Orleans Times - Picayune. When Annabelle made her debut as a dusky "Madame Butterfly" at the Stuttgart Opera House early this summer, the Times-Picayune gave a full account of the performance. The most significant thing about the story was the absence of any racial allusion — unique in a Southern press which lists a person's race along with his age.

Librizzi

BRAHMS LIEDER ON HER LAP, Annabelle Bernard rests on the patio of the Lenox summer home owned by her sponsor, Mrs. Edgar B. Stern.

Mrs. Stern Arranged Audition

One of the first to note the New Orleans paper's tradition was Mrs. Edgar Stern. Annabelle's angel. Mrs. Stern, a Southern philanthropist who vowed she would never have a protégé, changed her mind when she first heard Annabelle sing. That was in their home town, New Orleans, when Annabelle appeared at Xavier College in an opera by a Negro composer for an all-Negro cast. Mrs. Stern, impressed by Annabelle's voice and dramatic ability, arranged for an audition with Boris Goldovsky, noted opera producer. Despite an out-of-tune piano and a low ceiling, Mrs. Stern recalls, Annabelle sounded superb. That audition launched her on her career—"a long ladder to climb" as Mrs. Stern says.

The rungs of the ladder are arranged chronologically on the crisp black and white invitations issued for Monday's recital. They begin in 1956 with her graduation from Xavier University; also in 1956, the beginning of her course of study for three summers at Mr. Goldovsky's opera department at Tanglewood. In the fall of 1956, Annabelle entered the New England Conservatory of Music, where she garnered every available award: she received the Eleanor Steeher Award and the Goldovsky Award in 1958; in 1959 she was awarded the coveted Artist Diploma from the New England Conservatory of Music and had her professional debut at the New England Opera Theater. That same year she won the Beebe award at the New England Conservatory. This last award, amounting to a lump sum of $7,000, is one of the richest given to an incipient diva. Its only stipulation was that the artist go abroad and fend for herself, staying as long as the money lasts. In all, Annabelle had amassed $10,000 in prizes by the time of her graduation from the conservatory at Boston. Mrs. Stern, who had paid for Annabelle's tuition and expenses at the conservatory, matched that prize-winning money dollar for dollar. So when Annabelle left for Germany two years ago, Mrs. Stern stashed away an identical $10,000 "to give Annabelle a nest egg when she comes back."

Conquest of Germany

Once in Germany, Annabelle lost no time singing her way into national fame. In that same year, 1959, she won the 8th International Music Competition in the Republic of Germany. She repeated in 1960. One of hundreds of competitors, she had been heard and admired by the director of the music conservatory in Stuttgart, which offered her a scholarship. Just before last Christmas, her debut at the State Opera House, Stuttgart, was scheduled. But a stuffy soprano in the opera company put up a fuss, and the debut was canceled. Annabelle finally made her Stuttgart debut in June 21 in the role of "Madame Butterfly," her favorite.

At present "Madame Butterfly" is one of three operas considered reasonable for a Negro's repertoire. The other two are "Aida" and "Manon Lescaut." Shortly after Negro soprano Leontyne Price had broken the operatic color barrier in Milan with her performance in "Aida," a spokesman for La Scala had this to say: "If she sings 'Butterfly' and anybody objects, we'll say she's a suntanned Butterfly." Soprano Annabelle has different views, based on close operatic associations with Boris Goldovsky. It was Mr. Goldovsky who first had Annabelle apply white makeup for a variety of roles in Tanglewood and Opera Theater productions—and who, the story goes, once dazzled her audience with a red wig. As Annabelle puts it, "If they can make the white brown for Aida, they can make the brown white for Mimi."

Annabelle speaks English today with a German accent; in fact, she thinks in German after two years in that country. When interviewed, she hesitated between English and German: her conversation was laced with "ja's" and "nein's." In Germany she found little discrimination—more curiosity than anything else, since few young Negroes are seen in that country. Some people took it for granted she was Indonesian or some other Far Eastern strain—few guessed that she was an American. Annabelle speaks glowingly of the German love of singing, the surfeit of operas, recitals and concerts available year-round there.

Just a few days ago, Annabelle was guest artist at the celebration of the House of Hohenzollern's 900th anniversary. Wearing a gown of pink peau d'ange, long white kid gloves, and pearls, Annabelle sang German lieder in that chandeliered castle before 50 members of the house which produced the last emperors of Germany. Monday's recital, to be held at Music Barn, will be less formal—but the program will include Beethoven, Brahms lieder, some Spanish songs of de Falla, and Greek songs from Ravel. Following the recital, a buffet supper will be served to guests at Don Soviero's Potting Shed. After the supper, guests may wish to attend Mr. Goldovsky's Tanglewood Opera at 8:30.

Tradition of Philanthropy

Annabelle's angel for the past five years has been a woman whose family maintains a tradition of philanthropy to Negro causes. Mrs. Edgar B. Stern is the daughter of millionaire philanthropist Julius Rosenwald, who amassed a fortune when he took over the bankrupt Sears, Roebuck Co. Before his death in 1932, Mr. Rosenwald contributed generously to the cost of 25 Negro YMCA and three Negro YWCA buildings in 25 cities with about 2 million Negro population, contributed over $3 million to rural school buildings for Negroes in the South; and donated $2.7 million toward a Negro housing project in Chicago. He pledged equally large sums for the Museum of Science and Industry in Chicago, for Jewish colonization in Russia; for the University of Chicago; and set up the Julius Rosenwald Fund with $30 million capital for projects aimed at "the well-being of mankind."

Following in those staggering footsteps, the Rosenwald sons and daughters have each dedicated themselves to some sort of public good. Lessing Julius Rosenwald, who is ranked first among collectors of engravings and prints, has willed his splendid collection to the National Gallery. The late Adele Rosenwald Levy, whose main interest was in underprivileged children, was head of the Citizens Committee for Children of New York City until her recent death; now the post has been taken by another sister, Marion Rosenwald Ascoli, whose husband, Max, is editor of Reporter magazine. William Rosenwald, another brother, has devoted much of his energy to Jewish philanthropy as an executive in the United Jewish Appeal.

Mrs. Stern has carried on philanthropic work begun by her late husband, Edgar B. Stern, one of New Orleans' leading citizens. Vitally interested in Negro education, Mr. Stern was chairman of the board of trustees of Dillard University, a trustee of Tuskegee Institute, and a trustee of the Howard Memorial Library. In 1936 the Edgar Stern Family Fund was incorporated, with Mr. Stern as president. Its purpose was "to promote, aid and assist educational, literary, scientific, religious, and charitable undertakings, institutions, endowments, and causes." The family philanthropy has even rubbed off on the Rosenwald grandchildren, Mrs. Stern says: the Sterns' two sons, Edgar B. Stern Jr., of New Orleans, and Philip M. Stern of Alexandria, Va., as well as a daughter, Mrs. Audrey S. Hess of New York, are all active members of the Stern Family Fund.

Biggest Project

Mrs. Stern's biggest project has kept her busy for the past 11 years. It's Voters Service, Inc., a philanthropic watchdog for protecting the franchise of the voters of New Orleans which has managed to become self-supporting. The Stern family interest in music was reflected in 1957 when Mr. and Mrs. Stern offered $300,000 as a development fund to the New Orleans Philharmonic Symphony.

As a white Southerner, Mrs. Stern sees much around her that needs changing. "In the South you can discuss a Negro problem and everyone is interested, but you can't discuss the Negro problem," she says. Her own way of helping to solve the problem is epitomized in her championing of Annabelle. "You must do it privately, you must do it wisely," she says.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 8 1961

Marian Anderson Here for Recital, Tanglewood Opera

LENOX — Negro contralto Marian Anderson returned to her farm in Danbury, Conn., early this morning by train after coming to the Berkshires yesterday to attend a recital given at Music Barn by Annabelle Bernard of New Orleans, La., a protegee of Mrs. Edgar Stern, a Lenox summer resident.

Miss Anderson was invited to the recital by Mrs. Stern, who arranged the performance with Boris Goldovsky, head of the opera department at the Berkshire Music Center.

After attending the recital in the afternoon, Miss Anderson last night went to Tanglewood to attend the United States premiere of the Berkshire Music Center's opera department's performance of the opera, "King Theodore in Venice," by Giovanni Paisello, with libretto by Giambattista Casti.

Traveling alone, Miss Anderson came here by train from Danbury yesterday, registered at the Curtis Hotel, and left by train this morning shortly after 7 to return to her farm.

60

BERKSHIRE LORE

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 869,958 S. 1,186,625
JUL 30 1961

Massachusetts Offers History,

The scenery—and fishing—is good at Cape Cod, Mass.
[Massachusetts Dept. of Commerce Photos]

Plenty to Do, See in Bay State

By Harold Hutchings

PITTSFIELD, Mass.—With a bicentennial celebration here in the west and President Kennedy summering part of the season at his Hyannis Port home on Cape Cod in the east, Massachusetts, an old pro in the travel business, is having a record season.

Hutchings

The old Bay state, as it has done for more than a century, is host this summer to a potpourri of seekers after culture, recreation, and history from the farthest corners of the Republic.

• • •

Whether you give precedence among the state's attractions to the hills [that is, the Berkshires here in Berkshire county], or the seashore and salt water fishing [in the east], or the history [which can be had almost anywhere here], depends on your individual bent.

But for 1961 the Berkshires community has neatly linked the lure of its mellowed hills with history; and the energetic Cape Cod travel industry leaders have happily linked the lure of salt water with history in the making, in the off-and-on presence of the President's family.

• • •

The Berkshires and Berkshire county are widely known for the musical and artistic emphasis in their vacation tradition, being the home of the famous Tanglewood concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Ted Shawn-Jacob's Pillow Dance festival in Becket, and summer theaters with a long and solid tradition.

Less widely realized is the fact that Berkshire county, westernmost of the 14 in Massachusetts, has a distinctive personality and a long history which sparks a considerable local pride in its history dating to colonial times.

Hayride in the Berkshires

Not only the county, but two of the principal communities, Pittsfield and Great Barrington, are 200 years old this year, and various local celebrations are being held. Bicentennial historical exhibits are on view into September in the Berkshire museum and the Berkshire Athenaeum, both in Pittsfield.

Tho it was in colonial and early federal times considered remote "pioneer" territory by comparison with the more effete coastal areas, Berkshire county has a rich history. Great Barrington, then only 13 years old, forged another link in the chain of events leading to the revolution when townspeople took part in the first act of open resistance to British rule by seizing the courthouse and preventing King George's court from sitting—all a part of Shay's rebellion.

• • •

Hundreds of music lovers are gearing their visits to the Tanglewood concerts or the dance festival.

Tanglewood is a 210 acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, in the heart of the Berkshire hills. It is the scene annually of an important Boston Symphony concert series which will run this year thru Aug. 20, extended from the regular six to seven weeks, with the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler's baton present for special benefit performances Aug. 3 and 17.

Symphony concerts are at 8:30 on Fridays and Saturdays, and at 2:30 on Sundays. Charles Munch, music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts, and most of the full orchestra appearances, but guest conductors include Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Richard Burgin, Eugene Ormandy.

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
AUG 1961
1961

LENOX, MASS.

Tingles at Tanglewood

The annual jaunt to Tanglewood must seem to many people like a journey out of time into space. Music making there is charted by the broad lawns and arching skies. Sound there becomes sonar, probing the farthest ripples of the clear, cool air. The art is ventilated by the surrounding grandeur, and its reverberations invite keener listening than elsewhere.

Beside this spatial music, so real in the Berkshires, the journalistic jangle of three months ago disappears. When the New York Times called the Boston Symphony steerage to task for repeating at Tanglewood programs previously rehearsed for Boston and for slighting new music, both parties had gone scurrying to Webster, who staidly resolved things by declaring a "festival" a "periodic season of entertainment." Everyone seems to have missed the note of joy in the word, and joy was the word for the opening concerts, brimful. Beside such spirit, the ping-pong about old or new had a hollow sound for such music-making is always new.

Traditionally a Bach weekend, the first concert purveyed the four Orchestral Suites with Doriot Dwyer as flutist for the second, in B minor. She returned the next night, exploring the Brandenburg Concertos. Her colleagues for the second (F major) were Roger Voisin, trumpet; Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Richard Burgin, violin. Unforgettable were her gentle declensions opposite the oboe in the Andante and Voisin's saucy forays on the Bach trumpet, dampness or no.

The opener of this concert, Brandenburg Number Three, had jogged a bit with habit, but the return of the strings alone after intermission, in the Sixth Concerto, redeemed all. Dr. Munch had set his violas and cellos forward, which gave the sonority the sibilance of silk. He seemed rested after his holiday in Paris and easily held the fine control that invites the freshness of improvisation within a firmness of beat.

Adele Addison was there for Bach's (second) Wedding Cantata for which her communication, always musically alert and vocally right, achieved rare warmth. Spilling down from the stage, spreading wide over the listeners, came all the womanly transport of love long wished for and joyously fulfilled.

More vibrations that tingle skin and spine, as well as ears, came from Lukas Foss' piano as he joined the ensemble for the Fifth Brandenburg. A master of rhythmic vitality and sheer dynamics, this young man has come far since his oatsy days; far enough to see his music steady and whole. He also sees it as rhythm for his percolating offbeats more than once reached a point of self-animation, which allowed him and the orchestra to "cut the motor" and ride, scattering stardust, pianissimo, as he went. He is also capable of a slow-burning crescendo, which burst into flame at the cadenza and blazed through the finale. People rose and simply shouted.

Then came the Magnificat, introducing the impressive student chorus of the Berkshire Center, trained by Hugh Ross inside two weeks. It submitted to its grooming with no loss of spirit, sounding best in the opening and closing choruses and the Suscepit Israel.

—ROBERT DUMM

WOOSTER, OHIO
RECORD
D. 20,198
JUL 17 1961

Off The Record

Tangles Of Tanglewood Are Just The Place For Mosquito Hordes

By Roy W. Adams

LENNOX, MASS — Ouch, Owitch! Swap and Swat! Get Off.

Sounds in the night as hundreds of music lovers lay on blankets spread on the star-bathed verdant lawns of spacious Tanglewood, home of the fabled summer Berkshire Music Festival and Arts Center run by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

If only those blankety blank mosquitos. . .

Anyway, should you ever come this way to partake in soaking up perfect music under the stars by large ensembles like the Boston, or small chamber groups like the Budapest String Quartet this writer heard Wednesday night, be sure to bring plenty of insect repellent. Or else, buy a more expensive ticket for a seat in the shed.

• • •

ABOUNDING IN high - hedged planned gardens, Tanglewood is a landscape artist's dream come true, with clear vistas on the rolling Berkshire Mountains of this Western Massachusetts area near Pittsfield.

Moseyed around a bit before the concert; came upon a small semi-outdoor classroom with a smallish group seated listening to a casually dressed gent discoursing on performing in the rain. Taking a double take, I looked a bit closer. Sure enough . . . Danny Kaye!

The actor - comedian was here for advance preparation for a pension fund benefit concert of The Boston he was slated to conduct Thursday night.

• • •

BAR HARBOR, Maine is not the same swank attraction it was before the disasterous forest fires that swept Mount Desert Island and much of the Maine coast in the fall of 1947, just after my last visit to the state.

Motels have replaced the rambling Inns and hotels burned out, and storied rich have generally moved around to North East Harbor on the other side of the island. Still a grand place, though.

I ate so much lobster (fresh, boiled) I fear feelers will grow out of my forehead.

• • •

ALSO CHANGING is that evergreen face of Vermont, drat the luck. Villian is that great modern benefactor to the tourist, the superb Interstate Highway System. Cutting through templed hills, rocks and rills, by-passing quaint, history - soaked hamlets and famed eateries and lodgings, these meccas to high speed will pass the traveler through Vermont so fast he will be in New York state before he even realizes he has left New Hampshire. Vermont exists for the slow life, not the fast.

She will never be the same again.

part of the Kansas City season directed by the Courier's correspondent in that city.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
AUG 10 1961

Dunstable Attend Music Festival

DUNSTABLE—John Payne has returned from another vacation spent at the Tanglewood music festival in the Berkshires, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home. Each year, at about this time, Mr. Payne brushes up on his teaching skill by attending these fine sessions where inspiration and new ideas are to be found. Although he has taught for 25 years, he always finds something new in the inspirational Tanglewood. Sunday he was a guest of student Walter Poirier and his parents of Chelmsford at a concert featuring Byron Janis, eminent pianist.

The feature event was attended by six students from Lowell and their parents. It was entitled "Tanglewood In Parade." This is usually on the third Tuesday of the series, and caters mostly to younger pupils. About 8000 attended. The crowd overflowed into the huge lawns of Tanglewood. Prior to this concert, Earl Wild featured piano solos for the event and addressed the group. Most of the students returned Thursday after the main concert. Mr. Payne remained for the week.

A most enjoyable side trip helped complete a wonderful vacation. With friends he visited beautiful Lake George and Saratoga and other places of interest.

THE SPRINGFIELD UNION, SPRINGFIELD, MASS., WEDNESDAY, JULY 26, 1961

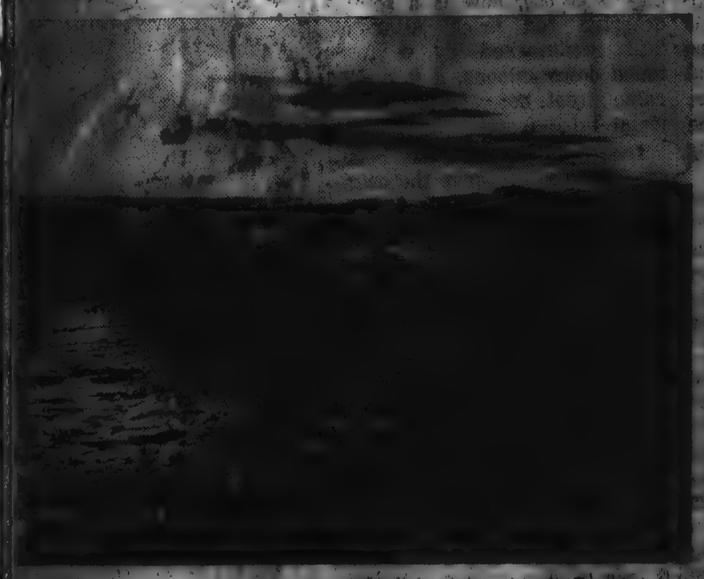
Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox Is Adding to Stature Every Year

60

BERKSHIRE LORE

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 660,958 S. 1,186,825
JUL 30 1961

Massachusetts Offers History, Plenty to Do, See in Bay State



The scenery—and fishing—is good at Cape Cod, Mass.
[Massachusetts Dept. of Commerce Photos]

By Harold Hutchisson

PITTSFIELD, Mass.—With a bicentennial celebration here in the west and President Kennedy summering part of the season at his Hyannis Port home on Cape Cod in the east, Massachusetts, an old pro in the travel business, is having a record season.

Hutchisson

The old Bay state, as it has done for more than a century, is host this summer to a potpourri of seekers after culture, recreation, and history from the farthest corners of the Republic.

• • •

Whether you give precedence among the state's attractions to the hills [that is, the Berkshires here in Berkshire county], or the seashore and salt water fishing [in the east], or the history [which can be had almost anywhere here], depends on your individual beat.

But for 1961 the Berkshires community has neatly linked the lure of its mellowed hills with history; and the energetic Cape Cod travel industry leaders have happily linked the lure of salt water with history in the making, in the off-and-on presence of the President's family.

• • •

The Berkshires and Berkshire county are widely known for the musical and artistic emphasis in their vacation tradition, being the home of the famous Tanglewood concerts of the Boston Symphony orchestra, the Ted Shawn-Jacob's Pillow Dance festival in Becket, and summer theaters with a long and solid tradition.

Less widely realized is the fact that Berkshire county, westernmost of the 14 in Massachusetts, has a distinctive personality and a long history which sparks a considerable local pride in its history dating to colonial times.

Havrida in the Berkshires

Not only the county, but two of the principal communities, Pittsfield and Great Barrington, are 200 years old this year, and various local celebrations are being held. Historical exhibits are on view into September in the Berkshire Museum and the Berkshire Athenaeum, both in Pittsfield.

Tho it was in colonial and early federal times considered remote "pioneer" territory by comparison with the more affete coastal areas, Berkshire county has a rich history. Great Barrington, then only 13 years old, forged another link in the chain of events leading to the revolution when townspeople took part in the first act of open resistance to British rule by seizing the courthouse and preventing King George's court from sitting—all a part of Shay's rebellion.

• • •

Hundreds of music lovers are gearing their visits to the Tanglewood concerts or the dance festival.

Tanglewood is a 210-acre estate between Lenox and Stockbridge, in the heart of the Berkshire hills. It is the scene annually of an important Boston Symphony concert series which will run this year thru Aug. 20, extended from the regular six to seven weeks with the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler's baton present for special benefit performances Aug. 3 and 17.

Symphony concerts are at 8:30 on Fridays and Saturdays, and at 3:30 on Sundays. Charles Munch, music director, will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts, and most of the full orchestra appearances, but guest conductors include Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, Richard Burgin, Eugene Or-

[illegible]

MUSICAL COURIER
NEW YORK, N.Y.
MONTHLY 38,700
AUG 1961
1961

LENOX, MASS.

Tingles at Tanglewood

The annual jaunt to Tanglewood must seem to many people like a journey out of time into space. Music making there is charted by the broad lawns and arching skies. Sound there becomes sonar, probing the farthest ripples of the clear, cool air. The art is ventilated by the surrounding grandeur, and its reverberations invite keener listening than elsewhere.

Beside this spatial music, so real in the Berkshires, the journalistic jangle of three months ago disappears. When the New York Times called the Boston Symphony steerage to task for repeating at Tanglewood programs previously rehearsed for Boston and for slighting new music, both parties had gone scurrying to Webster, who staidly resolved things by declaring a "festival" a "periodic season of entertainment." Everyone seems to have missed the note of joy in the word, and joy was the word for the opening concerts, brimful. Beside such spirit, the ping-pong about old or new had a hollow sound for such music-making is always new.

Traditionally a Bach weekend, the first concert purveyed the four Orchestral Suites with Doriot Dwyer as flutist for the second, in B minor. She returned the next night, exploring the Brandenburg Concertos. Her colleagues for the second (F major) were Roger Voisin, trumpet; Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Richard Burgin, violin. Unforgettable were her gentle declensions opposite the oboe in the Andante and Voisin's saucy forays on the Bach trumpet, dampness or no.

The opener of this concert, Brandenburg Number Three, had jogged a bit with habit, but the return of the strings alone after intermission, in the Sixth Concerto, redeemed all. Dr. Munch had set his violas and cellos forward, which gave the sonority the sibilance of silk. He seemed rested after his holiday in Paris and easily held the fine control that invites the freshness of improvisation within a firmness of beat.

Adele Addison was there for Bach's (second) Wedding Cantata for which her communication, always musically alert and vocally right, achieved rare warmth. Spilling down from the stage, spreading wide over the listeners, came all the womanly transport of love long wished for and joyously fulfilled.

More vibrations that tingle skin and spine, as well as ears, came from Lukas Foss' piano as he joined the ensemble for the Fifth Brandenburg. A master of rhythmic vitality and sheer dynamics, this young man has come far since his oatsy days; far enough to see his music steady and whole. He also sees it as rhythm for his percolating offbeats more than once reached a point of self-animation, which allowed him and the orchestra to "cut the motor" and ride, scattering stardust, pianissimo, as he went. He is also capable of a slow-burning crescendo, which burst into flame at the cadenza and blazed through the finale. People rose and simply shouted.

Then came the Magnificat, introducing the impressive student chorus of the Berkshire Center, trained by Hugh Ross inside two weeks. It submitted to its grooming with no loss of spirit, sounding best in the opening and closing choruses and the Suscepit Israel.

—ROBERT DUMM

WOOSTER, OHIO
RECORD
D. 20,198
JUL 17 1961

Off The Record

Tangles Of Tanglewood Are Just The Place For Mosquito Hordes

By Roy W. Adams

LENNOX, MASS — Ouch, Owitch! Swap and Swat! Get Off.

Sounds in the night as hundreds of music lovers lay on blankets spread on the star-bathed verdant lawns of spacious Tanglewood, home of the fabled summer Berkshire Music Festival and Arts Center run by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

If only those blankety blank mosquitos. . .

Anyway, should you ever come this way to partake in soaking up perfect music under the stars by large ensembles like the Boston, or small chamber groups like the Budapest String Quartet this writer heard Wednesday night, be sure to bring plenty of insect repellent. Or else, buy a more expensive ticket for a seat in the shed.

• • •

ABOUNDING IN high-hedged planned gardens, Tanglewood is a landscape artist's dream come true, with clear vistas out the rolling Berkshire Mountains of this Western Massachusetts area near Pittsfield.

Moseyed around a bit before the concert; came upon a small semi-outdoor classroom with a smallish group seated listening to a casually dressed gent discoursing on performing in the rain. Taking a double take, I looked a bit closer. Sure enough Danny Kaye!

The actor-comedian was here for advance preparation for a pension fund benefit concert of The Boston he was slated to conduct Thursday night.

• • •

BAR HARBOR, Maine is not the same swank attraction it was before the disasterous forest fires that swept Mount Desert Island and much of the Maine coast in the fall of 1947. Just after my last visit to the state.

Motels have replaced the rambling Inns and hotels burned out, and storied rich have generally moved around to North East Harbor on the other side of the island. Still a grand place, though.

I ate so much lobster (fresh, boiled) I fear feelers will grow out of my forehead.

• • •

ALSO CHANGING is that evergreen face of Vermont, drat the luck. Visitor is that great modern highway to the tourist, the superb Interstate Highway System. Cutting through tempted hills, rocks and rills, by-passing quaint, history soaked hamlets and famed eateries and lodgings, these meccas to high speed will pass the traveler through Vermont so fast he will be in New York state before he even realizes he has left New Hampshire. Vermont exists for the slow life, not the fast.

She will never be the same again.

by the Courier's correspondent in that city.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,185
AUG 10 1961

Dunstable Attend Music Festival

DUNSTABLE—John Payne has returned from another vacation spent at the Tanglewood music festival in the Berkshires, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer home. Each year, at about this time, Mr. Payne brushes up on his teaching skill by attending these fine sessions where inspiration and new ideas are to be found. Although he has taught for 25 years, he always finds something new in the inspirational Tanglewood. Sunday he was a guest of student Walter Polrier and his parents of Chelmsford, at a concert featuring Byron Janis, eminent pianist.

The feature event was attended by six students from Lowell and their parents. It was entitled "Tanglewood In Parade." This is usually on the third Tuesday of the series, and caters mostly to younger pupils. About 8000 attended. The crowd overflowed into the huge lawns of Tanglewood. Prior to this concert, Earl Wild featured piano solos for the event and addressed the group. Most of the students returned Thursday after the main concert. Mr. Payne remained for the week.

A most enjoyable side trip helped complete a wonderful vacation. With friends he visited beautiful Lake George and Saratoga and other places of interest.

Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox Is Adding to Stature Every Year

Besides Concerts, Visitors May Enjoy Rehearsals, Tours of Grounds

A trip to the home of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox is worth while even if it is only to see the spacious grounds, including the huge shed where the Boston Symphony Orchestra performs, and the other buildings.

Grounds Open

Tanglewood grounds are open for guided tours at no charge Monday through Fridays from 9 to 5. While the guides have a lunch period from 12 to 1:30 the grounds are open but visitors are on their own.

Saturday mornings an open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the shed is open to the public for a small charge. The grounds are open at that time free of charge but without guides.

Sunday morning from 9 to 11 the grounds are open with no guides. The orchestra's regular concerts are Friday and Saturday nights at 8:30 and Sunday afternoon at 2:30. There are special programs some Thursday nights.

The Berkshire Festival has been in existence for 27 years, the first concert having been presented on Aug. 23, 1934, on the grounds of the Hanna farm not far from the present Tanglewood site. The festival was born largely as a result of the efforts of Miss Gertrude Robinson-Smith, a widely-known summer resident of Stockbridge, and Dr. Henry Hadley, noted conductor-composer.

The second annual festival in 1935 was attended by 9000 persons over the single week end that concerts were offered by an orchestra headed by Dr. Hadley.

It then was felt that an orchestra of greater renown was called for and efforts were made to interest the trustees of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in having that organization participate in future programs. That orchestra first played in the Berkshire Festival in August of 1936, attracting 15,000 to its three performances.

Permanent Home Opened

Tanglewood was offered as a permanent home for the festival as a gift from Mrs. Gorham Brooks and her aunt, Miss Mary Aspinwall Tappan, summer resident of Lenox. They had closed their mansion the year before for the first time since it was occupied by the Tappan family in 1849.

At first the concerts were held under a huge tent seating up to 6000, but that was not satisfactory, particularly during rainstorms. Soon there was a drive to raise $100,000 to build the present cavernous shed which was completed in June of 1938. The festival has continued to make progress each year, providing musical enjoyment for ever-increasing audiences.

The festival which opened this year on July 5 will continue until Aug. 20 as the season has been extended from six to seven weeks to meet the growing demand for seats. Fifteen concerts being given by the full orchestra plus six chamber orchestra concerts of music by the festival. Charles Munch, director of the BSO, also is head and Mozart. There also are plates of automobiles in the parking lots on concert nights readily reveals the wide area from which the festival draws its audiences. Many of the cars bear New York State, Connecticut, New Jersey, and Pennsylvania markers as well as those from Massachusetts.

The festival has proven an added attraction for the Hudson Valley summer resorts as well as for those of the Berkshires themselves. A surprisingly large number of festival fans are from New York City.

A glance at the registration

Music Center in Session

While the Boston Symphony performs in the big shed, the chamber music recitals are held in the 1200-seat theater-concert hall. Those who prefer may listen to any of the concerts from the lawn which adjoins both the 6000-seat shed and the concert hall.

The Berkshire Music Center, the orchestra's summer school of music at Tanglewood, is in session for the seven weeks of the festival. Charles Munch, director of the BSO, also is head

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
AUG 9 1961

61

THE ROVING EYE

Berkshire Hills Lush and Green

By ROBERT TAYLOR

The Berkshire Hills, at this season, are fat and green and cool. The hills are very like the sea. They billow gently along the horizon, blue shadows hanging in the dark troughs and birds drifting motionless above tussocks of fir, and the wind flattens the brown meadow grasses, and the Berkshires float against the sky in smooth green combers.

There are three reasons for being in the Berkshires: (1) You work there; (2) You play there; (3) You were born there. If you don't belong to one of these categories you have no business being in the Berkshires. All are easily identifiable.

One complains of the coarse manners and outlandish costume of tourists, their arrogance and want of sensitivity. Two bemoans the prices and the crowds and the traffic and grasping character of those who supply goods and services. Three allows as how the winters aren't so bad.

Indifferent Hub?

But One and Three, having status based on geographic residency, also exhibit certain common aspects. Foremost is the often-heard lament that Boston doesn't pay enough attention to the Berkshire area, that New Yorkers are more aware of its appeal. There would seem to be justification: the license plates of the cars parked on the Tanglewood lawn are dominantly black-and-orange, and the accents that ill the shops and resort verandahs are more apt to originate in Flatbush or Manhattan or Yonkers than Beacon Hill or Dorchester.

The Berkshires are among the few remaining Massachusetts counties where visitors might request you to say pahk the cah in. Hahvuhd Yahd; the surf smothers all accents on the Cape. The secessionist element, we're told, would hark to the call of manifest destiny from Albany. Personally, we believe there may be observation in their grievance—an illustration of the fact that New York contains more population in Boston, and that New Englanders on vacation tend to blend with the protective coloration of the landscape, whereas New Yorkers tend to stand out in relief.

Peary's Sledge

Still, there may be reason for it. Berkshire residents are fond of informing you that the earth on which you are standing is 20 miles from the New York line, 20 miles from Connecticut, 20 from Vermont and nearly 200 from Boston. Why doesn't anyone speak about joining Vermont, we wonder? Vermont has more cows than either Albany or Greenwich Village.

Possibly Vermont has more cows than tourists even; and in the Berkshires the former might be de trop. So much goes on, however, that a cow could have a whale of a good time, to mix her metaphors. The main attractions are justly publicized: Tanglewood, Jacob's Pillow, the Clark Art Institute, the new Shaker Village Restoration, the Berkshire Playhouse and Mt. Greylock. The lesser-known spots reveal themselves off the beaten byways.

ETERNAL HILLS, THE BERKSHIRES

For instance, the Berkshires support eight bowling alleys—or rather one alley, two bowls, four lanes and one Bowlero. The sledge in which Admiral Peary reached the North Pole is on view at the Berkshire Museum. It is the original sledge and so is the manuscript of Holmes's "One Horse Shay" the original manuscript and the first Stanley transformer, the first.

Good Eating

The gorge of white marble in North Adams' Natural Bridge is an estimated 500 million years old, which makes it one of the oldest antiques in the state. And from the fire tower at the summit of Mt. Everett you can see Connecticut and Massachusetts. (Five states are evident from Greylock; but if you are an Everett man, quality not quantity counts.)

Berkshire restaurants feature smorgasbords, blintzes, strudels, Mignonnette de Boeuf Lucullus, Koenigsburger klops, and American Food of Distinction. There is a Red Fox Music Barn, and Berkshire Music Barn and a Music Mountain, Storrowtown Music Fair and a Tanglewood Shed. Among the features of the Middlefield Fair this week is a free-for-all ox draw and a penny scramble. The Mabel Choate house, designed by Stanford White, is open to the public in Stockbridge, and Bartholomew's Cobble, off Route 7, a sanctuary for native ferns and flowers and migrant cobbies.

We should hate to lose this, with the manifold cultural meccas of the Berkshires, to New York. Particularly the hills. When the light picks out the crests by sunset they roll in a golden, endless tide. The hills of the Berkshires at this season are very like the sea.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 27 1961

A Traveller's Lament

To the Editor of THE EAGLE:—

This is Tanglewood season, but each year it becomes more difficult of access and egress for those who must depend for transportation on a common carrier. Why is Pittsfield so inimical to the pedestian who dares to go abroad, particularly after 7 o'clock at night?

The blue buses that ply locally are driven by friendly, competent and courteous drivers, but their schedules are the sweet mystery of life. You banished the out-of-town buses from the main thoroughfare down to a little lot where it takes sleight of hand to "do-si-do" those big buses in and out. And the bus station! Ah, the bus station! It is crummy. The rest rooms are invariably out of order; the benches are uncomfortable and dirty; the ticket clerk has his nose in a book and if you ask for information or perchance are venturesome enough to buy a ticket, he glares at you as if to say, "People as 'as homes should stay in 'them."

Last Saturday evening after Tanglewood I got a ride into Pittsfield, knowing I had missed the last bus going through Lenox. I made my way down to the bus station which was in total darkness and there, huddled on the steps resisting the blandishments of the young cruisers who were willing to take her anywhere, was a young woman who had come in on a bus from Albany and was waiting for he husband, some 10 miles away, t come drive her home. If the weath er had been inclement, she woul have had no shelter. (Three youn women who work in Pittsfield an live on Route 20 near New Leb non waited in the cold all la winter.)

A kindly cab driver told m there would not be a bus to Alban until 4 o'clock in the morning, I hied to the railroad station t see what the Boston & Alban could do for me. I caught th Beeliner at 12:15 a.m.

The railroad station is com paratively beautiful, spacious an surprisingly clean. Why can't yo move the bus service into a por tion of it, have the buses pick up and discharge their passengers there and disseminate an air of dignity, protection from the elements and the cruisers and, perhaps, welcome?

Or, if that is asking too much, could the bookish ticket clerk just paste the bus schedules on the outside of the door where, with the aid of a match, one might assure one's self that the last bus has gone? If not that, how about hanging a sign: "Good night, Mrs. Astor. You have missed the last bus home"? Then the wayfarer would know where she stands—there is no place to sit.

LORETTA REILLY.
507 Central Ave.
Albany, N.Y.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal & Press
SOMERVILLE, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 14,167
AUG 10 1961

SOMERVIL

Berkshire Region Tour Is Scenic, Historical

Planning a trip this weekend?

"See America Best . . . By Car," a nationwide campaign by the American Petroleum Institute, focuses attention on Massachusetts' Berkshire region.

The first featured tour, mapping a recommended route for families to take by car, includes landmarks, scenic spots and recreational facilities.

Chosen by the American Petroleum Institute as one of the country's outstanding drives for lensure time motoring, the recommended tour starts at Lee (Exit 2 off the Massachusetts Turnpike) and is mapped as follows:

0. Miles at LEE, lovely portal to the Berkshire's 2,500 square-mile vacationland. The town borders Laurel Lake on U.S. Highway 20. Drive north.

5m. LENOX. Located on the junction of U.S. 7 and State 20, Lenox is the home of Tanglewood, "America's most sacred outdoor music shrine." Even though there might not be time on this trip to hear a concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, it is still worthwhile to visit the beautiful grounds of Tanglewood: the Music Shed, seating 6,000 people and the 1,200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall. Colorful back roads lead off U.S. 20 and 7 to the PLEASANT VALLEY WILDLIFE SANCTUARY, a large reservation for Berkshire flora and fauna. Continue north on U.S. 7.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498

62

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 7 1961

Salute To Music

This week Summertime '61 is dedicated to the makers of music in this area; to the beautiful sounds of our summer; to the people who come here to anjoy them, some from far off corners of the world.

First we salute Tanglewood which has served as a primary magnet to hundreds of thousands, summer after summer. From the majestic acres of the handsome old estate, music students go out to professional careers or to intense amateur appreciation of the musical arts. While visitors, filled with the joy of magnificent sound, go on to explore the other music offerings which cluster the neighborhood as thick as blackberries.

Nearby, in Lenox, the Music Barn serves up the best jazz and folk music. In New Marlboro's Red Fox Music Camp the barn is transformed into a concert hall for professional Saturday night concerts.

In Norfolk (Conn.) the beautiful old Stoeckel estate continues its traditions as a center for the best in music. Here, students of Yale Music School study, practicing in the lofty mansion and even in the flowering formal gardens (see cut), the students complete courses toward a music degree and share with the public the concerts in Battell House performed by professionals.

On Music Mountain in Falls Village, chamber music devotees find the Sunday afternoon programs offered by the Berkshire String Quartet deeply satisfying. In the library in Salisbury, the Sharon Creative Arts Foundation is sponsoring a new concert series which music lovers consider a real "discovery."

To all these music-makers and their audiences, our salute!

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 239,477
AUG 5 1961

MUSIC TO MY EARS

LIKE old soldiers, young music festivals tend to fade away, even if they do not die. Whether the six-year old Empire State Music Festival will survive or pass from the scene is perhaps not yet a certainty; but that it has been fading is unquestionable. As one who attended the opening sessions at Ellenville in 1955 but didn't visit the new locale in the Anthony Wayne Recreation Area adjacent to Bear Mountain until a week ago, the prospects would have to be described as cloudy, uncertain, likely to get worse before they get better.

Of the serious purpose of the sponsoring group headed by Frank Forrest there can be no doubt. Of its resourcefulness, sense of artistic focus, and aesthetic enterprise, there is not only doubt but disbelief. Having had one tent blown down by summer storms in the Catskills and another severely mauled in the present locale last year, it is again performing this year under canvas. To say that good musical performance in a tent is impossible would be a rash generalization; but it is mere reportage to say that Koussevitzky gave up a tent as unsatisfactory for the Boston Symphony in Tanglewood twenty-five years ago, and neither the acoustical nor the air circulating properties of canvas have been improved since. In other words—shelter, yes; canvas, no.

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE
D: 100,788 S. 183,249
AUG 6 1961

Summer's Music Menu Offers Festival Fare

By Don Henahan
Chicago Daily News Service

CHICAGO — If you throw out the rodeos and the cotton-picking contests, the list of summer festivals in the United States dwindles.

Granting Ravinia honorary status because of its age, only it, Tanglewood, Santa Fe, and Aspen are of first-class status, with a few lesser events definitely worth investigating, such as Fish Creek and Central City, Colo.

One trend to be reckoned with is the growing reluctance of major European musicians to tour in this country during the summer. Faraway places by the score bid high for even the smaller fry among them, let alone the Van Karajans and Sutherlands.

As a result, however, the American artist has been coming into his own in his country. And it is the wise U.S. festival that discovers how to divert interest to native musicians and composers. Reliance on the foreign names formula where there are none to be had is the road to extinction.

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been especially successful at using American - based talent. This season its soloists include Gary Graffman, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, Seymour Lipkin, Isaac Stern, Adele Addison, Lukas Foss, and a half dozen members of the Boston Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct a series of concerts commemorating the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, and other concerts will be led by Aaron Copeland, Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, and Richard Burgin.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
AUG 15 196

MANY FIRSTS IN HISTORY OF BOSTON

Visitors Attracted to Sites Of Many Historic Happenings

Boston has been called the city "where history nudges you on every side."

Most visitors leave her commercial importance to the businessman and concentrate on her historic reminders, a century and a half older than the U. S. itself. In Boston the tourist walks amid memories of early Puritans, . .of troops mustering for the French and Indian Wars. . .of freedom-loving colonists rallying at Faneuil Hall, holding their famous Tea Party and standing their ground at Bunker Hill. . .of a tradition echoing with familiar names like Revere and Franklin, Adams and Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes.

For Boston is a city of "firsts." It was here that the blood of the Revolution was shed in 1770; here the country's first public grounds were set aside—1634; the first public school opened—1635; and the first newspaper published in 1690. It was here, too, that the first railway (1825) and the first subway (1895) were built and the first scheduled airline route opened. And in Boston the world's first telephone call was made in 1876 and the first ether operation performed in 1846.

Boston's the traditional "tryout" town for Broadway plays, with five legitimate theaters. There's an opera and ballet season and the famous Boston Symphony, world-renowned "Pop" concerts and outdoor Esplanade concerts along the banks of the Charles in summer. Also, local theatrical productions, summer stock theaters and countless movie theaters, including three specializing in "art" and foreign films. And of course, dancing and evening entertainment at the clubs.

Notes and Footnotes

SMOKE SIGNALS: Yesterday's Albany Times Union ran a long piece on "The Magic of Tanglewood" by George Murphy, staff writer. The magic, he admits, is elusive but real: a beautiful setting, superb equipment and buildings, and people dedicated to music. Illustrated with many photos of the spot, including a very dated one from above the Theater-Concert Hall showing the familiar wooden arches above the roof that collapsed last winter under snow. Roof now flat girder type . . . Reflective letter from our friend G. Albert Sauer of South Egremont, commenting on a wire service story in The Eagle picturing and describing the new IBM Selectric typewriter. It uses no type bars. Instead, spheres are employed to carry the characters which are turned to printing position as the typist works. Mr. S, who collects old typewriters as a hobby, has a Hammond machine which is 60 or 70 years old. It operates in exactly the same way as the IBM, including changeable type spheres that lift out for any style type or figures, the substitution being made in seconds . . . John G. Sprout, assistant professor of history at Williams College, one of many to observe in the Berkshire bicentennial book, 200 years in pictures, an unidentified photo on Page 36, "apparently an officer and his wife," according to the caption. Mr. Sprout says, "There is no question in my mind that he is Gen. George B. McClellan, commander of the Army of the Potomac, later commander of all Union forces. Apparently he had relatives in Berkshire County whom he visited," hence the photo . . . One of our staff music critics came up with this one on Eugene Istomin, soloist last week on a program at Tanglewood: "The review almost had to be favorable. It would never do to be anti-(h)istomin." . . . Sweet thought. Research is going on to produce electricity from molasses in a biochemical fuel cell. Energy is released as the molasses decays.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498

42

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
AUG 7 1961

Salute To Music

This week Summertime '61 is dedicated to the makers of music in this area; to the beautiful sounds of our summer; to the people who come here to anjoy them, some from far off corners of the world.

First we salute Tanglewood which has served as a primary magnet to hundreds of thousands, summer after summer. From the majestic acres of the handsome old estate, music students go out to professional careers or to intense amateur appreciation of the musical arts. While visitors, filled with the joy of magnificent sound, go on to explore the other music offerings which cluster the neighborhood as thick as blackberries.

Nearby, in Lenox, the Music Barn serves up the best jazz and folk music. In New Marlboro's Red Fox Music Camp the barn is transformed into a concert hall for professional Saturday night concerts.

In Norfolk (Conn.) the beautiful old Stoeckel estate continues its traditions as a center for the best in music. Here, students of Yale Music School study, practicing in the lofty mansion and even in the flowering formal gardens (see cut), the students complete courses toward a music degree and share with the public the concerts in Battell House performed by professionals.

On Music Mountain in Falls Village, chamber music devotees find the Sunday afternoon programs offered by the Berkshire String Quartet deeply satisfying. In the library in Salisbury, the Sharon Creative Arts Foundation is sponsoring a new concert series which music lovers consider a real "discovery."

To all these music-makers and their audiences, our salute!

SATURDAY REVIEW
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 238,477
AUG 5 1961

MUSIC TO MY EARS

SALT LAKE CITY, UTAH
TRIBUNE
D: 100,788 S. 183,249
AUG 6 1961

Summer's Music Menu Offers Festival Fare

By Don Henahan
Chicago Daily News Service

CHICAGO — If you throw out the rodeos and the cotton-picking contests, the list of summer festivals in the United States dwindles.

Granting Ravinia honorary status because of its age, only it, Tanglewood, Santa Fe, and Aspen are of first-class status, with a few lesser events definitely worth investigating, such as Fish Creek and Central City, Colo.

One trend to be reckoned with is the growing reluctance of major European musicians to tour in this country during the summer. Faraway places by the score bid high for even the smaller fry among them, let alone the Van Karajans and Sutherlands.

As a result, however, the American artist has been coming into his own in his country. And it is the wise U.S. festival that discovers how to divert interest to native musicians and composers. Reliance on the foreign names formula where there are none to be had is the road to extinction.

Berkshire Festival

The Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., has been especially successful at using American - based talent. This season its soloists include Gary Graffman, Eugene Istomin, Byron Janis, Seymour Lipkin, Isaac Stern, Adele Addison, Lukas Foss, and a half dozen members of the Boston Symphony.

Leonard Bernstein will conduct a series of concerts commemorating the 10th anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, and other concerts will be led by Aaron Copeland, Charles Munch, Pierre Monteux, and Richard Burgin.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
AUG 15 196

MANY FIRSTS IN HISTORY OF BOSTON

Visitors Attracted to Sites Of Many Historic Happenings

Boston has been called the city "where history nudges you on every side."

Most visitors leave her commercial importance to the businessman and concentrate on her historic reminders, a century and a half older than the U. S. itself. In Boston the tourist walks amid memories of early Puritans, of troops mustering for the French and Indian Wars, of freedom-loving colonists rallying at Faneuil Hall, holding their famous Tea Party ... of a tradition echoing with familiar names like Revere and Franklin, Adams and Emerson, Longfellow and Holmes.

For Boston is a city of "firsts." It was here that the blood of the Revolution was shed in 1770; here the country's first public grounds were set aside—1634; the first public school opened—1635; and, the first newspaper published in 1690. It was here, too, that the first railway (1825) and the first subway (1895) were built and the first scheduled airline route opened. And in Boston, the world's first telephone call was made in 1876 and the first ether operation performed in 1846.

Boston's the traditional "try-out" town for Broadway plays, with five legitimate theaters. There's an opera and ballet season and the famous Boston Symphony, world-renowned "Pop" concerts and outdoor Esplanade concerts along the banks of the Charles in summer. Also, local theatrical productions, summer stock theaters and countless movie theaters, including three specializing in "art" and foreign films. And of course, dancing and evening entertainment at

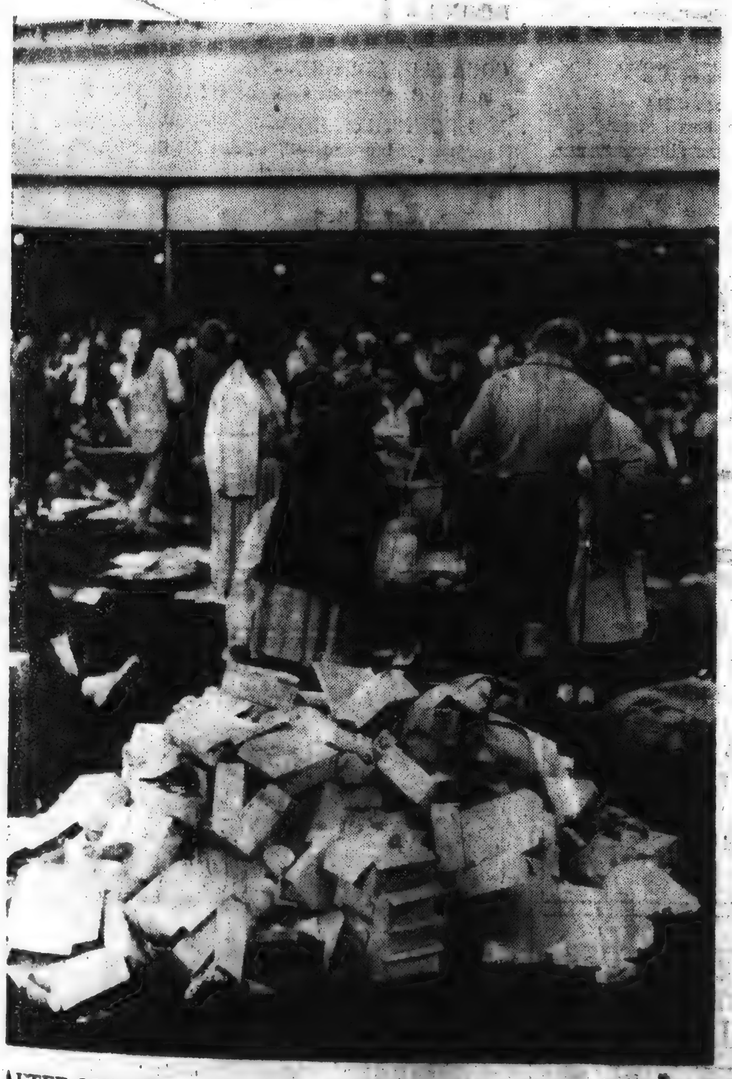
Notes and Footnotes

SMOKE SIGNALS: Yesterday's Albany Times Union ran a long piece on "The Magic of Tanglewood" by George Murphy, staff writer. The magic, he admits, is elusive but real: a beautiful setting, superb equipment and buildings, and people dedicated to music. Illustrated with many photos of the spot, including a very dated one from above the Theater-Concert Hall showing the familiar wooden arches above the roof that collapsed last winter under snow. Roof now flat girder type . . . Reflective letter from our friend G. Albert Sauer of South Egremont, commenting on a wire service story in The Eagle picturing and describing the new IBM Selectric typewriter. It uses no type bars. Instead, spheres are employed to carry the characters which are turned to printing position as the typist works. Mr. S, who collects old typewriters as a hobby, has a Hammond machine which is 60 or 70 years old. It operates in exactly the same way as the IBM, including changeable type spheres that lift out for any style type or figures, the substitution being made in seconds . . . John G. Sprout, assistant professor of history at Williams College, one of many to observe in the Berkshire bicentennial book, 200 years in pictures, an unidentified photo on Page 36, "apparently an officer and his wife," according to the caption. Mr. Sprout says, "There is no question in my mind that he is Gen. George B. McClellan, commander of the Army of the Potomac, later commander of all Union forces. Apparently he had relatives in Berkshire County whom he visited," hence the photo . . . One of our staff music critics came up with this one on Eugene Istomin, soloist last week on a program at Tanglewood: "The review almost had to be favorable. It would never do to be anti-(h)istomin." . . . Sweet thought. Research is going on to produce electricity from molasses in a biochemical fuel cell. Energy is released as the molasses decays.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

AUG 12 1961

THE SOUND OF MUSIC, full-throated and glowing with almost visible brilliance, sweeps from the stage of Tanglewood's Shed outward like an ocean wave, guided by the segmented canopy, engulfing silhouetted spectators and into the night beyond.



AFTER LUNCH on night of the Boston Pops concert at Tanglewood, the finely-manicured lawn took on the appearance of a dump.

GOING FOR BUGS at Tanglewood, armed with spray bomb, Eagle sportswriter Steve Moore appears intent on his work. Moore, who had hoped for a limit kill based on news reports of a big mosquito crop, got only one. Bugs had already been eaten by Tanglewood's bats.

TIMES UNION Section F

UPSTATE Living

The Boston Symphony Orchestra plays for thousands of ears.

Photos by Bob Wilder

Young lady listens to Brahms

The Magic of Tanglewood

By GEORGE MURPHY
Times-Union Staff Writer

TANGLEWOOD, a deep cleavage in the ample bosom of the Berkshire hills, is a 210-acre estate lying between Lenox and Stockbridge, Mass., and in the hearts of music lovers the world over.

Here is the summer home of that splendid instrument of sensitivity and flexibility—the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It is also the site of the annual Berkshire Festival and Music Center.

Nathaniel Hawthorne, who once lived in a little red cottage on the edge of the estate, described the view:

"There is a glen between this house and the lake ("Mahkeenac") through which winds a little brook with pools, and tiny waterfalls over the great roots of trees. The glen is deep and narrow and filled with trees, so that it is all dense shadow and obscurity. . . ."

* * *

Obscure?

Yes, but that was before a vision became reality.

The man with the vision was Serge Koussevitzky, a granite-faced Russian who became the most proper of "Proper Bostonians" when he was appointed music director of the Boston Symphony in 1924. (He died June 4, 1951, and is buried in Lenox).

Tanglewood once belonged to William Aspinwall Tappan, a Boston banker and merchant, who had bought several farms and incorporated them into an estate worthy of a gentleman of his financial stature. In the winter of 1936, his descendants offered Tanglewood as a gift to Koussevitzky and the orchestra.

Koussevitzky was overwhelmed by the acres of lawn and meadow, with magnificent hemlocks, elms, pines and birches — a panorama little changed since Hawthorne described it.

"This is wonderful," said Koussevitzky to his benefactors. "We will make beautiful music here."

* * *

Hundreds of thousands of men, women and children have languidly basked in the light of the sun and the moon and in the Music of the Masters since Koussevitzky's prophetic pronouncement. They will agree that "beautiful music" is indeed the prime export of Western Massachusetts.

But, the magic of Tanglewood is an elusive Lorelei. You must stand still; let her catch up to you, envelope you.

After entering the main gate, we were surprised to find ourselves walking almost tip-toe, for Tanglewood is a shrine and we did not wish to arouse the wrath of the gods—to say nothing of the conductor who was rehearsing a string quartet underneath an elm tree.

A young girl came walking toward us. She was willowy and the cello she carried was almost too much for her to handle. She was humming, probably a Bach fugue, we thought. As she came nearer, we recognized the tune — "Arivederci, Roma." Too, bad. She was such a lovely heretic.

* * *

We turned to our right, crossed a hundred yards of gleaming grass, and stood in Hemlock Gardens surrounded by mounds of hedges, close-cropped and squatting like toads. In a heavily-leafed area, a finger of sunlight reached down and touched the polished metal of a clarinet. Standing near was its owner, a girl with blonde hair. A young man had his arms around her.

We hurried away and walked toward the huge Music Shed which seats about 6,000 people. There were only a few students there, taking notes. On stage was the Boston Symphony Orchestra and on the podium was its conductor, Charles Munch, a white-thatched gentleman, who considers conducting not a profession, but a sacred calling, sometimes a priesthood and often even a disease from which, he says, "the only escape is death."

* * *

The orchestra is rehearsing Prokofiev's Violin Concerto No. 2, with soloist Joseph Silverstein, a regular member of the orchestra since 1955.

A clock on the wall at the right of the huge stage ticks off 4 o'clock. Munch, in a gray cloth jacket and slacks, sits before the orchestra on a tall stool but it is a temporary posture. He is really a jack-in-the box, descending when a passage does not go right, and climbing back aboard when it does.

One has heard so much about temperamental conductors that one occasionally expects to see Munch leap from the stool, bowl over half the string section and fix an errant violinist with a cold stare. But, whether the execution is good or bad, he speaks in calm, reasonable tones.

"Lento, lento, lento," he declares, "don't forget gentlemen. Let us try it again." He holds up his hands and the orchestra responds in shimmering cascades of sound. He taps the stand with his baton turning off the passage as one might turn off a hose.

* * *

Even in the informal attire of a rehearsal, the gentlemen of the Boston Symphony Orchestra play impeccably. Dr. Munch is actually the only one on stage wearing a coat, dress shirt and tie. All the others sit in a rainbow of sports shirts.

As Mr. Silverstein plays, he stands close to and on Munch's left. He sometimes rocks back and forward on his heels and toes, sometimes looks heavenward and sometimes at the first row of empty seats. He has close-cropped, black hair and is wearing a bright red sport shirt. At the end of each movement, he is the recipient of shouted "bravos" from his colleagues. Dr. Munch reaches out and pats him on the shoulder.

While the orchestra is playing, a blue moving van from Pittsfield rumbles by, its engine buzzing like a mad hornet. Dr. Munch looks over and so do some of the violinists in the first row but the thread of music is not broken. The van disappears and the orchestra returns to Prokofiev.

* * *

At five minutes past 5 o'clock, Dr. Munch decides to rest his charges. We walk toward the rear of the shed and there, pasted on the wall is an "Application for License for Concert or Entertainment on the Lord's Day." It is signed by the chairman of the Board of Selectmen of Stockbridge. The fee is $2.

As we walk back toward the main gate, our heart is full of admiration for Mr. Silverman and our ears with the richly homogenized voices of a choral group practicing in the Theatre-Concert Hall.

Just outside the gate is the compact, 1½-story home of Mr. and Mrs. James F. Kiley and their children, Linda, 14 months, and David, six years. Mr. Kiley, who used to be an electrician at General Electric in Pittsfield, has been the superintendent of maintenance

See TANGLEWOOD, Page F-8

Theater-Concert Hall.

Soprano Joanna Simon

The good Sisters listen in at an open rehearsal.

IN THIS SECTION

Albany, N. Y., Sunday, Aug. 6, 1961

Outdoor Life	P. 2
Radio, Television	P. 3
Crossword	P. 3
Editorials	P. 4
Views on News	P. 5
Books and Art	P. 6
Upstate Features	P. 7-8

Student violist Pamela Brand in a pensive mood.

65

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D 67,629 S. 118,093
AUG 6 1961

Tanglewood's Magic

Continued from Page F-1

at Tanglewood since 1958.

He is a storehouse of information about the physical plant. Tanglewood, he says is dotted quite liberally with trees of English oak, shagbark hickory, split-leaf maples, linden and three mugo pines. One of the mugo pines is 100 years old and there are cables to help hold the weight of its limbs.

"We feed the living daylights out of it to keep it alive," says Kiley.

What is the question he is most asked by visitors?

"They want to know what kind of fertilizer I use on the grass and flowers."

We left Jim and walked toward the car. Behind us the outpouring of Beethoven's "Eroica" Symphony surged from the Main Shed in voluptuous swells. Dr. Munch had his musicians working again.

On our way back to Albany the hot dog stands and rusty-red barns seemed a trifle less drab.

Tanglewood had woven its spell.

KNICKERBOCKER NEWS BUREAU
ALBANY, N.Y.
NEWSPAPER
CLIPPINGS
NEW YORK
SERVICE

KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
August 12, 1961

Summer Season Sees Success

LOCAL THEATERS, CONCERT SPOTS SHOW 1961 PROFITS

By TED STRONGIN
Knickerbocker News
Staff Writer

A NOTE of strong, not even cautious optimism is being sounded in several summer quarters as to the success of their 1961 seasons.

Last year at approximately this time, a Knickerbocker News story on the subject was headed "Summer Season Flops." "Bitterness reigns" over area hills and dales. People were staying away in droves, so much so that two theaters, Saratoga and Sacandaga, didn't reopen for 1961.

Saratoga will be back on the boards next season, theater fans are being assured.

Meanwhile, as yet there is not even the slightest hint that theater, concert or dance spot now operating is going to quit for lack of funds.

Top Week

Jacob's Pillow, for instance, had the best week of its history earlier this season. And, as of last week's bill, 16,580 eager customers stormed the gates of Ted Shawn's dance theater at Lee, Mass., compared to 14,371 for the corresponding period in 1960 — more than 10 per cent better.

Arena Theater, at State College in Albany, was a 100 per cent sellout in its three-week season, but full houses aren't unusual with this group.

Shelley Players, in New Scotland, claims a 20 per cent attendance rise.

"Colonie is doing a little better every year," says producer Eddie Rich. When summer 1961 rolled around, it looked as though Colonie would not be part of it, since last season sent the tent into bankruptcy.

'Better Year'

It did open, however. "Since that miracle was pulled off, I have both feet on the ground," Mr. Rich said. "This year is better."

Tanglewood's summer audience as of the end of the fifth week is a few thousand below last summer's, a trifling amount.

More than 100,000 people have streamed through the ample gates of the huge Berkshire estate this summer. In percentages, this year's attendance is only slightly less than last year.

In any case, the area's most popular cultural attraction is not shivering in its boots for fear of its future.

Indications are, too, that the Woodstock Playhouse in the Catskills is slightly behind last year at this time.

The main point is, that when representatives of the theaters, etc., were questioned on the subject in August 1960, a loud, general wail was the answer.

This year, although all don't have exact statistics, none seems worried.

66

First week – July 3-9

TANGLEWOOD MUSIC SHED — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 1961 Berkshire Festival in the Great Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Friday at 8:30 p.m. Charles Munch will conduct the first of three all-Bach programs Friday evening with the others scheduled for Saturday night and Sunday at 2:30 p.m. The festival will run for seven weeks, concluding on Aug. 20.

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D: 40,588
JUN 24 1961

Tanglewood Concerts Start July 7

The Boston Symphony Orchestra's series of 21 summer concerts at the 210-acre Tanglewood estate in the Berkshire Hills will begin July 7.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30; Sunday, 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart.

Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Doctor Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and soloists to join him in the 15 Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five festival weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood July 5. Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The festival ticket office is now open as follows: Mon.-Sat.: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sun., July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; (closed tomorrow).

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 165,763
JUL 1 1961

Berkshire Center Opens Tomorrow

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p. m. tomorrow in the Theater at Tanglewood, Lenox. The public is cordially invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students. There will be an address by Mrs. Serge Koussevitsky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the Center.

Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Mass. Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annaual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News-Times (e)
DANBURY, Conn.
Circ. 20,636
JUN 26 1961

Festival Office Opens Today At Tanglewood

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his Berkshire Festival staff, will open their offices at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) today in preparation for the orchestra's seven week summer season which opens July 5 and the seven week summer school session of the Berkshire Music Center which opens July 2.

In addition to the orchestra's administrative and ticket office staffs, the offices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center also open at this time to assist the 200,000 Tanglewood visitors expected in Lenox this summer.

Twenty-eight Berkshire Festival concerts are scheduled for the season at the 210-acre Tanglewood estate plus more than fifty events which will include concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums, by the Berkshire Music Center. Voluntary contributions to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center admit the donor to these school events.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUN 26 1961

BSO Festival Staff to Open Offices Today

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and his Berkshire Festival staff opened their offices at Tanglewood, Lenox, today in preparation for the orchestra's seven-week summer season which opens July 5 and the seven-week summer school session of the Berkshire Music Center which opens July 2.

In addition to the orchestra's administrative and ticket office staffs, the offices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center also opened today to assist the 200,000 Tanglewood visitors expected in Lenox this summer.

In addition to the 28 Berkshire Festival concerts, visitors to the 210-acre Tanglewood estate may join the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center by voluntary contribution toward the support of the Center. Members of the Friends are then invited to attend the more than 50 school events which will include concerts of orchestral, choral and chamber music, opera evenings, lectures and forums.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700
JUL 6 1961

Music By Bach At Tanglewood

The first three of the twenty-one orchestral concerts to be given at Tanglewood during the seven-week Berkshire Festival, scheduled for tomorrow Friday, Saturday, and Sunday in the 6000-seat Music Shed, will consist of music by J. S. Bach.

Charles Munch, conductor, has invited nine soloists to assist him in these Boston Symphony Orchestra's three all-Bach concerts. Four of the soloists—flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, Roger Voisin, trumpet, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and violinist Richard Burgin—are first-desk players from his Orchestra.

RAVENA, N.Y.
NEWS HERALD
W: 1,428
JUN 23 1961

Tanglewood Ready For Music Festival

The Berkshire Festival box office personnell and equipment moved over the weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills, in preparation for the Orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5th with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty-one Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts on July 7, 8, 9, and 14, 15 and 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30; Sunday, 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir. Doctor Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the fifteen Boston Symphony Orcestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends.

The Curits Quartet, with Joseph de Pasqual and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood (July 5th). Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The Festival ticket office, starting today, will be open as follows: Mon-Sat. 9 a. m. to 5 p. m., Sunday, July 2: 10 a. m. to 4p. m., (Closed Sun., June 25th.) It will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5th - August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 7 1961

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS

Tanglewood's Notes Sparkle

By DICK BANKS
Observer Arts Editor

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — The sad, benign, gentle incisiveness of broadshouldered, grey-haired Charles Munch dominates music at Tanglewood.

But a few weeks' stay here during festival season fills the music addict's mind with memories of tone and visual drama.

One of these moments when time was still came with flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer's performance with the Boston Symphony Orchestra of Bach's Suite No. 2 in B Minor for Flute and Strings.

This sounds stuffy. But it was not at all.

This little woman with her silver flute — the only woman holding a first chair in this virtuoso orchestra— stood in her white gown and summarized in notes as pellucid as moonlight the classic simplicity and child-like beauty of Johann Sebastian Bach.

Mrs. Dwyer for two years was a pupil of former Charlottean William Kincaid, whom she terms a great teacher and the dean of flutists.

Memorable, although entirely different, was soprano Adele Addison's aria the following night, "Sich uben im lieben," from Bach's "Wedding" Cantata, No. 202.

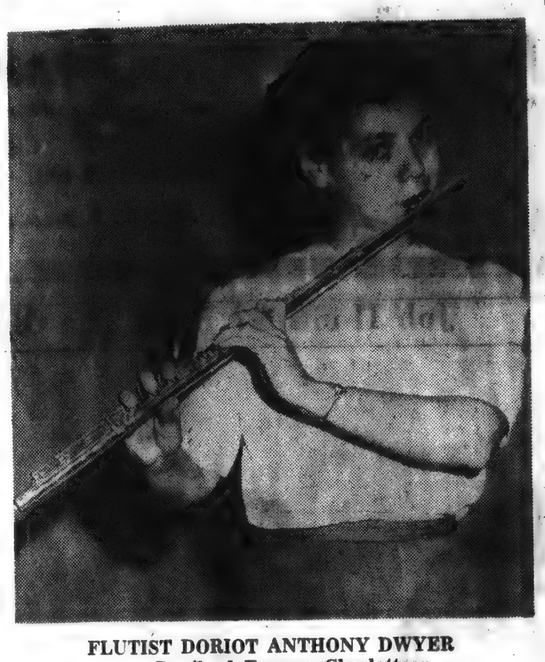
I was late for the evening concert, standing at the rear of Tanglewood's great music shed, with 6,000 persons in front of me and more lounging in the semi-darkness on blankets on the freshly cut green turf.

HER VOICE came drifting, rolling back to me, like honey poured from a pitcher, in the dramatic stillness of the throng - contrasted in masterly style with a grumpy oboe solo.

You could feel from the shed just a hint of resonance —like an imaginary swarm of bees.

Tanglewood is a summer music school for advanced students, instrumentalists, composers, choral singers, and aspirants toward opera. They're here to be polished.

I have heard only one unpleasant musical sound since I came here as a "working newspaperman," sitting in on classes in listening and analysis: That was a brass instrument warming up in the music shed on a cold morning.



FLUTIST DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER
. . . Pupil of Former Charlottean

In contrast to the scientific precision of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the young people's orchestra has the enthusiasm of adventure and discovery. With Eleazar de Carvalho as conductor, they seemed to make use of the full ecstasy-potential of the symphony orchestra in the ever-ascending, utterly triumphant climactic passages of Strauss's "Death and Transfiguration."

Assistant concertmaster of this orchestra is a Japanese girl with a face an artist would adore, Masako Fujii. The round maturity of her violin tone was the highlight for me of a morning chamber music concert. Brilliance and elegance describe these talented youths' rendition of Schumann's Quintet in E Flat Major for Piano, Two Violins, Viola, and Violincello.

TANGLEWOOD is considered conservative. But I've heard more than I have had time to absorb of Works contemporary in origin.

Roberto Gerhard, a Catalonian with 20 years at Cambridge, is here in person. We've heard his Wind Quintet and his Nonet for Woodwind, Brass, and Accordian.

Aaron Copland, a sort of Robert Frost in today's American music, is on the staff. He conducted his comparatively conservative Nonet for Solo Strings, written last year, played by members of the Boston Symphony.

Pianist Lukas Foss in a formal concert with Munch conducting gave us Bach's Concerto for Clavier in D Minor, No. 1, in utmost self confidence. Then at a concert of contemporary chamber music we heard Foss's "Time Cycle," written in 1959-60.

Adele Addison did the difficult soprano part. Disjointed music, most of us would call it, yet eloquent with the bewilderment of our day. Foss played piano with one hand and cellesta with the other. Other sounds in this intriguing melee came from 'cello, clarinet and percussion.

Mrs. Dwyer said she doesn't know where our flutist Billy Kincaid is just now, probably in Maine teaching.

Her mother played the flute and loved this Bach suite for flute and often played it. Munch's appointment of Mrs. Dwyer as first flute in 1952 stirred up comment in 1952.

Tense before a concert? "Yes, I never really relax until the season's over," Mrs. Dwyer said. "I guess I relax mainly playing with the baby."

Mrs. Dwyer's husband is a Boston psychiatrist. They live in nearby Housatonic. Their daughter Arienne was born in July a year ago. Mrs. Dwyer is a native of Streator, Ill. Her father, retired chemical engineer and mechanical inventor, and her mother live in Cuttinghsville, Vermont.

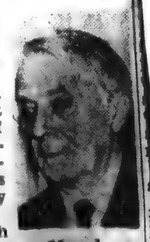
"Dreams of ambitition? I really don't dream. I'm much more concerned about what I have to do here. There are so many possible ways to go. There's always some aspect of it I'm concerned about.

"The Bach suite for flute was one of those dreamlike situations in itself."

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Express (e)
PORTLAND, Me.
Circ. 28,910
JUL 3 1961

Munch To Lead BostonSymphony

LENOX, Mass. (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this Friday with Charles Munch conducting.



Munch

The orchestra will present concerts of Bach music Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Munch was expected to arrive today from Europe where he has been vacationing since the end of the symphony season in April.

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUL 9 1961

ALL-BACH CONCERT

An all-Bach concert, from the Berkshire Festival of 1960, will be presented in stereophonic sound on WCRB tonight (Sunday), at 8:05 p.m. The Boston Symphony, which will perform on the program, is giving an all-Bach weekend currently at Tanglewood.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
JUL 14 1961

Opening Soloist

DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER, principal flute of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, is soloist in the opening series of Berkshire Festival Concerts this week-end.

SOLOIST TONIGHT with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the opening series of the Berkshire Festival concerts in the Music Shed will be Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flute of the BSO. She will be heard in the Bach Suite No. 2 tonight at 8:30. Tomorrow night she will join Richard Burgin, concertmaster, Ralph Gomberg, principal oboe, and Roger Voisin, principal trumpet, in Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2.

ALBANY, N.Y.
TIMES-UNION
D. 67,629 S. 118,093
JUL 7 1961

At Tanglewood

Doriot Anthony Dwyer, principal flutist with the Boston Symphony, will appear in the orchestra's shed performances tonight and tomorrow night.

News-Tribune (e)
WALTHAM, Mass.
Circ. 15,538
JUL 8 1961

Berkshire Festival

LENOX (UPI) — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this Friday with Charles Munch conducting.

The orchestra will present concerts of Bach music Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Munch was expected to arrive today from Europe where he has been vacationing since the end of the symphony season in April.

68

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Independent
AGAWAM, Mass.
Weekly Independent
JUL 6 1961

TANGLEWOOD

The 1961 Tanglewood Festival will have fifteen concerts by the full orchestra, plus six chamber orchestra concerts of music by Bach and Mozart, seven chamber music recitals, and two gala benefit evenings.

Charles Munch will conduct the Bach-Mozart concerts and a majority of the concerts with the full Orchestra. Among Doctor Munch's guests will be Leonard Bernstein who will conduct one of the three concerts to commemorate the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzy, the Orchestra's former Music Director and first Director of the Berkshire Music Center. Pierre Monteux will return to Tanglewood to conduct several concerts, Richard Burgin will conduct, Eugene Ormandy will make his first Berkshire Festival appearance, and many outstanding soloists have been invited to participate.

Arthur Fiedler and the Boston Pops will be at Tanglewood on August third in a special concert to benefit the Berkshire Music Center. The second Center benefit evening will be on August 17. Programs and ticket information for these benefit programs will be available in mid-July.

The orchestral programs will be presented in the 6000-seat Music Shed. The chamber music recitals will be held in the 1200-seat Theatre-Concert Hall. Those who prefer may listen to these concerts from the Great Lawn which adjoins the Shed and the Theatre.

The first three Bach-Mozart concerts in the Music Shed performed by a Chamber Orchestra of Boston Symphony Orchestra Musicians will be July 7, 8 and 9.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUL 6 1961

Tanglewood Opens Season Tomorrow

Three Concerts Devoted To Music of Bach

Nine Soloists Invited by Charles Munch to Participate In Programs With Boston Symphony Orchestra.—Mac Morgan Will Be Heard In "Magnificat" On Sunday.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox this week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Nine soloists have been invited by Doctor Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening concerts at 8:30 in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin, trumpet, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Richard Burgin, violin and Lukas Foss, piano, will be soloists in the Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 when Mr. Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florance Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Mr. Foss as Soloist.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—those who make voluntary contributions to the school—are invited to three events at Tanglewood this week: The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday, 8:30 p.m., Music Shed; a Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday, July 7, 3:15, Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music, Sunday July 9, 10:00 a.m., Chamber Music Hall.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Register
NEW HAVEN, Conn.
Circ. 105,695
JUL 2 1961

MUSIC

Berkshire Festival Begins This Week In Tanglewood

By GORDON E. ARMSTRONG

The 1961 Berkshire Music Festival will open this week at Tanglewood. Except for the fact that the festival has been extended for an additional week of programs this year, the time schedule will be the same as that of former festivals. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in the usual three weekend concerts on Friday and Saturday evenings and on Sunday afternoons, with of course, occasional relief from several guest conductors. Leading ensembles will be heard in the regular Chamber Music Series on Wednesday evenings. And the many other programs, including those by students at the Berkshire Music Center, will help to provide another busy season amidst the festival's lovely natural surroundings.

The first three concerts this coming weekend will be devoted to the music of Bach. On Friday evening, Dr. Munch will conduct Suites 1, 2, 3, and 4 with Doriot Anthony-Dwyer, first flutist of the orchestra, as the soloist. Four of the Brandenburg Concertos and the Cantata No. 202 will make up Saturday evening's program. Soprano Adele Addison is to be the soloist in the latter while several members of the orchestra will have the featured roles in the concerto performances. Pianist Lukas Foss is also slated for a solo role in the Concerto No. 5.

For next Sunday afternoon's program (2:30), Dr. Munch has chosen the following works: Sinfonia from Easter Cantata; Piano Concerto in D minor; Magnificat. Foss is to be the soloist in the piano work. The Tanglewood Choir will participate in the Magnificat performance which will have the following singers as soloists: soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler, and baritone Mac Morgan.

Two principals of the orchestra—violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes will join with the Curtis Quartet to give the opening program of the Chamber Music series on Wednesday evening. The works listed for performance are the Sextet in B flat (Op. 18) by Brahms, and Schubert's Quintet in C major (Op. 163). These programs will be given in the Theater Concert Hall.

Leonard Bernstein, Pierre Monteux, and Eugene Normandy are included on this season's list of guest conductors, Bernstein will conduct one of three concerts to be given in commemorating the tenth anniversary of the death of Serge Koussevitzky, former conductor of the Boston Symphony. Monteux has also conducted in many past festivals but Ormandy will be making his Tanglewood debut when he takes the podium for the concert Saturday evening, July 29. Concertmaster Burgin will conduct the concert on Friday evening, Aug. 11.

An entertainment highlight this season, if not a musical one, will be a special concert on Thursday evening, July 13, for the benefit of the orchestra's Pension Fund. The "conductor" is to be Danny Kaye who will contribute his services for the occasion. He has made one previous appearance with the orchestra. This was at a concert in Symphony Hall, Boston, on April 3, 1957, when the orchestra nearly fell apart over the comedian's hilarious podium antics. Kaye was made an Honorary Member of the orchestra on that occasion to become the first and only person ever so honored by the 81-year old Boston Symphony.

The many concerts by students in the various departments of the festival's school, the Berkshire Music Center, are open free of charge to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Anyone may become a member of this group by making a contribution to the school. A complete list of student programs as well as two other weekly series of events which are open to Friends may be obtained by writing to the festival in Lenox, Mass.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 7 1961

Chamber Concert Set for Sunday At Tanglewood

The Berkshire Music Center's initial Sunday morning chamber music concert will be given in the Chamber Music Hall at Tanglewood this Sunday at 10. These concerts, always one of the highlights of the students performances, are presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Funds received by the Friends support the many activities of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music.

Opening the program will be the Hayden String Quartet, Opus 33 Number 3, which has been coached by Joseph de Pasquale, principal viola of the Boston Symphony orchestra. Louis Speyer, the orchestra's English horn, has directed the prepartion of the Hindemith Wind Quintet, and Alfred Krips, assistant concertmaster of the Boston Symphony prepared the final work of the program, the Schumann Piano Quintet.

Because of the extended season of the Berkshire Festival and the Berkshire Music Center, there will be seven concerts in this series on each Sunday of the season concluding on August 20.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 1 196

Opening Program At Tanglewood Slated Tomorrow

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p.m. tomorrow in the theater at Tanglewood, Lenox. The public has been invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the Center. Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545
JUL 7 1961

Lukas Foss, pianist and composer, who will participate in two Bach performances during the first weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood Saturday and Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709
JUL 1 1961

Tanglewood To Open Tomorrow

The Opening Exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p. m. tomorrow in the theater at Tanglewood. The public is invited to attend for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the center. Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JUL 7 1961

Berkshire Festival In Opening Tonight

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this weekend with three orchestral concerts of music by Bach this evening, tomorrow and Sunday. Nine soloists will participate in the three concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist this evening in the Bach Suite No. 2 for Flue and Strings.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809

JUL 6 1961

Boston Symphony To Open Season At Tanglewood with Bach Concerts

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this week-end with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday, July 7-9.

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Orchestra's, first flutist, will be solosist at the Friday evening concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin (violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The evening concerts begin at 8:30 p.m.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 p.m. when Dr. Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Mr. Foss as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Post
LYNN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 20,000

JUL 2 19c

Music Center At Tanglewood Opens Today

LENOX, Mass. (UPI—The 1961 Berkshire Music Center will open formally today with exercises held in the theater at Tanglewood.

Some 300 students are enrolled in the school which was founded in 1940 by the late Serge Koussevitzky, then conductor of the Boston symphony orchestra.

The conductor's widow and Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court, will speak at the ceremonies. Justice Wilkins, is a trustee of the orchestra.

The center has a 43-member faculty of which composer Aaron Copland is chairman.

Weekend concerts held in conjunction with the center will begin next Friday.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUL 3 1961

MONDAY AFTERNOON, JULY 3, 1961

Munch, Boston Symphony Open Festival This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday night.

Nine Soloists

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the 8:30 Friday evening concert in Bach's Suite No. 2, B minor, for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert at 8:30, soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata, No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten," and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin, trumpet; Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Richard Burgin, violin, and Lukas Foss, piano, will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 when Charles Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bresler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier in D minor, with Mr. Foss as soloist.

Curtis Quartet

The Curtis String Quartet — Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello — will be joined by violinist Joseph de Pasquale and 'cellist Samuel Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1,200-seat theater Wednesday evening at 8:30. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163 by Franz Schubert.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center — those who make voluntary contributions to the school — have been invited to three other events at Tanglewood this week: the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra Thursday, 8:30 p.m., in the Music Shed; a seminar in contemporary music, Friday, at 3:15, in the Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music, Sunday at 10 a.m., in the Chamber Music Hall.

Journal (m)
PROVIDENCE, R.I.
Circ. 61,175

JUL 4 1961

Berkshire Festival

Lenox, Mass. —(UPI)— The 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will open Friday with a performance by the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in concerts of Bach music Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUN 25 1961

Second Thoughts On Music

Another Eventful Season Imminent at Tanglewood

Long-Time Devotees of Music Shed Anticipating Opening Concerts and First Night Fun

By WILLARD M. CLARK

Tanglewood opens its 1961 season Wednesday evening, July 5, with a chamber music concert by the Curtis String Quartet, assisted by two first desk members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, violinist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes. The program indicated performance of "Sextet in B flat" by Brahms and the "Quintet in C major" by Schubert.

Something for Everyone

This is a good beginning for a series of concerts during the seven-week period which seems designed to give everyone something to enjoy. Planning so extensive a program is not easy, but Charles Munch seems to sense audience desires. Surely he has witnessed their reactions enough during the past 10 years to know pretty well what they like.

Thursday nights will be reserved for the concerts by students. These concerts, usually conducted by student conductors, are often a high light of the week. Programs reflect the tastes of the various conductors and the orchestra is usually able to cope with what is put before it. We have heard some splendid performances.

The first week end of concerts devoted to the music of Bach starts Friday, July 7. Mr. Munch will conduct these concerts. The Friday night program will consist of the four suites for orchestra and includes the Suite No. 2 in which flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer is featured. Performances of this suite have almost become a tradition for Mrs. Dwyer is a festival favorite and garners abundant applause when she appears.

The Saturday night Bach program are Brandenburg concertos No. 2, 3, 5 and 6, Cantata No. 202 sung by Adele Addison. Soloists in the concertos will include Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin and Foss.

Sunday Programs

The Sunday afternoon program will open with the Sinfonia from the "Easter Cantata" by Bach. Lukas Foss will play the "Piano Concerto in D minor" and the Tanglewood Choir will make its first appearance in the "Magnificat" assisted by Addison, Kopleff, Bressler and Morgan.

I believe that present plans call for four appearances by Adele Addison, inoluding a performance of the Poulenc "Gloria" which she premiered in Boston; and also a performance of the work written for her by Lukas Foss. These two firsts at Tangelwood are very important. Miss Addison has done more solo work at Tanglewood than any other soprano, we believe.

As the 1960 season came to an end, we heard rumors that veteran Pierre Monteux would not appear this season. Happily, the rumor was not correct and the great French maestro will conduct at least three concerts. Other conductors include Leonard Bernstein, Richard Burgin and Eugene Ormandy. Mr. Ormandy will be making his first Tangelwood appearance and neither Mr. Bernstein nor Mr. Burgin has appeared in recent seasons.

First Night Fun

All in all, it looks like a fine season. It will be fun the first night. Most people have had their seats for years and everyone seems to know everyone else. It's all very informal and friendly. We have had the same seats for 20 years.

Very little has been written about the opera department. Our schedule of events shows that there will be an evening of scenes from opera which seems to indicate the department will be functioning. It is, and should be, an integral part of the music school and some fine talent has been found and developed in past years. Boris Goldovsky has a large personal following which enjoys his comments as much as the singing, sometimes more, we believe.

We have not found out what the program is for the second gala concert, but the first gala as always will bring Fiedler and the Boston Pops to the Music Shed. Even if Fiedler offered an all-Gershwin program for a third time in succession, an overflow audience would be on hand. Combine the right personality with the right program and a full house results. It is hoped the formula will work when Mr. Fiedler conducts the Springfield Symphony Orchestra in a single concert next season.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,450

JUL 6 1961

Season Opens This Week At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday.

Nine soloists have been invited by Doctor Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening (8:30) concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert (8:30) soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin (violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert (2:30) when Charles Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat". Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Mr. Foss as soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Gazette (e)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 92,367

JUL 3 1961

Munch To Conduct At Festival Opener

LENOX, Mass. (UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood this Friday with Charles Munch conducting.

The orchestra will present concerts of Bach music Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

Dr. Munch was expected to arrive today from Europe where he has been vacationing since the end of the symphony season in April.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Herald
ARLINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 8,500

JUL 7 1961

Berkshire Festival To Open July 8

The opening Berkshire Music Festival concert of the 1961 season, will be presented by WGBH-FM, Saturday, July 8 at 8:25 p.m.

One of the most popular summer festivals in the country, Tanglewood attracts thousands of visitors each season.

This marks the eighth consecutive year WGBH-FM has recorded the concerts—a practice much appreciated by listeners who are unable to make the trip to Lenox to hear great music in the lovely Berkshire hills setting.

Charles Munch has chosen an all-Bach program to inaugurate the season. He will direct the orchestra in four suites: Numbers 3, 2, 1 and 4.

Throughout the summer, WGBH will broadcast festival concerts each Saturday evening and on Monday nights (starting July 11). Tanglewood concerts in stereo will be presented with WBCN-FM (104.1 mc).

In addition to the Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts, many chamber music and student performances will be recorded for broadcast during fall and winter months.

Christian Science Monitor (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 157,545

JUL 3 1961

This Week At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass., with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday, and Sunday (July 7-9) and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday (July 5).

Nine soloists will participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening (8:30) concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert (8:30) soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202), and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin(violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert (2:30) when Charles Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler, and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be precided by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Clarinet Concerto with Mr. Foss as soloist.

The Curtis String Quartet—Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello—will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1,200-seat Theater, Wednesday evening. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18, and Schubert's Quintet in C major, Op. 163.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—those who make voluntary contributions to the school—are invited to three events at Tanglewood this week: The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday, 8:30 p.m., Music Shed; a Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday, July 7, 3:15, Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music, Sunday, July 9, 10:00 a.m., Chamber Music Hall.

70

CAIRO, N.Y.
HERALD
W. 315

JUN 22 1961

Tanglewood Ready For Music Festival

The Berkshire Festival box office personnell and equipment moved over the weekend from Boston to Tanglewood, the Boston Symphony Orchestra's 210-acre estate in the Berkshire Hills, in preparation for the Orchestra's seven week Festival which opens July 5th with the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music concerts followed, on July 7, by the first of twenty-one Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts.

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts on July 7, 8, 9, and 14, 15 and 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30; Sunday, 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his orchestra plus pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir. Doctor Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the fifteen Boston Symhony Orcestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends.

The Curits Quartet, with Joseph de Pasqual and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood (July 5th). Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The Festival ticket office, starting today, will be open as follows: Mon-Sat. 9 a. m. to 5 p. m., Sunday, July 2: 10 a. m. to 4p. m., (Closed Sun., June 25th,) It will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5th - August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136

JUL 5 1961

TANGLEWOOD MUSIC SHED — The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open its 1961 Berkshire Festival in the Great Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., Friday at 8:30 p.m. Charles Munch will conduct the first of three all-Bach programs Friday evening with the others scheduled for Saturday night and Sunday at 2:30 p.m. The festival will run for seven weeks, concluding on Aug. 20.

Bay State Concert Hall Seats Almost 6,000—

Tanglewood Music Shed Amazing Building

The Music Shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., where the Berkshire Festival concerts of the Boston Symphony Orchestra are presented each summer, is an amazing structure.

* * *

THE SHED COVERS an acre and a half of ground and seats 5,983 persons. The wooden roof, 66,000 square feet of two-inch plank plus three layers of tar and gravel, is held up by 78 steel piers. The main cross girder under the roof is 207 feet long.

The stage, behind which are orchestra and soloist dressing rooms and a conductor's suite, is 93 feet wide at the front, 37½ feet wide at the rear wall and 46 feet deep at the center line. It is 178 feet from the stage to the back of the seating area.

The promenade area, behind the seats is 27 feet wide. The outer curve of the building line (the promenade area) is 350 feet long. The promenade roof is 20 feet four inches high and the roof height at the edge is 46 feet high.

THE SIDE WALLS of the stage are plywood with modulations in shape, tilted inward at the top. The ceiling of the enclosure is suspended on steel cables from the roof trusses and consists of a series of triangular panels of various sizes connected tip-to-tip. Architecturally the side walls are integrated with the floating overhead panels.

The Music Shed at Tanglewood was erected by the Berkshire Festival committee, from subscription, and first used for a concert on Aug. 4, 1938.

Eliel Saarinen drew the original plans for the shed. The plans were later modified by Joseph Franz of Stockbridge who also directed construction. Richard D. Fay of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology was in charge of the original acoustical study. Graves and Hemmes of Great Barrington, an area contractor, submitted the low bid of $77,768 and work was started on Dec. 31, 1937.

* * *

THE BETHLEHEM Steel Corp. was awarded a $38,000 contract for the steelwork and 150,000 feet of firwood was ordered from the west coast for the roof—it came by boat via the Panama canal, the Atlantic ocean and the Hudson River to Albany. Construction was completed June 16, 1938, a month ahead of schedule.

The Edmund Hawes Talbot Memorial Stage canopy in the shed was formally dedicated July 11, 1959. It was designed by Eero Saarinen and Associates in collaboration with the acoustical consultants Bolt Beranek and Newman Inc. It was the gift of Edna Betts Talbot who donated $40,000 to the orchestra in memory of her late husband, a Boston attorney.

The new canopy replaced the original shell which the founders of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival had constructed in 1938. Charles Munch contributed $10,000 toward the replacement of the old shell, which with Mrs. Talbot's contribution made the new canopy possible.

* * *

IN THE SPRING of 1960, 16 rectangular panels were installed around the upper wall at the rear of the audience. The panels, constructed of plywood and wood framing, have been painted the same deep charcoal gray that has been used in the Talbot Memorial Stage canopy.

In order to give visual and acoustical intimacy to chamber orchestra concerts in the shed a smaller enclosure was constructed in 1960 for the stage. The enclosure, constructed of twisted ⅜ inch plywood on a rigid framing, with no flat surface planes, complements the stage canopy and is demountable into 28 single panels which can be stored. It was also designed by Eero Saarinen Associates in collaboration with Bolt Beranek and Newman Inc., acoustical engineers.

Statistics on the shed are reprinted from a recent brochure published by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

NEW YORK, N.Y.
POST
D. 317,264 S. 257,580

JUL 9 1961

WORDS and MUSIC

By Harriett Johnson

Berkshire Festival Opens at Lenox

Lenox, Mass.

Approaching the 6000 seat music shed here at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. Friday night made me feel as if I were entering the world of the flying saucer. Having missed the Berkshire Festival last season I was feeling nostalgic as I passed by Hawthorne's Red Cottage enroute to the festival grounds and, lost in thought, the sudden appearance of the startling contemporary design of the Talbot Memorial stage canopy in the shed shocked me back to the middle 20th century.

Its ten echelons of triangular-shaped overhead disks are backed by an onstage rose red accordion panorama of pyramids interspersed with a few rectangles along with their acoustical purpose, they give the screen architectural variety.

This background, however, is used only for the Bach-Mozart concerts which take place during the initial two weeks of the seven-week summer series under the aegis of the Boston Symphony.

Tanglewood's natural beauty is linked with such vital literary associations that as I listened to four Bach suites with dynamic Charles Muncon on the podium my imagination went galloping along with the vibrational circuit of the music.

Melville Drank Champagne Here

Just a block or so away in the cottage, now used for the festival school's classrooms, Melville and Hawthorne drank champagne and often talked, as the latter once said, "about time and eternity, things of this world and of the next, and books and publishers, and all possible and impossible matters, that lasted far into the night."

Melville would sometimes arrive on horseback, even, on occasion, costumed as a Spanish cavalier, and Friday's clear night, ideal for projecting crisp 18th Century style also lent itself to conjuring up a picture of Melville's ghost prancing over the grounds. The dance rhythms of the suites enhanced the illusion, if such it was.

Flutists Lively Playing

During first flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer's lively solo playing in the second suite in B Minor for Flute and Strings, a sprite seemed to be scampering along beside the phantom while in the following suite No. 1 in C Major, the bassoon could have been running a race with a leprechaun.

Saturday's concert features four Brandenburg Concertos and the "Wedding" Cantata for Soprano, No. 202, with soprano Adele Addison as soloist. Sunday's matinee will close with the "Magnificat," reinforced by the Tanglewood choir, Miss Addison, also Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan.

Because these chamber music concerts, formerly held in the 1200 seat theater-concert hall, now occur in the shed, approximately 3,000 music lovers were able to enjoy Friday's opening event. About 2,500 were inside, about 500 sat under the stars, on camp chairs, or lounged on blankets.

Sunday Music . . .

Seuffert Band, George F. Seuffert conductor, Music Grove, Forest Park, Queens, 3. Guggenheim Memorial Concert by Goldman Band, Richard Franko Goldman conducting, soprano Sophie Ginn. On the Mall, Central Park, 8:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
BRIDGEPORT, Conn.
Circ. 13,461

JUL 4 1961

FESTIVAL TO OPEN

LENOX, Mass., July 3 (UPI) —The 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood will open Friday with a performance by the Boston Symphony orchestra. Charles Munch will conduct the orchestra in concerts of Bach music Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136

JUL 7 1961

Diversified Music and Theater Are Available

By BARRY FISCHER
Gazette Reporter

Music and theater of all types are again on the area till for this post-July 4 weekend.

* * *

TRYING TO EQUAL last week-end's festivities, the Lenox Music Barn is crammed full of musical entertainment both tomorrow and Sunday. Popular demand created the group which makes its summer debut at 3:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The Belafonte Singers originally used by Harry Belafonte in his own performances. Overwhelming popular appeal forced Belafonte to let them record three of their own albums and enabled them to go on the road as an act of their own. Their performance is well worth hearing.

Also on the bill at Lenox is the George Shearing Quintet, which seems to be making a clean sweep of the area after its July 2 performance at McCauley Mountain. Don't expect jazz in its truest form, but he should be entertaining.

* * *

FOR LONGHAIR MUSIC and a beautiful evening, nothing can compare with Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will play Bach suites 1, 2, 3 and 4 at 8:30 tonight. Tomorrow night he will conduct Bach's Bradenburg concertos and a cantata, also at 8:30.

Sunday afternoon also is devoted to Bach, the Magnifica with choir and soloists and a piano concerto with Lukas Foss, soloist, at 2:30 p.m. Monday night brings the Ffomm Foundation Concert of Contemporary Chamber Music to Tanglewood at 8:30 p.m. All of these performances are worth the trip.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUL 1 1961

TANGLEWOOD DUE TO OPEN NEW SEASON

Boston Symphony, Curtis Quartet in Concerts Next Week

LENOX — Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday.

Nine Soloists Invited

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening (8.30) concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert (8.30) soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin (violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert (2.30) when Charles Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and MacMorgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Foss as soloist.

Chamber Music Concert

The Curtis String Quartet — Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aronoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello — will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1200-seat Theater Wednesday night at 8.30. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163 by Franz Schubert.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center — those who make voluntary contributions to the school — are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week: the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday, 8.30 p. m., Music Shed; a seminar in contemporary music, Friday, 3.15, Chamber Music Hall; and a Berkshire Music Center chamber music, Sunday, 10 a. m., Chamber Music Hall.

BICENTENNIAL QUEEN

MISS JUDY MORANDI

Judy Morandi, 17, senior at Mt. Everett Regional High School in Sheffield, was named Great Barrington bicentennial queen at the ball held Friday night at the Berkshire Inn. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Medeo Morandi of Alford and was sponsored by Alford Grange. The bicentennial celebration will come to a close tonight with a fireworks display. In the firemen's parade at 10 a. m., the queen will ride on a throne surrounded by the four other contestants on the Chamber of Commerce float.

Opening Rites Sunday For Music Center

LENOX — The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3.30 p. m. Sun in the Theater at Tanglew The public is invited to at the exercises and to remain tea to be served in the Tan wood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 fac members will be presented to 300 students by Aaron Copla faculty chairman. The stude will be addressed by Mrs. Se Koussevitzky, whose late husb was the Boston Symphony chestra's former music direc and first director of the cen Raymond S. Wilkins, chief jus of the Massachusetts Supre Court and Boston Symphony chestra trustee, will also addr the students.

The annual exercises will c clude with the traditional p formance by the new stud body, conducted by Hugh Ro of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia which Thompson wrote for dedicated to the Berkshire Mu Center at its founding in 1940.

BASEL — The 45th annu Swiss Industries Fair was he here in an area totalling 1,42 850 square feet.

New England Newsclip Agency
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R.
Circ. 143,529

JUL 3 1961

Boston Symphony To Open Festival

Lenox, Mass.—(UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this Friday with Charles Munch directing.

The orchestra will present three concerts of Bach music on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Munch was expected to arrive today from Europe, where he has been vacationing since the end of the symphony season in April.

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS

Tanglewood Hits The Spot

TANGLEWOOD Mass —. What a miserable place this would be for anybody who didn't care for music.

Over in the Shed (seating 6,000 persons), Charles Munch is rehearsing the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It's a live and lovely sound.

Well hidden behind maple trees and a formal garden, Boris Goldovsky and his youthful protegees are running through stage action for "The Marriage of Figaro" and a "Rigoletto" ensemble. "Oceans of patience is our motto here," Goldovsky vows.

Kindly G. Wallace Woodworth, James Ditson professor of music at Harvard, in another wooden structure (an old barn, actually) is going through the slow movement of Beethoven's Ninth with the aid of a phonograph, smacking his lips figuratively at each crumb and morsel as he explains to his students the ingredients of each nip and nibble.

Instrumentalists, future conductors, fresh-faced composers with marks of genius, and devout, carefully auditioned voices studying choral works all are tucked away in one building or another of this 200-acre estate set in the rolling, rich green Berkshire countryside.

If you love music, this is the place to be. The Curtis String Quartet, a famous group, did Brahms and Schubert works Wednesday.

Munch and the Boston Symphony did the Bach Suites Friday night, four of the Brandenburg concertos and Bach's Cantata 202 Saturday night, and he's presenting the Bach "Magnificat" this afternoon with soloist Adele Addison.

Driving here from Charlotte meant going through a new world for this writer: not through Richmond, but over top of it on a throughway at 60 miles an hour; toll roads with signs that flash 'Thank You," framed in green, when you toss the right change in a hopper; express lanes running like an arrow; a tunnel under Baltimore harbor; a snazzy bridge over the Potomac; and a tree-fringed parkway from just above New York City into New England with never a house in sight.

The air here is cool at this 1,000-foot elevation, bracing like the elating ozone of Blowing Rock. It's a culture bug's paradise.

Jacob's Pillow is down the road, with dancers including Ruth St. Denis, Slavenska, Maria Tallchief, Bruhn, and Lupe Serano. Summer theaters and playhouses dot the area. Great Barrington had a horse show Thursday through Saturday.

Two hundred eight students, chosen for their talent, many on scholarships, are busy at Tanglewood, with a faculty of 43. Twenty-one of the students are here from nine foreign countries.

The atmosphere is friendly and informal. Munch is director. Composer Aaron Copland is chairman of the faculty.

Munch conducted his rehearsal today on what you might call a high stool with a back to it. There was nothing relaxed about his ear. He stopped things to brush up the first 'cellist on a solo passage that sounded gorgeous to begin with. The gray-haired man looks serene and benign.

Goldovsky is all action. No one seemed to know whether or not he would let me in to his rehearsals, so I just went. It was fascinating. He likes his stage action fitted to music, almost like choreography.

A sweep in the music to Goldovsky calls for a graceful motion of the body. In this way he gets many of his stage cues from the composer.

Pair after pair of youngsters went through bits of love scenes, sometimes themselves singing (and disclosing pleasing voices) and sometimes in pantomime with the piano. Goldovsky was tireless in explaining the fragments of stage business that make the difference between a feeling of reality and old-style stuffy posing when an opera is in full swing.

How much can be implied by the way a tenor embraces the soprano! How much technique is involved in a whimsical kiss that starts at the fingertips and slides past elbow and shoulder to the ear!

It's a long jump from Beethoven's Ninth to kissing a soprano behind the ear —but it's all part of music at Tanglewood.

ROGER VOISIN, first trumpeter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra leads the fanfare which opens the day-long "Tanglewood on Parade" festivities. This is an annual benefit for the orchestra's summer music school, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136

JUL 7 1961

Diversified Music and Theater Are Available

By BARRY FISCHER
Gazette Reporter

Music and theater of all types is on again on the area till for this post-July 4 weekend.

TRYING TO EQUAL last weekend's festivities, the Lenox Music Barn is crammed full of musical entertainment both tomorrow and Sunday. Popular demand created the group which makes its summer debut at 5:30 p.m. tomorrow.

The Belafonte Singers originally used by Harry Belafonte in his own performances. Overwhelming popular appeal forced Belafonte to let them record three of their own albums and enabled them to go on the road as an act of their own. Their performance is well worth hearing.

Also on the bill at Lenox is the George Shearing Quintet, which seems to be making a clean sweep of the area after its July 2 performance at McCauley Mountain. Don't expect jazz in its truest form, but he should be entertaining.

* * *

FOR LONGHAIR MUSIC and a beautiful evening, nothing can compare with Tanglewood. The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, will play Bach suites 1, 2, 3 and 4 at 8:30 tonight. Tomorrow night he will conduct Bach's Bradenburg concertos, and a cantata, also at 8:30.

Sunday afternoon also is devoted to Bach, the Magnifica with choir and soloists and a piano concerto with Lukas Foss, soloist, at 2:30 p.m. Monday night brings the Ffomm Foundation Concert of Contemporary Chamber Music to Tanglewood at 8:30 p.m. All of these performances are worth the trip.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUL 1 1961

TANGLEWOOD DUE TO OPEN NEW SEASON

Boston Symphony, Curtis Quartet in Concerts Next Week

LENOX — Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood next week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday.

Nine Soloists Invited

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening (8.30) concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert (8.30) soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voisin (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin (violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert (2.30) when Charles Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and MacMorgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Foss as soloist.

Chamber Music Concert

The Curtis String Quartet — Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aronoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello — will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1200-seat Theater Wednesday night at 8.30. The program will consist o Brahms' Sextet in B-flat Major Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163 by Franz Schubert.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center — those who make voluntary contributions to the school — are invited to three events at Tanglewood next week: the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday, 8.30 p. m., Music Shed; a seminar in contemporary music, Friday, 3.15, Chamber Music Hall; and a Berkshire Music Center chamber music, Sunday, 10 a. m., Chamber Music Hall.

BICENTENNIAL QUEEN

MISS JUDY MORANDI

Judy Morandi, 17, senior at Mt. Everett Regional High School in Sheffield, was named Great Barrington bicentennial queen at the ball held Friday night at the Berkshire Inn. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Medeo Morandi of Alford and was sponsored by Alford Grange. The bicentennial celebration will come to a close tonight with a fireworks display. In the firemen's parade at 10 a. m., the queen will ride on a throne surrounded by the four other contestants on the Chamber of Commerce float.

Opening Rites Sunday For Music Center

LENOX — The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3.30 p. m. Sunday in the Theater at Tanglewood. The public is invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea to be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the center. Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

BASEL — The 45th annual Swiss Industries Fair was held here in an area totalling 1,420,850 square feet.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Bulletin (e)
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 143,529

JUL 3 1961

Boston Symphony To Open Festival

Lenox, Mass.—(UPI)—The Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this Friday with Charles Munch directing.

The orchestra will present three concerts of Bach music on Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Munch was expected to arrive today from Europe, where he has been vacationing since the end of the symphony season in April.

SIGHTS AND SOUNDS

Tanglewood Hits The Spot

TANGLEWOOD Mass —. What a miserable place this would be for anybody who didn't care for music.

Over in the Shed (seating 6,000 persons), Charles Munch is rehearsing the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It's a live and lovely sound.

Well hidden behind maple trees and a formal garden, Boris Goldovsky and his youthful protegees are running through stage action for "The Marriage of Figaro" and a "Rigoletto" ensemble. "Oceans of patience is our motto here," Goldovsky vows.

ndly G. Wallace Wood-h, James Ditson professor usic at Harvard, in an- wooden structure (an old ctually) is going the slow movement of n's Ninth with the aid nograph, smacking guratively at each morsel as he ex- students the in- each nip and ts, future con- ced compos- of genius, fully audi- ing choral l away in r of this the roll- rkshire is ts us es

es

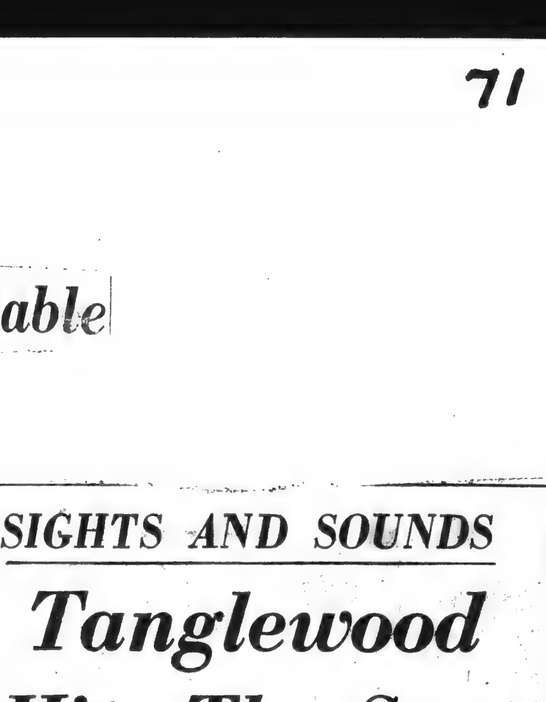
PAIRS $5

Shoes

ack to School



ROGER VOISIN, first trumpeter of the Boston Symphony Orchestra leads the fanfare which opens the day-long "Tanglewood on Parade" festivities. This is an annual benefit for the orchestra's summer music school, the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

Blowing Rock. It's a culture bug's paradise.

Jacob's Pillow is down the road, with dancers including Ruth St. Denis, Slavenska, Maria Tallchief, Bruhn, and Lupe Serano. Summer theaters and playhouses dot the area. Great Barrington had a horse show Thursday through Saturday.

Two hundred eight students, sen for their talent, many scholarships, are busy at lewood, with a faculty of enty-one of the students re from nine foreign s. tmosphere is friendly mal. Munch is direc- oser Aaron Copland of the faculty.

nducted his rehear- what you might ol with a back as nothing re- is ear. He brush up the solo passage eous to be- aired man nign.

sy' is all action. No eemed to know whether or not he would let me in to his rehearsals, so I just went. It was fascinating. He likes his stage action fitted to music, almost like choreography.

A sweep in the music to Goldovsky calls for a graceful motion of the body. In this way he gets many of his stage cues from the composer.

Pair after pair of youngsters went through bits of love scenes, sometimes themselves singing (and disclosing pleasing voices) and sometimes in pantomime with the piano. Goldovsky was tireless in explaining the fragments of stage business that make the difference between a feeling of reality and old-style stuffy posing when an opera is in full swing.

How much can be implied by the way a tenor embraces the soprano! How much technique is involved in a whimsical kiss that starts at the fingertips and slides past elbow and shoulder to the ear!

It's a long jump from Beethoven's Ninth to kissing a soprano behind the ear —but it's all part of music at Tanglewood.

72

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456

JUN 25 1961

Music

Concerts Listed at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert at Tanglewood on Wednesday evening, July 5.

On the succeeding six Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m., the following will perform in the chamber music series:

Budapest Quartet (July 12); Beaux Arts Trio of New York (July 19); New York Pro Musica (vocal and instrumental ensemble, directed by Noah Greenberg) July 26; Boston Fine Arts Quartet (Aug. 2); Kroll Quartet (Aug. 9); Claudio Arrau, pianist, in a Liszt sesquicentennial recital (Aug. 16).

Scholarships

The scholarship committee of the Worcester Youth Orchestra (Paul B. Morgan Jr., chairman; Harry Levenson and Raymond Morin) announces specific requirements for application:

1. An applicant must have been a member in good standing with the Youth Orchestra for at least two years.
2. Scholarships are awarded for study with any faculty member of an accredited musical institution, who is not a member of the Worcester Orchestra.
3. Scholarships are given on an annual basis.
4. Two $150 scholarships are available each year.

This year's scholarship recipients are Marilyn J. Reiman, 41 Wesleyan St., Shrewsbury, who has played the trumpet with the orchestra for the past two years; and Saul Harris, 237 May St., Worcester, a French horn player with the orchestra for four years.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUN 30 1961

Opening Exercises At Music Center

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p.m. Sunday in the theatre at Tanglewood in Lenox. The public is cordially invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the Center. Raymond S. Wilkins, Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

Charles Munch will arrive in the United States Monday, via air from Paris and travel immediately to Richmond, where his personal staff has opened his summer residence. Since the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's winter season in late April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe except for one concert with the London Philharmonic Orchestra in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1 which he designated as a memorial concert to Serge Koussevitsky and which was attended by the widow of the orchestra's former music director.

Dr. Munch will first rehearse his Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Wednesday morning in preparation for the first three of the 21 orchestral concerts to be given at Tanglewood during the seven-week Berkshire Festival. The opening orchestral concerts, scheduled for Friday-Saturday-Sunday (July 7-8-9) in the 6000-seat Music Shed, will consist of music by J. S. Bach. These orchestral concerts will be preceded by the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs on July 5 when the Curtis String Quartet is heard in Tanglewood's 12-seat theatre.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

JUL 1 1961

Public Invited To Exercises At Tanglewood

The Opening Exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p. m. Sunday in the theatre at Tanglewood in Lenox. The public is cordially invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the forty-three faculty members will be presented to the three hundred students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former Music Director and first director of the Center. Raymond S. Wilkins, Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for the dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700

JUN 29 1961

Tanglewood To Open Wednesday

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30; Sunday, 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his Orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Doctor Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood (July 5). Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The Festival Ticket Office is open as follows: Thurs.—Sat.: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sun.—July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The Ticket Office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5-August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUL 5 1961

Regional Roundup

Student Concert Season To Open at Tanglewood

De Carvalho, Instrumental Music Department Head at Lenox Center, Plans Program Thursday

Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the department of instrumental music at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, has planned an ambitious program for the opening of the student concert season. This concert Thursday night at 8.30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood will take place just four days following the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music. De Carvalho arrived at Tanglewood by air from Sao Paulo, Brazil, last Saturday and immediately began preparations for the intensive season of the student orchestra.

Competitive Exams

During the first week of the school the student conductors will undergo rigorous competitive examinations under the supervision of De Carvalho. From these examinations the best qualified conductors will be selected to lead the student orchestra during the remainder of the season. The student conductors will make their first appearances with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at its second concert Saturday, July 15, at 3 p. m. This concert, originally scheduled for July 13, was rescheduled because of the Danny Kaye pension fund concert.

After their four whirlwind days of intensive rehearsal under De Carvalho and principal instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the students will be heard in Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (first three movements), Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" and Wagner's Prelude to "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg."

Once again, as in past years, these concerts will be presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Donations may be made by mail to Tanglewood or in person at the Tanglewood friends' office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127

JUL 5 1961

De Carvalho Will Conduct Initial Student Concert

Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the department of instrumental music at the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the program for the opening of the student concert season.

This concert to be held tomorrow evening at 8:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood will take place just four days following the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music. Maestro de Carvalho arrived at Tanglewood by air from Sao Paulo, Brazil, last Saturday and immediately began preparations for the intensive season of student orchestra.

During the first week of the school the student conductors will undergo rigorous competitive examinations under the supervision of Mr. de Carvalho. From these examinations the best qualified conductors will be selected to lead the student orchestra during the remainder of the season. The student conductors will make their first appearances with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at its second concert Saturday, July 15 at 3 p. m. This concert originally scheduled for July 13 was rescheduled because of the Danny Kaye Pension Fund Concert.

After their four whirlwind days of intensive rehearsal under Carvalho and principal instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the students will be heard tomorrow night in the first three movements of the Beethoven Symphony No. 9; Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration;" and Prelude to Wagner's "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg."

The student concerts are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Contributors to the support of the Center are automatically enrolled in this organization.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 1 1961

Public Invited to Opening Of Berkshire Music Center

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Theater at Tanglewood in Lenox. The public is invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the center. Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, also will address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136

JUL 5 1961

String Quartet To Play at Tanglewood

The Curtis String Quartet will present the first of the Wednesday evening chamber music programs at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight at 8:30 in the theater concert hall.

* * *

MEMBERS OF THE quartet are Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello. Violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes of the Boston Symphony will join the quartet in the program. The program will consist of the "Sextet in B flat, major, opus 18," Brahms; and the "Quintet in C major, opus 163," Franz Schubert.

Other events at Tanglewood this week include a performance of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in the music shed; a seminar in contemporary music, Friday at 3:15 p.m. in the chamber music hall; and a program Sunday at 10 a.m. in the chamber music hall called "Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music." These events are all open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions to the school.

Also open to the public is the Saturday 10 a.m. rehearsal of the Boston Symphony through a contribution to the orchestra's pension fund.

72

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456

JUN 25 1961

Music

Concerts Listed at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, first viola and first cello of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, will join members of the Curtis Quartet for the opening chamber music concert at Tanglewood on Wednesday evening, July 5.

On the succeeding six Wednesdays at 8:30 p.m., the following will perform in the chamber music series:

Budapest Quartet (July 12); Beaux Arts Trio of New York (July 19); New York Pro Musica (vocal and instrumental ensemble, directed by Noah Greenberg) July 26; Boston Fine Arts Quartet (Aug. 2); Kroll Quartet (Aug. 9); Claudio Arrau, pianist, in a Liszt sesquicentennial recital (Aug. 16).

Scholarships

The scholarship committee of the Worcester Youth Orchestra (Paul R. Morgan Jr., chairman; Harry Levenson and Raymond Morin) announces specific requirements for application:

An applicant must have been a member in good standing with the Youth Orchestra for at least two years.

Scholarships are awarded for study with any faculty member of an accredited musical institution, who is not a member of the Worcester Orchestra.

Scholarships are given on an annual basis.

Two $150 scholarships are available each year.

This year's scholarship recipients are Marilyn J. Reiman, 41 Wesleyan St., Shrewsbury, who has played the trumpet with the orchestra for the past two years; and Saul Harris, 237 May St., Worcester, a French horn player with the orchestra for four years.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUN 30 1961

Opening Exercises At Music Center

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p.m. Sunday in the theatre at Tanglewood in Lenox. The public is cordially invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the Center. Raymond S. Wilkins, Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

Charles Munch will arrive in the United States Monday, via air from Paris and travel immediately to Richmond, where his personal staff has opened his summer residence. Since the close of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's winter season in late April, Dr. Munch has been vacationing in Europe except for one concert with the London Philharmonic Orchestra in London's Royal Festival Hall on June 1 which he designated as a memorial concert to Serge Koussevitsky and which was attended by the widow of the orchestra's former music director.

Dr. Munch will first rehearse his Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Wednesday morning in preparation for the first three of the 21 orchestral concerts to be given at Tanglewood during the seven-week Berkshire Festival. The opening orchestral concerts, scheduled for Friday-Saturday-Sunday (July 7-8-9) in the 6000-seat Music Shed, will consist of music by J. S. Bach. These orchestral concerts will be preceded by the first of seven Wednesday evening chamber music programs on July 5 when the Curtis String Quartet is heard in Tanglewood's 12-seat theatre.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 1 1961

Public Invited To Exercises At Tanglewood

The Opening Exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p. m. Sunday in the theatre at Tanglewood in Lenox. The public is cordially invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the forty-three faculty members will be presented to the three hundred students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former Music Director and first director of the Center. Raymond S. Wilkins, Chief Justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, will also address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for the dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

News
WILLIAMSTOWN, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 1,700
JUN 29 1961

Tanglewood To Open Wednesday

Charles Munch will conduct the first six orchestral concerts at Tanglewood on July 7, 8, 9 and 14, 15, 16 (Friday, Saturday, 8:30; Sunday, 2:30). The programs for the first three concerts will consist of music by Bach; for the second three, music by Mozart. Doctor Munch's guests at these concerts will include seven members of his Orchestra plus the pianists Lukas Foss and Seymour Lipkin, four vocal soloists and the Tanglewood Choir conducted by Hugh Ross. Doctor Munch has invited several distinguished conductors and eminent soloists to join him in the fifteen Boston Symphony Orchestra concerts scheduled for the final five Festival weekends (July 21-22-23; 28-29-30; August 4-5-6; 11-12-13; 18-19-20).

The Curtis Quartet, with Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes, will give the first chamber music concert at Tanglewood (July 5). Participants in the other concerts of this series will include the Budapest, Boston Fine Arts and Kroll Quartets, the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, the New York Pro Musica and Claudio Arrau in a Liszt Sesquicentennial Recital.

The Festival Ticket Office, is open as follows: Thurs.—Sat.: 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.; Sun.—July 2: 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. The Ticket Office will be open from 9 to 6 every day from July 5-August 20 and will remain open through intermission on concert nights. Mail orders and telephone orders will also be accepted for the Festival concerts.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 5 1961

Regional Roundup

Student Concert Season To Open at Tanglewood

De Carvalho, Instrumental Music Department Head at Lenox Center, Plans Program Thursday

Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the department of instrumental music at the Berkshire Music Center, Lenox, has planned an ambitious program for the opening of the student concert season. This concert Thursday night at 8:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood will take place just four days following the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music. De Carvalho arrived at Tanglewood by air from Sao Paulo, Brazil, last Saturday and immediately began preparations for the intensive season of the student orchestra.

Competitive Exams

During the first week of the school, the student conductors will undergo rigorous competitive examinations under the supervision of De Carvalho. From these examinations the best qualified conductors will be selected to lead the student orchestra during the remainder of the season. The student conductors will make their first appearances with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at its second concert Saturday, July 15, at 3 p. m. This concert, originally scheduled for July 13, was rescheduled because of the Danny Kaye pension fund concert.

After their four whirlwind days of intensive rehearsal under De Carvalho and principal instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the students will be heard in Beethoven's Symphony No. 9 (first three movements), Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration" and Wagner's Prelude to "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg."

Once again, as in past years, these concerts will be presented by the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Donations may be made by mail to Tanglewood or in person at the Tanglewood friends' office.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 5 1961

De Carvalho Will Conduct Initial Student Concert

Eleazar de Carvalho, head of the department of instrumental music at the Berkshire Music Center, has announced the program for the opening of the student concert season.

This concert to be held tomorrow evening at 8:30 in the Music Shed at Tanglewood will take place just four days following the opening of the Boston Symphony Orchestra's summer school of music. Maestro de Carvalho arrived at Tanglewood by air from Sao Paulo, Brazil, last Saturday and immediately began preparations for the intensive season of student orchestra.

During the first week of the school the student conductors will undergo rigorous competitive examinations under the supervision of Mr. de Carvalho. From these examinations the best qualified conductors will be selected to lead the student orchestra during the remainder of the season. The student conductors will make their first appearances with the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra at its second concert Saturday, July 15 at 3 p. m. This concert originally scheduled for July 13 was rescheduled because of the Danny Kaye Pension Fund Concert.

After their four whirlwind days of intensive rehearsal under De Carvalho and principal instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, the students will be heard tomorrow night in the first three movements of the Beethoven Symphony No. 9, Strauss' "Death and Transfiguration;" and Prelude to Wagner's "The Meistersingers of Nuremberg."

The student concerts are open to Friends of the Berkshire Music Center. Contributors to the support of the Center are automatically enrolled in that organization.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
JUL 5 1961

String Quartet To Play at Tanglewood

The Curtis String Quartet will present the first of the Wednesday evening chamber music programs at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., tonight at 8:30 in the theater concert hall.

* * *

MEMBERS OF THE quartet are Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello. Violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes of the Boston Symphony will join the quartet in the program. The program will consist of the "Sextet in B flat major, opus 18," Brahms; and the "Quintet in C major, opus 163," Franz Schubert.

Other events at Tanglewood this week include a performance of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday at 8:30 p.m. in the music shed; a seminar in contemporary music, Friday at 3:15 p.m. in the chamber music hall; and a program Sunday at 10 a.m. in the chamber music hall called "Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music." These events are all open to the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center, those who make voluntary contributions to the school.

Also open to the public is the Saturday 10 a.m. rehearsal of the Boston Symphony through a contribution to the orchestra's pension fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 1 1961

Public Invited to Opening Of Berkshire Music Center

The opening exercises of the Berkshire Music Center will be held at 3:30 p.m. tomorrow in the Theater at Tanglewood in Lenox. The public is invited to attend the exercises and to remain for tea which will be served in the Tanglewood gardens.

At the exercises the 43 faculty members will be presented to the 300 students by Aaron Copland, faculty chairman. The students will be addressed by Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky, whose late husband was the Boston Symphony Orchestra's former music director and first director of the center. Raymond S. Wilkins, chief justice of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and Boston Symphony Orchestra trustee, also will address the students.

The annual exercises will conclude with the traditional performance by the new student body, conducted by Hugh Ross, of Randall Thompson's "Alleluia," which Mr. Thompson wrote for and dedicated to the Berkshire Music Center at its founding in 1940.

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

July 5

The Curtis String Quartet

assisted by

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, Viola — SAMUEL MAYES, Cello

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

JUL 3 1961

Curtis Quartet Opens Season Wed. At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox this week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday.

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert, soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voison (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin (violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert when Charles Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Mr. Foss as soloist.

The Curtis String Quartet — Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello—will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1200-seat Theatre Wednesday evening. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163 by Franz Schubert.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center — those who make voluntary contributions to the school—are invited to three events at Tanglewood this week: The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday night, Music Shed; a Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday afternoon, July 7, Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music, Sunday morning, July 9, Chamber Music Hall.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
JUL 6 1961

Season Opens At Tanglewood

Curtis Spring Quartet Performs Before 1200

TANGLEWOOD — The Berkshire Music Festival began last night with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet before about 1250 applauding people in the theater concert hall.

On the program was Brahms' String Sextet in B-Flat Major, Op. 18 and Schubert's String Quintet in C Major, Op. 163. The quarted was assisted in presenting these works by two first desk men from the Boston Symphony, Joseph De Pasquale, violist, and Samuel Mayes, cellist.

There will be six more chamber music concerts. The Budapest Quartet is to be heard July 12; Beaux Arts Trio, July 19 and the New York Pro Musica July 26.

Aug. 2 brings the Boston Fine Arts String Quartet; Aug. 9, the Kroll String Quartets and Aug. 16, pianist Claudio Arrau in an all-Liszt program.

Danny Kaye Set

Among the concerts by the Boston Symphony will be one for the orchestra's pension fund, directed by famed comedian Danny Kaye the 13th. The orchestra will give a total of 21 concerts.

Among additional soloists announced by the real conductor, Dr. Charles Munch are soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan who will join the Tanglewood Choir in Sunday's performance of Bach's "Magnificat." Dr. Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20 when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUL 9 1961

Second Thoughts On Music

Curtis String Quartet Is Ensemble of Fine Balance

Tanglewood Chamber Series Opens to Small but Enthusiastic Audience; Personal Touch Noted

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—There is something rather frustrating during the first few days at Tanglewood where the Berkshire Music Festival has just opened its season. The Wednesday night chamber music series does not draw large audiences, but it does draw what is perhaps the most discriminating, so the glitter and excitement of an opening night is somewhat toned down. The season started auspiciously Wednesday night with a concert by the famed Curtis String Quartet, assisted by two first desk men from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Samuel Mayes, cellist, and Joseph De Pasquale, violist. The program contained two of the great pieces of chamber music literature, the "String Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18" by Brahms and Schubert's exquisite "String Quintet in C Major."

Fine Balance

The Curtis String Quartet is a finely balanced ensemble and with the vast experience of Messers, Mayes and Pasquale, this great music was in most capable hands. Brahms is said to have declared "If we can not write as beautifully as Mozart and Haydn, at least let us write as purely." This he accomplished in the String Sextet. It is crystal clear and, though it bears the imprint of Schubert, Beethoven and Haydn, in addition to others, the work acquired a remarkable sense of comprehensibility, clarity and harmonious proportion.

The performance had a certain intimacy, a personal touch, if you will, for this is a work that seems to have particular, personal meaning for its performers. The variations of the second movement were superbly handled and the final rondo had the lightness and hint of what was to come in the later waltzes.

Tragic Grandeur

The Schubert Quintet has a sort of tragic grandeur. Schubert wrote it about two months before his death and never heard it performed. Indeed, the work was not engraved until some 25 years after his death. The two cellos lend the dark color for the tragic mood, extended beyond anything he had done up to this work. His song-like themes are given up in favor of purely instrumental and capable of development and climax. Like the sextet, the quintet has a very personal effect upon its performers, so one listened to a very personal, handsomely balanced performance which was always significant.

There was no doubt that the audience loved the performance of both works. Applause was hearty and prolonged. As for us, the performances seemed among the finest we have heard in the chamber music series of the past few years.

For the benefit of chamber music devotees we list the future concert in the series. Budapest String Quartet, July 12; Beaux Arts Trio of New York, July 19; New York Pro Musica, July 26; Boston Fine Arts String Quartet, Aug. 2; Kroll String Quartet, Aug. 9; and Claudio Arrau, pianist, in an all-Liszt program, Aug. 16.

City Visitors

Danny aye will definitely be on hand to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Pension Fund concert Thursday. There are still tickets available. All seats in the 6000-seat Music Shed are reserved and no tickets for general admission to the lawns will be sold. In addition to Tanglewood, tickets are available at England Brothers Box Office and at Sammy Vincent, Inc. in Pittsfield.

Among Springfield residents seen Wednesday night was mezzo-soprano Calliope Shenas, who is a member of the choral department of the Berkshire Music Festival. In recent years we have not noted many Springfield residents attending the festival concerts. They seem to fear the crowds. It must be noted that parking and getting in and out of the grounds is far simpler than it used to be and Tanglewood is not much more than an hour from Springfield, via turnpike. Come on up to the Berkshires and get some sparkling, fresh air and listen to some great music. There is plenty of both here. Next Sunday we shall discuss the week-end concerts which will have been devoted to the music of Bach. Adele Addison will be heard twice, in "Wedding Cantata" and the "Magnificat."

One of our favorite ensembles at the Music Center is the Student Orchestra made up of students at the school. It is a talented group and put on fine concerts under student conductors. This year there are 100 in the orchestra and about 20 student conductors. The orchestra is trained by Eleazar de Carvalho, who seems to have the enthusiasm and know-how to bring the best out of these young musicians.

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

July 5

The Curtis String Quartet

assisted by

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, Viola — SAMUEL MAYES, Cello

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

JUL 3 1961

Curtis Quartet Opens Season Wed. At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox this week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday.

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert, soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voison (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin (violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert when Charles Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Mr. Foss as soloist.

The Curtis String Quartet—Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello—will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1200-seat Theatre Wednesday evening. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163 by Franz Schubert.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—those who make voluntary contributions to the school—are invited to three events at Tanglewood this week: The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday night, Music Shed; a Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday afternoon, July 7, Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music, Sunday morning, July 9, Chamber Music Hall.

SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUL 9 1961

Second Thoughts On Music

Curtis String Quartet Is Ensemble of Fine Balance

Tanglewood Chamber Series Opens to Small but Enthusiastic Audience; Personal Touch Noted

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—There is something rather frustrating during the first few days at Tanglewood where the Berkshire Music Festival has just opened its season. The Wednesday night chamber music series does not draw large audiences, but it does draw what is perhaps the most discriminating, so the glitter and excitement of an opening night is somewhat toned down. The season started auspiciously Wednesday night with a concert by the famed Curtis String Quartet, assisted by two first desk men from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Samuel Mayes, cellist, and Joseph De Pasquale, violist. The program contained two of the great pieces of chamber music literature, the "String Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18" by Brahms and Schubert's exquisite "String Quintet in C Major."

Fine Balance

The Curtis String Quartet is a finely balanced ensemble and with the vast experience of Messrs. Mayes and Pasquale, this great music was in most capable hands. Brahms is said to have declared "If we can not write as beautifully as Mozart and Haydn, at least let us write as purely." This he accomplished in the String Sextet. It is crystal clear and, though it bears the imprint of Schubert, Beethoven and Haydn, in addition to others, the work acquired a remarkable sense of comprehensibility, clarity and harmonious proportion.

The performance had a certain intimacy, a personal touch, if you will, for this is a work that seems to have particular, personal meaning for its performers. The variations of the second movement were superbly handled and the final rondo had the lightness and hint of what was to come in the later waltzes.

Tragic Grandeur

The Schubert Quintet has a part of tragic grandeur. Schubert wrote it about two months before his death and never heard it performed. Indeed, the work was not engraved until some 25 years after his death. The two cellos lend the dark color for the tragic mood, extended beyond anything he had done up to this work. His song-like themes are given up in favor of purely instrumental and capable of development and climax. Like the sextet, the quintet has a very personal effect upon its performers, so one listened to a very personal, handsomely balanced performance which was always significant.

There was no doubt that the audience loved the performance of both works. Applause was hearty and prolonged. As for us, the performances seemed among the finest we have heard in the chamber music series of the past few years.

For the benefit of chamber music devotees we list the future concert in the series. Budapest String Quartet, July 12; Beaux Arts Trio of New York, July 19; New York Pro Musica, July 26; Boston Fine Arts String Quartet, Aug. 2; Kroll String Quartet, Aug. 9; and Claudio Arrau, pianist, in an all-Liszt program, Aug. 16.

City Visitors

Danny aye will definitely be on hand to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a Pension Fund concert Thursday. There are still tickets available. All seats in the 6000-seat Music Shed are reserved and no tickets for general admission to the lawns will be sold. In addition to Tanglewood, tickets are available at England Brothers Box Office and at Sammy Vipent, Inc. in Pittsfield.

Among Springfield residents seen Wednesday night was mezzo-soprano Calliope Shenas, who is a member of the choral department of the Berkshire Music Festival. In recent years we have not noted many Springfield residents attending the festival concerts. They seem to fear the crowds. It must be noted that parking and getting in and out of the grounds is far simpler than it used to be and Tanglewood is not much more than an hour from Springfield via turnpike. Come on up to the Berkshires and get some sparkling, fresh air and listen to some great music. There is plenty of both here. Next Sunday we shall discuss the week-end concerts which will have been devoted to the music of Bach. Adele Addison will be heard twice, in "Wedding Cantata" and the "Magnificat."

One of our favorite ensembles at the Music Center is the Student Orchestra made up of students at the school. It is a talented group and put on fine concerts under student conductors. This year there are 100 in the orchestra and about 20 student conductors. The orchestra is trained by Eleazar de Carvalho, who seems to have the enthusiasm and know-how to bring the best out of these young musicians.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 2[illegible]73
JUL 2[illegible] 1961

Season Opens At Tanglewood

Curtis Spring Quartet Performs Before 1200

TANGLEWOOD — The Berkshire Music Festival began last night with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet before about 1200 applauding people in the theater concert hall.

On the program was Brahms' String Sextet in B-Flat Major, Op. 18 and Schubert's String Quintet in C Major, Op. 163. The quarted was assisted in presenting these works by two first desk men from the Boston Symphony, Joseph De Pasquale, violist, and Samuel Mayes, cellist.

There will be six more chamber musical concerts. The Budapest Quartet is to be heard July 12; Beaux Arts Trio, July 19 and the New York Pro Musica, July 26.

Aug. 2 brings the Boston Fine Arts String Quartet; Aug. 9, the Kroll String Quartets and Aug. 16, pianist Claudio Arrau in an all-Liszt program.

Danny Kaye Set

Among the concerts by the Boston Symphony will be one for the orchestra's pension fund, directed by famed comedian Danny Kaye the 13th. The orchestra will give a total of 21 concerts.

Among additional soloists announced by the real conductor, Dr. Charles Munch are soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan who will join the Tanglewood Choir in Sunday's performance of Bach's "Magnificat." Dr. Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20 when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2.

STRING SEXTET No. 1, IN B FLAT MAJOR, OP. 18

By JOHANNES BRAHMS (1833-1897)

Brahms' Opus 18 belongs to his early period of chamber music. He composed it in Hamburg in 1860 and entrusted it to Joachim for the first performance in a quartet concert in Hanover, on October 20 of that year. Brahms had recently completed his stay at the little Principality of Lippe-Detmold nearby, and the Sextet can be considered as one more outcome of the young composer's happy occupation with chamber music there, encouraged and performed under surroundings more than favorable. Brahms' two serenades, his first Piano Trio (later revised) came from Detmold. In these he was trying out wind and string combinations with an eye on the formal past. He once remarked: "If we cannot write as beautifully as Mozart and Haydn, let us at least write as purely." His reverence for these two was boundless, and classical purity would have meant to him clarity of part writing, structural balance, general musical logic, a kind of point and concision from which his own century, himself included, were inclined to depart in the direction of a freer fantasy. The First Trio in its original form plainly shows this Romantic urge. The String Sextet in B flat is purer and more classical. Karl Geiringer finds in this score that "depth of feeling, richness of melody, and beauty of sound, all characteristic of the creations of his younger days, are here combined with traits from the works of the classical Viennese school. Now the spirit of Schubert is involved (cf. first movement, second and third themes), then that of Beethoven (Scherzo) or Haydn (chief subject of the Finale). Far more important than these derivative features is the fact that Brahms acquired from the works of his Viennese models a sense of clarity and harmonious proportion. Further, we may observe a striving towards greater comprehensibility rarely to be noted in the bulk of his work. This is already apparent from his simple method of variation in the slow movement, and the insistence with which the principal themes are introduced in the first and last movements, first by the cello and then again by the violin. In this Sextet Brahms writes for the first time with the lightness of hand which he was later to reveal in his Waltzes, Op. 39, and his Hungarian Dances."

STRING QUINTET IN C MAJOR, OP. 163

(For two violins, viola, two cellos)

By FRANZ SCHUBERT (1797-1828)

Schubert composed his String Quintet in August and September, 1828, two months before his death. There is no record of a performance, even a private one, in his lifetime. Josef Hellmesberger introduced it publicly at his quartet evenings in 1850. The music was published by C. A. Spina, Vienna, in 1853.

This Quintet, which Schubert never heard, which no publisher saw while he lived, or bothered to engrave until twenty-five years after his death, is music of vision far beyond what his friends could have dreamed to exist in the mild little man they loved. It could be called music of tragic grandeur and true power. It implies throughout a fuller instrumentation, and yet its

FIRST CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC HALL

The Curtis String Quartet

JASCHA BRODSKY, Violin — MAX ARANOFF, Viola

MEHLI MEHTA, Violin — ORLANDO COLE, Cello

assisted by

JOSEPH DE PASQUALE, Viola — SAMUEL MAYES, Cello

PROGRAM

BRAHMS — String Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18

I. Allegro ma non troppo

II. Tema con variazioni: Andante ma moderato

III. Scherzo: Allegro molto

IV. Rondo: Poco allegretto grazioso

INTERMISSION

SCHUBERT — String Quintet in C Major, Op. 163

I. Allegro ma non troppo

II. Adagio

III. Scherzo: Presto; Trio: Andante sostenuto

IV. Allegretto

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 9 1961

Second Thoughts On Music

Curtis String Quartet Is Ensemble of Fine Balanc

Tanglewood Chamber Series Opens to Small b
Enthusiastic Audience; Personal Tou Noted

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—There is something rather frustrating during first few days at Tanglewood where the Berkshire Music F tival has just opened its season. The Wednesday night chamb music series does not draw large audiences, but it does dr what is perhaps the most discriminating, so the glitter and e citement of an opening night is somewhat toned down. T season started auspiciously Wednesday night with a concert the famed Curtis String Quartet, assisted by two first desk men from the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Samuel Mayes, cellist, and Joseph De Pasquale, violist. The program contained two of the great pieces of chamber music literature, the "String Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18" by Brahms and Schubert's exquisite "String Quintet in C Major."

Fine Balance

The Curtis String Quartet is a finely balanced ensemble and with the vast experience of Messers, Mayes and Pasquale, this great music was in most capable hands. Brahms is said to have declared "If we can not write as beautifully as Mozart and Haydn, at least let us write as purely." This he accomplished in the String Sextet. It is crystal clear and, though it bears the imprint of Schubert, Beethoven and Haydn, in addition to others, the work acquired a remarkable sense of comprehensibility, clarity and harmonious proportion.

The performance had a certain intimacy, a personal touch, if you will, for this is a work that seems to have particular, personal meaning for its performers. The variations of the second movement were superbly handled and the final rondo had the lightness and hint of what was to come in the later waltzes.

Tragic Grandeur

The Schubert Quintet has a sort of tragic grandeur. Schubert wrote it about two months before his death and never heard it performed. Indeed, the work was not engraved u some 25 years after his dea
The two cellos lend the da color for the tragic mood.
tended beyond anything he t done up to this work. His as lile themes are given up in fe or of purely instrumental capable of development a climax. Like the sextet, quintet has a very personal fect upon its performers, so listened to a very person handsomely balanced perfor
ance which was always signi cant.

There was no doubt that audience loved the performan of both works. Applause w hearty and prolonged.
for us, the performances seem among the finest we have hea in the chamber music series the past few years.

For the benefit of chamb music devotees we list the ture concert in the series. Bud pest String Quartet, July
Beaux Arts Trio of New Yo
July 19; New York Pro M
sica, July 26; Boston Fine A String Quartet, Aug. 2; Kro
String Quartet, Aug. 9;
Claudio Arrau, pianist, in all-Liszt program, Aug. 16.

City Visitors

Danny aye will definitely on hand to conduct the Bost Symphony Orchestra in a Pe
sion Fund concert Thursda
There are still tickets availabl
All seats in the 6000-seat Mus Shed are reserved and tickets for general admission the lawns will be sold. In ad tion to Tanglewood, tickets a available at England Brothe
Box Office and at Sammy Vi pent, Inc. in Pittsfield.

Among Springfield residen seen Wednesday night was me so-soprano Calliope Shenas, w is a member of the choral d partment of the Berkshire M sic Festival. In recent years have not noted many Sprin field residents attending the fe tival concerts. They seem fear the crowds. It must b noted that parking and gettin in and out of the grounds is simpler than it used to be a Tanglewood is not much mo than an hour from Springfie via turnpike. Come on up to Berkshires and get some spar ling, fresh air and listen to so great music. There is plenty both here. Next Sunday we sha discuss the week-end concert which will have been devoted t the music of Bach. Adele Addi son will be heard twice,
"Wedding Cantata" and th
"Magnificat."

One of our favorite ensemble at the Music Center is the Stu dent Orchestra made up of stu dents at the school. It is a tal ented group and put on fine con certs under student conductors
This year there are 100 in the orchestra and about 20 studen conductors. The orchestra is trained by Eleazar de Carvalho who seems to have the enthu siasm and know-how to bring the best out of these young mu sicians.

News (e)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 99,973
JUL 2 1961

Season Opens At Tanglewood

Curtis Spring Quartet Performs Before 1200

TANGLEWOOD — The Berkshire Music Festival began last night with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet before about 1,250 applauding people in the theater concert hall.

On the program was Brahms' String Sextet in B-Flat Major, Op. 18 and Schubert's String Quintet in C Major, Op. 163. The quartet was assisted in presenting these works by two first desk men from the Boston Symphony, Joseph De Pasquale, violist, and Samuel Mayes, cellist.

There will be six more chamber music concerts. The Budapest Quartet is to be heard July 12; Beaux Arts Trio, July 19 and the New York Pro Musica, July 26.

Aug. 2 brings the Boston Fine Arts String Quartet; Aug. 9, the Kroll String Quartets and Aug. 16, pianist Claudio Arrau in an all-Liszt program.

Danny Kaye Set

Among the concerts by the Boston Symphony will be one for the orchestra's pension fund, directed by famed comedian Danny Kaye the 13th. The orchestra will give a total of 21 concerts.

Among additional soloists announced by the real conductor, Dr. Charles Munch are soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan who will join the Tanglewood Choir in Sunday's performance of Bach's "Magnificat." Dr. Munch has also selected his singers for the Festival's final concert on Aug. 20 when a performance of Berlioz' "Romeo and Juliet" will be given—contralto Florence Kopleff, tenor John McCollum and baritone Donald Gramm.

Richard Burgin, who will conduct the Aug. 11 concert as one of the three concerts in tribute to Serge Koussevitzky, has invited soprano Nancy Carr and contralto Eunice Alberts to be his guests in the performance of Mahler's Symphony No. 2 in

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 3 1961

Curtis Quartet Opens Season Wed. At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will open the 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox this week with three orchestral concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach on Friday, Saturday and Sunday and with a concert by the Curtis String Quartet assisted by Joseph de Pasquale and Samuel Mayes on Wednesday.

Nine soloists have been invited by Dr. Munch to participate in the three all-Bach concerts. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, the Orchestra's first flutist, will be soloist at the Friday evening concert in Bach's Suite No. 2 (B minor) for Flute and Strings. This concert will also include the Suites Nos. 1, 3 and 4.

At the Saturday concert, soprano Adele Addison will be heard in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata (No. 202, for soprano, "Weichet nur, betrubte Schatten") and Mrs. Dwyer plus Roger Voison (trumpet), Ralph Gomberg (oboe), Richard Burgin (violin) and Lukas Foss (piano) will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert when Charles Munch conducts Bach's "Magnificat." Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan will be the soloists in the "Magnificat," which will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the 1st Concerto for Clavier (D minor) with Mr. Foss as soloist.

The Curtis String Quartet—Jascha Brodsky, violin; Mehli Mehta, violin; Max Aranoff, viola; and Orlando Cole, cello—will be joined by violist Joseph de Pasquale and cellist Samuel Mayes for a chamber music concert in Tanglewood's 1200-seat Theatre Wednesday evening. The program will consist of Brahms' Sextet in B-flat Major, Op. 18, and the Quintet in C major, Op. 163 by Franz Schubert.

Members of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center—those who make voluntary contributions to the school—are invited to three events at Tanglewood this week: The Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Thursday night, Music Shed; a Seminar in Contemporary Music, Friday afternoon, July 7, Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music, Sunday morning, July 9, Chamber Music Hall.

74

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, July 7, at 8:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

SUITE NO. 3, IN D MAJOR

I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavottes I and II
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

SUITE NO. 2, IN B MINOR, FOR FLUTE AND STRINGS

Overture
Rondo
Bourrées I and II
Polonaise and Double
Badinerie

Flute Solo: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

Intermission

SUITE NO. 1, IN C MAJOR

I. Grave: Allegro
II. Courante
III. Gavottes I and II
IV. Forlane
V. Minuets I and II
VI. Bourrées I and II
VII. Passepieds I and II

SUITE NO. 4, IN D MAJOR

I. Overture
II. Bourrées I and II
III. Gavotte
IV. Minuets I and II
V. Réjouissance

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, July 8, at 8:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 3, IN G MAJOR, FOR STRINGS

I. Allegro II. Allegro

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 2, IN F MAJOR, FOR TRUMPET, FLUTE, OBOE, AND VIOLIN

I. Allegro II. Andante III. Allegro assai

Trumpet: ROGER VOISIN
Flute: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER
Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG
Violin: RICHARD BURGIN

"WEDDING" CANTATA, "WEICHET NUR, BETRÜBTE SCHATTEN" ("VANISH, WINTER SHADOWS"), FOR SOPRANO, NO. 202

Adagio: "Weichet nur, betrübte Schatten"
Recitativo: "Die Welt wird wieder neu"
Aria: "Phoebus eilt mit schnellen Pferden"
Recitativo: "D'rum sucht auch Amor"
Aria: "Wenn die Frühlingslufte streichen" (with violin solo)
Recitativo: "Und dieses ist das Glück"
Aria: "Sich üben im lieben" (with oboe solo)
Recitativo: "So sei das Band der keuschen Liebe"
Gavotte: "Sehet in Zufriedenheit"

Soloist: ADELE ADDISON

Intermission

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 6, IN B-FLAT MAJOR, FOR STRINGS

I. Allegro II. Adagio ma non tanto III. Allegro

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 5, IN D MAJOR, FOR CLAVIER, FLUTE, AND VIOLIN

I. Allegro II. Adagio affettuoso III. Allegro

Piano: LUKAS FOSS Violin: RICHARD BURGIN
Flute: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

Mr. Foss uses the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Sunday Afternoon, July 9, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

SINFONIA FROM THE EASTER ORATORIO

CONCERTO FOR CLAVIER, IN D MINOR, NO. 1

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro

Soloist: LUKAS FOSS

Intermission

MAGNIFICAT

Chorus: "Magnificat anima"
Aria: "Et exultavit" (Soprano)
Aria: "Quia respexit" (Soprano)
Chorus: "Omnes generationes"
Aria: "Quia fecit" (Baritone)
Duet: "Et misericordia" (Alto and Tenor)
Chorus: "Fecit potentiam"
Aria: "Deposuit potentes" (Tenor)
Aria: "Esurientes" (Alto)
Terzett: "Suscepit Israel" (Chorus)
Chorus: "Gloria Patri"

TANGLEWOOD CHOIR, prepared by HUGH ROSS and WILLIS BECKETT

Soprano: ADELE ADDISON Tenor: CHARLES BRESSLER
Alto: FLORENCE KOPLEFF Baritone: MAC MORGAN

Mr. Foss uses the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO RCA VICTOR RECORDS

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

AUG 1961

Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood

The 24th season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opened on July 7 with the traditional Bach weekend. Under the baton of Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra displayed its beautiful tone, balance and virtuosity. At the Friday evening concert, we heard four Bach Suites. The highlight of the program was the Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings with Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist. Her musicianship is of the highest calibre and the suite gave her ample opportunity to exhibit her sensitivity and proficiency. On Saturday evening, we heard wonderful performances of the Brandenberg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6. Also featured was the Wedding Cantata, "Weichet Nur Betrubte Schatten" for soprano, with Adele Addison, soloist. The Sunday afternoon concert opened with the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio. Lukas Foss was soloist in the Bach D minor Piano Concerto. His playing combined the qualities of lyricism and vitality, and he exploited the full tonal resources of our modern piano, rather than trying to imitate the harpsichord. The concluding work of the weekend was the "Magnificat." In addition to Miss Addison, the soloists included Florence Kopleff, alto; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Mac Morgan, baritone. The chorus was well prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Becket.—C.J.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116

JUL 16 1961

FM Program Highlights

(WCCC-FM 106.9)

Sunday, July 16

3:06 p.m. Boston Symphony Orchestra (Recorded at Tanglewood), Charles Munch, conductor; and Adele Addison, soprano soloist. All Bach concert: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F, Cantata No. 202, "Wedding Cantata," Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B flat, Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D.

74

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Friday Evening, July 7, at 8:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

SUITE NO. 3, IN D MAJOR

I. Overture
II. Air
III. Gavottes I and II
IV. Bourrée
V. Gigue

SUITE NO. 2, IN B MINOR, FOR FLUTE AND STRINGS

Overture
Rondo
Bourrées I and II
Polonaise and Double
Badinerie

Flute Solo: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

Intermission

SUITE NO. 1, IN C MAJOR

I. Grave: Allegro
II. Courante
III. Gavottes I and II
IV. Forlane
V. Minuets I and II
VI. Bourrées I and II
VII. Passepieds I and II

SUITE NO. 4, IN D MAJOR

I. Overture
II. Bourrées I and II
III. Gavotte
IV. Minuets I and II
V. Réjouissance

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Saturday Evening, July 8, at 8:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 3, IN G MAJOR, FOR STRINGS

I. Allegro II. Allegro

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 2, IN F MAJOR, FOR TRUMPET, FLUTE, OBOE, AND VIOLIN

I. Allegro II. Andante III. Allegro assai

Trumpet: ROGER VOISIN
Flute: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER
Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG
Violin: RICHARD BURGIN

"WEDDING" CANTATA, "WEICHET NUR, BETRÜBTE SCHATTEN" ("VANISH, WINTER SHADOWS"), FOR SOPRANO, NO. 202

Adagio: "Weichet nur, betrübte Schatten"
Recitativo: "Die Welt wird wieder neu"
Aria: "Phoebus eilt mit schnellen Pferden"
Recitativo: "D'rum sucht auch Amor"
Aria: "Wenn die Frühlingslufte streichen" (with violin solo)
Recitativo: "Und dieses ist das Glück"
Aria: "Sich üben im lieben" (with oboe solo)
Recitativo: "So sei das Band der keuschen Liebe"
Gavotte: "Sehet in Zufriedenheit"

Soloist: ADELE ADDISON

Intermission

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 6, IN B-FLAT MAJOR, FOR STRINGS

I. Allegro II. Adagio ma non tanto III. Allegro

*BRANDENBURG CONCERTO NO. 5, IN D MAJOR, FOR CLAVIER, FLUTE, AND VIOLIN

I. Allegro II. Adagio affettuoso III. Allegro

Piano: LUKAS FOSS Violin: RICHARD BURGIN
Flute: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

Mr. Foss uses the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — *RCA VICTOR RECORDS

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

Sunday Afternoon, July 9, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

BACH

SINFONIA FROM THE EASTER ORATORIO

CONCERTO FOR CLAVIER, IN D MINOR, NO. 1

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Allegro

Soloist: LUKAS FOSS

Intermission

MAGNIFICAT

Chorus: "Magnificat anima"
Aria: "Et exultavit" (Soprano)
Aria: "Quia respexit" (Soprano)
Chorus: "Omnes generationes"
Aria: "Quia fecit" (Baritone)
Duet: "Et misericordia" (Alto and Tenor)
Chorus: "Fecit potentiam"
Aria: "Deposuit potentes" (Tenor)
Aria: "Esurientes" (Alto)
Terzett: "Suscepit Israel" (Chorus)
Chorus: "Gloria Patri"

TANGLEWOOD CHOIR, prepared by HUGH ROSS and WILLIS BECKETT

Soprano: ADELE ADDISON Tenor: CHARLES BRESSLER
Alto: FLORENCE KOPLEFF Baritone: MAC MORGAN

Mr. Foss uses the Baldwin Piano

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

MUSICAL LEADER
CHICAGO, ILL.
MONTHLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.
AUG 1961

Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood

The 24th season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opened on July 7 with the traditional Bach weekend. Under the baton of Charles Munch, the Boston Symphony Orchestra displayed its beautiful tone, balance and virtuosity. At the Friday evening concert, we heard four Bach Suites. The highlight of the program was the Suite No. 2 in B minor for Flute and Strings with Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist. Her musicianship is of the highest calibre and the suite gave her ample opportunity to exhibit her sensitivity and proficiency. On Saturday evening, we heard wonderful performances of the Brandenberg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6. Also featured was the Wedding Cantata, "Weichet Nur Betrubte Schatten" for soprano, with Adele Addison, soloist. The Sunday afternoon concert opened with the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio. Lukas Foss was soloist in the Bach D minor Piano Concerto. His playing combined the qualities of lyricism and vitality, and he exploited the full tonal resources of our modern piano, rather than trying to imitate the harpsichord. The concluding work of the weekend was the "Magnificat." In addition to Miss Addison, the soloists included Florence Kopleff, alto; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Mac Morgan, baritone. The chorus was well prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Becket.—C.J.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Sunday Courant
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 153,116
JUL 16 1961

FM Program Highlights

(WCCC-FM 106.9)

Sunday, July 16

3:06 p.m. Boston Symphony Orchestra (Recorded at Tanglewood), Charles Munch, conductor; and Adele Addison, soprano soloist. All Bach concert: Brandenburg Concerto No. 3 in G, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in F, Cantata No. 202, "Wedding Cantata," Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 in B flat, Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D.

Bach at Tanglewood: Rich Tapestry of Sound

By LISA TATE

Listening [illegible] music of Bach to hear a tapestry of sound [illegible] rich as [illegible] colors [illegible] texture were [illegible] the Bos[illegible] Orchestra under [illegible] Charles Munch [illegible] of [illegible] 1717 [illegible] from [illegible]

Overture Followed by Dance

[illegible] are [illegible] all cases in [illegible] by an [illegible] use of stately [illegible] and proportion. Munch's [illegible] direction [illegible] audience [illegible] of these prolonged chords, [illegible] ning them run [illegible] dynamic [illegible] was a fine example of [illegible] music to meet its own demands.

Having thus set the background for the sprightly and gracious dances that follow, the orchestra fell easily into quick and in many cases tricky changes of tempo. The dance forms include rondos, bourees, gavottes, minucts, polonaises and passepieds, each form distinguished by its own rhythmic intricacies. Is it possible that these dances set people to moving in another more sedate age much as the popular music of today can set us moving in less inhibited fashion?

Suite No. 2 Appealing

All of the suites treat the ear to a rich complex of sound, but the unavoidable appeal of the Suite No. 2 for flute and strings as played by Doriot Anthony Dwyer (the first flutist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) made it the highpoint of the evening. This is one of the more familiar of Bach's suites, but the crisp way in which it was played made it a fresh and memorable creation. The purity and precision of her tone, not to mention that of the strings, made each thread of the musical tapestry come alive in its own shape and direction. The last dance, "Badinerie," went at a breathless lilt, with not a note lost by slurring nor even the hint of a squeak in the high notes to which the flute had occasionally to jump in its fast-moving line. Mrs. Dwyer surely deserved her half - dozen curtain calls.

Robert Gomberg, though unfeatured as a soloist, did an equally good job with the oboe passages written into the Suite No. 1. Ably abetted by the second oboist as well as the two bassoon players, these wind instruments wove their intricate passages in to a string background bolstered in depth and fullness by the addition of three double bass. Through it all, the playing of the continuo line by the harpsichord lent an appealing edge to the essentially smooth texture of the music. This flowing smoothness was evident in the startlingly romantic strains of a dance known as "Forland" where the first violins carried the melody over a swirling accompaniment played by violas and cellos.

Brings Down the House

The fourth Suite opened with pillars of sound provided by three trumpets whose piercing yet not shrill notes seemed to rise vertically from the very back of the [illegible] stage. Moving through the rhythmic changes of the various dance patterns, this suite ends with a section called "Rejouissance" (Rejoicing) which exactly expressed this feeling through the excitement of its pace, syncopated at moments, and its full dynamic color whipped to a stunning climax by the sweeping circular conducting of Munch — exciting enough to bring down the house, which it did.

In this case, the house is a mammoth shed that will hold up to 5,000 people, with overflow on the surrounding lawns. It was amazing that this chamber concert did not seem to lack intimacy, even in such an impersonal setting. This may have been due to the reduced size of the orchestra for which the music originally was scored; or it may simply have been my good fortune to be close enough to see some of Munch's facial expressions as well as to watch the clarity of his beat along with the complexity of his wrist movements within each beat.

But the best thing about the concert was Bach. The ear responds to the bold structure of his composition; it moves with the line as the rhythm moves the notes through audible space 'time'; and the ear strains or is stretched by the details of dissonance that give tension to a music that is seemingly complete yet never static until its last triumphant resolution of notes.

The hour-and-a-half drive to Tanglewood is well worth music of such reward — and it is probably the closest that a professional symphony orchestra gets to Bennington.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 17 1961

Crowds Held Down By Poor Weather At Shed Concerts

TANGLEWOOD — Rain over the weekend is believed responsible for the drop in attendance at the final concerts by the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the Bach-Mozart series, which drew a total of 31,354 persons for the first two weeks of the seven-week season.

Saturday night, despite heavy rains, 5,008 persons attended the program in the Music Shed, compared to a crowd of 7,094 on the same night the year before. Friday night's concert drew 3,491, and 2,668 turned out for the open rehearsal Saturday borning. Yesterday afternoon, as rain threatened just before concert time, a crowd of 5,000 showed up at the concert.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
JUL 22 1961

Music:

Boston Symphony At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — Delightful and well-played as were the first two weekends of Bach and Mozart at the Berkshire Music Festival, last night's concert had a tremendous uplift when Charles Munch conducted the full Boston Symphony Orchestra of 104 players.

There was an audience of 5,799 for this, the first of the festival's "big" concerts in the music shed.

Last night's program: Beethoven's "Coriolan" overture (after Collin), opus 62; Brahms' Symphony No. 1 in C minor, opus 68; Poulenc's "Gloria" for soprano solo (Adele Addison), chorus and orchestra. The festival chorus of 150 Berkshire Music Center students had been prepared by Alfred Nash Patterson.

Marvelous Hues

The "Coriolan" Overture was unfolded as compact, systematically-linked events in dramatic sequence. Its "Raison-D'Etre" was clearly the conflict between good and evil. In its short duration, all sections of the orchestra shared alike the responsibility not only of carrying out Beethoven's narrative but the marvelous tonal hues that express it.

Phrasing and punctuations were meted out with marvelous efficiency from the heavy, brusk chords with which the overture begins. Strings were alive with vibration and warmth. The "requiem" with which it ends was exquisitely intoned by the cellos.

On Epic Lines

Last night's was one of the most magnificent performances of Brahms' first symphony within our memory. Munch conceived it along epic lines, but the slow movement was possessed of poetry.

The dictatorial opening of the first movement served notice that this was to be a super-effort performance.

After the last two weeks of handling fragile musical china, orchestra and conductor seemed to be embarked at last on the big task.

Technique and mechanics are hardly to be ignored, but the powerful grip of last night's Brahms transcended these. Even the highly perfected Boston Symphony can't guarantee greatness.

It rested primarily with four movements of blazingly strong character that Munch united into a compelling experience.

Movements Applauded

Applause between movements of a symphony are taboo at tanglewood. But the audience couldn't resist expressing itself after the first two movements.

Munch succeeded last night in adjusting to Brahms' sometimes infernal practice of repressing climax over and over again. The finale of the first symphony can be irritating. This finale was memorable for a number of reasons —the perfectly synchronized pizzicatos in strings, the beautiful flute solo, fine intonation of the brass in chorale sections and clearly penetrating trombones.

The Poulenc "Gloria" won the New York Music Critics' award, and was given its world premiere by Munch and the Boston Symphony last winter. Within its 28 minutes, it encompasses dramatized religious fervor with a style that is fairly close to the American jazz idiom.

Spirit of Jubilation

A true spirit of jubilation was most forcibly achieved in the opening "Gloria" by the chorus, which extolled rather than expounded—sometimes the Tanglewood chorus failing.

The "Laudamus Te," also for chorus, was an excellent demonstration of intricate rhythm to snapped-off words.

Miss Addison sang beautifully, capturing the divergent qualities of "Domine Deus" and the more vivacious "Domine fili unigenite."

Last night"s concert was in honor of Miss Gertrude Robinson Smith of Stockbridge, founder of the Berkshire Symphonic Festival in 1934. At intermission, she was honored publicly on the stage by Henry C. Cabot, president of the board of trustees, who presented her a specially-made recording of the Poulenc "Gloria."

Tonight, Isaac Stern is soloist in the Beethoven violin concerto. Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony in Robert Schumann's "Genovena" Overture and William Schuman's Symphony No. 7.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 6 1961

First Tanglewood Concert Is Heard By 1,243 Persons

Unseasonably cold weather failed to keep a crowd of 1,243 persons from the first of a series of seven chamber music concerts as the Tanglewood season opened last night.

The Curtis String Quartet, assisted by two members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra played Brahms' String Sextet in B-Flat Major, Op. 18; and Schubert's String Quintet in C Major, Op. 163.

The next six concerts of chamber music will be given by the Budapest Quartet, July 12; the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, July 19; the New York Pro Musica, July 26; the Boston Fine Arts String Quartet, Aug. 2; the Kroll String Quartet, Aug. 9; and pianist Claudio Arrau in an all-Liszt program, Aug. 16.

This Friday and Saturday night at 8:30 o'clock and Sunday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock the Boston Symphony Orchestra will give three concerts of Bach, conducted by Charles Munch.

BERKSHIRE CONCERTS SHOW SOCIAL CHANGES

By JULES WOLFFERS

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—For generations observers of the American scene have stated that our experiments in mass education and mass culture would result in a general leveling down of appreciation, achievement and results. But exactly the opposite has been the case at the early season concerts of the Berkshire Festival. Far from a leveling down there has been a leveling up as is proved conclusively by attendance figures this weekend at Tanglewood.

Intimate Concerts

In a way I regret what has happened to what used to be called the Bach-Mozart concerts which preceded the Festival proper of the full Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nothing more delightful took place, winter or summer, than the intimate chamber orchestra concerts in the small Theater-Concert Hall with conductor, players and audience in the closest rapport. In a sense these were aristocratic events aiming at the highest level and limited to what was thought to be a small, select audience.

But more and more people came to these concerts as the years rolled on. First the back of the hall was opened for outside listeners, then the large Music Shed was used when it rained. Later the Shed was used for some of the concerts and now all the chamber orchestra events are in the Shed with the first two weekends being included in the Festival proper rather than forming a separate pre-season series.

Perhaps something has been lost but much more has been gained. The cultural evolution can be gauged in figures with, in round numbers, 3000 persons present Friday, 6000 Saturday night and 4500 Sunday afternoon as opposed to 1200 a concert in former years. Thus what used to be considered esoteric items for the select few is now standard fare for the many.

As for the music this weekend, it was glorious with Charles Munch in top form, the players alert and responsive and the soloists outstanding. After the Friday night concert of the Bach Suites for Orchestra, the all-Bach lists continued Saturday night with energetic and vital readings of the Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3, 2, 5 and 6, in that order. Adele Addison sang gloriously in the "Wedding" Cantata after Roger Voisin had distinguished himself in the difficult trumpet part of the Concerto No. 2.

The only disconcerting factor was the placement of the solo group in the Concerto No. 5. Richard Burgin and Doriot Anthony Dwyer sat to one side and back of Lukas Foss and his large concert grand piano. Although Mr. Foss played the important piano solo and soloistic parts impeccably, his accompaniments overpowered both Mr. Burgin's violin and Mrs. Dwyer's flute in their solo sections.

Nothing Lacking

But nothing was lacking the following afternoon when Mr. Foss performed the D minor Concerto with all imaginable zest, taste, refinement, skill and beauty. Mr. Munch's accompaniment was superbly disposed throughout the three movements.

The conductor opened this program with an energetic stirring approach to the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio. The Magnificat, with the Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, and with soloists Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Mac Morgan, baritone, closed the program in inspired style to leave the Sunday hearers pleased beyond measure.

The concerts will be devoted to Mozart next weekend. A very special event comes on Thursday when Danny Kaye will be guest conductor for a Pension Fund concert. No tickets will be sold for general admission in order that all may savor the particular flavor of the event by being seated in the shed. Except for the lower price seats, tickets are still available at this writing.

Tanglewood Attendance Breaks Record

By JOHN F. KYES
Gazette Music Critic

LENOX — Programming more adroit than it looked on paper set up new records for the opening weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood. Three concerts composed entirely of the music of Bach played by 45 men from the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch, drew audiences totalling 13,459, as against last year's record-breaking 11,949.

The favorite concert was Saturday's with four of the Brandenburg Concertos, featuring Lukas Fass, piano; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Richard Burgin, violin; Roger Voisin, trumpet; and Ralph Gomberg, oboe. Adele Addison, soprano, scored in the Bach "Wedding" Cantata, No. 202. This concert drew the phenomenal audience of 6,019, a new high for Bach weekends.

Friday's concert presented the four Bach suites, with Mrs. Dwyer as the flute soloist in the second.

Sunday's short but pleasing concert touched other facets of Bach's art. It afforded the season's first opportunity to hear the Tanglewood Choir of 70 voices, trained by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, in the "Magnificat." The soloists for this work were Miss Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan.

Glowing Account

Earlier in this program, Foss gave a glowing account of the Concerto No.1 for Clavier in D minor, with string orchestra.

The full ensemble provided a brief taste of purely orchestral fare in the opening "Sinfonia" from "The Easter Oratorio." This bit could in my opinion have yielded place to one of the suites or Brandenburg concertos, for which there was ample time. The first phrases of the "Sinfonia" showed that the same defects mentioned in other years are still present; a noisy prominence of timpani, wrongly gauged against the lively shell, and once again, an unpleasant amount and kind of tone from the trumpet section. This piece featured virtuosic handling of elaborate passages by the three trumpets, for which they deserved and received an ovation.

Foss had almost unceasing tasks in the two Allegros of the concerto, tackled with boundless energy and a nice sense of tone and phrasing. The Adagio section was a revelation of solemn beauty, and at its end, the audience audibly sighed and achieved release from intense concentration on the work of the soloist.

"Magnificat" Chorus

The chorus in the "Magnificat" was well trained, and the orchestral support was excellent. Sometimes, the balance was not perfect, with singing on too light a vowel-tone, though deft and crisp. "Omnes generationes" was sonbrous and well-learned, and the Terzett for 40 women's voices delightfully soft and appealing. Portions of the final chorus were extremely impressive.

Bach did not treat all the soloists with equal kindness. Morgan had a routine assignment, sung faithfully and resonantly with less than adequate volume. Bressler's aria was a rather florid tenor affair, but his duet with Miss Kopleff was thrilling in its complete relaxation, perfect balance and blending.

Miss Kopleff was greatly admired in two arias: Miss Addison's aria gave friendly prominence to the lovely tones of the oboe d'amore, and the voice and instrument blended in sweetness which would melt the coldest heart.

The coming weekend will offer the music of Mozart.

76

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 10 1961

Munch Conducts Bach Sinfonia

By GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to the Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — The first weekend at Tanglewood, which traditionally honors the musical genius of Bach, served him well in the performance of two of his supreme masterworks Sunday afternoon.

Once again Charles Munch, looking spry and agile, returned to the podium to preside over the musical festivities. Since this is probably his next to last season in the Berkshires, he had many well-wishers in the enthusiastic audience of some 4,500 persons.

It is always an invigorating pleasure to hear the Boston brass in Bach. The high trumpet work in the Sinfonia from the "Easter" Cantata, which opened the program, was handled with the skilled aplomb that gives the whole work such a joyous quality.

* * *

HOWEVER, it was in Bach's D minor Clavier Concerto that the concert reached its most exalted moments. Lukas Foss was the soloist and it is no exaggeration to say that he has never played with such complete absorption in the music.

Not since the heyday of Edwin Fischer have I heard anything to rival this performance. Mr. Foss is probably more of technician than Fischer ever was but Sunday he submerged himself in the archetectonic design to the greater glory of Bach.

The balance between orchestra and soloist was invaribly well-adjusted and the clarity and fluidity of Mr. Foss' playing was something to marvel over. This was Bach to cherish for a long time.

* * *

THE MAGNIFICAT, one of the most compact and inspired works of the Leipzig Cantor, was the only choral work on the program, filling the second half.

Orchestrally, it was beautifully handled by the Bostonians (with the exception of the slightly out-of-tune oboe obbligato for soprano solo) and proved that Mr. Munch can turn out a Bach performance to rival those by his noted predecessor at Tanglewood.

As far as the soloists were concerned, it was indisputably Florence Kopleff who carried off the honors. Her effortless tone production and smooth style were a very distinct enhancement to the performance.

* * *

ADELE ADDISON had very little opportunity in a single solo to show off her vocal attributes. Charles Bressler, who is best known for his work with the New York Pro Musica, proved to have a voice of small dimension and was nearly submerged by the orchestra. Mac Morgan has, on other occasions, focused his voice with greater success, although both he and Mr. Bressler sang with commendable style.

Yet it would be unfair to say that these shortcomings overshadowed the general excellence of the performance. The vigor and forthright playing of the orchestra carried everything before it and made us grateful for the opportunity of hearing this exultant creation once again.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 10 1961

TANGLEWOOD'S OPENER DRAWS 1243 LISTENERS

Curtis Group Performs Brahms and Schubert; Weather Cold

By WILLARD M. CLARK

TANGLEWOOD — The first in a series of concerts of the Berkshire Music Festival was given Wednesday night in the theater concert hall by the justly famed Curtis String Quartet, assisted by two first desk members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Joseph De Pasquale, violist, and Samuel Mayes, cellist.

Regulars Return

It's always good to get back to Tanglewood, particularly when proceedings open with a concert of chamber music. This series brings the same people back year after year and everyone seems to know everyone else.

The weather was perfect, clear skies and cold enough to bring out everything from rabbit to mink. In fact, it was really cold, but 1243 persons were on hand to applaud enthusiastically the performances of Brahms' String Sextet in B-Flat Major, Op. 18; and Schubert's String Quintet in C Major, Op. 163.

Not too often heard, both works are mileposts in the chamber music literature. The sextet was written in 1860, the quintet in 1828, but it was not performed publicly until 1850. Schubert never heard it performed.

Feeling Praised

The sextet is a thing of wondrous beauty. The great romanticist is at his best. True, it derives from many styles, but it has depth of feeling, richness of melody and beauty of sound. Brahms had said, "If we cannot write as beautifully as Mozart, let us at least write as purely."

This he did and it was played with a grace, rhythm and understanding which we think the master would have approved.

Particularly notable was the second movement with its variations, so deceivingly simple that one became immersed in their individuality rather than the technical facility of the performers. The final rondo had the lightest touch of the four movements. It was a forerunner of the waltzes.

Melody Rampant

Sheer melody was rampant in Schubert's quintet. It was impossible for him to write less than pure melody. Written two months before his death, the work has a sort of tragic grandeur and a power which comes in part for it fuller instrumentation.

The Curtis String Quartet is a fine, seasoned group and has been together long enough to achieve a mutuality of understanding. The blend of tone is exquisite and the give and take between the musicians is what comes from long experince and close association.

The entire performance seems to us one of the best we have heard in many a chamber series.

First of Seven

As noted, this was the first of a series of seven chamber music concerts. The Budapest Quartet is to be heard July 12; the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, July 19; the New York Pro Musica, July 26.

Aug. 2 brings the Boston Fine Arts String Quartet; Aug. 9, the Kroll String Quartet and Aug. 16, pianist Claudio Arrau in an all-Liszt program. It might be added that this list is one of the best the festival has offered in some years.

Tanglewood has seldom looked so beautiful. Every bush looks as though it had been freshly scrubbed and the acres of lawns are immaculate. Let's hope it looks as well at the end of seven weeks. It may at that. Already we have seen hundreds of people whom we remember from past years and others whose names have not escaped us. It is a pleasant crowd, all here for one purpose, to hear great music, beautifully performed.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 6 1961

ingfield Singer at Tanglewood

Miss Adele Addison, soprano, and Mac Morgan, baritone, pose Sunday afternoon prior to participating in the concert program at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood. The nationally known Miss Addison is a former Springfield resident. She was graduated from Classical High School and received her first musical scholarship from Springfield Junior League.

TANGLEWOOD CHORUS BOWS IN BACH WORK

Magnificat Is Hailed as First Week Concluded At Festival

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The final concert of the week end devoted to the music of Johann Sebastian Bach drew an audience estimated at 4448, but no one believes the estimate correct, for it appeared that fully 6000 persons were on hand. Perfect weather, a fine program and an admirable performance by chorus and soloists combined to make this closing program a memorable one.

Splendid Works

Two splendid works were featured, along with the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio. The two works most favored by the audience were the Concerto for Clavier in D Minor No. 1 with Lukas Foss as soloist, and the marvelous Magnificat, which afforded a first hearing of the Tanglewood choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, and soloists, Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan, veterans all.

The opening work was the Sinfonia the Easter Cantata. From w we sat the orchestral tone was n sh and the reading routine. The performance by Lukas Foss of the Clavier Concerto was something else again. Mr. Foss is greatly admired by Tanglewood audiences and he reaped a great personal triumph with what amounted to a standing ovation.

The concerto is not a vehicle for display. It has within it a warmth, passion and lyricism which in themselves have appeal. When technical dexterity was needed, Foss had it, but it was in the lovely song of the adagio movement that he revealed his feeling for this music and some lovely lyricism.

The cheers and applause which followed the performance of the Magnificat equalled that heard after previous performances of Beethoven's Ninth Symphony, which for several seasons closed the festival.

There was reason for the applause Sunday afternoon. The Tanglewood chorus promises to be one of the best in several seasons. It is well balanced and fairly evenly divided as to men and women. The students sang with fine vitality, and in the chorus for women alone achieved a delicacy of tone warmth of feeling that left the listener a little breathless.

As noted, Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Mac Morgan and Charles Bressler are veterans in the performance of the music of Bach. Miss Kopleff was very fine in her arias and the duet with Mr. Bressler. The voice pours forth effortlessly. Mr. Bressler's voice is on the light side, but he managed to communicate the drama of his aria.

Miss Addison was her usual capable self, singing with tonal warmth and communication, even though at times the music did not seem to lie well in the voice. Mr. Morgan's voice sounded dry, but his musicianship was firm.

After all, the chorus was the glory of this performance. As the weeks pass, it will improve and we believe some splendid choral singing is in store.

Mr. Munch had all his resources under control and the result was a finely proportioned, wonderfully sincere performance of this great affirmation of faith and devotion.

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 9 1961

BACH CONCERTI WIN APPLAUSE IN BERKSHIRES

Adele Addison Is Among Soloists Heard by 6019 At Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — There was so much to admire during this second program at Tanglewood Saturday night, devoted to the music of Johann Sebastian Bach, that it is a bit difficult to know where to start.

Stunning Program

First of all, Charles Munch had devised a stunning program consisting of the Brandenbug Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5, 6 and the Second Wedding Cantata, this sung by soprano Adele Addison. Soloists in the concerti included Roger Voisin, trumpet; Diriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Ralph Gomez, oboist, and Richard Burgin, violinist. In Concerto No. 5 in D Major, Lukas Foss, pianist, shared honors with Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Burgin. Last, but far from least were the virtuosi of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

With such splendid resources to work with and such superb music to make known, it is not surprising that Conductor Charles Munch was inspired. Ideas about these concerti differ. Some conductors like them taut while others offer varying degrees of freedom of rhythms. Mr. Munch does not belong to the taut school of thinking and he does allow considerable rhythmic latitude. However, the end results were often impressive and, at times, astounding.

Adele Addison is a prime favorite at these Tanglewood concerts. It may be that she has sung more concerts during these Berkshire Festival seasons than any other soprano. Be that as it may, judging from the applause, Miss Addison's popularity is still high. The purity of her voice, her impeccable enunciation and the intelligence which marks her every performance, combine to make her singing of music by Bach a notable listening experience. A virtuoso technician, she handled the ornamentations with ease.

Strings Have Sheen

The opening concerto was . . . in G Major for strings. There was a delicious silken sheen to the strings with just enough bite to build up excitement. Concerto No. 2 in F Major for trumpet, flute, oboe and violin is considerably more complicated. All the resources of instruments and ensemble are thoroughly explored. Thanks to the gifted soloists, the lovely melodies sounded as fresh as the first time we heard them so many years ago.

There appears to be a good rapport between the musicians and the Boston Orchestra and the result was a smooth flowing, well integrated performance. Concerto No. 6 in B Flat Major for strings is an extended work of three movements and again the very special attributes of the symphony strings were in evidence.

Few pianists we have heard have the grasp of ensemble playing and the feeling for the music of Bach which Lukas Foss has at his command. We have heard him in the Concerto No. 5 in D Major for piano, flute and violin several times. He is a fine pianist with a technique supple enough to solve every problem. He understands balance and worked beautifully with the orchestra, Mrs. Dwyer and Mr. Burgin. To many this is the favorite Brandenburg Concerto and as it was played Saturday night we see the reason why.

Unbeatable Combination

Take dele Addison plus the melodies which Bach lavished on the Second Wedding Cantata and you have an unbeatable combination. At least, that seemed to be the opinion of the 6019 people who listened to its performance. Miss Addision has great personal charm and beauty, plus a voice equal to any demands imposed upon it. She sang the recitatives and arias with full understanding of their import and expected effect upon the audience. Mr. Munch one of the skilled conductors when it comes to accompaniment, was at his best.

This afternoon brings the Bach music week end to a close. His "Magificat" will be the featured work on the program which will also include the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio and the Concerto for Clavier in D Minor, which Lukas Foss will play.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122

JUL 16 1961

Second Thoughts on Music

Performances of Bach's Work of High Quality

Traditional Tanglewood Week-End Series Is Admirably Done for Large Crowds

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—The music of Johann Sebastian Bach was well served by the participants in the week-end series of concerts devoted to his music. It is a tradition of the Berkshire Festival here at Tanglewood that the first two week ends of the festival be devoted to the music of Bach and Mozart, three concerts each. The growing popularity of these concerts is noted in the growth of the audiences. The Bach week end drew 15,384 persons. The 1960 Bach series drew 14,283 persons. The weather has been ideal and the Music Shed accommodates the growing audiences easily.

Fine Talent

An array of fine talent was on hand to communicate the music. There was, of course, the usual complement of Boston Symphony Orchestra musicians with Charles Munch directing all concerts. Then there was soprano Adele Addison, contralto Florence Kopleff; tenor Charles Bressler and baritone Mac Morgan, along with the Tanglewood Choir to do justice to the "Magnificat," and finally the fine soloists of the Boston Symphony to give their virtuosity to the Brandenberg concerti Nos. 3-4-5-6, plus pianist Lukas Foss, who was also soloist in the Clavier Concerto in D Minor.

The opening concert was devoted to the four orchestral suites. By clever arrangements, Dr. Munch provided the needed variety to sustain interest. The Symphony strings were warm and mellow in sound in the opening "Suite No. 3 in D Major." In "Suite No. 2 in B Minor, for flute and strings," Doriot Anthony Dwyer again revealed her virtuosity, reaping the prolonged applause which always follows her performances. Suites No. 1 in C Major and No. 4 in D Major provided splendid opportunity for the orchestra to reveal its luscious sound and firm alignment.

Adele Addison has probably sung more times at the Berkshire Festival than any other soprano. She is a prime favorite, her voice and personality just the kind to charm the most critical of audiences. Also Miss Addison is always prepared. She sang the Wedding Cantata, "Vanish Winter Shadows," with the charm and understanding which we have learned to expect. Because she is one of the best vocal technicians in the business, Miss Addison could meet every vocal problem head-on.

Incidentally, this second concert which was devoted primarily to four of the Brandenburg concerti drew the largest audience of the three with 6019 persons on hand. Mr. Munch was relaxed throughout and provided admirable ensembles. There was some astonishing playing in the second concerto in F Major for trumpet, flute, oboe and violin. When Roger Voisin at his best he has few equals and the same may be said of violinist Richard Burgin; Ralph Gomberg, oboe and Doriot Dwyer.

Perhaps the favorite of the evening was "Concerto No. in D Major for clavier, flute and violin." Lukas Foss was at his very best, playing with fire and real virtuosity, yet always remaining in the ensemble.

At the final concert Mr. Foss was heard in a compelling performance of the "Concerto for Clavier in D Minor." Again he revealed his profound understanding and affection for the music. The great cadenza came off in brilliant fashion.

This concert also contained the "Magnificat" which provided first appearance of the Tanglewood Choir prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett. It is a very fine chorus, well balanced and sweet sounding. The lovely chorus for women was particularly well sung and the larger choruses had vitality and true affirmation. Of the soloists, contralto Florence Kopleff with her big, rich voice and effortless production seemed to make the strongest impression.

Although Charles Bressler's tenor voice was a bit light, he managed to communicate the drama in his aria.

Miss Addison sang her only solo with beautiful tone and the sincerity with which she always invests such music. Mac Morgan managed a routine presentation of his aria. The performance belonged to the chorus. The concert had begun with the Sinfonia from the "Easter Ororio." It was not a particularly memorable performance. Again Charles Munch had everything under control. This performance was undoubtedly the high point of the series and will remain in one's memory a long time.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUL 10 1961

NEW YORK, N.Y.
JOURNAL-AMERICAN
D. 618,802 S. 812,836

JUL 10 1961

77

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL

Bach Weekend Joyful

By MILES KASTENDIECK

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox, Mass., July 10.—Just as the Bach Weekend traditionally opens the Berkshire Festival, so the attendance habitually increases. A crowd of 15,384 found much to their liking as the Boston Symphony's first three concerts followed one another, blessed by perfect weather. People's enthusiasm was infectious.

What graced the concert yesterday afternoon was a radiant performance of Bach's "Magnificat," a work that fully expresses his deep religious feeling. Charles Munch attuned himself readily to its beauty, for he approaches this kind of music in reverent mood. A feeling of exultation surged through the audience frequently as the work unfolded.

The purity of Adele Addison's single Aria, the warmth of Florence Kopleff's alto voice, the fervor of tenor Charles Bressler's singing, and the baritone authority of Mac Morgan's performance only underlined the joyousnesse of the Tanglewood Choir's singing. As usual this group, trained by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, sets a high standard at the start of the season.

Lukas Foss Plays

Otherwise, Mr. Munch's Bach followed a familiarly crisp course. Both the sinfonia from the Easter Orfatorio and the D Minor Concerto reflected the rhythmic drive he finds in Bach's music. Perhaps Lukas Foss take his cue from this. His piano playing was hard driven tonally; it was almost a virtuoso performance. Nevertheless he shaped the work effectively. Thanks to Mr. Munch the adacio of the Concerto achieved a spiritual quality nobly expressive.

Thus was homage paid to Bach by performers and audience alike. Those attending the Saturday Night concert were transported by a series of fervent performances. Of the Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3, 2, 6, and 5. This program and the one devoted to the four orchestral suites on Friday night have become almost a Tanglewood ritual. They vary little in format; the audience is devout, the atmosphere charged with reverence.

Less Intimacy

Aside from being a kind of rubber-stamp event, the Bach Weekend obviously serves its purpose. Whether it serves the festival, now that all the concerts take place in the music shed, is open to argument. The special chamber music canopy used on the stage does enhance the sound, but does not give the sense of intimacy peculiar to these concerts for many years.

The fact remains that 6,019 attended the Saturday Night event and that over 1,000 more came for this weekend than did a year ago.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUL 10 1961

Music, Sunbath Season Again at Tanglewood

This general scene shows a portion of the audience that relaxed on the lawn outside the Music Shed while listening to the first Sunday afternoon concert of the current Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood, in Lenox. Lawn chairs and blankets were used by the audience on the grass in contrast to the usual theater seating arrangement for spectators inside the shed. The box lunch cartons are evidence of picnics held on the grounds prior to the concert.

Point of View Quite Varied For Tanglewood Listeners

LENOX — [illegible]d, the famous home th[illegible]rkshire Music Festival, was allve with sound Sunday afternoon.

Words and Music

There was music by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, voices of the Tanglewood Choir and soloists and the 4448 spectators who gathered to hear a program of Bach at the first Sunday afternoon concert of the new season.

Spectators began filing into the spacious tree-lined grounds about noon, 2½ hours before the music program began. Many carried blankets, lawn chairs and picnic lunches.

All age groups were represented, from elderly persons to children in strollers. Dress was as varied as the individual personalities, drawn together by a common enthusiasm for "good music."

Persons waiting in line to purchase box lunches and others eating in a pavilion or under the trees seemed to lower their voices as in an outdoor chapel.

A half-hour before the concert began in the Music Shed, the lawn outside was rapidly being covered by blankets and lawn chairs of persons who paid the lowest [illegible] of the Be[illegible] higher-priced seat[illegible]ed at that time were [illegible]y filled.

Tune and Talk

Outside at the rear of the shed musicians dressed in white suits, dark ties and white shoes were tuning their instruments and talking.

At the ringing of a bell, signaling the immediate start of the concert, the spectators settled down with an air of expectancy. After greeting Conductor Charles Munch with applause, all was quiet.

During the concert, the audience within the shed presented a sharp contrast in appearance with those on the lawn.

Inside, persons gave the stage their whole attenion. Outside and unable to view the stage the audience took a variety of positions.

Sun and Shade

Some persons lay on their blankets, others sat. Some read, and others finished their picnic lunches. Most persons on the lawn took advantage of the bright sunshine but some reclined in the cool shade under the trees.

But inside or outside the shed, all were listening.

78

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 6 1961

Music Review

Tanglewood Opening Is Disappointing

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE TANGLEWOOD season each year starts traditionally with the first of the Wednesday evening chamber music concerts. Last night the honor fell to the Curtis String Quartet which enlisted two additional artists from the Boston Symphony Orchestra first chairs to participate with them in a program of Brahms and Schubert.

The members of the quartet are Jascha Brodsky and Mehli Mehta, violins, Max Aronoff, viola, and Orlando Cole, cello. In the Schubert quintet opus 163 they called upon Samuel Mayes to play the second cello, and in the Brahms B flat sextet, opus 18, they called upon Mayes and violist Joseph de Pasquale.

* * *

TO ANYONE not of a creative bent can come the query: what prompts or influences a painter, once he has an inspiration, to use water color or oil, or to do a miniature or a mural to express his idea? Just so with music. What prompts a composer to put his melody or his harmony in the formula of an orchestra, or for a solo voice, or for a chamber music ensemble? The answer, pretty obviously, is that the shape and the color are part of the inspiration.

Brahms and Schubert certainly felt that the mood they intended to put into these compositions would be best expressed with the dark colors a doubling of the violas and cellos in a string quartet would make possible in one case, and with the extra cello in the other. There are few blendings of sonorities which equal, and we would assert that none excel, the instrumental disposition of these monumental works.

* * *

THE QUALITY of resonance the added instruments give the lower registers of the classic quartet is lusciously agreeable, and it was especially true with the particular performers of last night's program.

The literature for ensembles of these particular combinations is very limited. Of two cello quintets there is the popular but contrived one of Boccherini and the essayed but abandoned one of Brahms. The choice of string sextets is scarcely more plentiful, but last night's choices are favorites of a tremendous portion of chamber music lovers.

It was a pity, therefore, that a truer reading of both works was not presented, especially to an audience which included so many students of the Berkshire Music Center who expected certainly to hear a program played with authority. The performance had not proceeded three bars in both compositions when it became patent that the musicians were not penetrating the composers' intentions or did not intimately know the music, and obviously did not love it.

BRAHMS WROTE a song for his initial theme. No vocalist on earth would breathe for each bar for such a simple long line, yet the cello gave himself fresh vigor, as did the violin eight bars later, each time a bar line appeared. The opening of the Schubert was as egregiously in error. The wonderful, sustained crescendo by no means ends with a vehement accent on the third bar. These inaccuracies and similar evidences of playing the instruments instead of the music abounded the whole evening.

There was so much poignant music in the program. There were a multitude of memorable musical instances wherein the human appeal was expressed in indescribable loveliness and pathos, but the evening was a long series of near-misses. A happy tempo was never reached in any of the Brahms movements. While we dare not set ourselves up as an arbiter of taste, since de gustibus non disputandum, we must register protests against the whole evening. Tanglewood, its students, its public, deserve a better preparation of a program and a more thorough acquaintance with the potential of the music chosen.

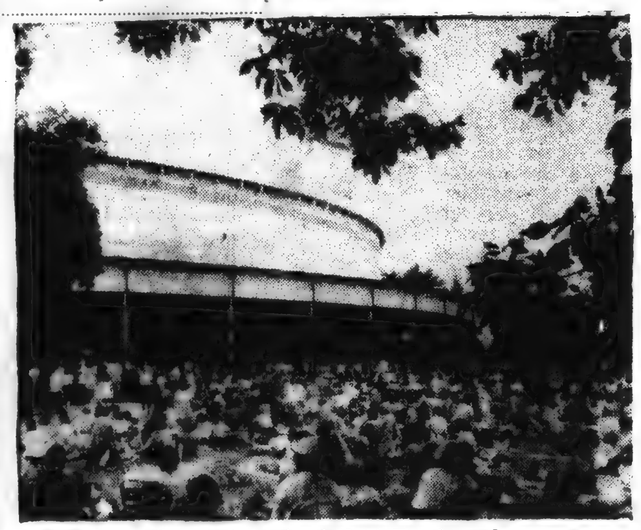
NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 11 1961

In Brief . . .

With the legal deadline for obtaining dog licenses now more than three months past, it's hard to see much basis for grumbling about the Police Department's current crackdown . . . While last month's drop in local welfare costs makes good reading, there are so many irrelevant factors involved that it isn't much of a clue one way or another to the state of the Pittsfield economy . . . For businessmen in the Lebanon Valley, the opening of the Route 22 interchange on the thruway this week will represent the happy conclusion of a long uphill campaign . . .

That rather spectacular increase over last year in first-weekend attendance at the Tanglewood Shed may be attributable in part to lovely weather, but it also reflects a steady growth in the popularity of the Bach-Mozart series. Not a little of the growth is due to the patronage of Berkshire residents who prefer not to fight the crowds later in the season . . . Yesterday's story on the forthcoming retirement of Walter E. Powell from GE recalled for many old-timers the long-gone era when there was noontime dancing at the plant for those who would rather dance than eat.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
ATTLEBORO, Mass.
Circ. 10,542
JUL 8 1961



The great music shed at Tanglewood

Berkshire Festival Opens

The 1961 Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood in Lenox featuring the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Charles Munch began last evening with the first of three concerts of music by Johann Sebastian Bach.

This evening's concert (8:30) will feature soprano Adele Addison in Bach's "Wedding" Cantata and Mrs. Doriot Dwyer, first flutist, Roger Voisin, trumpet, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Richard Burgin, violin, and Lukas Foss, piano, will be soloists in the Bach Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6.

The Tanglewood choir, will be heard for the first time this season at the Sunday afternoon concert (2:30) in Bach's "Magnificat." The Magnificat will be preceded by the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratoriao and the First Concerto for Clavier in D Minor.

Other highlights next week include a concert of contemporary chamber music, sponsored by the Fromm Foundation at 8:30 Monday evening.

The Budapest String Quartet will give a program of chamber music consisting of Haydn's Quartet in D Major, the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud and Beethoven's Quartet in C Major, at 8:30 p.m. Wednesday in the theater.

At 8:30 Thursday evening Danny Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony in a concert to benefit the pension fund.

e Festival Opens Its Season

Bach Concerts Fill Tanglewood Weekend

By Louis Chapin
Lenox, Mass.

The 1961 season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opened over the weekend, as has been the practice, in a blaze of Bach. The four Orchestral Suites on Friday night; Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 2, 3, 5, and 6 plus the Wedding Cantata (No. 202) on Saturday night; the Easter Oratorio Sinfonia, First Clavier Concerto, and Magnificat on Sunday afternoon—all of these were tended by the Boston Symphony under Charles Munch, with solo and choral collaborations.

On the whole, things burned steadily, with some near-extinction at the damp hands of habit, and with a greater amount of flame quite worthy of this spirit-igniting composer.

The Berkshires—cool, good-smelling, sun-flecked, yet with their own rolling intimacy—seemed the very place on which to center such music, at such a time among nature's and the world's seasons.

The first performances heard by this reviewer, the Third and Second Brandenburgs (on Saturday night) showed most of the susceptibility to habit. There was an immediate stance, firm, forthright, decisive on questions many of whose subtleties were never looked into. The spiral rolling in the first movement development of No. 3 simply turned in its own tracks; it was grounded.

No. 2 was sparked, to an extent, by the spinning of the solos, especially by Doriot Anthony Dwyer's flute and Roger Voisin's trumpet. The difficulties of the latter's high-range cavorting are increased by the restraint with which it must meet the former. Both players bridged the distance skillfully. In this concerto there was a definitive underlining of the bass to conclude each curving phrase of the slow movement.

* * *

Bach first began to dance after Adele Addison came on stage to sing his Wedding Cantata (the second of two). Miss Addison entered into this gentle work with velvet to match the muted strings, and then, encouraged by Sherman Walt's saucy bassoon, in the Phoebus aria, stepped lightly and infectiously from part to part. Habitual Bach was burned away by the sheer joy of what she had found and was eager to share, and it left no more than an ash or two.

The remaining two Brandenburg Concertos were again reversed in order. The relatively subdued Sixth, without violins, was followed by the Fifth, with solos for clavier, flute, and violin (provided by Richard Burgin).

The brilliances of the latter work were fueled by the performance of Lukas Foss, who justified the use of a piano with a pianism that would surely have delighted the composer. Mr. Foss's handling of the long first-movement cadenza, as he moved up its dynamic inclines, was a breath-taking instance of controlled power.

* * *

The Shed was comfortably filled again on Sunday afternoon for the final Bach concert. Dr. Munch attacked the opening Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio with animation to join the day's freshness, and the brass of the orchestra added their bright concision.

Then Mr. Foss returned for a realization of the D minor Clavier Concerto that even surpassed his previous evening's triumph in its fervent virtuosity. Again the piano's range of touch and volume was developed idiomatically, reaching to peaks of prodigious strength. Mr. Foss's single-lined part in the slow movement was a reminder, too, that Bach probably adapted this from an earlier violin concerto.

* * *

Not having heard Mr. Foss in performance in some years, this reviewer was impressed by evidence of the pianist's graduation from wunderkindergarten. He is now an interpreter blessed not only with skill but with mature insight.

A wholly satisfactory culmination to the weekend came with the compact amplitude of the Magnificat, in a performance authenticized by the joy of discovery. Miss Addison and Charles Bressler, soprano and tenor soloists, were having the kind of time children ought to have at Christmas; they fairly reveled in this luminous gift, and their brief arias were grateful to it.

Florence Kopleff, as contralto, had more to do, including the opening soprano aria, and she did it with dependable musicality. Mac Morgan appeared to take his stylistic cue from the heavy footwork of the orchestra basses during the baritone aria "Quia fecit."

* * *

The Tanglewood Choir proved again the swift penetration of Hugh Ross's training in their firm, sometimes exhilarating delivery, with an interpretive tempering remarkably complete for some two weeks of preparation. Dr. Munch continued the process in his authoritative direction.

This may not have been a weekend of programatic surprises, but the Festival audiences, applauding a happy-looking conductor and his productive forces, seemed distinctly of the opinion that they had heard some new music.

Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
JUL 16 1961

79

Cheers, Bravos Heard for Bach As Tanglewood Concerts Resume

By RUTH TRIPP
Journal-Bulletin Music Critic

TANGLEWOOD has come to life again and the opening weekend found the students well along in their routine of courses at Berkshire Music Center, the office personnel cheerfully confused by the avalanche of requests from all directions and the musicians of the Boston Symphony Orchestra playing as expertly as ever.

The public descended on the shed for the three weekend concerts of the Bach concerts played by the chamber orchestra, made up of the Boston Symphony players and conducted by Charles Munch. The attendance figures were roughly 3,000 for Friday night, double that number for Saturday night and 4,500 on Sunday afternoon. The total attendance for the weekend exceeded that of last year by 1,000. It is easy to see why the concerts have been transplanted to the large shed from the theater which, for several years, has overflowed.

It is really exciting to hear cheers and bravos for the music of Bach. This is how the concerts always seemed to end. Then you filter back and converse with people, to find that there are still music lovers who like their Bach played with the same size of orchestra which Bach used and in a small hall. They scorn piano in the Brandenburg Concerto No. 5. It should be harpsichord. There is more excitement over the matter of tempo than is advisable for the listeners who have to watch their blood pressures. They really became eloquent about the terrific speed of the flute in the Badinerie of Suite No. 2. Doriot Anthony Dwyer played it superbly but, should she have to take it so fast just because she can?

There are many Tanglewood subscribers who are genuine Festival fans. They flit from Festival to Festival whether it be Salzburg, Aspen or Lenox and they not only know what all the performers do, but they can tell you what all the critics think of everything. Between Festivals they live in New York or Paris or Berlin. And some I met are Californians who are up to the minute on the Frankenstein-Fried critical fencing match which goes on there all season in two of the leading papers on the coast.

Then comes the discussion (by this time, you have found yourself in the midst of a group of pianists who are still studying, though they no longer play much and you have no way of telling if they ever did) and what a discussion! Is it necessary to rock around on the piano bench when you play a soulful passage in a Bach Concerto? This was brought on by the gyrations and facial expressions which Lukas Foss displayed in his magnificent interpretations. All were in agreement that he plays magnificently. Some had heard Gould or Serkin and not many. Pressler, are all experts in gyration. But the alarm is general about the increase in exhibitionism of which many pianists are guilty. There was a feeling that television may have been responsible for some of it and that the pianist feels obliged to make his effects not only with well controlled keyboard technique, but with an agonized or enraptured (it depends on the piece) facial expression and bodily writhing, to serve as a visual aid for the uninitiated listener. I never remember hearing Rachmaninoff play in such a way that you worried about the seriousness of the attack from which he was suffering. He always got plenty of applause, too.

Adele Addison has a most agreeable stage presence and her singing of the Bach Cantata No. 202, was a pleasure to hear. This "Wedding" cantata sings about spring, Phoebus, Cupid and joy. The delightful sequence of arias and recitatives made for variety in the Saturday program.

The Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, sang on Sunday afternoon in the Bach Magnificat. Soloists were Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan. Miss Addison's part was a small one which she filled well. The high spot of the singing was that done by Florence Kopleff. Her voice is rich and her singing, effortless. She kept her tempos well in control and communicated a feeling of reverence for the text. Another outstanding section was the Terzett for women's voices. This had an ethereal quality of tone which was entrancing.

The Fromm Foundation Concerts and the Seminars in Contemporary Music are other worthwhile and exciting parts of the program at Tanglewood. More of these later.

After the Mozart weekend, the programs will swing into their full symphonic scope with an interesting selection of new and old music. The Massachusetts Turnpike takes you up to the Berkshires with no trouble at all and all the beauty of the natural setting is at its best. What Tanglewood does for the young musicians who go there to study is one of its most stimulating aspects. Listeners are necessary and important to the box-office. Creative workers are important to the culture of this country.

NewEnglandNewsclipAgency,Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 10 1961

Music Review

Bach Weekend at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FIRST weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was put in the record books yesterday afternoon when an audience of more than 6,000 refused to release the musicians who had just performed the Magnificat (in D major) which ended the last of the three-program Bach weekend series.

Favored by near-ideal Berkshire weather, the two final concerts yesterday and Saturday evening—attracted well over 12,000 people. Four of the Brandenburgs were played Saturday with the secular cantata "Weichet Nur, Betrubte Schatten" separating the halves. Yesterday the program closed with the choral work, sung by the Tanglewood choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett.

* * *

THE MOST exciting peak of the program, however, as it had been on the preceding evening, was the piano playing of Lukas Foss. Foss did the D minor concerto yesterday and infused it cumulatively with so much zest and tension, alternating with lovely poetry, that he seemed less to be at a keyboard than to be immersed in the spirit of the music. In the fifth Brandenburg on the previous evening he had been equally galvanic and stirring. He made the broad lines clear and logical, the details brilliant, and gave it all shape, symmetry and tonal wealth.

The Magnificat is a Latin setting of the canticle used on high festivals, which replaced the German versions sung on ordinary Sundays. The soloists are given but meager, short allotments, and are sometimes possibly tempted to make the most of their single time at bat by pressing for effect more anxiously than if they had the assurance of coming oftener to the plate. Whether to maintain a lofty serenity or to dramatize the operatic devices Bach employs, becomes an inward artistic struggle.

* * *

THE OPENING chorus permits the trumpets, flutes and oboes a bountiful feast before the chorus enters. In the final magnificent chorus, "Gloria Patri," Bach arrives at a vivid climax after which he again returns to the opening idiom of the overture to introduce the final reposeful ending.

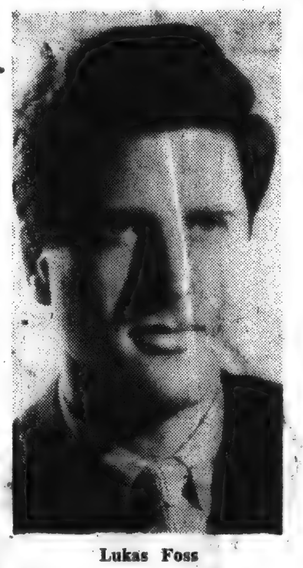
There is variety in the accompaniment afforded each soloist. The organ and harpsichord are a constant, but soprano Florence Kopleff had string accompaniment in her first aria and two flutes for the second one; soprano Adele Addison's aria was enhanced by the oboe d'amore of Louis Speyer, baritone Mac Morgan had only cellos and the keyboards; and tenor Charles Bressler violins only. Miss Kopleff and Mr. Bressler in their duet had flutes and violas. All of them discharged their assignments with distinguished competence.

Conductor Charles Munch found the chorus responsive to his well-controlled baton in the flat piccolo trumpet, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Richard Burgin, violin. Munch laid his baton down for the center slow movement, but still used his hands redundantly to guide the soloists here unaccompanied in a tonally lovely and gracefully inflected performance.

* * *

THE SIXTH Brandenburg is a personal favorite of this department, and the easy expression of the violas dominated by Joseph de Pasquale and of the cellos by Samuel Mayes compounded the pleasure this register of sonority affords when so masterfully executed.

In addition to Foss as soloist in the Brandenburg fifth were also Burgin, violin principale, and Mrs. Dwyer, flute. But the keyboard is designated as a "cembalo concertante," and, of course, that instrument is given incomparably greater opportunities. It must be mentioned, however, that the accurate delineation of the theme of the last movement by violinist Burgin gave that section its exact and proper pace. The great keyboard cadenza was triumphantly done by Foss, and the demonstration by the audience had basic justification.



Lukas Foss

intricate part-writing. Their most impressive moments were reached in the concluding adagio of the "Fecit Potentium."

* * *

IN THE "wedding" cantata, No. 202 (Vanish, Winter Shadows), Miss Addison was at her ease at the outset and only seemed to reach her more secure control at the reprise of her initial statement. Bach is relentless in his vocal writing in this cantata and gives the voice intricacies which lie handily for instruments but are a different matter in another medium, as, for example, for the bassoon in the "Phoebus eilt mit schnellen Pferden."

* * *

THE BEST features of the Brandenburgs Saturday night were those in which the conductor was most relaxed. When he attempted to generate agitation, the gears meshed less quietly. The first of the evening, the G major, was fluent and joyful. The Boston strings were clear and strong at all dynamic levels. Munch omitted the two-chord bridge which is usually played, and also chose not to insert a slow movement sometimes chosen from other Bach sources.

The third Brandenburg had Roger Voisin as soloist on a b-

80

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 8 1961

BACH OPENER HEARD BY 2992 AT FESTIVAL

Soloist Doriot Dwyer Is Hailed by Audience At Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The current Berkshire Music Festival by the symphony orchestra here at Tanglewood entered its second phase Friday night with the first concert of music devoted to the works of Johann Sebastian Bach.

This week end will be a rare tribute to the master with concerts tonight and Sunday afternoon.

Four Suites Played

Charles Munch has provided notable concerts of the music of Bach in past years and the concert Friday night seemed to indicate more are to come. At this first concert in the music shed, 2992 persons were on hand to listen to the four orchestral suites, and, incidentally pay their tribute to the artistry of flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

Bach experimented with and explored the possibilities of instrumental solo and chamber combinations. As a result, the four suites are made up of a tremendous blending of solos and rhythms, and yet each is an entity, quite different from the one before or after it.

One listens entranced to the air in Suite No. 3 in D Major, rocks with laughter at the robust and hearty humor to be found in the Suite No. 1 in C Major and listens in absolute amazement at the virtuosity of Doriot Anthony Dwyer. As usual, she was called back a half dozen times, and for a repeat of the Badinerie or Suite No. 2 in B Minor.

Solid Interpretations

Mr. Munch offered solid interpretations and, if the players were inclined to lag a bit or entrances were spotty, the fault was not his. Some of the movements were taken at break neck speed while others languished.

This was a concert of beautiful music, played for the most part with the skill one has come to expect from this symphony. They seldom let their audiences down, but this was their first concert of the festival and the sound was something less than solid.

It was a perfect evening for music, cool and comfortable in the shed and an attentive and knowledgeable audience made the most of it.

Mrs. Koussevitzky Present

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky is in residence here and seldom misses a concert. Extremely gracious, she speaks to many people as she makes her way down the aisles.

Mrs. Koussevitzky is more than a memory of the great days of the festival, she is a symbol of all that the festival stands for, all that it has been.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
JUL 8 1961

Music: Tanglewood Offers All-Bach Program

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — For a highly selective audience of 2,992 persons last night in the music shed at Tanglewood, Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony orchestra opened the Berkshire Music Festival with a program of sheer melodie ecstacy.

They began the all Bach weekend with the intellectual German Master's four orchestral suites. Doriot Anthony Dwyer was flute soloist in Suite No. 2 in B minor.

With a segment of the orchestra still in Boston on ther commitments, the two opening weekends here consist of music that can be practically and authentically performed with small instrumentation. Next weekend will be all-Mozart.

Tiresome Portions

The Bach suites, or sets of period dances, are involved primarily with stringed instruments. We won't go so far as to say that this is the Boston orchestra's private stock, but in last night's concert there was a conspicuous purity of sound, synchronized bowing and contrapuntal command of exceptional caliber. These tributes are directly to the strings, rather than to the trumpets who participated in the third suite.

Granting that the mechanics of tonal production were skillfully controlled, we come to the main reasons why this probably was a rather tiresome concert, except for the most "baroquial" minded.

These sets of dances are arranged in a general facsimile. For example, it would require many hearings and study to distinguish between the overtures of the first and third suites. Interest is maintained generally by systematic contrasts of moods and speeds, which aren't necessarily guaranteed by Bach, but require interpretive acumen. Exaggeration does nothing for these suites, even with the Bostonian resources.

Tempi Hurried

Munch always has tended to hurry tempi. This has been regularly true of his Beethoven and Schumann and we even recall an instance when the entreaties of a contemporary composer had no effect on the race-dance movement of a symphony.

Last night this happened in parts of each Bach suite. Specifically, the most objectionable were the overtures to suites three and one, and the "Badinerie" of the second suite, which might have been disastrous for a less-brilliant flutist than Mrs. Dwyer. The famous "air" of the third suite was, of course, one of the high spots, with its serene melody pured over plucked strings in cellos and basses. The harpsichord added unaccustomed beauty to the melange.

Suite No. 3 was flawed with three trumpets that more or less dictated to the strings, presumably with the blessing of the conductor.

Munch did succed in achieving a different spirit in the overture of the suite for flute and strings and it wasn't just a matter of omitting the trumpets.

Gleaming Flute Tone

Mrs. Dwyer's beautifully pure, gleaming tone was introduced in the rondo of the B minor suite as she stated the theme, taken up by second violins and spread through the orchestra.

In the fragile bourree (involving entire orchestra, including harpsichord), Munch established excellent balance in favor of the flute soloist.

The woodwinds were stabilizers in the first suite in C major. In the middle section of the overture, string phrases were a mite ragged, but these were organized and secured by solos in bassoon and oboe. The ornaments of the courante were fluently and cleanly placed by the strings — and the govottes were about as saucy as Bach can be made to sound.

Tonight's program will be Bach's "'wedding" cantata, with Adele Addison as soprano soloist.

Brandenburg concertos Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6 will have as soloists Mrs. Dwyer; Roger Voisin, trumpet; Ralph Gomberg, obe; Richar Burgin, vilin, and Lukas Foss, piano.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 10 1961

10,467 Attend First Weekend At Tanglewood

Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through two concerts of Johann Sebastian Bach yesterday afternoon and Saturday evening to round out the first Tanglewood weekend.

Yesterday an estimated 4,448 persons heard the concert start with the sinfonia from the Easter Cantata followed by the Concerto for Clavier in D Minor No. 1 with Lukas Foss at the piano.

The performance of the final selection, the magnificat, was heightened by the first public showing of the Tanglewood choir. This choral group was formed by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, and soloists Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressier and Mac Morgan.

Saturday an even larger crowd of 6,019 gathered in the Tanglewood shed and dotted the lawn.

The program consisted of Concerto No. 3 in G. Major for strings, Concerto No. 2 in F. Major for trumpet, flute, oboe and violin, Concerto No. 6 in B Flat Major for strings, Concerto No. 5 in D Major for piano, flute and violin and the Second Wedding Cantata.

Miss Addison was soprano soloist in the final number. Other soloists of the evening were Roger Voisin, trumpet; Diriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Ralph Gomez, oboist; and Richard Burgin, violinist; and Mr. Foss, piano.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
JUL 13 1961

Grace Notes — Ma

TANGLEWOOD — JULY 14
By G. G. V.

The Boston Symphony opened at Tanglewood last Friday evening with the first of three consecutive days of homage to Johann Sebastian Bach. On the program were three orchestral suites — No. 3 in D Major, No. 1 in C Major and No. 4 in D Major — and the Suite No. 2 in B Minor for Flute and Strings.

Charles Munch is still very much at the peak of his powers as conductor. If one questions some of his more obvious crescendos and ritards, one might wonder whether Bach himself, confronted with the vastness of the Music Shed, might not have resorted to similar hyperbole to make this music meaningful. In Air for the G String Dr. Munch and his men achieved the utmost in serenity.

The soloist of the evening, the orchestra's superb Flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, had ample opportunity to display her talents in the Suite for Flute and Strings. She was particularly effective in the final, fiery Badinerie.

TANGLEWOOD — JULY 15
By E. G. B.

Saturday night's all Bach program, conducted by Charles Munch was enriched by the work of several soloists. The music was as a whole magnificent in tone and conception.

Roger Voisin's performance on the trumpet in the second concerto was a highly virtuoso piece of work which elicited cheers from the audience. However, Munch's choice of tempo in the two allegro movements seemed too fast and somewhat obscured the contrapuntal lines, losing effect in dimension.

The Wedding Cantata consists of alternating arias and recitative for soprano and orchestra. Adele Addison, after a little initial lack of clarity, brought purity of tone and artistic insight to the interpretation.

The sixth concert, for violas, violas di gamba was given a superb and unsurpassable ren- Lukas Foss communicated dering. In the fifth concerto breadth of vision and a cumulative excitement at the piano, and was joined by the splendid performances of Richard Burgin at the violin and Doriot Anthony Dwyer with the flute.

TANGLEWOOD — JULY 1
By J. W. H.

The Sunday afternoon program — all Bach — began wi a good clean-cut performance the Sinfonia from the Eas Oratorio. It was a bright a pleasant opening for a sun and balmy afternoon.

Lukas Foss and the Boston Orchestra's superb strings sho in the Concerto for Clavier, i D Minor, No. 1 Foss' brilliant technique was everywhere in evidence, but his efforts to clarify the clavier line, played here on a mellifluous piano in a vast open space, led to an intensity of tempo and touch which left both artist and audience exhausted. In contrast, Mr. Foss played the second movement with almost romantic sentimentality and returned to his furious intensity for the final allegro.

In the second half of the program, the Boston Symphony, four fine soloists, a chorus of a hundred voices, and a fine pipe organ gave their all to an interpretation of the surprised song of an eighteen year old maiden — the Magnificat from the Gospel according to St. Luke. Depending on one's point of view. this work is either nonsense or a glorious offering of praise to Almighty God.

Hugh Ross in a week's time had whipped a brand new chorus into fine form. Soloists, at best, can't be heard in the Shed, but one feels they gave what they had. The orchestra played with devotion and the little high trumpet bled to the Glory of God. I, personally, believe that is the way to sing Magnificat.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
JUL 6 1961

Quartet in D major by Haydn; Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud; and Quartet in C Major, Opus 59, No. 3 by Beethoven.

LUCAS FOSS

AT ANGLEWOOD

The last concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra w Charles Munch conducting, w be heard tomorrow evening (Friday) at 8:30 in the Shed Tanglewood. For his first thr concerts of the new season, M Munch will present all-Bac programs.

His first concert will include Suite No. 3, Suite No. 2 (Dwyer), Suite No. 1 and Suite No. 4.

On Saturday morning there will be an Open Rehearsal in the Shed. At the Saturday night concert (July 8) will be heard Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin), Cantata No. 202 (Addison), Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss).

The Boston Symphony will be heard at 2:30 on Sunday afternoon (July 9) when Mr. Munch will present Sinfonia from Easter Cantata, Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss), Magnificat (Addison, Kopleff, Bressier, Morgan and the Tanglewood Choir.)

Wednesday, July 12, there will be a Chamber Music Concert in the Theatre at 8:30 by the Budapest Quartet.

80

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 8 1961

BACH OPENER HEARD BY 2992 AT FESTIVAL

Soloist Doriot Dwyer Is Hailed by Audience At Tanglewood

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The current Berkshire Music Festival by the symphony orchestra here at Tanglewood entered its second phase Friday night with the first concert of music devoted to the works of Johann Sebastian Bach.

This week end will be a rare tribute to the master with concerts tonight and Sunday afternoon.

Four Suites Played

Charles Munch has provided notable concerts of the music of Bach in past years and the concert Friday night seemed to indicate more are to come. At this first concert in the music shed, 2992 persons were on hand to listen to the four orchestral suites, and, incidentally pay their tribute to the artistry of flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer.

Bach experimented with and explored the possibilities of instrumental solo and chamber combinations. As a result, the four suites are made up of a tremendous blending of solos and rhythms, and yet each is an entity, quite different from the one before or after it.

One listens entranced to the air in Suite No. 3 in D Major, rocks with laughter at the robust and hearty humor to be found in the Suite No. 1 in C Major and listens in absolute amazement at the virtuosity of Doriot Anthony Dwyer. As usual, she was called back a half dozen times, and for a repeat of the Badinerie or Suite No. 2 in B Minor.

Solid Interpretations

Mr. Munch offered solid interpretations and, if the players were inclined to lag a bit or entrances were spotty, the fault was not his. Some of the movements were taken at break neck speed while others languished.

This was a concert of beautiful music, played for the most part with the skill one has come to expect from this symphony. They seldom let their audiences down, but this was their first concert of the festival and the sound was something less than solid.

It was a perfect evening for music, cool and comfortable in the shed and an attentive and knowledgeable audience made the most of it.

Mrs. Koussevitzky Present

Mrs. Serge Koussevitzky is in residence here and seldom misses a concert. Extremely gracious, she speaks to many people as she makes her way down the aisles.

Mrs. Koussevitzky is more than a memory of the great days of the festival, she is a symbol of all that the festival stands for, all that it has been

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
JUL 8 1961

Music: Tanglewood Offers All-Bach Program

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — For a highly selective audience of 2,992 persons last night in the music shed at Tanglewood, Charles Munch and the Boston symphony orchestra opened the Berkshire Music Festival with a program of sheer melodic ecstacy.

They began the all Bach weekend with the intellectual German Master's four orchestral suites. Doriot Anthony Dwyer was flute soloist in Suite No. 2 in B minor.

With a segment of the orchestra still in Boston on ther commitments, the two opening weekends here consist of music that can be practically and authentically performed with small instrumentation. Next weekend will be all-Mozart.

Tiresome Portions

The Bach suites, or sets of period dances, are involved primarily with stringed instruments. We won't go so far as to say that this is the Boston orchestra's private stock, but in last night's concert there was a conspicuous purity of sound, synchronized bowing and contrapuntal command of exceptional caliber. These tributes are directly to the strings, rather than to the trumpets who participated in the third suite.

Granting that the mechanics of tonal production were skillfully controlled, we come to the main reasons why this probably was a rather tiresome concert, except for the most "baroquini" minded.

These sets of dances are arranged in a general facsimile. For example, it would require many hearings and study to distinguish between the overtures of the first and third suites. Interest is maintained generally by systematic contrasts of moods and speeds, which aren't necessarily guaranteed by Bach, but require interpretive acumen. Exaggeration does nothing for these suites, even with the Bostonian resources.

Tempi Hurried

Munch always has tended to hurry tempi. This has been regularly true of his Beethoven and Schumann and we even recall an instance when the entreaties of a contemporary composer had no effect on the race-dance movement of a symphony.

Last night this happened in parts of each Bach suite. Specifically, the most objectionable were the overtures to suites three and one, and the "Badinerie" of the second suite, which might have been disastrous for a less-brilliant flutist than Mrs. Dwyer. The famous "air" of the third suite was, of course, one of the high spots with its serene melody pured over plucked strings in cellos and basses. The harpsichord added unaccustomed beauty to the melange.

Suite No. 3 was flawed with three trumpets that more or less dictated to the strings, presumably with the blessing of the conductor.

Munch did succed in achieving a different spirit in the overture of the suite for flute and strings and it wasn't just a matter of omitting the trumpets.

Gleaming Flute Tone

Mrs. Dwyer's beautifully pure, gleaming tone was introduced in the rondo of the B minor suite as she stated the theme, taken up by second violins and spread through the orchestra.

In the fragile bourree (involving entire orchestra, including harpsichord), Munch established excellent balance in favor of the flute soloist.

The woodwinds were stabilizers in the first suite in C major. In the middle section of the overture, string phrases were a mite ragged, but these were organized and secured by solos in bassoon and oboe. The ornaments of the courante were fluently and cleanly placed by the strings — and the gavottes were about as saucy as Bach can be made to sound.

Tonight's program will be Bach's "'wedding" cantata, with Adele Addison as soprano soloist. Brandenburg concertos Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6 will have as soloists Mrs. Dwyer; Roger Voisin, trumpet; Ralph Gomberg, obe; Richar Burgin, vilin, and Lukas Foss, piano.

Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 10 1961

10,467 Attend First Weekend At Tanglewood

Charles Munch led the Boston Symphony Orchestra through two concerts of Johann Sebastian Bach yesterday afternoon and Saturday evening to round out the first Tanglewood weekend.

Yesterday an estimated 4,448 persons heard the concert start with the sinfonia from the Easter Cantata followed by the Concerto for Clavier in D Minor No. 1 with Lukas Foss at the piano.

The performance of the final selection, the magnificat, was heightened by the first public showing of the Tanglewood choir. This choral group was formed by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, and soloists Adele Addison, Florance Kopleff, Charles Bressier and Mac Morgan.

Saturday an even larger crowd of 6,019 gathered in the Tanglewood shed and dotted the lawn.

The program consisted of Concerto No. 3 in G. Major for strings, Concerto No. 2 in F. Major for trumpet, flute, oboe and violin, Concerto No. 6 in B Flat Major for strings, Concerto No. 5 in D Major for piano, flute and violin and the Second Wedding Cantata.

Miss Addison was soprano soloist in the final number. Other soloists of the evening were Roger Voisin, trumpet; Diriot Anthony Dwyer, flutist; Ralph Gomez, oboist; and Richard Burgin, violinist; and Mr. Foss, piano.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
JUL 13 1961

Grace Notes — Mus

TANGLEWOOD — JULY 14
By G. G. V.

The Boston Symphony opened at Tanglewood last Friday evening with the first of three consecutive days of homage to Johann Sebastian Bach. On the program were three orchestral suites — No. 3 in D Major, No. 1 in C Major and No. 4 in D Major — and the Suite No. 2 in B Minor for Flute and Strings.

Charles Munch is still very much at the peak of his powers as conductor. If one questions some of his more obvious crescendos and ritards, one might wonder whether Bach himself, confronted with the vastness of the Music Shed, might not have resorted to similar hyperbole to make this music meaningful. In Air for the G String Dr. Munch and his men achieved the utmost in serenity.

The soloist of the evening, the orchestra's superb Flutist, Doriot Anthony Dwyer, had ample opportunity to display her talents in the Suite for Flute and Strings. She was particularly effective in the final, fiery Badinerie.

TANGLEWOOD — JULY 15
By E. G. B.

Saturday night's all Bach program, conducted by Charles Munch was enriched by the work of several soloists. The music was as a whole magnificent in tone and conception.

Roger Voisin's performance on the trumpet in the second concerto was a highly virtuoso piece of work which elicited cheers from the audience. However, Munch's choice of tempo in the two allegro movements seemed too fast and somewhat obscured the contrapuntal lines, losing effect in dimension.

The Wedding Cantata consists of alternating arias and recitative for soprano and orchestra. Adele Addison, after a little initial lack of clarity, brought purity of tone and artistic insight to the interpretation.

The sixth concert, for violas, violas di gamba was given a superb and unsurpassable ren- Lukas Foss communicated dering. In the fifth concerto breadth of vision and a cumulative excitement at the piano, and was joined by the splendid performances of Richard Burgin at the violin and Doriot Anthony Dwyer with the flute.

TANGLEWOOD — JULY 16
By J. W. H.

The Sunday afternoon program — all Bach — began with a good clean-cut performance of the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio. It was a bright and pleasant opening for a sunny and balmy afternoon.

Lukas Foss and the Boston Orchestra's superb strings shone in the Concerto for Clavier, in D Minor, No. 1 Foss' brilliant technique was everywhere in evidence, but his efforts to clarify the clavier line, played here on a mellifluous piano in a vast open space, led to an intensity of tempo and touch which left both artist and audience exhausted. In contrast, Mr. Foss played the second movement with almost romantic sentimentality and returned to his furious intensity for the final allegro.

In the second half of the program, the Boston Symphony, four fine soloists, a chorus of a hundred voices, and a fine pipe organ gave their all to an interpretation of the surprised song of an eighteen year old maiden — the Magnificat from the Gospel according to St. Luke. Depending on one's point of view. this work is either nonsense or a glorious offering of praise to Almighty God.

Hugh Ross in a week's time had whipped a brand new chorus into fine form. Soloists, at best, can't be heard in the Shed, but one feels they gave what they had. The orchestra played with devotion and the little high trumpet bled to the Glory of God. I, personally, believe that is the way to sing Magnificat.

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
JUL 6 1961

Quartet in D major by Haydn; Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud; and Quartet in C Major, Opus 59, No. 3 by Beethoven.

LUCAS FOSS

AT TANGLEWOOD

The first concert by the Boston Symphony Orchestra with Charles Munch conducting, will be heard tomorrow evening (Friday) at 8:30 in the Shed at Tanglewood. For his first three concerts of the new season, Mr. Munch will present all-Bach programs.

His first concert will include Suite No. 3, Suite No. 2 (Dwyer), Suite No. 1 and Suite No. 4.

On Saturday morning there will be an Open Rehearsal in the Shed. At the Saturday night concert (July 8) will be heard Brandenburg Concerto No. 3, Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, (Burgin, Dwyer, Gomberg, Voisin), Cantata No. 202 (Addison), Brandenburg Concerto No. 6 and Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 (Burgin, Dwyer, Foss).

The Boston Symphony will be heard at 2:30 on Sunday afternoon (July 9) when Mr. Munch will present Sinfonia from Easter Cantata, Piano Concerto in D minor (Foss), Magnificat (Addison, Kopleff, Bressier, Morgan and the Tanglewood Choir.)

Wednesday, July 12, there will be a Chamber Music Concert in the Theatre at 8:30 by the Budapest Quartet.

Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
JUL 9 1961

Music: All-Bach Concert At Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The cliche about "people who go to concerts to be seen" certainly didn't apply to last night's audience of 6,019 in the music shed at Tanglewood. The weekend's second all-Bach concert was played by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch.

Last night's program consisted of four Brandenburg concerti (Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6) and the "Wedding Cantata," No. 202, "Vanish, Winter Shadows." Soprano Adele Addison was soloist for the cantata.

A state of enthralled listening possessed the audience. Actually it was a happy program, quite devoid of serious event. The Brandenburg concerti are all in major keys, and while the secular style is steeped in Bach's formal technique, subject matter is as timely as "the passing of winter, and coming of spring," to quote Albert Schweitzer.

Tonal Delight

We weren't much impressed with Munch's approach to the four orchestral suites by Bach on Friday night but last night's Brandenburg concerti were quite another matter. They don't call for elaborate or demonstrative podium technique, but neither did they look or sound as if the rehearsal had gone so well that a placidly wielded baton would keep everything in tow. The strings of the Boston Symphony being capable of such magnificent sound, the third Brandenburg concerto was a tonal delight. Its two fast movements were clear pools of sound, with each line of the counterpoint a perfectly-formed unit woven into the fabric.

Precision, stealth and charm were assets of the opening allegro. Munch made it crystal clear where melodic features were located, achieving marvelous balances with accompanying instruments.

Technique Brilliant

Technique was brilliant in the second allegro—tempo spirited but not pressured.

A spirit of pageantry pervaded the swift movements of the second Brandenburg.

Soloists were Roger Voisin, trumpet; Doriot Anthony Dwyer, flute; Ralph Gomberg, oboe, and Richard Burgin, violin. Daniel Pinkham was at the harpsichord.

The solos of the first movement were not all unblemished in pitch or quality. Those in flute, oboe and violin were, for the most part, imperceptible, except in the second and final movements.

Cantata Triumph

Miss Addison had a triumph in the cantata. This is to her distinct credit because the joy that the work no doubt perpetrated during Bach's era is pretty well eclipsed by today's concept of style and technique, and humor.

The cantata is described by this singularly un-Bachian text: "Phoebus and his horses gallop through the new world; Cupid runs through the fields whenever he sees a pair of lovers kissing; may the love of the newly-wedded pair overcome and outlast the transitoriness of outward things."

It required a most active imagination to find such colorful phraseology in the performance, superbly done as it was. Miss Addison's pure, ringing, tones were prolonged to the fullest. She held a rather gigantic printed score, but seemed to rely on it infrequently.

This afternoon's program by the Boston Symphony and Munch will include the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio; the First Piano Concerto in D minor with Lukas Foss as soloist; and the "Magnificat." Soloists: Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Charles Bressler, tenor, and Mac Morgan, baritone. Choruses will be done by the Tanglewood choir of students from the Berkshire Music Center.

PRICES GOING UP SOON

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 8 1961

Music

Bach Concert at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE BIG SHED at Tanglewood welcomed its first audience of the season for a formal concert last night when Charles Munch lead the chamber-sized ensemble of the pick of the Boston Symphony Orchestra which has become the traditional opening ceremony.

The program consisted of the four suites of Bach, continuing the plan established by Serge Koussevitzky of devoting the first weekend to that master and the second to Mozart.

The cool evening was an excellent one for the musicians as well as for the audience of 2,992 which filled the front half of the auditorium. The famous strings of the Boston Orchestra never sounded more solid and resonant, even in the most subdued passages, and Munch had never seemed to hold his crack little band in better discipline.

* * *

THE EVENING proved to be more exhilarating than the prospect of the four suites on one program may have promised. Bach provides variety by using different wind instruments with the basic strings in each of the four works. Munch also used a harpsichord for the "continuo," a practise which Bach himself always employed but which has been more or less omitted in modern performances.

Munch made a few other changes in the suites which he has led so many times on this same stage. The forces used last night, while they consist of about one-half of the string sections, are still a considerable amplification of the numbers the composer himself had at his disposition, and thus the harpsichord no doubt was more effective then.

These suites were of the period of most of Bach's secular music and it is questionable if he was concerned with posthumous fame. Musicians in the various courts of Europe in that day rarely used works of other or previous composers; it was a do-it-yourself process nearly entirely.

* * *

THE MOST VOCIFEROUS and spontaneous audience response came, as might be expected by any of the old Tanglewood hands, after B minor suite in which Doriot Anthony Dwyer was again the flute solo. She has always played this with special distinction and Munch has always motioned to her to rise from her seat among her colleagues to accept the plaudits of the audience. This year she emerged from the wings with the conductor and left the stage with him after the performance. The many recalls were well deserved.

The program had started with the best-known of the suites—the third, in D major. The strings played without effort and their tone held its dominance in the interplay of voices Bach wrote and none was hidden nor obscured by a contiguous section.

Munch singled out several of the wind players to whom solos are allotted in these suites. The trumpet section earned special honors for the opportunities two of the suites provide for them and Roger Voisin, in particular, was awarded appreciation for his playing of the high B flat piccolo trumpet which he handled with skill and an absence of shrillness which can accompany its employment.

* * *

IN THE FINAL "Badinerie" of the flute suite Munch contrived to allow Mrs. Dwyer's playing to emerge even more clearly this year by reducing the strings to one desk for each voice and further dampening them by requiring them to use mutes. Ralph Gomberg, oboe, was distinguished for his part in the C major suite, and the bassoons, Sherman Walt and Ernest Panenka, might well, too, have been noticed for their accomplishments.

But it was the strings' evening after all. Tone, breadth, purity and all the ingredients needed to express the moods of Bach, from the lovely sustained air of the third suite to the many gay and light-hearted dances with which these works abound, were present in every detail of the evening, and were the main reason, by far, why this was such wonderful Bach.

Worcester Sunday Telegram July 9, 1961 A 25
Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JUL 10 1961

BERKSHIRE CONCERTS SHOW SOCIAL CHANGES

By JULES WOLFFERS

TANGLEWOOD, Lenox—For generations observers of the American scene have stated that our experiments in mass education and mass culture would result in a general leveling down of appreciation, achievement and results. But exactly the opposite has been the case at the early season concerts of the Berkshire Festival. Far from a leveling down there has been a leveling up as is proved conclusively by attendance figures this weekend at Tanglewood.

Intimate Concerts

In a way I regret what has happened to what used to be called the Bach-Mozart concerts which preceded the Festival proper of the full Boston Symphony Orchestra. Nothing more delightful took place, winter or summer, than the intimate chamber orchestra concerts in the small Theater-Concert Hall with conductor, players and audience in the closest rapport. In a sense these were aristocratic events aiming at the highest level and limited to what was thought to be a small, select audience.

But more and more people came to these concerts as the years rolled on. First the back of the hall was opened for outside listeners, then the large Music Shed was used when it rained. Later the Shed was used for some of the concerts and now all the chamber orchestra events are in the Shed with the first two weekends being included in the Festival proper rather than forming a separate pre-season series.

Perhaps something has been lost but much more has been gained. The cultural evolution can be gauged in figures with, in round numbers, 3000 persons present Friday, 6000 Saturday night and 4500 Sunday afternoon as opposed to 1200 a concert in former years. Thus what used to be considered esoteric items for the select few is now standard fare for the many.

As for the music this weekend, it was glorious with Charles Munch in top form, the players alert and responsive and the soloists outstanding. After the Friday night concert of the Bach Suites for Orchestra, the all-Bach lists continued Saturday night with energetic and vital readings of the Brandenburg Concertos Nos. 3, 2, 5 and 6, in that order. Adele Addison sang gloriously in the "Wedding" Cantata after Roger Voisin had distinguished himself in the difficult trumpet part of the Concerto No. 2.

The only disconcerting factor was the placement of the solo group in the Concerto No. 5. Richard Burgin and Doriot Anthony Dwyer sat to one side and back of Lukas Foss and his large concert grand piano. Although Mr. Foss played the important piano solo and soloistic parts impeccably, his accompaniments overpowered both Mr. Burgin's violin and Mrs. Dwyer's flute in their solo sections.

Nothing Lacking

But nothing was lacking the following afternoon when Mr. Foss performed the D minor Concerto with all imaginable zest, taste, refinement, skill and beauty. Mr. Munch's accompaniment was superbly disposed throughout the three movements.

The conductor opened this program with an energetic stirring approach to the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio. The Magnificat, with the Tanglewood Choir, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, and with soloists Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Charles Bressler, tenor; and Mac Morgan, baritone, closed the program in inspired style to leave the Sunday hearers pleased beyond measure.

The concerts will be devoted to Mozart next weekend. A very special event comes on Thursday when Danny Kaye will be guest conductor for a Pension Fund concert. No tickets will be sold for general admission in order that all may savor the particular flavor of the event by being seated in the shed. Except for the lower price seats, tickets are still available at this writing.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 8 1961

FIVE

Bach Program Heard by 3,000 At Tanglewood

An audience of close to 3,000 last night heard Charles Munch and members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra open the major Berkshire Music Festival program at Tanglewood, Lenox.

Boston Symphony players under their music director's baton presented the first of the series of six Bach-Mozart programs which annually precede the symphonic concerts by the full orchestra. On Wednesday evening the season had had a modest beginning with a chamber music concert.

The gate count for last night's concert of Bach works in the huge music shed at Tanglewood was 2,992. The program consisted of the Suites 3, 2, 1 and 4 in that order. Dorio Anthony Dwyer was flute soloist in the No. 2 Suite, the "Badinerie."

Tonight at 8:30 Dr. Munch will conduct the small orchestra in the second Bach concert which will consist of the Brandenburg Concertos No. 3, 2, 6 and 5, with the No. 202 Cantata inserted in the middle. Adde Addison will be the soloist in the cantata.

Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30, the concert will open with the Sinfonia from the Easter Cantata, followed by the Piano Concerto in D Minor with Lucas Foss as soloist, and the Magnificat in which four soloists and the Tanglewood Choir will assist the orchestra under Dr. Munch's direction.

82

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JUL 8 1961

Bach Suite Impressive At Berkshire Program

By JULES WOLFFERS

TANGLEWOOD, LENNOX—The zestful and impressive orchestral suites by Bach served as the best kind of introduction to the Berkshire Festival, which opened here Friday night at Tanglewood's Music Shed, with Charles Munch conducting the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the first of three all-Bach programs.

Adds Impetus

Mr. Munch's way with Bach is as zestful and impressive as the music. He gives these grand old scores a modern re-interpretation by bringing the tempi thoroughly up to date. While this may not always serve the music to best advantage from a traditional point of view, it does ad much interest and impetus.

Perhaps the conductor goes a little too far, however, when he omits some of the repeat marks. The music is so delightful that we grudge every missed section. This is particularly so in the briefer dances, where the lack of repeats makes the music disappear almost before it has started.

But there are also many advantages. The lightness and airness of the music was particularly well depicted. His balance was superb, with the interest shuttling back and forth with rapid charm.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer played the solo flute part of the second suite with her accustomed skill and deftness. In his role of accompanist, Mr. Munch kept the orchestra beautifully in balance with the solo line. While all the four suites have their own individual attributes, it was the second which proved the most appealing. But it is difficult to choose, for while they each are more or less similar in structure, they vary widely in style and mood.

Applause Constant

The 3000 patrons were delighted with the proceedings. Applause was generous and constant after each work, and the opening can go down as a success—a prelude for the fine things to come.

Saturday night's concert will include the Brandenburg Concerti Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6, together with "The Wedding" cantata, Adele Addison, soprano, as soloist.

Sunday afternoon's program at 2:30 includes the Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio; the Clavier Concerto in D Minor, Lukas Foss, soloist; and the Magnificat, with the Tanglewood Choir.

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783
JUL 10 1961

Music: Tanglewood Program Is All-Bach Again

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — The Boston Symphony Orchestra, conductor Charles Munch and composer Johann Sebastian Bach had a highly successful weekend of concerts at the Berkshire Music Festival.

Yesterday afternoon's Music Shed audience numbered 4,448, bringing the weekend total to 15,384.

There was more variety in yesterday's program than in the previous two on Friday and Saturday nights. Yesterday's: Bach's Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio; Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 1, Lukas Foss, soloist; "Maginificat" with orchestra, Tanglewood Choir (students at the Berkshire Music Center) and soloists — Adele Addison, soprano; Florence Kopleff, alto; Charles Bressler, tenor; Mac Morgan, baritone.

Piano-String Dialogue

Foss gave a discriminating and in some ways brilliant performance of the piano concerto. He was helped immeasurably by an orchestra and conductor who catered to his every wish, even to a point of poetic license in the second or slow movement.

Both attained a real pianissimmo in the opening movement, emphasizing the effectiveness of heavy passages. Keyboard technique was clean, tone alive and sensitive and speed unhurried. Nor did the pianist hammer at the cadenza.

The slow movement (scored almost entirely for the right hand alone) was as serene and richly-toned as we have ever heard, although at some points it threatened to descend to a mushy stage.

Lively dialogue was carried on between the strings and piano in the finale. The soloist's technique was fluent, somewhat affected by mannerisms.

Punctuating 'Brasses

Intonation was not of the purest in the sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio. There certainly was abundant vitality, over-exerted in trumpets, a situation that marred all three weekend performances. The same off-balance had existed in the Third Suite (Friday night) and Second Brandenburg Concerto (Saturday night).

The "Magnificat" is not a giant among Bach's choral works, but it does have powerful religious incentive, inspired by the text, "My soul doth magnify the Lord."

Most compelling was the spirit and delivery of the chorus, particularly in the opening "Magnificat Anima" and "Fecit Potentiam." The 100 mixed voices did sound a little like a huge cheering section in the latter.

Brasses sometimes got in the way of the chorus' words, but fine balances, flexibility and phrasing were distinct credits to Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, who prepared the chorus for this performance.

'Strum und Drang' Present

Miss Addison sang the aria, "Quia Respexit" with a soaring, expressive tone that blended beautifully with the woodwinds. Long taxing phrases in the alto score proved to be a problem to Miss Kopleff.

The deep-rooted baritone aria, "Quia Fecit," is a rather thankless proposition for the baritone. Actually, it lies in the bass range. Morgan sang it with verve and managed to project clearly the low tones that are obstructed by cellos and supported by harpsichord.

This was a Boston Symphony debut for Bressler. It may have caused an extra measure of nervousness. The young tenor's ousness. The young tenor's approach was far removed from the spirit of the "Magnificat." He worked extremely hard at creating a semioperative impression in his big aria," Deposuit Potentes." Quality was good enough (light lyrical character), but the "Strum und Drang" he sought were quite out of keeping with the text.

On Thursday night, Danny Kaye "conducts" the Boston Symphony for the benefit of its pension fund in what probably will be an artistic assasination. The weekend, beginning Friday night, is all Mozart.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUL 11 1961

Berkshire Festival Opens To 13,367 Cheering Fans

The 24th season of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood opened last weekend to a cheering audience. The chamber orchestra of the Boston Symphony played three all-Bach concerts under the baton of Charles Munch. Total attendance numbered 13,367, the largest audience of Bach devotees recorded at Tanglewood.

Clear, cool weather prevailed throughout the weekend, enhancing the enjoyment of the concerts. The first, on Friday evening, was given over to Bach's four orchestral Suites, with harpsichord continuo. These suites were called "ouvertures" in Bach's time, a sequence of dance movements with an introductory section modeled after the overture form established by Lully.

Dr. Munch chose the Third Suite in D major to open, the stately overture echoing the footsteps of the latecomers. All were hushed by the following familiar but no less moving "Air for the G string." The tempo this year was preferable to the almost unbearable slowness of last year's, the whole a finely drawn perfection.

Bach invites myriad interpretations, and Dr. Munch seldom projects an exact repetition of a composition, to most listeners a constant in the enjoyment of a concert. This can produce much discussion and dissension, but also provokes further exploration of the music, which is never-ending.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer starred in the favorite Second Suite in B minor for flute and strings only, not programmed last year. Her playing showed a marked maturity in technical quality. Breathiness, which is so difficult to eliminate from quick passages, was absent in the joyful "Badinerie." Its playful bounce, with a relaxed undertone was sustained throughout.

The concert ended with Suite No. 4 in D major, its varied rhythms and rich melodic and instrumental interplay in marvelous contrast to the simplicity of the beginning suite.

Saturday's concert included the Brandenburg Concertos, Nos. 2, 3, 5 and 6, and the "Wedding Cantata," for soprano, No. 202, beautifully performed by Adele Addison.

Sunday's bright sunshine made even more glorious the "Sinfonia from the Easter Oratorio" which opened the afternoon concert, and the tender evocative "Magnificat" sung in the second half.

Lukas Foss gave a brilliant and indefatigable performance of the Concerto for Clavier, in D minor, No. 1, its three movements distinct and distinctive in execution and style.

The newly formed Berkshire Chorus, prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett displayed a notable clarity of line and clean attack, the balance of voices remarkably good.

The soloists, Adele Addison, soprano, Charles Bressler, tenor, Florence Kopleff, alto, and Mack Morgan, baritone, performed with musical sensitivity and style the disparate and expressive arias.

At all performances, the vigorously applauding audience showed their appreciation of the musical magic Dr. Munch continues to weave through the impeccable virtuosity of his orchestra.

Thursday evening, traditions are expected to be shattered when Danny Kaye receives the baton from Charles Munch to conduct (ffl) the Boston Symphony Orchestra. A benefit concert for the Orchestra's Pension Fund, Mr. Kaye has generously donated his talents. There will be no admissions to the grounds. All seats are reserved.—M.deB.B.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

American (e)
WATERBURY, Conn.
Circ. 40,709
JUL 10 1961

Bach Works Featured At Tanglewood

(Special to The American)

LENOX, MASS. — The Bach week end of concerts which opened the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood was a triumph for soloists, chorus, the Boston Symphony Orchestra, attendance, and even the weather. And if we said much the same last year it bears repeating for it just happens to be true.

The three concerts which began on Friday night and ended the Bach series Sunday afternoon before 4,448 were presented before a week-end total of 15,384, more than 1,100 ahead of the same series last season. It was a program of Bach performed with such beauty, devotion and excellence as to leave the three audiences speechless. It was richness of Bach heaped upon more richness of Bach for a series of memories not soon to be forgotten.

Friday night there was the brilliant flute solo of Doriot Dwyer in "Suite No. 2, in B Minor, for Flute and Strings" for which Bach would have kissed the performer. Saturday night more than 6,000 in the audience heard the excellent performance of the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, in F Major," for trumpet, flute, oboe, and violin, and then the rich voice of Adele Addison, soprano, in the "Wedding" Cantata which she sang with such joy, charm and poise that when it was over Conductor Charles Munch kissed her hand. The German words told of seeking joy and of the gushing of waves. In Miss Addison's singing there was indeed joy to be found and the audience told her so.

To add riches to riches the audience heard Lukas Foss in such a brilliant performance of the "Brandenburg Concerto No. 5 in D Major," for clavier, flute and violan that no one there will soon forget his inspired performance. Lukas Foss played again on Sunday in the "Concerto for Clavier, in D Minor No. 1," giving such a fine performance that we are moved to say his was an inspired performance.

Lukas Foss had the audience in his hand throughout his brilliant performance at both concerts and in his debt by the time he had finished.

Miss Addison Soloist

Miss Addison sang with the Tanglewood Choir yesterday afternoon joining with the 75 male and female voices prepared by Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett. It was joy just to watch her not only in her own singing but as she followed the other singers in their performances. She has not only excellent enunciation in her German and English singing but charm, poise, and a fine sense of the dramatic. Florence Kopleff was the alto soloist. Charles Bressler was tenor and Mac Morgan the baritone. It was a glowing conclusion to the Bach week end to hear the soloists, chorus, and Boston Symphony Orchestra in the "Magnificat."

The Boston Symphony Orchestra string section had a rich opportunity to perform throughout the Bach series and was in fine form. There were many opportunities to hear the magnificent new harpsichord. The musicians gave the 1961 Berkshire Symphony Festival such an auspicious beginning that one knows this will be a season to be anticipated. Munch seemed in excellent form and happier than last season, having just returned from a vacation in France. The Saturday morning open rehearsal drew just short of 2,000, ranging in age from infants in arms to great-grandparents. It was such a beautiful week end as only the Berkshires can give when they are in the mood to be favorable.

The three concerts next week end will be devoted to the music of Mozart under direction of Charles Munch. Seymour Lipkin will be piano soloist Sunday afternoon in the Mozart "Piano Concerto, K 466" and the Tanglewood Choir and soloists will present the Canta, "Davidde Penitente."

S. M.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 3 1961

1,000 at Tanglewood Exercises Marking Music Center Opening

TANGLEWOOD — Exercises in the theater concert hall here yesterday afternoon, marking the opening of the Berkshire Music Center were attended by more than 1,000 persons including 280 students who are enrolled at the Center which is operated by the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Leonard Burkat, music administrator for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, presided at the exercises and after introducting the speakers, presented to the students and guests Ralph Berkowitz, dean of the music Center, who in turn introduced the faculty members.

Chief Justice Raymond S. Wilkins of the Massachusetts Supreme Court and a trustee of the BSO, one of the three speakers at the exercises, told his listeners that the Center symbolized the will of the trustees to take part in spreading music to other parts of the world.

Indebted to Founder's Vision

'While we haven't done as well as other countries in musical development Judge Wilkins said, "the Music Center is important to our national musical development and we are indebted to the vision of the late Dr. Serge Koussevitzky," who founded the school in 1940.

Aaron Copland, assistant director and chairman of the faculty at the school, noted that nowhere else in the world has a symphonic organization undertaken to run a school such as the Berkshire Music Center, adding that "our purpose is to give the students the benefit of the experience of older musicians in the performance of music; performance first and teaching second.

"The staff at Tanglewood," he continued, "attempts to bring to the student a musical horizon larger than the one he arrives with.

"People think of music as a quiet art," he said, but the new music of today very much reflects the preoccupations of our complex world.

"A take off for the moon will surely mean a take off in new musical adventures."

Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky, widow of the Music Center's founder and for 25 years conductor of the BSO, told the audience that 'The 'Berkshire Music Center was to him synonymous to youth. before his death, he followed all its steps, suffered its growing pains and shared in the growing pride of its astonishing development."

Years after it was established, She continued, Serge Koussevitzky wrote:

Tanglewood belongs to no one but to all. It belongs physically to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, morally to me, universally to this community, this country and to the musicians of the world. We cannot do without one another for the good of the common cause. This is extremely significant. a small speck on the world map, historical Tanglewood has become a center of music. With its advent, the Boston Symphony Orchestra gained unprecedented stature . . . I also am grateful to destiny.

The writing, Mrs. Koussevitzky said, stopped with those words and "from there we resume. We are grateful to the Boston Symphony Orchestra, former faculty members and students and to you, his children. Our common cause has never been more challenging. The Berkshire Music Center today is the fulfillment of the founder's faith that shall not fall. I also am grateful to destiny."

Whitestone

GIFT FROM JAPAN is presented to Mrs. Olga Koussevitzky, left, widow of the founder of the Berkshire Music Center, at Tanglewood yesterday, by Miss Kazuko Tatsumura, a musicologist who is enrolled at the Center this summer. She brought the gift from Seiji Ozawa, young Japanese conductor, who won the Koussevitzky Memorial Scholarship at Tanglewood last summer. Miss Tatsumura is spending the summer with Mr. and Mrs. William A. Whittlesey III, 380 Holmes Road, Pittsfield. In center, looking on, is Jay C. Rosenfeld, music critic.

The World Of Music

Woman Flute Player Makes It To The Top

She Heads Section Of Major Unit

By LEE STEELE

A DIMPLED, petite brunette occupies a unique position among the instrumentalists of America's major symphony orchestras.

She is the only woman first chair flutist in a large orchestra.

"No one ever dreamed I'd be a flute player," says Doriot Anthony Dwyer. In the fall, she will begin her tenth season as head of the 5-player flute section of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Her selection as first flutist was made by Conductor Charles Munch in what was a precedent shattering gesture. In its 71 seasons, the Boston Symphony had never hired a woman to be a principal player.

★ ★ ★

MR MUNCH auditioned the then Miss Anthony — her grandfather was a cousin of Susan B. Anthony, famed pioneer for women's rights— and just to reassure himself that the choice was right, it has been bruited that Conductor Munch auditioned an additional 15 flute players.

DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER
Holds unique position

He returned to his choice: Miss Anthony. She was completing her sixth year as second flute with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Orchestra when she applied for the job with the Boston Symphony.

Her previous experience had been as second flute with the National Symphony Orchestra under the late Hans Kindler. At the time, she commuted to Philadelphia to study with the famous first flutist of that city's orchestra, William Kincaid.

Georges Laurent, who headed the Boston Symphony flute section for more than 30 years, not only helped to audition the young woman, but also approved the appointment. She joined the orchestra for the 1952-53 season.

Since then she has married —her husband, Thomas F. Dwyer, is a Boston psychiatrist—and they have a year-old daughter, Arienne Maureen.

★ ★ ★

MRS. DWYER'S mother, a flutist, and her mother's sisters toured the old Chautauqua circuit as the Maurer Sisters Quartet. Then when Mrs. Anthony became the mother of four children, "she wanted one of us to play the flute," her daughter recalls.

Mrs. Dwyer was taking dancing lessons as a child, and even pondered the possibility of becoming an actress. "Suddenly, the flute sounded beautiful to me." Her flute lessons began at age 8.

To hear Mrs. Dwyer perform is to realize that her flute playing is beautiful. I heard her in several rehearsals and a finished performance of the Mozart Flute Concerto recently at the Boston Sympony's summer headquarters at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass. The sound she produces is sweet and certain; her sense of dynamic proportion is superb and she displays skillful feeling for nuances.

Two seasons ago, Mrs. Dwyer gave a benefit concert at Town Hall in New York on behalf of the scholarship fund of Mu Phi Epsilon, honorary music sorority for women. She appeared with Jesus Maria Sanroma, the pianist.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
JUL 13 1961

Where To Go--What To Do

Friday, July 14

Friday can be a fun day for oldsters and youngsters who take advantage of the entertainment being offered.

Besides all the summer theater plays to be seen by the grown-ups there will be special children's theater productions, too.

At LYNNFIELD CENTER ELEMENTARY SCHOOL "The Three Pigs" and "The Invisible Dragon" will be presented at 11 a.m. by the Boston Children's Theater Stagemobile, known as the Traveling Theater.

And in Brighton at the ARTS CENTER THEATER the American Festival will present "Young Abe Lincoln" at 11 a.m., 3 and 8 p.m.

All seats are reserved and cost $1 for this special children's version of the Broadway hit musical.

For jazz enthusiasts there's a big night at CASTLE HILL, Ipswich. Dave Brubeck and Modern Jazz Quartet will present a program at 8:30 p.m. A picnic supper may be bought on the East Terrace of The Great House.

For symphony lovers in the western part of the state and those wishing to travel to TANGLEWOOD at Lenox there will be a concert devoted to the music of Mozart at 8:30 p.m. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in the shed.

And on the Esplanade at the HATCH SHELL Robert Hawkins will conduct the Esplanade concert at 8:30 p.m.

Another Friday activity will be the meeting at 8:30 p.m. of DAUGHTERS OF ISABELLA, STAR OF THE SEA CIRCLE, 100 Bevely, at G. A. R. Hall. Mrs. Raymond MacNeil will preside.

84

Second week - July 10 - 17

Sunday Republican
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 111,122
JUL 9 1961

Tanglewood Choir Debuts Today at Music Festival

Several Soloists Will Be Heard This Afternoon; Full Program Features Danny Kaye Thursday

LENOX—Under the direction of Hugh Ross and Willis Beckett, the Tanglewood Choir will make its season's debut this afternoon in the Music Shed at 2.30 as the Berkshire Music Festival enters its second week. Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in Bach's "Magnificat" this afternoon. Today's soloists will be soprano Adele Addison, Florence Kopleff, Charles Bressler and Mac Morgan. Lukas Foss will be the piano soloist in Sinfonia from the Eastern Cantata and the First Concerto for Clavier (D minor) preceding the "Magnificat," which also features the Tanglewood Choir.

The first of the weekly Sunday morning Berkshire Music Center chamber concerts in the music hall will be held today at 10 a. m.

Dr. Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood next week end, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday evening concert at 8.30 will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert at 8.30, preceded by an open rehearsal in the music shed at 10 a. m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191). Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) next Sunday afternoon at 2.30. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Pension Concert

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood Thursday evening at 8.30 to conduct the orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pension Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

The Fromm Foundation will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood Monday in the theater at 8.30 p. m. The concert, to which the public is invited (no admission charge), will honor the four composers in residence on the 1961 Berkshire Music Center faculty at Tanglewood: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Roberto Gerhard. The concert will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists. The program will include the first American performances of Mr. Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (Frank Pelleg, soloist) and of Mr. Fortner's Third String Quartet. Mr. Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version—prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival — of Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

Chamber Program

The Budapest String Quartet—Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello—will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series Wednesday at 8.30 p. m. in the theater. The program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to several events at Tanglewood this week. In addition to the Fromm Foundation concert of contemporary chamber music Monday evening, friends are invited to the seminar in contemporary music and in the Chamber Music Hall at 3.15 p. m. Friday, to the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert at 3 p. m. Saturday (rather than on the usual Thursday night which, this week, is pre-empted by Danny Kaye); and to the Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert, in the Chamber Music Hall at 10 a. m. next Sunday.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 8 1961

Three Mozart Programs Offered At Tanglewood Next Weekend

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood next weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert, July 14, will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert, July 15, preceded by an Open Rehearsal in the Shed at 10 a.m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concerante (K. 287b).

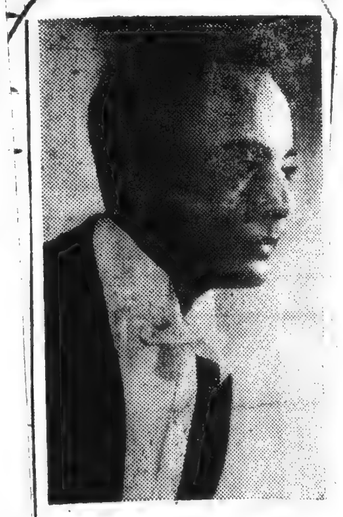
Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata, "Davidde Penitence" (K. 469) at the Sunday afternoon, July 16, concert. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

The Forum Foundation will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood Monday, July 10, in the theatre. The concert, to which the public is invited (no admission charge), will honor the four composers in residence on the 1961 Berkshire Music Center faculty at Tanglewood: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Robert Gerhard. The concert will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists. The program will include the first American performances of Mr. Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (Frank Pelley, soloist) and of Mr. Fortner's Third String Quartet. Mr. Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version—prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival—of Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

The Budapest String Quartet — Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello—will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series on Wednesday in the Theatre. Their prorgam will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major. Op. 59, No. 3

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to several events at Tanglewood this week. In addition to the Fromm Foundation concert of Contemporary Chamber Music on Monday evening. Friends are invited to the Seminar in Contemporary Music in the Chamber Music Hall at 3:15 Friday, to the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert at 3 p. m. Saturday and to the Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert, in the Chamber Musicm Hall at 10 a. m. on Sunday, July 16.

Eagle (e)
CLAREMONT, N. H.
Circ. 8,224
JUL 15 1961



TOMORROW AT TANGLEWOOD pianist Seymour Lipkin will play a Mozart piano concerto with the Boston Symphony in the second week of the Berkshire Festival at 2:30 p.m. in Lenox, Mass. Two years ago Lipkin appeared in the Twin State Valley Music Assn. Concert Series in Claremont.

Banner (e)
BENNINGTON, Vt.
Circ. 4,856
JUL 8 1961

Tanglewood's Full Schedule For Next Week

LENOX, Mass.—Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood next weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday, July 14 concert at 8:30 p.m. will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C Minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 38).

The Saturday evening concert, preceded by an open rehearsal in the Shed at 10 a.m., will have five first - desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concert (K 191) Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Doctor Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) at Sunday afternoon's (July 16 at 2:30) concert. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood Thursday to conduct the orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pension Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Kaye but the orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

The Fromm Foundation will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood Monday (July 10 at 8:30) in the theatre. The concert, to which the public is invited without charge, will honor the four composers in residence on the 1961 Berkshire Music Center faculty at Tanglewood — Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Roberto Gerhard.

The Budapest String Quartet — Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello — will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series on Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in the theatre. Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

Town Times
OAKVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,450
JUL 13 1961

Works Of Mozart To Be Featured At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert at 8:30 p.m. will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons.

The Saturday evening concert, also at 8:30 p.m., preceded by an Open Rehearsal in the Shed at 10 a.m., will have five first-desk players from the Orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto, Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute, and Ralph Gemberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante.

Hugh Ross has been invited by Doctor Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" at the Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30 p.m. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20, in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 12 1961

Tanglewood

Munch Slates Three Concerts

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts by Mozart at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this weekend.

The Friday concert (8:30) will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert (8:30), preceded by an open rehearsal in the Shed at 10 a.m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Doctor Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) at the Sunday afternoon (2:30) concert.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood tomorrow (8:30) to conduct the Orchestra in a Pension Fund benefit

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665

JUL 9 1961

Three Mozart Concerts At Tanglewood This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, this coming weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert lists the Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and the Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert preceded by an Open Rehearsal in the Shed at 10:00 a.m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (.K 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer in the Concerto for Flute (.K 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano in the Sinfonia Concertante (.K 297b).

Hugh Ross will conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (.K 469) Sunday afternoon, uly 16.

The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will participate. The concert will include Symphony No. 29 (.K 201) and the Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (.K 466), Seymour Lipkin, soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood Thursday to conduct the orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pen- sion Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

The Fromm Foundation will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. in the Theater to which the public is invited at no admission charge.

The program will include the first American performances of Mr. Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (Frank Pelleg, soloist) String Quartet. Mr. Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version of Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

The Budapest String Quartet will give the second concert of the chamber music series on Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in the Theater with Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the uartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's uartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
JUL 18 1961

BSO to Perform Music of Mozart At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this week-end, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert, July 14, at 8:30 p.m., will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert, July 15, at 8:30 p.m., preceded by an open rehearsal in the Shed at 10 a.m., will have five first-desk players from the Orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) at the Sunday afternoon, July 16, at 2:30 p.m. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood tonight (Thursday) to conduct the Orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pension Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the Orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 8 1961

Regional Roundup

Munch to Conduct Mozart Concert at Tanglewood

Three Programs Devoted to Famed Composer Scheduled; Danny Kaye On Thursday

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox next week end, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert on July 14 at 8.30 will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

Open Rehearsal at 10

The Saturday evening concert on July 15 at 8.30, preceded by an open rehearsal in the Shed at 10 a. m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (F. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 287b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) at the concert Sunday afternoon, July 16, at 2.30. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo and tenor William Lewis, will be heard in the cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood Thursday, July 13, to conduct the orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pension Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

Chamber Concert Monday

The Fromm Foundation will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood Monday at 8.30 in the theater. The concert, to which the public is invited (no admission charge), will honor the four composers in residence on the 1961 Berkshire Music Center faculty at Tanglewood: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Roberto Gerhard. The concert will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists. The program will include the first American performances of Mr. Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (Frank Pelleg, soloist) and of Mr. Fortner's Third String Quartet. Mr. Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version—prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival—of Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

The Budapest String Quartet —Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola, and Mischa Schneider, cello—will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series on Wednesday, July 12, at 8.30 in the theater. Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to several events at Tanglewood next week. In addition to the Fromm Foundation concert of contemporary chamber music on Monday evening. Friends are invited to the seminar in contemporary music in the Chamber Music Hall at 3.15 Friday, to the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert at 3 p. m. Saturday and to the Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert, in the Chamber Music Hall at 10 a. m. on Sunday, July 16.

Haieff Wins Award

The 1961 Horblit Award of $1000 has been made to the American composer, Alexei Haieff. The orchestra has performed three compositions by Mr. Haieff: the Divertimento (Ballet, 1944), his Piano Concerto which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award in 1952, and his Symphony No. 2 which won the first American International Music Fund award. Charles Munch and the orchestra have recorded the Symphony No. 2.

in Windsor Locks, Conn., this evening, starting at 7 p. m.

This is the feature event of the three-day bazaar of Windsor Locks Fire Department. Judges for the parade will be located at the corner of Main and Oak Sts., in Windsor Locks, in the judges stand to be erected at that point. Prizes will be awarded to the best appearing fire company, company having the best looking apparatus, fire group coming the longest distance and company having the most men in line.

Awarding of the parade prizes will take place at the park grounds following the parade and later in the evening there will be awarding of prizes.

Included in the midway at the bazaar will be a number of specialty booths, refreshment booths, cake booth, and also a booth for the playing of bingo. Proceeds from the bazaar will be turned into the firemen's activities fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
JUL 13 1961

PIANIST . . . Seymour Lipkin will be the soloist when the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays Mozart's "Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20 (K 466)" at the Tanglewood concert on Sunday afternoon at 2:30. Hugh Ross will conduct.

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D, 40,588
JUL 15 1961

Mozart's Music Will Be Heard At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform two concerts at Tanglewood this weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart.

Tonight's concert at 8:30 p.m. will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto, Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante.

Hugh Ross has been invited by Doctor Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" at tomorrow's concert at 2:30 p.m. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta LaBianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20, in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 14 1961

Tenor Soloist Changed for Sunday Concert

TANGLEWOOD — A change in the list of soloists for the Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood has been announced by Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program will end with Mozart's cantata "Davidde Penitente."

The two soprano soloists will be Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Cinicillo, but the originally announced tenor soloist, William Lewis, will be replaced by Howard Fried. Mr. Fried's latest engagements have been with the NBC Opera Company on their last two annual tours.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
JUL 14 1961

Munch in Mozart At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will open the second weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this evening in the Music Shed at 8:30 with the first of three all-Mozart programs. In addition to seats in the Shed general admissions are available for all three concerts tonight, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JUL 14 1961

Munch in Mozart At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will open the second weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this evening in the Music Shed at 8:30 with the first of three all-Mozart programs. In addition to seats in the Shed general admissions are available for all three concerts tonight, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUL 9 1961

Three Mozart Concerts At Tanglewood This Week

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, this coming weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert lists the Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and the Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert preceded by an Open Rehearsal in the Shed at 10:00 a.m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (.K 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer in the Concerto for Flute (.K 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano in the Sinfonia Concertante (.K 297b).

Hugh Ross will conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (.K 469) Sunday afternoon, uly 16.

The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will participate. The concert will include Symphony No. 29 (.K 201) and the Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (.K 466), Seymour Lipkin, soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood Thursday to conduct the orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pen[illegible]sion Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

The Fromm Foundation will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. in the Theater to which the public is invited at no admission charge.

The program will include the first American performances of Mr. Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (Frank Pelleg, soloist) String Quartet. Mr. Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version of Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

The Budapest String Quartet will give the second concert of the chamber music series on Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. in the Theater with Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the uartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's uartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Jewish Advocate
BOSTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 27,809
JUL 18 1961

BSO to Perform Music of Mozart At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this week-end, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert, July 14, at 8:30 p.m., will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert, July 15, at 8:30 p.m., preceded by an open rehearsal in the Shed at 10 a.m., will have five first-desk players from the Orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) at the Sunday afternoon, July 16, at 2:30 p.m. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood tonight (Thursday) to conduct the Orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pension Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the Orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 8 1961

Regional Roundup

Munch to Conduct Mozart Concert at Tanglewood

Three Programs Devoted to Famed Composer Scheduled; Danny Kaye On Thursday

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox next week end, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert on July 14 at 8.30 will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

Open Rehearsal at 10

The Saturday evening concert on July 15 at 8.30, preceded by an open rehearsal in the Shed at 10 a. m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (F. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) at the concert Sunday afternoon, July 16, at 2.30. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo and tenor William Lewis, will be heard in the cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood Thursday, July 13, to conduct the orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pension Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

Chamber Concert Monday

The Fromm Foundation will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood Monday at 8.30 in the theater. The concert, to which the public is invited (no admission charge), will honor the four composers in residence on the 1961 Berkshire Music Center faculty at Tanglewood: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Roberto Gerhard. The concert will be under the direction of Richard Burgin, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists. The program will include the first American performances of Mr. Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (Frank Pelleg, soloist) and of Mr. Fortner's Third String Quartet. Mr. Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version—prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival—of Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle."

The Budapest String Quartet—Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola, and Mischa Schneider, cello—will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series on Wednesday, July 12, at 8.30 in the theater. Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to several events at Tanglewood next week. In addition to the Fromm Foundation concert of contemporary chamber music on Monday evening, Friends are invited to the seminar in contemporary music in the Chamber Music Hall at 3.15 Friday, to the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra concert at 3 p. m. Saturday and to the Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert, in the Chamber Music Hall at 10 a. m. on Sunday, July 16.

Haieff Wins Award

The 1961 Horblit Award of $1000 has been made to the American composer, Alexei Haieff. The orchestra has performed three compositions by Mr. Haieff: the Divertimento (ballet, 1944), his Piano Concerto which won the New York Music Critics Circle Award in 1952, and his Symphony No. 2 which won the first American International Music Fund award. Charles Munch and the orchestra have recorded the Symphony No. 2.

In Windsor Locks, Conn., this evening, starting at 7 p. m.

This is the feature event of the three-day bazaar of Windsor Locks Fire Department. Judges for the parade will be located at the corner of Main and Oak Sts., in Windsor Locks, in the judges stand to be erected at that point. Prizes will be awarded to the best appearing fire company, company having the best looking apparatus, fire group coming the longest distance and company having the most men in line.

Awarding of the parade prizes will take place at the park grounds following the parade and later in the evening there will be awarding of prizes.

Included in the midway at the bazaar will be a number of specialty booths, refreshment booths, cake booth, and also a booth for the playing of bingo. Proceeds from the bazaar will be turned into the firemen's activities fund.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 14 1961

Tenor Soloist Changed for Sunday Concert

TANGLEWOOD — A change in the list of soloists for the Sunday afternoon concert at Tanglewood has been announced by Charles Munch, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. The program will end with Mozart's cantata "Davidde Penitente."

The two soprano soloists will be Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Cinicillo, but the originally announced tenor soloist, William Lewis, will be replaced by Howard Fried. Mr. Fried's latest engagements have been with the NBC Opera Company on their last two annual tours.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
JUL 18 1961

PIANIST . . . Seymour Lipkin will be the soloist when the Boston Symphony Orchestra plays Mozart's "Piano Concerto in D Minor, No. 20 (K 466)" at the Tanglewood concert on Sunday afternoon at 2:30. Hugh Ross will conduct.

TROY, N.Y.
TIMES RECORD
D, 40,588
JUL 15 1961

Mozart's Music Will Be Heard At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood this weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart.

Tonight's concert at 8:30 p.m. will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto, Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante.

Hugh Ross has been invited by Doctor Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" at tomorrow's concert at 2:30 p.m. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta LaBianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20, in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Traveler (e)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 169,783
JUL 14 1961

Munch in Mozart At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will open the second weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this evening in the Music Shed at 8:30 with the first of three all-Mozart programs. In addition to seats in the Shed general admissions are available for all three concerts tonight, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

Herald (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 177,105
JUL 14 1961

Munch in Mozart At Tanglewood

Charles Munch will open the second weekend of the Berkshire Festival at Tanglewood, Lenox, this evening in the Music Shed at 8:30 with the first of three all-Mozart programs. In addition to seats in the Shed general admissions are available for all three concerts tonight, tomorrow night and Sunday afternoon at 2:30.

86

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Courier
GT. BARRINGTON, Mass.
Weekly Circ. 2,564
JUL 13 1961

Dr. Munch Offers Mozart Programs

Five Members of Orchestra Soloists Saturday

Boston Symphony Orchestra Will Play First Tanglewood Performance Of The Cantata, "Davidde Penitente", On Sunday With Hugh Ross Conducting.—Choir Will Be Heard.

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood in Lenox this week end, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert at 8:30 will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert, preceded by an open rehearsal in the shed at 10:00 a. m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K.297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) at the Sunday afternoon concert. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood tonight to conduct the orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pension Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1957, warns the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

The second concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have been invited for tonight has been rescheduled for Saturday July 15, at 8:00 p. m. in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

This change from the original schedule was made when it was found that Danny Kaye was available on Thursday only.

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
JUL 11 1961

Munch to Feature Mozart In Tanglewood Concerts

Three concerts devoted to the music of Mozart will be presented by the Boston Symphony Orchestra under the direction of Charles Munch at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., this weekend.

* * *

THE CONCERT of Friday at 8:30 p.m. will consist of the Mozart "Symphonies numbers 35 and 40," the "Adagio and Fugue for Strings, K 546," and the "Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons, K 388."

The Saturday evening concert will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists. Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart "Bassoon Concerto, K 191"; Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the "Concerto for Flute, K 313" and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt and James Stagliano will be heard in the "Sinfonia Concertante, K 297 B."

Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente, K 469" at the July 16 concert at 2:30 p.m. The Tanglewood choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's "Symphony number 29, K 201" and his "Piano Concerto in D minor, number 20, K 466" in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood on Thursday evening t conduct the orchestra in an ex traordinary concert to benefit th pension fund. The program fo this is known only to Kaye.

An open rehearsal will be held in the music shed on Saturday at 10 a.m.

The Budapest String Quartet, Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello, will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series tomorrow at 8:30 p.m. in the theater. The program will consist of Haydn's "Quartet in D major, opus 50, number 6"; the "Quartet number 12," Milhaud; and the Beethoven "Quartet in C major, opus 59, number 3."

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have been invited to several events at Tanglewood during the week. They have been invited to the seminar in contemporary music in the Chamber Music hall at 3:15 p.m. Friday; and to the Berkshire Music Center orchestra concert at 3 p.m. on Saturday. The Berkshire Music Center orchestra usually plays on Thursday night, but this week Thursday has been pre-empted by Kaye. Friends also have been invited to the Berkshire Music Center chamber music concert in the Chamber Music hall Saturday at 10 a.m.

BELLEVILLE, N.J.
TIMES-NEWS
W. 5,702
JUL 27 1961
BORRELLE'S Page One CERTIFIED

Gloria Ciricillo Debuts With Boston Symphony; Has 50 Summer Concerts

Gloria Ciricillo, lyric soprano of 89 Belmohr Street, has just returned from the Berkshire Music Festival in Tanglewood, Massachusetts where she made her debut with the Boston Symphony Orchestra on July 16.

The young artist is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Elia Ciricillo of Belleville. She appeared as a soloist in Mozart's "Davidde Peritente."

A graduate of Belleville High School, she earned her master's degree in music last May at the Manhattan School of Music, New York City.

Miss Ciricillo is scheduled for some 50 concerts in the metropolitan area this summer; she will return to Manhattan College this fall for a season of opera.

GLORIA CIRICILLO

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 11 1961

Mozart Concerts This Weekend At Tanglewood

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood, Lenox, this weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert at 8:30 p. m. will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, and Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388).

The Saturday evening concert at 8:30, preceded by an open rehearsal in the shed at 10 a. m., will have five first-desk players from the orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Dr. Much to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente (K. 469) at the Sunday afternoon concert at 2:30. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis, will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Danny Kaye will be at Tanglewood Thursday to conduct the orchestra in an extraordinary concert to benefit the Pension Fund. The program for this unpredictable adventure is known only to Mr. Kaye but the Orchestra's management, recalling his first encounter as conductor of the Boston Symponhy Orchestra in 1957, has warned the public to be prepared for an evening of high humor.

The Budapest String Quartet—Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello—will give the second concert of the Tanglewood chamber music series tomorrow at 8:30 p. m. in the theater. Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

Music

Mozart to Feature Berkshire Festival

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—This week's concerts at the Berkshire Music festival will be climaxed by programs this evening and tomorrow afternoon of music by Mozart. Dr. Charles Munch, musical director of the Boston Symphony orchestra, will conduct both events.

Hugh Ross

In tomorrow's concert the noted choral conductor, Hugh Ross will direct the Tanglewood Choir. Highlight will be the Cantata "Davidde Penitente." The program will open with the Symphony No. 29 and will be followed by the Piano Concerto, K 466 with Seymour Lipkin as soloist.

An excellent list for the evening events has been scheduled for next week. On Monday, in the Chamber Music hall there will be a composer's forum. For Tuesday, the Tanglewood choir will present a concert in the Theatre. The Beaux Arts trio of New York will be heard in a program of compositions by Beethoven, Rousel and Schubert. This event will be on Wednesday. On Thursday, the BMC orchestra will appear in a concert in the Shed. Adele Addison, soprano, the Festival chorus, and the Boston Symphony will be heard in a concert in the Chamber Music hall on Friday evening.

George Tsandikos, tenor, will be the fourth Lowell born singer to appear in opera in Europe. His name will be added to the list that includes, Madam Estes who sang at Covent Garden, William Martin who sang at the Royal Opera in Paris, Rosalind Elias who has appeared at La Scala and the San Carlo in Naples. Mr. Tsandikos will appear at the opera festival in Athens, Greece.

It has been several years since a child musician from Lowell has played with the Boston Pops orchestra. On Wednesday, Deborah Moriarty scored a well balanced success as she thrilled a tremendous Esplanade audience with her playing of a Haydn Piano Concerto.

The coming months will provide much in the way of fine music, both in this, and several nearby communities. Locally, the Community Concert season is expected to be a definite success.

Highlighting the events to be presented here will be the appearance of the Metropolitan Opera star, Robert Merrill. In nearby Groton, the Community series which are conducted independently, will again offer three concerts. In the famous Andover Celebrity series, three outstanding events are expected to brighten the season.

The music department at Lowell State college continues to expand and attract more and more students. There is no doubt that in a very few seasons the community will be treated to a full schedule of fine events, and each of them provided by members of the undergraduate body.

Two of the earliest names in the field of vocal music in Lowell are those of Edward Everett Adams and Elizabeth Wright Shaw. Mr. Adams who was a member of the family from Chelmsford, and who in turn were directly in line with the early president of this country, was an expert in the art song form. His cultural background was such that he was regarded as an authority in the element of music that has formed the groundwork for the human voice. His near fabulous knowledge of poetry in several languages made his approach to music in French, Italian and German nearly perfect.

Mrs. Shaw, who was one of this country's best known artists and in voice music was a master technician and her students reflected her genius throughout their careers.

New England Newsclip Agency
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2
Sunday Advertiser
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 440,211
JUL 16 1961

Five Delightful Musical Events at Tanglewood

Friends of the Berkshire Music Center are invited to five events this week at Tanglewood. Tomorrow evening the Composer's Forum will be held in the Chamber Music Hall at 8:30. The Tanglewood Choir will be heard on Tuesday evening in the theater; the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra on Thursday evening in the Music Shed; Seminar in Contemporary Music Friday afternoon at 3:15 in the Chamber Music Hall; and Berkshire Music Center Chamber Music, Sunday morning, July 23, at 10 a. m. in the Chamber Music Hall.

Friday and Saturday evening Dr. Charles Munch will conduct the 104-piece Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood. Pierre Monteux makes his first appearance at the Festival next Sunday afternoon, at 2:30 conducting the Orchestra.

Dr. Munch has designated the Friday concert to be given in honor of Gertrude Robinson Smith's 80th birthday. She was instrumental in the formation of the Berkshire Festival and in the building of the Music Shed at Tanglewood. During the concert, the honor guest will be presented with a specially made recording of the "Gloria" by Francis Poulenc. This won the New York Music Critics Circle Award.

Given its world premiere by Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony, with Miss Addison this winter, "Gloria" will receive its first Berkshire Festival performance at Friday's concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Telegram (m)
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 57,783

JUL 15 1961

Music:

All-Mozart Program Heard at Tanglewood

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

LENOX — After Danny Kaye's bravura invasion of Tanglewood Thursday, last night's all-Mozart program by the Boston Symphony Orchestra, conducted by Charles Munch, was the calm after the storm.

That placid state wasn't altered by the inclusion of Shmphony No. 40 in G-minor, K. 550, the biggest "little" symphony of its kind and one of the composer's most poignant cries of despair.

The balance of the program: Symphony No. 35 in C-major, K. 425, "Linz;" Serenade in C-minor for 132 wind instruments K. 388; and adagio and fugue for strings, K. 546.

There was an audience of 3,491. The presence of so many patrons at last weekend's all-Bach series was a heartening revelation. Business-wise, Mozart's music is less of a risk, but it still requires serious devotion on the part of the listener to justify travel time and expense involved to hear two Mozart symphonies and selective chamber music played by an authentic-sized, but depleted-from-ordinary, orchestra.

Serenade of 13 Winds

Last night's program covered a wide scope of contrasts, more than had the Bach. While the two symphonies are cast in the same mold, they are widely separated in personality and mood. The "Linz" abounds in "joie-de-vivre"—No. 40 is dynamic, but approaches despondency. Certainly it lies squarely in the path of rebellion.

The "Linz" got off to a poor start. Attacks were slightly frayed in the slow introduction. In fact, phrasing of the first movement suffered generally from lack of precision.

All of this was rectified in the slow movement, which sang with pure tone and sensitive nuances. For Munch, the minuet was taken at a slow tempo, almost casual and highly effective. The finale sped merrily to a sprightly climax, also at a conservative speed.

The Serenade is a craftily assembled set of four movements, obviously commissioned for its specilized combination of 13 wind instruments.

Sinfonia Concertante Tonight

It was charming, uniquely euphonious, but certainly not piquant or fragile. The real 18th century atmosphere prevailed in the slow movement, where contrasted sounds were best exposed —nasal oboes, sensitive clarinets, thickly voiced horns and penetrating bassoons—two of each. The naivete of the last movement's variations was minimized by expert technical performance.

The adagio and fugue was a heyday for the strings. Beautifully organized bowing and wrist vibrato dispensed richness and tonal warmth. The subject matter of the fugue, originating in low strings, was distributed among the four divisions, maintaining vitality and speed with equal facility. It was developed into a magnificent edifice of sound.

Tonight's program will feature the orchestra's first-desk players in the Concerto for Bassoon in B-flat major, K. 191; Concerto for Flute in G-major, K 313; and Sinfonia Concertante in E-flat, K. auh. 297B. Munch will conduct.

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 14 1961

Whiteston

SOLOISTS for the performance of Mozart's Sinfonia Concertante tomorrow night at Tanglewood are the principal wind instrumentalists of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From left are Ralph Gomberg, oboe; Sherman Walt, bassoon; Gino Cioffi, clarinet, and James Stagliano, horn. Mr. Walt will also be heard on same program as soloist in Mozart concerto

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 15 1961

BROOKLYN, N.Y.
KINGS COURIER
W. 15,370

JUL 15 1961

MUSIC ART DRAMA

Charles Munch and the Boston Symphony Orchestra will perform three concerts at Tanglewood (Lenox, Mass.) this weekend, each devoted to the music of Mozart. The Friday concert (July 14, 8:30) will consist of the Mozart Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and his Serenade in C minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388)

The Saturday evening concert (July 15, 8:30), preceded by an open rehearsal in the Shed at 10:00 a.m., will have five first-desk players from the Orchestra as soloists: Sherman Walt will be soloist in the Mozart Bassoon Concerto (K. 191), Doriot Anthony Dwyer will be guest in a performance of the Concerto for Flute (K. 313) and Ralph Gomberg, Gino Cioffi, Sherman Walt, and James Stagliano will be heard in the Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297b).

Hugh Ross has been invited by Doctor Munch to conduct the first Tanglewood performance of Mozart's Cantata "Davidde Penitente" (K. 469) at the Sunday afternoon (July 16, 2:30) concert. The Tanglewood Choir, sopranos Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo, and tenor William Lewis will be heard in the Cantata. The concert will include Mozart's Symphony No. 29 (K. 201) and his Piano Concerto in D minor, No. 20 (K. 466), in which Seymour Lipkin will be soloist.

Tanglewood Music: Mozart

On Friday, Saturday and Sunday, the Boston Symphony is playing Mozart concerts which include his flute and bassoon concerti, three symphonies and a cantata.

In November of 1781, the Grand Duke and Duchess of Russia traveled West for a visit of state with Joseph II, Emperor of Austria.

Two months later, Joseph's guests were still at the Viennese Court. The Emperor had put himself out to entertain his royal visitors, and one of the diversions he arranged in January, 1782, was a contest in virtuosity between two masters of the clavier, Muzio Clementi and Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart.

* * *

Clementi was a 29-year-old hero of the London concert stage. Mozart was 26 when the contest took place and had been performing in public since he was 6. The Emperor, who considered Mozart "a confirmed talent," placed money on his victory and won his bet.

For his performance at court, Mozart received 50 ducats ($112.50)—undoubtedly welcome to a composer and performer who found it increasingly difficult to make ends meet. Mozart would have preferred regular salaried employment at the imperial court, but he was not to receive a royal appointment until 1787, four years before he died at the age of 35.

* * *

Friends and admirers he always had. But to keep a family fed and housed, a musician of the 18th century needed more than that. Concert fees and royalties were small, and no copyright laws protected the composer from piracy. A wealthy patron with a taste for good music would have served Mozart well, but he never found one.

France, Britain and Italy had cheered the child prodigy from Salzburg, Austria, who could play the most difficult works at first reading and who composed music as well as he played it. But the gleam of novelty tarnished as the wonder child grew older, and in the final months of his life Mozart was reduced to the ignominy of asking his friends for loans which they, and he, knew he would probably never repay.

Difficult times never seemed to affect Mozart's productivity, which was phenomenal. Apparently he could compose in his mind and then set aside a complex symphonic or operatic thought, fully scored, until the moment arrived to set it on paper. While his wife was giving birth to their first son, he busied himself with writing a string quartet. Three of his finest symphonies were composed in two months, at a time when Mozart was begging for money.

* * *

In the fall of 1791, he turned again to a requiem which he had begun to write that summer. His health was not good and grew worse as the year's end approached. The requiem was still incomplete when he died on Dec. 5, probably from an inflammation of the kidneys.

Mozart's funeral was a poor man's funeral. His widow and two surviving children were left heavily in debt, and a pauper's burial in a common grave with other Viennese was all they could afford. There is no monument to mark the grave, because its location is not known.

— Walter Howard

88

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 21 1961

Designed for Women

Pan in Taffeta

By Louise Sweeney

DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER has a finger on fashion as well as the flute. Saturday night, as soloist in a Mozart flute concerto at Tanglewood, she graced the stage with a chic silk taffeta evening dress. Printed with cymbal-sized roses in pink and green, the dress had a tight bodice, tiny straps, and a bell skirt which allowed her to brace herself in a firm, wide stance as she played. The audience was delighted by the pure beauty of her fluting but we the women gave an extra burst of applause for an exclusively female feat: performing the whole concerto on high heels.

This Pan in taffeta is the only woman who has the distinction of being a first chair player in the Boston Symphony Orchestra. As a soloist Saturday night, she had a qualm that would have bothered her male counterparts. She was afraid that the stage set, originally battle ship grey, wouldn't be right with her gown and was delighted to find a deep red set used Saturday night—a perfect foil for the dress she'd chosen.

* * *

BLACK AND WHITE is her choice for a performance—since Mrs. Dwyer dresses to blend with the rest of the orchestra. "But they just don't make many evening dresses that are right for the stage," she says. She explains that many of her gowns are the result of "creative sessions" with her dressmaker. In fact, redesigning gowns for the stage has become a kind of hobby for her. "We just take the material and start draping . . . we never work from a pattern," she says. For winter, she likes black velvet, for summer, silky cotton. She is especially fond of cotton because of its intrinsic simplicity. "It's not too ornate — a dress for the stage must have simplicity of fabric as well as line," she explains.

Her favorite stage dress is one in which she had her portrait painted. She and her dressmaker designed it together, cutting and stitching each piece separately in muslin for a dress rehearsal before making it in the finished fabric. The fabric was black peau de soie. It was designed "from nothing," with kimono sleeves, V neckline and empire bodice; the skirt was a sheath in front which extended into a full, pleated back. When the BSO travels far and wide on concert tours, Mrs. Dwyer naturally prefers dresses which pack easily. Her favorites are silk gowns so well made they fold up to the size of handkerchiefs, and need little or no ironing.

* * *

BUT FASHION is a pleasant frivolity compared with Mrs. Dwyer's precedent-shattering career as a flutist. When the BSO broke with tradition by engaging her, a woman, for a major desk, there were comments aplenty in Boston. "A very serious matter," wrote critic Rudolph Elie in the Herald, "and I am not a little dismayed about it." She had auditioned for the position here at Tanglewood the previous summer, where she performed works by Bach, Ravel, and Debussy in three separate sessions with conductor Charles Munch. When she was finally appointed first flutist, on a year's trial, critic Elie again bristled, "I find it difficult to accept the notion that a lady flute player could ever succeed George S. Laurents (former first flute for the BSO) either as an artist or as an object of such veneration." Nine years of highly applauded performance by Mrs. Dwyer have proved misogynist-music critic Elie wrong.

* * *

AT THAT TIME, in 1952, she pointed out: "I am not establishing an over-all precedent as a professional woman flutist, for there are woman first flutists in both the Houston and Indianapolis symphony orchestras." It was just that women had been banned in Boston before that from major desks. She added that "I believe opportunities in my field are about equal for men and women possessing equal talent and ability." A graduate of the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, she had proved this previously as second flute in Washington's National Symphony, and the Los Angeles Philharmonic, first flute in the NBC Standard and Hollywood Bowl Symphonies.

* * *

AS A WOMAN, Mrs. Dwyer brings a certain femininity to the flute. She does apply lipstick before a performance, but generally finds it piped off by the end of the concert. Her mouth, like that of all flutists, is a sensitive asset. She must be careful about eating excessively salty foods before a performance because they dry and irritate the lips; cheese puckers her mouth, too. Last Saturday night before her flute concerto, a friend had inadvertently prepared an East Indian curry dinner so flaming hot it would have ruined fluting to eat it. She did eat the curry, but later —after the performance.

Doriot Anthony Dwyer

During the nine years she has been first flute with the BSO, Mrs. Dwyer has had only one womanly leave of absence. That was last summer, when she gave birth to her first child, a daughter. Married to a doctor, Mrs. Dwyer has a full schedule with homemaking, mothering, and a full-time career as flutist. Hobbies? "I really don't need a hobby, having the baby," she says with a flute-like laugh.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

JUL 7 1961

Public Invited To Special Concert Of Chamber Music

The annual concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood sponsored by the Fromm Foundation will be given in the 1200-seat Theatre Monday evening, July 10. The public is cordially invited to this special program, at no charge, which will be performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guests. The concert will honor the four composers in residence at Tanglewood in 1961: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss, and Roberto Gerhard. Three of the four compositions scheduled will be given their first American performances, the fourth work will be conducted by the composer.

Fortner's Third String Quartet (1948) will be performed and a performance of Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (1956), with Frank Pelleg, harpsichordist, will be heard. Neither of these compositions has been previously performed in America. Soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version—prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival—of "Time Cycle" (1959-60) by Lukas Foss. Aaron Copland, chairman of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will conduct his Nonet for Solo Strings (1960).

In addition to the formal concert of contemporary chamber music, the Fromm Foundation sponsors two other projects at Tanglewood: weekly lecture-concerts comprising the seminar in contemporary music—aspects of new music—series; and the Fromm Foundation Fellowships.

The seminars, to which friends of the Berkshire Music Center and the general public are invited, are held in the Tanglewood Chamber Music Hall each Friday afternoon.

Chamber Music At Tanglewood

The annual concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass., sponsored by the Fromm Foundation will be given in the 1,200-seat theater Monday at 8:30 P. M.

The public is invited free to the program, which will be performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guests. The concert will honor the four composers in residence at Tanglewood in 1961: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss, and Roberto Gerhard. Three of the four compositions scheduled will be given their first American performances, the fourth work will be conducted by the composer.

(Continued on page 21)

Tanglewood

(Continued from page 6)

For tonight's Boston Symphony Orchestra concert, Charles Munch will conduct Bach's Brandenburg Concertos 2, 3, 5, and 6. Tomorrow afternoon at 2:30 P. M., the concert will be Bach's "Sinfonia" from "Easter Cantata", Piano Concerto in D Minor", and the "Magnificat".

Next week-end will be devoted to Mozart, with Munch conducting. Friday night's schedule is "Symphony No. 36", "Serenade for Wind Instruments", "Adagio and Fugue for Strings", and "Symphony No. 40". Saturday night: "Bassoon Concerto", "Flute Concerto", and "Sinfonia Concertante". Sunday at 2:30 P. M.: "Symphony No. 29", "Piano Concerto", and cantata, "Davidde Penitente".

Seymour Lipkin, who will conduct the Teaneck Symphony next season, will be the featured artist in the Mozart piano concerto.

Thursday night Danny Kaye will conduct the Boston Symphony in a pension fund concert.

THE RECORD JULY 6

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931

JUL 10 1961

Fromm Concert At Tanglewood Tonight at 8:30

TANGLEWOOD — The annual concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood sponsored by the Fromm Foundation will be given in the 1200-seat theater this evening at 8:30. The public is invited to this special program, at no charge, which will be performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guests. The concert will honor the four composers in residence at Tanglewood in 1961: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss, and Roberto Gerhard. Three of the four compositions scheduled will be given their first American performances. the fourth work will be conducted by the composer.

Adele Addison Soloist

Fortner's Third String Quartet (1948) will be performed and a performance of Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (1956), with Frank Pelleg, harpsichordist, will be heard. Neither of these compositions has been previously performed in America. Soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version—prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival—of "Time Cycle" (1959-60) by Lukas Foss. Aaron Copland, chairman of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will conduct his Nonet for Solo Strings (1960).

In addition to the formal concert of contemporary chamber music, the Fromm Foundation sponsors two other projects at Tanglewood: weekly lecture-concerts comprising the Seminar in Contemporary Music, "The Aspects of New Music" series; and the Fromm Foundation Fellowships.

The seminars, to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and the general public are invited, are held in the Tanglewood Chamber Music Hall each Friday afternoon at 3:15. At each seminar the composer lectures on his music and musical thought. Several of his characteristic chamber works are then performed.

Roberto Gerhard spoke at the first seminar and his Woodwind Quintet (1928) and Nonet (1957) were performed. The composers to appear at the remaining seminars are Billy Jim Layton (July 14), William Schuman (July 21), Yehudi Wyner (July 28), Seymour Shifrin (Aug. 4), Wolfgang Fortner (Aug. 11), and Salvatore Martirano (Aug. 18).

Fromm Foundation Grants were awarded to 11 musicians this summer for the study and performance of contemporary music at the Berkshire Music Center.

The Fromm Music Foundation began its Tanglewood program in 1956. The foundation is headed by Paul Fromm of Chicago, its founder and president, and Alexander Schneider, its associate director. Dedicated to the furtherance of contemporary music, the foundation commissions new works, awards prizes for existing works, and sponsors the study, performance, publication, and recording of contemporary music.

The World Of Music
BLADE

Fromm Concert - July 10 -

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Journal
PROVIDENCE, R. I.
Circ. 189,553
AUG 27 1961

LUKAS FOSS
Boston Symphony soloist

Experimental Music Performed At Tanglewood

THE BLADE: TOLEDO, OHIO, SUNDAY, AUGUST

The World Of Music

Lukas Foss' 'Time-Cycle' Is Praised

BY LEE STEELE

IS contemporary music so removed from pleasant sounds that much of it really becomes a collection of bangs, clangs, booms, whistles, groans and the like?

Such an assortment of sounds came over the government-owned British Broadcasting Corp. in June under the guise of the "premiere of an avant-garde work." Early this month some BBC employees admitted the 12-minute piece was a hoax.

Are there contemporary works by serious composers that reflect an honest attempt to experiment with sounds and with electronic equipment?

★ ★ ★

THE ANSWER to both questions could be affirmative or negative, depending on which composer's works you choose to expose your ears.

This summer, I heard a number of experimental pieces written by young composers in residence at Tanglewood, where the Boston Symphony Orchestra maintains its summer home as well as a music school.

At one session, the young composers permitted the audience to quiz them. One listener, obviously exhausted by the amount of jarring, dissonant, "tune-less" and "unmelodic" selections on the program, asked wearily, "Don't you ever yearn to compose in the classic form?"

The immediate rejoinder was: "Do you have an urge to speak in Old English, and live in a stone house with a thatched roof and a dirt floor?"

And that seems to sum up the contemporary composers' attitude. It's one which is perfectly justified, because history is filled with examples of audience distaste for new works at first hearing.

★ ★ ★

INCIDENTALLY, Aaron Copland, dean of American composers, moderated the panel. Following a lengthy question and answer session between audience and composers, Mr. Copland observed: "I have a feeling we're not going to settle this."

During another session on contemporary music, I jotted down the phrase: "a musical Tower of Babel." The piece that provoked this comment was a sextet "for any six instruments." The composer chose, for that performance, a harpsichord, percussion, bassoon, cello, violin, clarinet and slide trombone.

The most exciting modern piece I heard at Tanglewood was the Time-Cycle for Soprano and Four Instruments", which won for its composer a 1961 award from the Music Critics Circle of New York.

Composer-conductor Lukas Foss played the celeste and piano and also conducted. The arrangement for full orchestra was given last season by the New York Philharmonic. The arrangement was presented at Tanglewood was a first performance of the chamber music version which later was heard at the 1961 Aspen Music Festival in Colorado.

Adele Addison was the soprano soloist.

★ ★ ★

"TIME-CYCLE," a musical exposition on death and time, uses as text four literary excerpts from W. H. Auden, A. E. Hausman, Kafka and Nietzsche.

At a lecture some days before the concert, Composer Foss expressed his preference for "electronic music played live." To hear "Time-Cycle" is to understand Mr. Foss' comment. For he uses instruments—the celeste, vibraphone, cello and clarinet, and even the voice as vehicles of sounds that resemble those made electronically.

The music for the Kafka excerpt kept Soprano Addison's voice leaping all over the scale. Composer Foss wanted the singer to assume a different personality with each song. In one, the singer was to perform a speech-song, a type of vocal utterance halfway between speech and song (made most famous by Schoenberg who designated such parts as sprechstimme).

The closing section of the 4-part cycle was, in the composer's words, the "most lyrical and most organized." He set out to create a "Wagnerian atmosphere", and he does, with much of this final statement on time bearing a marked resemblance to the Wesendonck songs of Wagner.

★ ★ ★

THE "TIME-CYCLE" reportedly has been recorded by Columbia Records although a release date has not been announced.

Composer Foss, a University of Southern California professor since 1953, turned 39 on Aug. 15. He came to the United States from his native Berlin (via Paris for study) and is a 1939 graduate of Curtis Institute of Music at Philadelphia. Formerly, Mr. Foss studied with Paul Hindemith.

The honors heaped on Composer Foss are numerous. He has been a guest conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra; appeared with a number of orchestras as pianist (I heard him as soloist in the Bach D minor Piano Concerto at Tanglewood) and is one of the country's most prolific young composers. His opera buffa, "The Jumping Frog of Calaveras County," his "Symphony of Chorales" composed in honor of Albert Schweitzer, and his nonjazz ensemble improvizations show the wide range of Mr. Foss' musical horizons.

CHICAGO, ILL.
TRIBUNE
D. 869,958 S. 1,186,625
JUN 25 1961

Adele Addison will perform Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle," which she commissioned recently with the aid of a Ford Foundation grant, at this year's Berkshire Music festival at Tanglewood, near Lenox, Mass. She will sing at a concert of contemporary chamber music July 10, sponsored by the Fromm Foundation.

• • •

Opera scenery [illegible]

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
GAZETTE
D. 47,136
JUL 10 1961

Tanglewood Contemporary Music Concert Is Tonight

The annual concert of contemporary chamber music sponsored by the Fromm Foundation will be given at 8:30 p.m. tonight in the 1200-seat theater at Tanglewood, Lenox, Mass.

* * *

OPEN TO THE PUBLIC at no charge, the program will be presented by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guests.

The four composers in residence at Tanglewood this season will be honored. They are Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Roberto Gerhard. Three of the four compositions scheduled will be given their first American performances; the fourth work will be conducted by the composer.

Fortner's "Third String Quartet" (1948) will be performed and a performance of Gerhard's "Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion" (1956) with Frank Pelleg, harpsichordist, will be heard. Soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version—prepared for the "Time Cycle" (1959-60) by Lukas Foss. Copland, chairman of the Berkshire Music Center faculty will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings." (1960).

* * *

THE FROMM FOUNDATION also sponsors two other projects at Tanglewood; weekly lectures concerts comprising the seminar in contemporary music—aspects of new music [illegible] Fromm Foundation fellowships.

The seminars are held each Friday at 3:15 p.m. in the Tanglewood chamber music hall.

Fromm Foundation grants were awarded to 11 musicians this summer for the study and performance of contemporary music at the Berkshire Music Center. Assigned to the department of composition, five of the musicians are members of the faculty and six are fellows of the department.

The Fromm Music Foundation began its Tanglewood program in 1956. The foundation is headed by Paul Fromm of Chicago with Alexander Schneider as associate director. The foundation commissions new works, awards prizes for existing works and sponsors the study, performance, publication and recording of contemporary music.

LUKAS FOSS CONDUCTS HIS OWN 'TIME CYCLE'
Composer also plays piano at Tanglewood

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
D. 182,346 S. 177,801
AUG 27 1961

165 Church Street — New York

HARTFORD, CONN.
TIMES
D. 124,088
JUL 10 1961

Chamber Music Heard Tonight

Special to the Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass.—The Fromm Foundation will sponsor a concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood tonight at 8:30 in the Theater. The free concert will honor the four composers in residence on the 1961 Berkshire Music Center faculty at Tanglewood: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss and Roberto Gerhard.

The concert will be directed by Richard Burgin, with members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guest artists.

90

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 11 1961

Music Review

Experiments at Tanglewood

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE FROMM Music Foundation has been making contributions to the Berkshire Music Center for six years. Last night it sponsored a concert of works by four composers who were all present, and, in two instances, participating. It furnished the only stimulus of new music that Tanglewood will provide this season. The performers were members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Richard Burgin, concertmaster.

* * *

CURRENT MUSICAL expression has been searching to overleap the classic bounds ever since whatever time one chooses to place the dividing line. Probably for most of last night's group Schoenberg might be counted the pioneer. There is no longer any harmonic relationship, any means of sound productions or combinations thereof which is ignored or considered inviolate or frivolous. An isolated "pop" on the side of an empty barrel or the crash of a kitchen sink being pushed over is accepted as a serious expression, and probably can well be.

In this sense music is keeping up with the allied arts. The Museum of Modern Art exposes a canvas to which adheres a wrinkled, concave crescent of soiled burlap splotched with crank case oil with the legend "Genesis." We overheard a teacher guiding her class of eight-year-olds past the exhibit and correcting one little boy: "No, the word is not genius. That's something else."

* * *

THERE ARE FEW who would dare predict how much of this current product will attain a degree of permanence. This is all music worthy of the most respectful attention. What they wish to convey and convince is the moot question.

Of the four last night, Aaron Copland's nonette for strings departed least from our more conventionally-attuned ears. He writes here (1960) for three each of violins, violas and cellos, and draws long, sustained lines using the normal attributes of the instruments, varying from a bucolic idyll to a lofty serenity. His choice of instruments inevitably shifts the musical specific gravity to the lower, grateful registers for lavish, rich color. Copland directed from a chair placed on an elevated podium, and stimulated his musicians to fervent and intense tonal depths.

* * *

IT WAS the other three composers who gave pause. Lukas Foss directed his own reduction to voice and four instruments of his "Time Cycle," which was composed for voice and orchestra. Foss himself participated at the piano and celesta, directing vehemently with his other hand, and mouthing the words Adele Addison was singing with silent shouts. There are four sections to his cycle, based on poems of Auden, Housman, Kafka and Nietzsche. Although we are not acquainted with the poems, we found it difficult to believe they could have been so vindicative as Foss, seated so that he faced the audience, would have made us believe with his athletic thrusts and fang-like contortions. Miss Addison was in her best voice of her three consecutive appearances here, but cellist Madeleine Foley, clarinet Rosario Mazzeo and percussion James Firth counted themselves adequate if they responded to the jabs and thrusts of the composer.

Foss' music is in much the same idiom as that heard on last year's Fromm concert when Luciano Berio's work was heard. Foss does not pretend to offer a continuous flow of sound, but the large audience was tremendously enthusiastic and eager to show him how fully they appreciated his music.

* * *

THE FIRST and last offerings of the evening enlisted the participation of an excellent musician, harpsichordist Frank Pelleg. To begin the program he, with flute Doriot Anthony Dwyer, violin Richard Burgin and cello Carl Zeis, played a prelude, variations and Epilogue on an original theme of Wolfgang Fortner, entitled "New Delhi Music," but it was written for a 1955 UNESCO meeting in that city and has no geographical significance. It belongs to the category of Foss' "Cycle." The four movements are fragmentary, and interweaving, if any, is not clearly apparent.

Pelleg directed from his keyboard the final number of the evening: The concerto for harpsichord, strings and percussion of Roberto Gerhard, a 1956 work being played for the first in the United States. Pelleg's performance was brilliant. We will have to have more time to arrive at a justification of the use of that instrument, in quite conventional rhythmic patterns although often in most imaginative clusters of notes, against a dozen strings in textures produced by all exotic devices of bowed instruments: harmonics, sordinis, ponticello, and nearly always at the top of the fingerboard. The three movements are in easily definable moods: Allegro maestoso, largo and allegro spiritoso, and the performance certainly was spirited.

* * *

A MEASURE of the importance of the work the Fromm Foundation is here achieving may be gauged from the number of composers in the audience who had come as spectators from far and near to be present at an event which they deem of the highest significance by one of the most active and intelligently directed forces for exploration in contemporary music.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Transcript (e)
NORTH ADAMS, Mass.
Circ. 13,127
JUL 8 1961

TONIGHT —

Play Contemporary Music on Monday At Tanglewood

The annual concert of contemporary chamber music at Tanglewood, Lenox, sponsored by the Fromm Foundation will be given in the 1200-seat Theater Monday evening at 8:30 p.m. The public has been invited without charge to this special program which will be performed by members of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and guests. The concert will honor the four composers in residence at Tahglewood in 1961: Aaron Copland, Wolfgang Fortner, Lukas Foss, and Roberto Gerhard. Three of the four compositions scheduled will be given their first American performances, the fourth week will be conducted by the composer.

Fortner's Third String Quartet (1948) will be performed and a performance of Gerhard's Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion (1956), with Frank Pelleg, harpsichordist, will be heard. Neither of these compositions has been previously performed in America. Soprano Adele Addison will be soloist in the first performance of the new chamber music version — prepared for the 1961 Aspen Music Festival — of "Time Cycle" (1959-60) by Lukas Foss. Aaron Copland, chairman of the Berkshire Music Center faculty, will conduct his Nonet for Solo Strings (1960).

In addition to the formal concert of contemporary chamber music, the Fromm Foundation sponsors two other projects at Tanglewood: weekly lecture-concerts comprising the Seminar in Contemporary Music — Aspects of New Music — series, and Fromm Foundation Fellowships.

The Seminars, to which Friends of the Berkshire Music Center and the general public are invited are held in the Tanglewood Chamber Music Hall each Friday afternoon at 3:15. At each Seminar the composer lectures on his music and musical thought, and several of his characteristic chamber works are then performed.

Roberto Gerhard spoke at the first Seminar, his Woodwind Quintet (1928) and Nonet (1957) were performed. The composers to appear at the remaining seminars are Billy Jim Layton (July 14), William Schuman (July 21), Yehudi Wyner (July 28), Seymour Shifrin (August 4), Wolfgang Fortner (August 11), and Salvatore Martirano (August 18).

Fromm Foundation Grants were awarded to 11 musicians this summer for the study and performance of contemporary music at the Berkshire Music Center. Assigned to the department of composition, five of the musicians are members of the faculty and six are fellows of the department. The Fromm fellows perform at all the Friday afternoon lecture-concerts, at the Composers Forums, and in demonstrations and illustrations for the benefit of the student composition classes.

The Fromm Music Foundation began its Tanglewood program in 1956. The Foundation is headed by Paul Fromm of Chicago, its founder and president, and Alexander Schneider, its associate director. Dedicated to the furtherance of contemporary music, the Foundation commissions new works, awards prizes for existing works, and sponsors the study, performance, publication, and recording of contemporary music.

N. Y. Times
1 07 19
38 M

Carter, Foss and Poulenc Works Get Music Critics Circle Awards

Lukas Foss

Francis Poulenc

Elliott Carter

Lukas Foss, Elliott Carter and Francis Poulenc are the winners of this year's awards of the Music Critics Circle of New York.

Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle" for soprano and orchestra was the winner in the orchestral category. Mr. Carters String Quartet No. 2 was an easy victor in the chamber music category. M. Poulenc's "Gloria" was judged the best choral work. The Circle voted to give no award in the opera category.

The prizes were awarded this year for the best new works in an extended period that included all of 1960 and the first four and a half months of 1961. The Circle has given its awards in the past on the basis of calendar years. The extended award period represents a transition to season awards.

In spite of the longer period and the larger numbers of works under consideration, the decisions were much more clear cut than they have been in recent years. All won on the first ballot.

The Carter work, which was first performed by the Juilliard Quartet on March 25, 1960, received all the votes but one. This was cast for Ned Rorem's Trio for Flute, 'Cello and Piano. The Carter, which has been performed in New York twice since its première was widely praised and won last year's Pulitzer Prize.

Mr. Foss' "Time Cycle" was performed by Adele Addison and the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein on Oct. 20 of last year. It was written for Miss Addison at her request on a Ford Foundation Commissioning Program grant. The work has several unusual features including a passage in which the players of the orchestra softly count out loud.

The work employs a number of different texts in different languages, all referring to time. The composer has indicated that he plans to add two more sections to it.

The Philharmonic performance also included non-vocal sections that were improvised by Mr. Foss, who is a pianist, with an instrumental ensemble. These interludes are considered by the composer to be an optional part of the work. The Circle did not take a position on whether the award referred only to the composed part or included the improvisations.

Other compositions that received votes in the orchestral category were William Schuman's Symphony No. 7, Ben Weber's Piano Concerto, Walter Piston's Symphony No. 7, George Rochberg's Symphony No. 2 and Gunther Schuller's "Spectra."

Miss Addison participated also in the first New York performance of the Poulenc "Gloria" on April 8. She sang with the Boston Symphony and the Chorus Pro Musica under Charles Munch. The only other work to receive votes in the choral category was Frank Martin's "Le Vin Herbé."

In the opera category, votes were cast for Werner Egk's "The Inspector General," Stanley Hollingsworth's "The Mother" and Poulenc's "La Voix Humaine."

WASHINGTON MEMORIAL

SCHENECTADY, N.Y.
UNION-STAR
D. 35,366
JUL 10 1961

Tanglewood Festival Program Announced

LENOX, Mass., July 10 — The week's events at the Berkshire Music Festival at Tanglewood will begin tonight with a concert of contemporary chamber music, open to the public without charge.

Aaron Copland will conduct his "Nonet for Solo Strings" and the program will include Roberto Gerhard's "Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion," Lukas Foss' "Time Cycle with Adele Addison, soprano, as soloist, and Wolfgang Fortners "Third String Quartet." This special progarm is sponsored by the Fromm Foundation.

Chamber Music Wednesday

The Budapest String Quartet will give the second program in the regular chamber music series Wednesday at 8:30 p.m. Works by Haydn, Milhaud and Beethoven will be played.

The Boston Symphony Orchestra, directed by Charles Munch, will present three Mozart programs with the first scheduled Friday when the Symphonies Nos. 35 and 40, the Adagio and Fugue for Strings (K. 546) and the "Serenade in C Minor for Two Oboes, Two Clarinets, Two Horns and Two Bassoons (K. 388)" will make up the program.

The concert Saturday night will include the "Bassoon Concerto (K. 191)," "Concerto for Flute (K. 313)" and "Sinfonia Concertante (K. 297B)."

Mozart Program Sunday

The third Mozart program Sunday afternoon will include the cantata, "Davidde Penitente," "Symphony No. 29" and "Piano Concerto in D. Minor, No. 20."

There will be a concert Thursday at 8:30 p.m., conducted by Danny Kaye, for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund.

Other events at Tanglewood during the week will be the open rehearsal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra Saturday at 10 a.m. and the seminar on contemporary music Friday at 3:15 p.m. when composer Billy Jim Layton will appear.

ALBANY, N.Y.
KNICKERBOCKER NEWS
D. 66,353
JUL 11 1961

91

Tanglewood Tosses Tones in Tuneful Modern Triumph

LUKAS FOSS
Leads his "Time Cycle"

By TED STRONGIN
Knickerbocker News
Staff Writer

A pair of specialized musical instruments were called away from their regular tasks last night at Tanglewood and put to the service of contemporary concert music.

One of them the harpsichord, flourished a couple of centuries ago and is just gradually beginning to make a dent on music composed in our own century. The other, the vibraharp, is much more at home in jazz, or was until yesterday.

The occasion was a concert of four works by four living composers, all present, all on the Tanglewood staff. The event was endowed by the Fromm Foundation.

★ ★ ★

BESIDES THE TWO unusual instruments, a very familiar one, the human voice, was stretched far beyond what it is ordinarily called upon for, with stunning effect.

The voice belonged to Adele Addison, soprano. It was heard in "Time Cycle," a set of songs by Lukas Foss. The piece originally was written for symphony orchestra. It was played for the first time last night in a new chamber music version. In its original guise, it won a New York Music Critics Circle prize. Mr. Foss has reduced the instrumental force to piano, clarinet, cello and percussion (including vibraharp).

"Time Cycle" is based on passages of prose and poetry by Auden Housman Kafka and Nietzsche.

★ ★ ★

THE COMPOSER makes his points by shifting sonorites about and placing touches of color and sudden accents at key points. Most fascinating are the composite sounds the composer creates—as for instance, increasing the life of piano tones with vibraharp echo—and so on. Mr. Foss creates urgency by carefully planned shifts in quality.

Miss Addison is equal to the workout Mr. Foss has given her. In this day when the musicianship of sopranos is a matter for jokes, it was wonderful to see a singer using a score just like everyone else and nodding vigorously along with other people's parts when hers was silent.

Mr. Foss uses vocal difficulties to create excitement and emphasis. In phrases such as Auden's "what happens to the living when we die?" one finds oneself following Miss Addison with startled attention.

★ ★ ★

THE COMPOSER was at the piano, so one must assume the performance to be authoritative. However, I would have liked a wilder, rougher reading of this striking piece, less held back, more emphatic.

Aaron Copland, dean of all Tanglewood composers and head of the faculty, offered his Nonet for Strings (1960). He himself conducted a group of Boston Symphony members who were the evening's instrumental personnel.

The composer creates a central mass of relatively dense musical matter that keeps convoluting on itself. This is the impression it gives. Occasionally a highlight becomes apparent as one solo instrument of other detaches itself from the mass for a moment. But the Nonet is mainly group communication.

★ ★ ★

ONE COULD detect more intensity and more stateliness in the work than was apparent in yesterday's performance. But then again, the composer was on the podium so perhaps that's the way he meant the piece to be.

The other two works played yesterday both use harpsichord. Wolfgang Fortner, over from Germany for the summer, was represented by his "New Delhi Music (1960), a quartet for flute, violin, cello and harpsichord. Robert Gerhard, originally from Spain, since 1936 from England, offered a Concerto for Harpsichord, Strings and Percussion. Frank Pelleg was the excellent harpsichordist and also led the concerto.

In his small quartet, Mr. Fortner creates more virtuosc excitement with the harpsichord than does Mr. Gerhard in his whole, three-movement concerto.

THE GERHARD concerto is so regular in matters of rhythm that after a while the whole thing sounds like a finger exercise without a home. Both Mr. Fortner and Mr. Gerhard are followers of Schoenberg.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955

JUL 10 1961

New Date For Berkshire Center Music Program

The second concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have been invited for Thursday evening, July 13, has been rescheduled for Saturday afternoon, July 15, at 3 p. m. in the Music Shed at Tanglewood.

This change from the original schedule was made when it was found that Danny Kaye was available on Thursday only to visit Tanglewood to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special Pension Fund program.

Cleophas Dumais, Sr., 88, of Indian Orchard, a retired grocer, is dead.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200

Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUL 5 1961

Program Change

The second concert of the Berkshire Music Center Orchestra to which the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center have been invited for Thursday evening, July 13, has been rescheduled for Saturday afternoon, July 15, at 3 in the music shed at Tanglewood.

This change from the original schedule was made when it was found that Danny Kaye was available on Thursday only to visit Tanglewood to conduct the Boston Symphony Orchestra in a special pension fund program.

92

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

July 12

The Budapest String Quartet

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 8 1961

THE BUDAPEST STRING QUARTET will play works of Haydn, Milhaud and Beethoven at the second Wednesday evening chamber music concert of the Berkshire Festival. The July 12 performance will be held at 8:30 in the theater at Tanglewood. Members of the quartet are Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violinists, Boris Kroyt, viola, and Mischa Schneider, violoncello.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 13 1961

Budapest Quartet in Concert At Tanglewood Shed, Lenox

BY GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to the Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Four Russians known as the Budapest Quartet returned to Tanglewood last night for the second event in the Chamber Music Series in the Theater-Concert Hall.

Once again the unanimity of accent and rhythmic vitality of this famous string quartet were much in evidence in a program by Haydn, Milhaud, and Beethoven, although rather sticky weather seemed to play havoc with the intonation of the performers.

In Haydn's Quartet in D major (Op. 50, No. 6) the performers substituted dynamic thrust for suavity, which was not altogether the most persuasive approach to this music. Here, as elsewhere, the vertical cohesian of the performance was something remarkable to hear. I have seldom heard First Violinist Roisman play with as much vigor.

* * *

DARIUS MILHAUD'S 12th Quartet (he has written 17 or 18) is dedicated to Faure but, to my mind, it only fleetingly reflects the clarity and elegance to whom it is dedicated. There is no dearth of melodic content, yet somehow it lacks the compact eloquence that Faure could inject into a French art song.

Perhaps the most affecting movement is the elegiac Lent, which the Budapest Quartet played with sensitive attention to coloristic effects. The finale, too, had a certain charm and roistering gayety. ety.

However, the Budapest was completely in its province in the Third "Rasoumovsky" Quartet (Op. 59, No. 3), which may not be as monumental in concept as the two preceding quartets. This was what the audience came to hear and they were richly rewarded.

* * *

THESE FAMED ensemblists have so immersed themselves in the quartet music of Beethoven over the years that their playing has the vigor and grace of a highly trained group of precision dancers. Everything falls neatly in place.

Yet there is considerably more than precision; there is a sense of the inner struggle of the composer in a performance of Beethoven by he Budapest. It is an experience that does not leave you after the concert.

The only deterrent to complete enjoyment of this concert which was attended by some 1580 persons, was the omnipresent mosquitos which descended en masse shortly after the program began.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 12 1961

Budapest Quartet Set for Tanglewood

The Budapest String Quartet—Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello—will give the second chamber music series concert tonight (8:30 p. m.) in the Tanglewood Theater, Lenox, Mass.

Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

92

Theatre - Concert Hall — Tanglewood

SEVEN CONCERTS OF CHAMBER MUSIC

Wednesday Evenings at 8:30

July 12

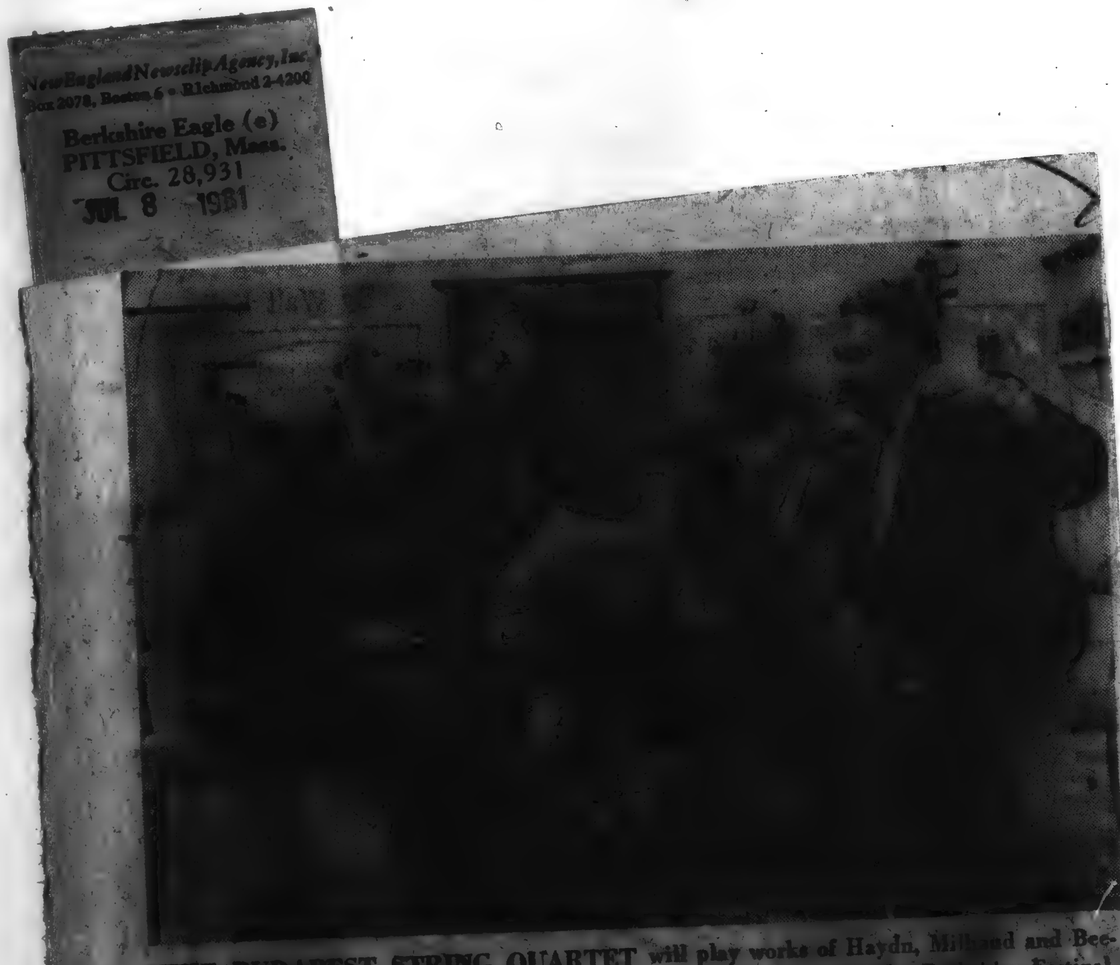
The Budapest String Quartet

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

BERKSHIRE FESTIVAL 1961

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 8 1961



THE BUDAPEST STRING QUARTET will play works of Haydn, Milhaud and Beethoven at the second Wednesday evening chamber music concert of the Berkshire Festival. The July 12 performance will be held at 8:30 in the theater at Tanglewood. Members of the quartet are Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violinists, Boris Kroyt, viola, and Mischa Schneider, violoncello.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 13 1961

Budapest Quartet in Concert At Tanglewood Shed, Lenox

BY GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to the Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Four Russians known as the Budapest Quartet returned to Tanglewood last night for the second event in the Chamber Music Series in the Theater-Concert Hall.

Once again the unanimity of accent and rhythmic vitality of this famous string quartet were much in evidence in a program by Haydn, Milhaud, and Beethoven, although rather sticky weather seemed to play havoc with the intonation of the performers.

In Haydn's Quartet in D major (Op. 50, No. 6) the performers substituted dynamic thrust for suavity, which was not altogether the most persuasive approach to this music. Here, as elsewhere, the vertical cohesion of the performance was something remarkable to hear. I have seldom heard First Violinist Roisman play with as much vigor.

* * *

DARIUS MILHAUD'S 12th Quartet (he has written 17 or 18) is dedicated to Faure but, to my mind, it only fleetingly reflects the clarity and elegance to whom it is dedicated. There is no dearth of melodic content, yet somehow it lacks the compact eloquence that Faure could inject into a French art song.

Perhaps the most affecting movement is the elegiac Lent, which the Budapest Quartet played with sensitive attention to coloristic effects. The finale, too, had a certain charm and roistering gayety.

However, the Budapest was completely in its province in the Third "Rasoumovsky" Quartet (Op. 59, No. 3), which may not be as monumental in concept as the two preceding quartets. This was what the audience came to hear and they were richly rewarded.

* * *

THESE FAMED ensemblists have so immersed themselves in the quartet music of Beethoven over the years that their playing has the vigor and grace of a highly trained group of precision dancers. Everything falls neatly in place.

Yet there is considerably more than precision; there is a sense of the inner struggle of the composer in a performance of Beethoven by he Budapest. It is an experience that does not leave you after the concert.

The only deterrent to complete enjoyment of this concert which was attended by some 1580 persons, was the omnipresent mosquitos which descended en masse shortly after the program began.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 12 1961

Budapest Quartet Set for Tanglewood

The Budapest String Quartet—Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello—will give the second chamber music series concert tonight (8:30 p. m.) in the Tanglewood Theater, Lenox, Mass.

Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

92

QUARTET IN D MAJOR, OP. 50, No. 6 (No. 49)

By JOSEPH HAYDN (1732-1809)

Haydn's six string quartets, Opus 50, show the influence of Mozart, or rather evidence of the interactive refinement of the two composers in the balanced and expressive treatment of four string voices. Notable is the thematic integration of the first movement of this Quartet, where the opening phrase becomes a closely worked motto. This set of six, composed between 1784 and 1787, falls within the years of closest association between Haydn and Mozart in their joint pursuit of this subtlest of all musical forms. (The great six which Mozart dedicated to his friend were composed between 1782 and 1785.) Haydn dedicated his Opus 50 to Friedrich Wilhelm II of Prussia in 1787, the year that Mozart, visiting Berlin, undertook to compose six for that monarch. He had written three (destined to be his last) when death intervened. Haydn lived to add thirty-four more quartets to this his forty-ninth.

It was inevitable that many of the large total of eighty-three acquired nicknames for purposes of convenient identification and this one was called "The Frog" on account of the quick reiteration of a single note in the finale. Karl Geiringer, trying to convince himself that these notes were something more specific than a quizzical bit of tone play, calls them "gay, croaking sounds." We might be reminded by the allegretto rhythm of the Minuet that frogs hop as well as croak. Grove's Dictionary quotes two more nicknames for this Quartet which would further tax the most credulous imagination: "The House on Fire" and "The Row in Vienna." The title "The Dream" which has become attached to No. 5 of this set would be far better applied to No. 6, for its Poco adagio is a glowing revery which dominates the whole work and erases from the lingering memory any remote suggestion of small reptiles.

STRING QUARTET No. 12, OP. 252

By DARIUS MILHAUD (1892-)

Milhaud composed this Quartet at Mills College in Oakland, California, in February 1945, and dedicated it "to the memory of Gabriel Fauré on the hundredth anniversary of his birth."

The composer wrote in his book Notes Without Music (1953) that he "took advantage of solitude on a visit to a southern California desert to compose his 17th and 18th quartets." He then explains how he happened to write so many: "In 1920 I had, in fact, stated in an issue of Le Coq, a journal published by Cocteau—'I wish to write eighteen quartets.' This paper often had a slightly pugnacious tone, at times an impertinent one. If my declaration appeared to mean 'one quartet more than Beethoven,' it was nevertheless not a young man's flippancy. I desired, in view of the aesthetic leanings of Cocteau—who was then glorifying 'music with a punch,' that of the circus and the music hall—to take up the defense (without seeming to do so) of chamber music, serious music, the music to which I have been faithful during my entire professional life. But the phrase haunted me. I often asked myself if I should ever complete my project. My 17th Quartet finished during Christmas week [1950] is dedicated to my son for his twenty-first birthday."

SECOND CONCERT OF THE CHAMBER MUSIC SERIES

The Budapest String Quartet

JOSEPH ROISMAN, Violin — BORIS KROYT, Viola

ALEXANDER SCHNEIDER, Violin — MISCHA SCHNEIDER, Cello

PROGRAM

HAYDN — Quartet in D Major, Op. 50, No. 6

I. Allegro
II. Poco Adagio
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

MILHAUD — Quartet, No. 12

I. Modéré; Animé
II. Lent
III. Avec entrain

INTERMISSION

BEETHOVEN — Quartet in C Major, Op. 59, No. 3

I. Andante con moto; Allegro vivace
II. Andante con moto quasi allegretto
III. Menuetto: Grazioso
IV. Allegro molto

CONCERTS TO FOLLOW:—

July 19	The Beaux Arts Trio of New York
July 26	The New York Pro Musica
August 2	The Boston Fine Arts String Quartet (Assisted by Joseph de Pasquale, Viola)
August 9	The Kroll String Quartet
August 16	Claudio Arrau, Piano

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 13 1961

Budapest Quartet in Concert At Tanglewood Shed, Lenox

BY GEORGE W. STOWE
Special to the Hartford Times

Lenox, Mass. — Four Russians known as the Budapest Quartet returned to Tanglewood last night for the second event in the Chamber Music Series in the Theater-Concert Hall.

Once again the unanimity of accent and rhythmic vitality of this famous string quartet were much in evidence in a program by Haydn, Milhaud, and Beethoven, although rather sticky weather seemed to play havoc with the intonation of the performers.

In Haydn's Quartet in D major (Op. 50, No. 6) the performers substituted dynamic thrust for suavity, which was not altogether the most persuasive approach to this music. Here, as elsewhere, the vertical cohesion of the performance was something remarkable to hear. I have seldom heard First Violinist Roisman play with as much vigor.

* * *

DARIUS MILHAUD'S 12th Quartet (he has written 17 or 18) is dedicated to Faure but, to my mind, it only fleetingly reflects the clarity and elegance to whom it is dedicated. There is no dearth of melodic content, yet somehow it lacks the compact eloquence that Faure could inject into a French art song.

Perhaps the most affecting movement is the elegiac Lent, which the Budapest Quartet played with sensitive attention to coloristic effects. The finale, too, had a certain charm and roistering gayety.

However, the Budapest was completely in its province in the Third "Rasoumovsky" Quartet (Op. 59, No. 3), which may not be as monumental in concept as the two preceding quartets. This was what the audience came to hear and they were richly rewarded.

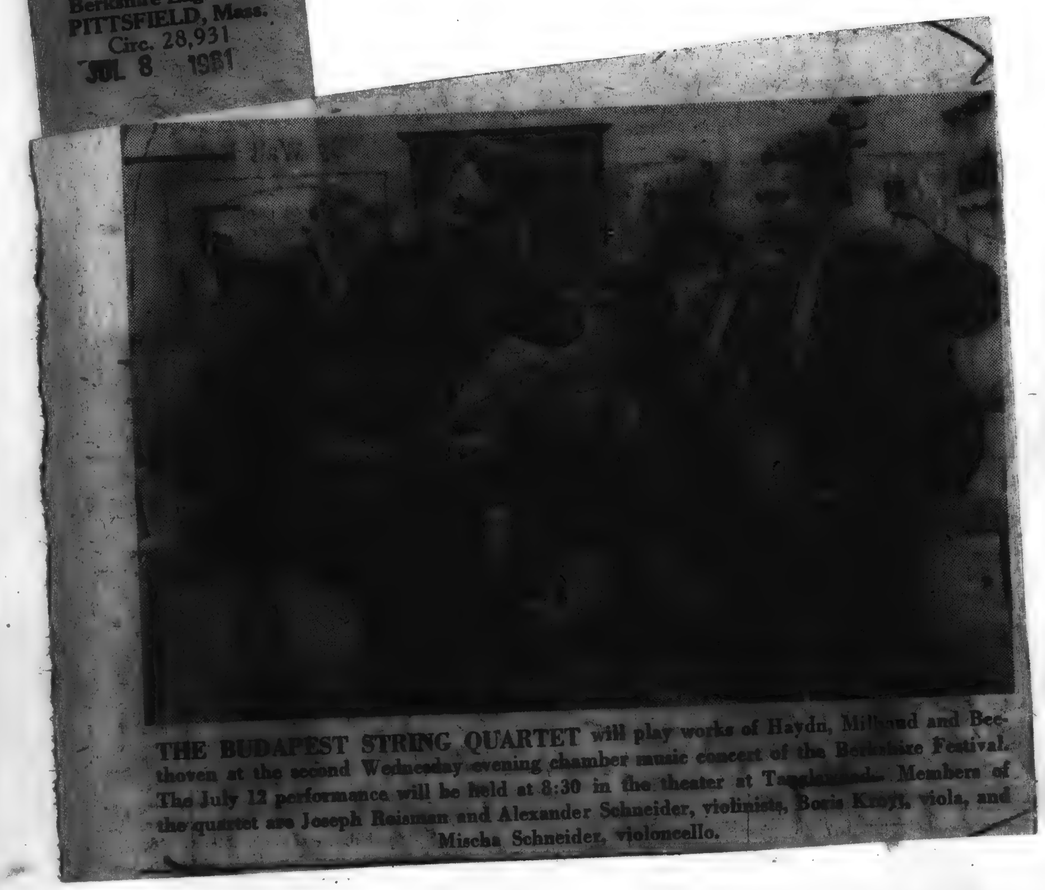
* * *

THESE FAMED ensemblists have so immersed themselves in the quartet music of Beethoven over the years that their playing has the vigor and grace of a highly trained group of precision dancers. Everything falls neatly in place.

Yet there is considerably more than precision; there is a sense of the inner struggle of the composer in a performance of Beethoven by he Budapest. It is an experience that does not leave you after the concert.

The only deterrent to complete enjoyment of this concert which was attended by some 1580 persons, was the omnipresent mosquitos which descended en masse shortly after the program began.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 8 1961



THE BUDAPEST STRING QUARTET will play works of Haydn, Milhaud and Beethoven at the second Wednesday evening chamber music concert of the Berkshire Festival. The July 12 performance will be held at 8:30 in the theater at Tanglewood. Members of the quartet are Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violinists, Boris Kroyt, viola, and Mischa Schneider, violoncello.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Times (e)
HARTFORD, Conn.
Circ. 124,088
JUL 13 1961

Budapest Quartet Set for Tanglewood

The Budapest String Quartet—Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello—will give the second chamber music series concert tonight (8:30 p. m.) in the Tanglewood Theater, Lenox, Mass.

Their program will consist of Haydn's Quartet in D major, Op. 50, No. 6; the Quartet No. 12 by Milhaud, and Beethoven's Quartet in C major, Op. 59, No. 3.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUL 13 1961

Music Review

The Budapest String Quartet

By JAY C. ROSENFELD

THE SECOND program in the Wednesday night chamber music series at Tanglewood was played last night by the Budapest String Quartet in the Theater-Concert Hall. Every seat in the hall was filled and all the seats on the benches outside the wide doors and a good bit of the lawn behind the building were utilized. They played Haydn, Milhaud and Beethoven.

When Haydn is portrayed in drawings of his day, he is always shown in an assembly of powdered-wigged gentlefolk, the gentlemen in silk knee-breeches, the ladies in crinoline skirts, the musicians in costumes in harmony with those of their audience. One would expect the music to be dainty and fastidious. But the Budapesters take no such view of their Haydn. It is robust and healthy, even blustering, full-throated and vivacious.

* * *

THE HAYDN D major, opus 50, no. 6, has four equally interesting movements, although we would guess that the final one is more fun to play than to hear as it is a string player's holiday to do the open strings and unisons on the contiguous ones. He may well have derived the idea from the Prelude of Bach's last violin solo sonata.

Their Beethoven was equally assured. They play with the confidence of authority, and while what they do may not be the final word for everyone, it will satisfy a great segment of music lovers. It is flexible, scrupulous in observance of composer's indications, yet free and audacious, adhering accurately to the letter of the music as well as to the spirit.

Beethoven's opus 59, no. 3, is the last of the three he wrote on commission for the Russian ambassador at Vienna, Count Rasoumoffsky. Although it came only a scant 20 years after the Haydn exhibit on last night's program, it is infinitely removed and advanced from the older man's conceptions. From Haydn's pleasant inventions Beethoven plunges into drama. One might quibble about the content of the wonderful final fugue, but the motor force inherent in the pages and the drive generated in the performance more than overbalance any analytical protests.

* * *

AN EXAMPLE of their fidelity to the music was the simple little descending scale in the Haydn minuet where the composer's orthography clearly showed he wished the figure to become a little more clipped as it proceeded but which is more often ignored and played indistinguishably than executed precisely. The Budapesters did it in stride.

The center work was Milhaud's quartet number 12, opus 252. It was written in 1945 and dedicated to the memory of Gabriel Faure on the 100th anniversary of his birth. This is one of four Milhaud wrote in this country during the first years of the French participation in World War II. His 10th had been written for Mrs. Elizabeth Sprague Coolidge and played on her birthday concert in the Library of Congress in 1940. Milhaud was guest on the composition faculty at the Berkshire Music Center at Tanglewood in 1947.

* * *

MILHAUD HAS enormous capacity for writing, but last night's quartet is bland. The performance was in the same spirit. A few forays into harmonic areas which up to the turn of the century had been uncharted does not compensate for the banality of the themes and the poverty of its development.

The audience was wildly enthusiastic at the end of Beethoven, and in spite of the busy presence of a congregation of mosquitoes which far outnumbered the audience, still persisted in staying to hear the encore the Budapesters were gracious to give: the finale of the Beethoven opus 12, number 2.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • Richmond 2-4200
Transcript-Telegram (e)
HOLYOKE, Mass.
Circ. 25,955
JUL 13 1961

Budapest String Quartet Plays For 1,587 At Tanglewood

A finely integrated "Budapest String Quartet" showed teamwork at its best during the second of the chamber music recitals at Tanglewood Wednesday night.

This quality shone through especially in the intricate passages of Beethoven's "String Quartet in C Major, Opus 59, No. 3."

Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, played the violin, Boris Kroyt the viola and Mischa Schneider the cello in the fashion of one instrument with the sweet tones of the violin developing in unbroken fashion.

Beethoven's four movements were well balanced in an interpretation which combined with technical skill to accent richly embroidered rhythms and themes for an orchestral effect.

The artists drew a standing ovation and "bravos" from the audience which applauded Haydn's "Quartet in D Major, Opus 50, No 6" and Milhaud's "Quartet, No 12".

The syncopations of Milhaud's modern work were gathered neatly by the quartet and tied into multi-colored splashes of sound and feeling.

The more formal Haydn selection received imaginative treatment, especially in the slow second movement which was given a dream-like quality.

The quartet played an encore for the audience of 1,587 which represented an increase over the attendance of 1,360 at the second in last year's series. Total attendance now amounts to more than 15,000—I. R. M.

Program by Budapest String Quartet Draws Capacity House at Tanglewood

By D. E. RITZ
Gazette Music Editor

The Budapest String Quartet drew an audience of 1,587 to Tanglewood on Wednesday evening to hear a program of Haydn, Milhaud and Beethoven quartets in the theater-concert hall.

* * *

MANY OF THE audience were seated on the lawns or listening at the exits as every seat had been sold.

The Wednesday evening programs of chamber music are a highlight of Tanglewood week and draw musicians from near and far.

The Budapest String quartet includes Joseph Roisman and Alexander Schneider, violins; Boris Kroyt, viola; and Mischa Schneider, cello. The four men play and apparently think as one and their concert was outstanding.

The programs will continue through Aug. 16.

* * *

ENTHUSIASM ran so high on Wednesday night that the quartet members played an encore at the close of the program, an unprecedented idea and most enjoyable. It was the finale of the Beethoven "Opus 18, Number 2" and the perfect selection.

The quartet has a direct approach to music and the Haydn "Quartet in D major, Opus 50, Number 6," which opened the program was a delight. The opening "Allegro" and the "Finale Allegro Con Spirito" were both presented at a faster tempo than we are accustomed to but lost no clarity in the process.

The unison tone play in the final movement was presented with a fluent bow technique that would almost escape the eye if not the ear. The melody of the "Poco Adagio" was presented with warmth and the "Menuetto, Allegretto" with a delightful whimsy.

* * *

FOR THE REVIEWER the Milhaud "Quartet Number 12" was the highlight of the evening. Opportunities to hear any of the quartets of Milhaud are rare in this area and to hear one played by the Budapest Quartet, marked a milestone in our listening.

Darium Milhaud composed the quartet while at Mills College in Oakland, Calif., in February, 1945, and dedicated it "to the memory of Gabriel Faure on the 100th anniversary of his birth."

According to program notes Milhaud produced 18 quartets between 1912 and 1950, an amazing accomplishment for a modern composer.

* * *

THE MILHAUD IDIOM is melody but in a different vein and at first one needs to adjust one's thinking and hearing. The melodies are there and one can't sing them, yet they carry out and away from the present, to where? The concluding movement "Avec Entrain" had the feel of folk music and the "Lent" was particularly effective in its solo episodes.

The Beethoven "Quartet in C major, opus 59, number 3" returned one to a super idiom—at least one we all accept. In the opening "Andante Con Moto; Allegro Vivace" the melodies float and there is vigor. The mozaic effect of the "Andante Con Moto Quasi Allegretto" was produced by the solo violin episodes with the asides from the other instruments and the equally effective cello pizzicato passages. The "Menuetto Grazioso" and "Allegro Molto" movements were played without pause and the program concluded with a much-deserved ovation for the performers.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263
JUL 13 1961

Budapest Quartet Pleases 1587 at Tanglewood Hall

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—The Budapest String Quartet, pre-eminent among contemporary string quartets, gave the second of the chamber music recitals in the theater-concert hall Wednesday night and 1587 persons made known their satisfaction in no uncertain terms. The program was well devised with Haydn's jaunty "Quartet in D Major" opening proceedings and Beethoven's "Quartet in C Major, Op 59" ending it. In between was Milhaud's delightful, impressionistic "Quartet No. 12."

Magnificent Team

Long association together has molded this quartet into a magnificent team. They appear to think as one and achieve a perfect blend of tone and wonderful mutuality of understanding. Thus in the balanced and expressive treatment of the four string voices one realized Haydn's kinship with Mozart. Haydn lived to add 34 more quartets to this, his 49th.

The work was played with gusto and an earthiness which is characteristic of Haydn's works in this form. Only in the slow movement is there a break in this humor, a break which provides a deeply romantic episode.

It was good to hear the Milhaud quartet, dedicated to the memory of Gabriel Faure and written during the composer's stay at Mills College, Oakland, Cal. It is a lovely quartet with an opening movement of haunting beauty. The remaining movements are truly impressionistic, tense but with a tranquil undercurrent. It was finely played with each instrument assuming its rightful place. The final movement was perhaps the most ebullient and a fitting climax to work of many moods.

Beethoven composed his three quartets for Count Rasoumowsky during 1805 and 1806. The "Quartet in C Major, Op 59, No. 3" cont5ains for the first time an introduction before the opening movement. There is vast subtlety in his handling of the second movement, so that to one it seems a "curiously strange" while another finds in it a bitter lament.

Few performing groups understand the Beethoven quartets as well as the Budapest players and they brought to their interpretation all the skill and knowledge accumulated through the years. It seemed to us a performance fully worthy of the music. There was plenty of proof that the audience was getting what it came for, although it is possible that there were some string players in the audience who found some things not to their liking, as usual. It always happens.

The third concert next Wednesday will be given by the Beaux Arts Trio of New York, a trio which has won full approval of audiences at these concerts.

94

Danny Kaye Concert-

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA
CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

PENSION FUND
CONCERT

Music Shed
Tanglewood

Thursday, July 13, 1961

DANNY KAYE, Guest Conductor

PROGRAM

Conducted by Dr. Munch:—

BERLIOZ . . . . . Rakóczy March from "The Damnation of Faust"

Conducted by Mr. Kaye:—

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS

FINGER EXERCISE—A display of directorial techniques by Charles Munch, left, regular conductor at Tanglewood, and Danny Kaye, who will conduct the Boston Symphony there Thursday evening in a special Pension Fund concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUN 21 1961

Danny Kaye At Tanglewood On July 13

Danny Kaye takes over the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Thursday evening, July 13, at 8:30 to conduct a concert for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. The site of this extraordinary musical adventure is the 6000-seat Music Shed at the orchestra's summer home in Lenox.

Mr. Kaye will generously contribute his services for this occasion.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, and his Berkshire Festival staff, will open their offices at Tanglewood Monday in preparation for the orchestra's seven week summer season which opens July 5 and the seven week summer school session of the Berkshire Music Center which opens July 2.

In addition to the orchestra's administrative and ticket office staffs, the offices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will also open tomorrow to assist the 200,000 Tanglewood visitors expected in Lenox this summer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUL 2 1961

Summer Burgeons in Varied Roles

By MARJORIE MILLS

Women Are Talking About: The holiday and the phantasmagoria of varied things to do depending on your interests and enthusiasms. It's beach weather at last; sailboats, all the way from handsome yachts to the small frys' catboats dot harbors and the broad Atlantic along our coast. (To realize how many boats there are, see them on a sunny day from a plane . . . sheer beauty against the blue ocean.)

Summer stock REALLY burgeons this week. In every nook and cranny of New England there's a theater. If music is your joy, it too takes over as part of summertime pleasure. Music against the elegance of Castle Hill, music this week at Newport, Storyville in Harwich, band concerts on the village green in little hamlets or string quartets in village white-spired churches.

* * *

Judy Garland, who will do a concert tomorrow afternoon at Newport, R. I. (sold out as soon as announced) has taken a house for the summer at Hyannisport. It will be near her daughter, Lisa Minnelli, who's working at a Cape Cod Theater and near Judy's friends, the Bob Kennedys. Lisa is so like her mother it's rather startling and already she's earmarked by experts for stardom.

JUDY GARLAND

* * *

Cleveland Amory has a good line in this week's Saturday Review quoting Sigurd Olson, author of "The Lonely Land." Olson followed the portage trail of the old-time voyageurs. "I went along to iron out the wrinkles in my soul" . . . a good definition of what summer is for.

Women Are Talking About:

* * *

Apropos of wrinkles in the soul . . . and the forehead . . . Bugs Baer's seems the quote of the week on Khrushchev. "He gives us insomnia 'nyet after nyet'." He speaks of Korea, Laos, Viet Nam and the Congo as the "spindled agenda of our diplomatic flops. Each one was an outside leaf on Nikita's artichoke. He wants what's in the middle."

* * *

We saw a painting last week that Jackie Kennedy had given a friend. It was VERY good . . . sort of a Dufy mood . . . gay and sprightly and with nice fresh color.

* * *

Did you know the blue theater tent at the Boston Arts Festival where four programs a day were given was made possible by the family of Elinor Morgenthau, the late wife of Mr. Roosevelt's Secretary of the Treasury? She believed in young talent and experimental theater, worked at it at Vassar, taught it at Neighborhood Theaters, helped found New York City Center. So years later and miles away from New York, Bostonians enjoyed fine added features at the Festival.

* * *

Seen any previews of the fall hats? WHEE . . . Now they really ARE all out . . . high, wide and handsome. But it's going to be a traumatic experience getting into a car or taxi wearing one of them. (Already we can visualize the cartwheel hats rolling down Arlington Street as Boston ladies come out of the Morning Musicals.) It's Boston's windiest sweep, next to the intersection of Boylston and Tremont. We've seen flowered hats take off like a flight of tropical birds as ladies emerge from the Statler Hilton. The doorman needs a butterfly net to perform his gallant duty. (Helpful note to Manager Duchscherer.)

Dining at the North Shore Music Theater Terrace Restaurant last week, we discovered Ruby Newman's handome son, Robert, age 22, is running it. He worked with Creed to learn the "ropes" and we thought his kitchen and his staff of good-looking college boys handled the intricacies of flaming Shish Kabob, broiled lobster, steaks, and a gourmet menu very well.

The restaurant, terraced above the theater tent, is gay with bright color, nice landscaping and SOFT music. (In too many places one dines lately, the eardrum as shattered by the cacophony. Agree? Or are we getting too sensitive to blaring sound?)

* * *

When Danny Kaye conducts the Boston Symphony July 13 at Tanglewood, the comedian will be enjoying a happy moment.

DANNY KAYE

We interviewed him a few years ago when he had just finished conducting a Symphony. He was tired but glowing with the memory of the past few hours.

In 1957 Danny Kaye was made an honorary member, the first and only person so honored by the 81-year-old Boston Symphony Group. This is another facet of the many-faceted Mr. Kaye and he's deadly serious about it. Already the concert is a sell-out we hear.

* * *

Here's a comforting thought to some young men who watched the girl of their dreams march down the aisle to marry someone else last month. " 'Tis better to have loved and lost . . . much, much, MUCH."

(This column appears also in The Herald on Wednesday)

HOLLYWOOD DAILY
HOLLYWOOD, C.
D. [illegible]
JUL 5

/ Paramount sent Redding location t to pull out of the the $25,000 price.
. . . P.S. Newhart
While waiting for another album
Kay[illegible]o wing
Sat[illegible]n
([illegible]
[illegible] days off his added scenes
. . . The Palladiu
new fone and bi

[illegible]ock mag's la jerker . . . Char by Margaret treatment. Jo
T[illegible]s, Coast
27th wedding
Congress. has a hundred handles pa men are train standing in son Buster
Wylers' Catnip
Sellers" album damage their e half hour!"

LOS ANGELES
TIMES
D. 532,07[illegible] S.
AUG 6 196

94

Danny Kaye Concert-

BOSTON SYMPHONY ORCHESTRA

CHARLES MUNCH
Music Director

PENSION FUND CONCERT

Music Shed
Tanglewood

Thursday, July 13, 1961

DANNY KAYE, Guest Conductor

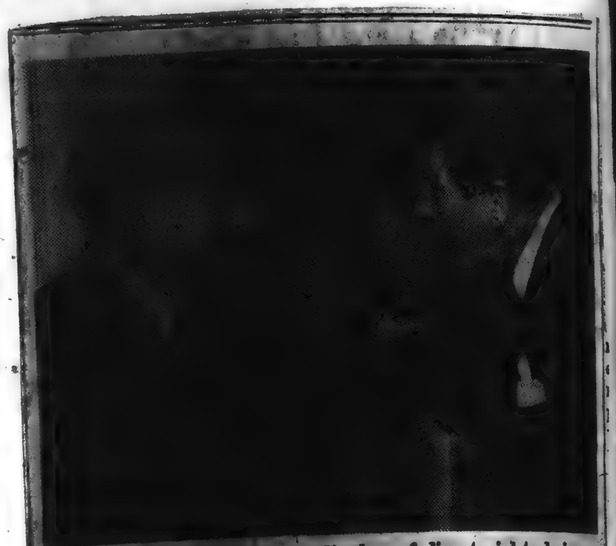
PROGRAM

Conducted by Dr. Munch:—

BERLIOZ . . . . . Rakóczy March from "The Damnation of Faust"

Conducted by Mr. Kaye:—

BALDWIN PIANO — RCA VICTOR RECORDS



FINGER EXERCISE—A display of directorial techniques by Charles Munch, left, regular conductor at Tanglewood, and Danny Kaye, who will conduct the Boston Symphony there Thursday evening in a special Pension Fund concert.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Hampshire Gazette (e)
NORTHAMPTON, Mass.
Circ. 12,879
JUN 21 1961

Danny Kaye At Tanglewood On July 13

Danny Kaye takes over the Boston Symphony Orchestra at Tanglewood Thursday evening, July 13, at 8:30 to conduct a concert for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. The site of this extraordinary musical adventure is the 6000-seat Music Shed at the orchestra's summer home in Lenox.

Mr. Kaye will generously contribute his services for this occasion.

Thomas D. Perry Jr., manager of the orchestra, and his Berkshire Festival staff, will open their offices at Tanglewood Monday in preparation for the orchestra's seven week summer season which opens July 5 and the seven week summer school session of the Berkshire Music Center which opens July 2.

In addition to the orchestra's administrative and ticket office staffs, the offices of the Friends of the Berkshire Music Center will also open tomorrow to assist the 200,000 Tanglewood visitors expected in Lenox this summer.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Herald
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 287,665
JUL 2 1961

Summer Burgeons in Varied Roles

By MARJORIE MILLS

Women Are Talking About: The holiday and the phantasmagoria of varied things to do depending on your interests and enthusiasms. It's beach weather at last, sailboats, all the way from handsome yachts to the small frys' catboats dot harbors and the broad Atlantic along our coast. (To realize how many boats there are, see them on a sunny day from a plane . . . sheer beauty against the blue ocean.)

Summer stock REALLY burgeons this week. In every nook and cranny of New England there's a theater. If music is your joy, it too takes over as part of summertime pleasure. Music against the elegance of Castle Hill, music this week at Newport, Storyville in Harwich, band concerts on the village green in little hamlets or string quartets in village white-spired churches.

* * *

Judy Garland, who will do a concert tomorrow afternoon at Newport, R. I., (sold out as soon as announced) has taken a house for the summer at Hyannisport. It will be near her daughter, Lisa Minnelli, who's working at a Cape Cod Theater and near Judy's friends, the Bob Kennedys. Lisa is so like her mother it's rather startling and already she's earmarked by experts for stardom.

JUDY GARLAND

* * *

Cleveland Amory has a good line in this week's Saturday Review quoting Sigurd Olson, author of "Thirst Land." Olson followed the ancient trail of the old-time voyageurs. "I went along to iron out the wrinkles in my soul" . . . a good definition of what summer is for.

Women Are Talking About:

* * *

Apropos of wrinkles in the soul . . . and the forehead . . . Bugs Baer's seems the quote of the week on Khrushchev. "He gives us insomnia 'nyet after nyet'." He speaks of Korea, Laos, Viet Nam and the Congo as the "spindled agenda of our diplomatic flops. Each one was an outside leaf on Nikita's artichoke. He wants what's in the middle."

* * *

We saw a painting last week that Jackie Kennedy had given a friend. It was VERY good . . . sort of a Dufy mood . . . gay and sprightly and with nice fresh color.

* * *

Did you know the blue theater tent at the Boston Arts Festival where four programs a day were given was made possible by the family of Elinor Morgenthau, the late wife of Mr. Roosevelt's Secretary of the Treasury? She believed in young talent and experimental theater, worked at it at Vassar, taught it at Neighborhood Theaters, helped found New York City Center. So years later and miles away from New York, Bostonians enjoyed fine added features at the Festival.

* * *

Seen any previews of the fall hats? WHEE . . . Now they really ARE all out . . . high, wide and handsome. But it's going to be a traumatic experience getting into a car or taxi wearing one of them. (Already we can visualize the cartwheel hats rolling down Arlington Street as Boston ladies come out of the Morning Musicals.) It's Boston's windiest sweep, next to the intersection of Boylston and Tremont. We've seen flowered hats take off like a flight of tropical birds as ladies emerge from the Statler Hilton. The doorman needs a butterfly net to perform his gallant duty. (Helpful note to Manager Duchscherer.)

Dining at the North Shore Music Theater Terrace Restaurant last week, we discovered Ruby Newman's handsome son, Robert, age 22, is running it. He worked with Creed to learn the "ropes" and we thought his kitchen and his staff of good-looking college boys handled the intricacies of flaming Shish Kabob, broiled lobster, steaks, and a gourmet menu very well.

The restaurant, terraced above the theater tent, is gay with bright color, nice landscaping and SOFT music. (In too many places one dines lately, the eardrum as shattered by the cacophony. Agree?' Or are we getting too sensitive to blaring sound?)

* * *

When Danny Kaye conducts the Boston Symphony July 13 at Tanglewood, the comedian will be enjoying a happy moment.

DANNY KAYE

We interviewed him a few years ago when he had just finished conducting a Symphony. He was tired but glowing with the memory of the past few hours.

In 1957 Danny Kaye was made an honorary member, the first and only person so honored by the 81-year-old Boston Symphony Group. This is another facet of the many-faceted Mr. Kaye and he's deadly serious about it. Already the concert is a sell-out we hear.

* * *

Here's a comforting thought to some young men who watched the girl of their dreams march down the aisle to marry someone else last month. "'Tis better to have loved and lost . . . much, MUCH."

(This column appears also in The Herald on Wednesday)

HOLLYWOOD DAILY VARIETY
HOLLYWOOD, CALIF.
D. 8,294

JUL 5 1961

Paramount ... pter Dick Carr to the "Hell Is For Heroes" Redding lo... scenes for Bob Newhart who was ready to pull out ... script wasn't the one Newhart okay'd for the $25,000 ... himself in the film's opening and thassall! ... own material along with Carr's prose. Wi... Newhart flipped into Frisco and waxed another a... heels of Bob Hope's frantic sked is Danny Kaye, wh... Hawaii, takes off for his Denver date Saturd... lewood to conduct the Boston Symph (with ... D.C. and five weeks of one-man-shows sans ... finally clears up his packed sked, lenses his ... Horsemen Of The Apocalypse" this week ... gets a new face for Lawrence Welk — but ...ard to handle the July 21 bubbles barrage.

* * *

... Cooper's last trip home" is a real tear-... 's. "My Father Charlie Chaplin" (penned ...went into the Popular Library's softcover ...Switzerland visit to poppa . . . Arthur De...news, celebrates 34th year with 'em, his ...e Helen, and his 57th birthday this week. ...ts . . . The Henry Rogers' son Ronnie (20) ...ration. "Party Park" already in high gear — ... parties, eateries, any occasion. Claims his ... . . . Wynne Brown (widow of Hugh B.) is ...fepburn on Wm. Wyler's "Infamous." Brown's ...in laude from Stanford in same class as the ...ter Sellers is amazed the way his "Best Of ...ing: "I never thought anyone would want to ... sez the modest thesp, "listening to me for a ...

by army archerd

LOS ANGELES, CALIF.
TIMES
D. 532,079 S. 907,027

AUG 6 1961

DANNY KAYE

● When Danny Kaye guest-conducted the Boston Symphony recently at Tanglewood, Mass., it was something of a reunion, for Kaye first worked with the Boston group four years ago. Afterward he was inducted as the only non-playing member of the venerable orchestra and given a gold baton. "It is so heavy you can't lift it," Danny said, "and don't think I can't figure out what that means." He shocked Bostonians by shouting to conductor Charles Munch: "How about that, Chuck?" The latter never forgot, sent Kaye a photo autographed: "To Danny, from Chuck."

Globe 7/10/61

That Danny Boy (Kaye) to Conduct Boston Symphony

LENOX, July 9 (UPI) — Actor Danny Kaye will take matters, or rather the Boston Symphony Orchestra, into his own hands Thursday night when he will be guest conductor at Tanglewood.

Charles Munch will open the concert by directing Berlioz' "Rakoczy March," then will turn the 104 musicians over to Kaye for a special pension fund concert. Kaye last directed the Boston Symphony in Boston in 1957.

NORTHAMPTON GAZETTE

Kaye By-Passed Tradition In Festival Performance

Thursday night in the big shed at Tanglewood in Lenox Danny Kaye strode purposefully on stage. He didn't pause by the podium as tradition demands, however. Instead he continued resolutely offstage, to the roars of a delighted audience. It was the occasion of a special Pension Fund program for the Boston Symphony Orchestra, for which the comedian had donated his services.

Returning to the podium, he shook hands with Mr. Burgin, the concert master, the assistant concertmaster, the assistant conlinists. Weaving his way through the stands, he kissed Mrs. Dwyer, first flutist, shook hands with some male cellists, and "bussed" the female member. Pausing by a "balding" violist, he planted a kiss on top of his head. By this time the tradition-bound audience of over 6,000 was convulsed.

With a handful of batons Mr. Kaye finally made the podium, testing the batons one by one and handing them to various members. Raising his arms up and down several times, he evoked a chord from the players, first loud, then soft, breaking off a piece of his stick at each pause. Falling off the platform, jumping as the horns blared forth in Rossini's "Mischievous Magpie," he pirouetted and changed conducting hands.

Turning to Mr. Pasquale, first violist, Danny told him to learn his music or leave. Speaking to the audience he announced the next number as a polka by Mack Strauss, its 1700th performance. After clicking his heels demonstrating the dance, he informed the audience that he had been told to wear black and white, and showed them his white socks and black shoes. (He was wearing a grey jacket and black slacks.) With rollicking applause, he descended into the audience for some more hand-shaking.

Returning to the stage, he commenced to tune the orchestra vocally, singing and whistling the "A." Approving a prolonged "A" from the orchestra, he turned to the listeners, divided them into sections, each singing a note of a major triad. As they held the chord, he started to speak "Dearly Beloved —" in a mournful voice, which quickly broke into spontaneous laughter.

Ravel's "Bolero" was the next composition to be spoofed, talking all the while, with complete abandoned conducting. To the clarinetist he said "I love your little tune, Gino," and to the Tympani player, "Stop harping on that."

Constantly chiding the audience "I don't know about you, and I care less, but I'm having the best time," he pulled the orchestra members through Tschaikowsky's Nutcracker Suite in bits and pieces.

Declaring that conducting gives one a lot of neurotic power, the "mad director" demonstrated two types of conductors. The one "who has a penchant for pushing baby carriages," brought on gales of laughter. Then a pause to ask Mr. Burgin where his bridge was, and to tell a story about a psychiatrist which the audience didn't want to believe.

With "the emotional type," the versatile comedian commanded the orchestra members to close their eyes and think about what they were going to play. "Look intc yourselves — What a terrible sight!" Again "CLOSE YOUR EYES and talk to me" doubled up the players with laughter.

There were so many ridiculous, marvelously timed antics contrived, conducting with his feet, practicing a crescendo, stopping the musicians at unexpected moments, catching Mr. Burbin still playing, causing delighted Danny Kaye to pound on the wall of the stage. Facing the audience so they could see what goes on while one directs the orchestra, he mimed varied degrees of emotion, finally raising the listeners to their feet and announcing intermission.

With a red flyswatter the inimitable Mr. Kaye directed a thwacking "Flight of the Bumblebee." A new piece titled "What" started in silence then a wailing of violas and cellos, followed by unbelievable instrumental effects. It included signaling the drums with a foot. At its close the intrepid comic announced that the composer was now locked in a cell with four classical records.

Sitting down and starting to become serious, Mr. Kaye said that the orchestra was as fine a group outside their profession he had ever met. He does not read music or play a musical instrument, but he is "insane about conducting."

Because his presence there was helping to swell the pension fund, he was having fun. He thought that some people might feel that the orchestra was being too undignified, so the last number was chosen to demonstrate the spirit of why these people with different backgrounds were here. It was "Stars and Stripes Forever!"

Much more was said and done to make the evening one of long remembered lighthearted pleasure. Danny Kaye was a superb choice, and the disciplined orchestra reacted with surprising zeal to his off-beat blandishments. With dignified grace, Mr. Kaye responded to the insistent applause with a gentle "Good night."

TIMES-UNION Albany Tues., July 4, 1961 6

Kaye to Conduct

Danny Kaye, versatile comedy star of stage and screen will conduct the Boston Symphony in a benefit concert for the Musicians Fund, Thursday night, July 13, in the Tanglewood Shed. The Curtis String Quartet, assisted by Joseph Pasquale, violist, will open the series of chamber music concerts tomorrow night at 8:30 p. m.

VARIETY
NEW YORK, N.Y.
WEEKLY - CIRC. NOT AVAIL.

JUL 19 1961

Kaye's Revue in Tent Poses Problem Of Deadline for Boston Reviewers

Boston, July 18.

"I may have to whirl like a dervish," said Danny Kaye anent his first theatre in the round date at Carousel, 3,000-seat tune tent in Framingham, July 31-Aug. 6, which could gross $90,000 at capacity. Kaye made the reference at a press conference before conducting for the Boston Symphony Orch at Tanglewood.

Comedian has a tv spectacular set for Nov. 6 with Bud Yorkin producing. Plus a feature film, "Five Pieces of Maria" for Panama & Frank production with Sophia Loren, to be filmed in England and Italy.

Kaye also has two more tv shows for General Motors committed. The Boston Symphony-Kaye concert at Tanglewood was a sellout, 5,000 capacity attendance, with the proceeds going to the pension fund.

Kaye's Manager, Herb Bonus, is setting up the show at the Carousel Theatre in the round with the usual Kaye format. The Dunhills and other acts will do the first half, and Kaye will do the second half.

This poses a bit of a problem for the Hub reviewers of the typical musical comedy fare of the tune tent. Boston reviewers are accustomed to seeing the first half, making a break at intermission, so they can get back to Boston and write their reviews for the morning editions. With Kaye's format, they'll have to make some other arrangements in advance.

One reviewer asked Kaye if he would do something in the first half, explaining the review situation. Kaye said he wouldn't come on in the first half, and advised the critic: "Phone it in."

NEWSWEEK
NEW YORK, N.Y.
W. 1,391,211

JUL 24 1961

Who's Crazy Now? At the Berkshire Music Festival in Lenox, Mass., comedian DANNY KAYE conducted the Boston Symphony Orchestra in A-OKaye fashion. At one point, he stretched out on the podium and conducted with his feet; for "The Flight of the Bumblebee," he exchanged the baton for a fly-swatter. It all seemed in keeping with the advice Kaye gave earlier in the week when he talked about building the language barrier as an entertainer for the United Nations Children's Fund. How to get along with children (and music lovers): "You make faces and act like a lunatic and they understand you."

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sunday Telegram
WORCESTER, Mass.
Circ. 101,456
JUL 23 1961

Music

Podium Exhibitionists Lambasted

By RAYMOND MORIN
Telegram Music Critic

It wasn't necessary for Danny Kaye to identify by name the conductors he meant with his clever spoofing the other night at Tanglewood where he appeared with the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

The "Jumping-Jacks," profile displayers and passionate baton-wielders were clearly portrayed, and denounced. It might have been embarrassing for some of Kaye's targets if they had been present.

Much the same harpooning is formally done in a new book by the eminent German conductor, Bruno Walter. The title, "Of Music and Music Making," published by W. W. Norton & Company, Inc. ($5.00). English translation of the German is by Paul Hamburger.

Echoes Kaye

When Dr. Walter refers to "egotistical tendencies of the conductor," he echoes Kaye's remarks to the audience when 104 players immediately assumed starting positions as soon as his baton was raised.

"This gives you the greatest feeling of neurotic power in the world," exclaimed Kaye.

States Dr. Walter: "Music transmits the ego of the performer more directly to the listener than any other medium of direct communication from one human being to another."

No Yardstick

He points out that the personal successes of these "virtuoso exhibitionists" are not a yardstick of true musical culture, as a misled public opinion often believes they are.

Orchestral players themselves are not fooled by this podium tomfoolery. We once asked a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra how he felt about a certain young conductor who embellishes his work with a phony dramatic exhibition.

"I don't pay any attention to him," he replied. "I just go on playing."

Dr. Walter sums it up like this:

"The egotist strives, consciously or instinctively, to conquer, to dominate, to triumph; others are for him but a means of unlimited artistic aggrandisement, of attaining his ends with ruthless energy. Under the egotist's direction, a certain sameness will descend on all works."

Dr. Walter offers solace to those who feel that they must be musically deficient or emotionally limited because they don't respond to certain types of contemporary music.

In fact, he wages war against a battalion of composers who follow like blind sheep the call of artificial modern idioms.

He bluntly states: "Atonality and dodecaphony, I fear, are threatening to cause the decay of music."

Many will undoubtedly feel that Dr. Walter is hopelessly stuffy and opinionated because he doesn't swallow whole this atonal principle whereby melody is set free to roam where it will.

States Objection

His objection is that this is a purely "intellectual" approach. He expresses it as follows: "Interesting as the vistas may be that are illumined by its cool, clear light, no true musical life and creativeness will flourish and carol and bear fruit there unless it be fostered by the warmer springs rising from deeper layers of the human soul."

The last selection of Robert Schumann's "Carnaval" describes the 19th century battle of the "Philistines against the Davidsbundler." Dr. Walter says much the same thing with these words:

"In former times, a Philistine was someone who accepted only the familiar in art and rejected anything new. However, the art-snob who accepts everything new just because it is modern and summarily refuses to bother about the art of other epochs, seems to me the same sort of Philistine."

Great Works

The book has a chapter each devoted to two great works with which Dr. Walter has been most closely associated — Bach's "St. Matthew Passion," and Mozart's "Magic Flute."

If a sequel is ever written to Nicolas Slonimsky's compilation of "boners" by musicians and writers, "Lexicon of Musical Invective," Dr. Walter's book will undoubtedly be quoted profusely.

It may be arbitrary in spots but it has the virtue of uncompromised honesty.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Record (m)
BOSTON, Mass.
Circ. 37,193
JUL 5 1961

* * *

NOT ONLY WILL THE AUDIENCE have a hilarious time at Boston Symphony Orchestra's "Extraordinary Pension Fund Concert" on Thursday evening, July 13, but the musicians themselves will be worn to a frazzle with genuine laughter. Danny Kaye, the first and only person to hold honorary membership in the 81-year-old Orchestra, will be guest conductor at the top-flight event which will have its setting in the 6000-seat music shed at Tanglewood, Lenox, (the Orchestra's summer home).

Danny, the great comedian of stage, screen and TV fame, has generously contributed his services for the concert. This will be his second appearance with the Boston Symphony. In April, 1957, he also contributed his services for the pension Fund. I was in the capacity audience that evening, and watched veteran Symphony ticket-holders laughed until they cried. That was when Danny was made an honorary member.

As soon as the ticket sale was announced for Kaye's personal appearance, the response was terrific. Two thousand of the 6000 available reserved seats were sold the first two days. A few seats in the front rows of the Music Shed have been reserved for contributors of $100 or more to the Orchestra's pension fund.

TOLEDO, OHIO
BLADE
D. 182,346 S. 177,801
OCT 8 1961

That Buffoon Of A Baton, Danny Kaye, Convulsing To Both Audience And Players

By LEE STEELE

COMEDIAN DANNY KAYE confesses that holding a baton "gives you a feeling of neurotic power."

Besides, "I'm insane about conducting an orchestra," says the 46-year-old entertainer. Of course he doesn't read music and he says flippantly that he once played the "flugelhorn." (He may be right. There really was a flugelhorn.)

Once in front of a distinguished ensemble, Maestro Kaye takes command of the podium. No one, but no one, dares to give him any advice.

Danny — don't call-me-Mr.-Kaye-that's-my-father — tells about the time he was rehearsing the Philadelphia Orchestra.

The "clownductor" reminisces with great solemnity and in his usual deadpan.

* * *

"WE WERE rehearsing the Stars and Stripes. So Gene said we were playing it too fast and I hollered at him, 'Why don't you mind your own business?'"

What professional musician would have the temerity to talk like that to Eugene Ormandy, the Philadelphia's august director?

But then, Danny has his disarming side, too. This summer, he led the Boston Symphony Orchestra at a pension fund benefit concert. Charles Munch sat on the Music Shed stage at Tanglewood and watched his irrepressible substitute.

In the middle of a number Danny yelled over, "How we doin' tonight, Chuck?" His irreverence convulsed the 104-member BSO and some 6,000 persons who paid premium prices for their seats.

On Friday, Danny has a guest clownducting date at Ford Auditorium.

* * *

THIS TIME, he'll do his bit for the Detroit Symphony Orchestra players' pension fund benefit and Paul Paray will sit on the sidelines.

Hence the Detroit musicians will join the Los Angeles, New York Philharmonic, Philadelphia, Stockholm, Israel and Royal Philharmonic Orchestras as "graduates" of the Kaye course in music.

Danny, the buffoon of the baton, never discloses in advance what his program will be like, he said this summer at Tanglewood in Lenox, Mass., where we met.

Perched on a stool, Danny faced some 50 members of press, radio and television, explaining, "I don't stand there and wave a stick. I memorize the music." He has about one dozen numbers in his repertoire, all learned from recordings.

* * *

TO WATCH him cue the orchestra sections is to know that Maestro Kaye has a retentive mind and an excellent musical ear.

Does he ever hope to conduct opera?

"You have to play what they're singing," he said facetiously. "That's too hard to do."

He wanted to talk about his work with UNICEF—the United Nations International Children's Emergency Fund—for which he has toured many nations in Europe and Asia.

Turn to Page 4, Col. 1

'CLOWNDUCTOR' KAYE
Fly swatter used for 'Flight of Bumblebee'

DANNY KAYE CONDUCTING BOSTON SYMPHONY AT TANGLEWOOD
Comedian's 'body English' on podium rated as energetic

The World Of Music

Danny Kaye's A Rare Sight On The Podium

Continued from First Page

But the reporters wanted to talk to him about matters musical.

"Who is your favorite conductor?" I ask Danny.

"Felix Latkin," he said quickly. Then Danny continued laconically, meeting my puzzled stare with that wide-eyed look that has all the guilelessness of a cherub.

"He didn't have a very large band. As a matter of fact, there were only seven pieces."

★ ★ ★

THE MAESTRO'S expressive hands punctuated his comments. "In fact, . . . not, not in this country. He came from Latvia," and then the laughter crushed the rest of the story.

If Danny conquered us, he vanquished the concert crowd.

Mr. Munch opened the program with Berlioz' "The Rakoczy March," and then the listeners waited impatiently for the comedian to come on stage.

The players wore white jackets. So Danny appeared in a sports jacket and slacks. He centered from stage left, walked onto the podium briskly, stepped down quickly, and disappeared stage right.

The players and listeners roared and applauded.

Moments later Danny reentered from stage left. This time he shook hands with virtually all 104 players, pausing to place a kiss on the cheek of First Flutist Doriot Anthony Dwyer, a cute brunette, and then bent over to kiss the bald pate of a cellist.

"We will do a series of assorted things," he said, by way of introduction. "If there are serious music lovers here, you'd better leave."

★ ★ ★

NO ONE budged.

Danny's baton — well, he used about 10 batons through the concert — isn't the only thing moving when he conducts. He can communicate corporeally. He's a master of body English; the swiveling hip, the uplifted pinky, the bobbing head, the flexing knee, the hippety hop, and never missing a beat.

Through Rossini's "La Gazza Ladra," Ravel's "Bolero," the overture to the third act of Wagner's "Lohengrin," and Strauss waltzes, Danny was perpetual motion personified. For "The Flight of the Bumblebee," the maestro switched from baton to fly swatter. I think he kayoed a couple of insects.

He spoofed types of conductors. There's the baby-carriage pusher — and Danny's baton shoved an imaginary buggy. Then there's the get-rapport-with-the-audience leader, who keeps turning around to wink at the listeners. And the conductor with allergies who scratches himself with the hand that isn't holding the baton. Not to forget the emotional conductor who is so carried away he lands on the floor in a tantrum, kicking his legs in a bicycle-exercise drill.

★ ★ ★

ONCE DANNY turned to the audience and waved his baton over them, "so you can see what a conductor's face looks like when he's leading a number."

There was more. "This will be a first performance of a composition by a boy who was born in my parent's home. It is entitled, 'What?' "

For three or four minutes, Danny pointed his baton now to the cymbals, now to the strings, now to the brass. The result sounded very much like the contemporary compositions from the electronically-oriented musicians. The sonorities were terrific, although there wasn't much to be said for the form.

There were some serious moments when Danny pulled a chair onto the podium, sat down, and had a heart-to-heart talk with the patrons.

He admitted the proceedings were nonsensical, but always done in the spirit of let's - keep - our - ability-to - laugh - at - ourselves.

Danny wasn't kidding when he said honestly, "I get a kick out of conducting. It's as far removed for me as being shot into space."

As a conductor, he's AO-Kaye.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Sun (e)
LOWELL, Mass.
Circ. 43,485
JUL 1 1961

Music

Danny Kaye to Conduct Symphony at Tanglewood

By Alfred Burke

LOWELL—Danny Kaye takes over the Boston Symphony orchestra at Tanglewood Thursday evening, July 13, at 8:30 p. m., to conduct a concert for the benefit of the orchestra's pension fund. The site of the extraordinary musical adventure is the 6000-seat music shed at the orchestra's summer home in Lenox, Massachusetts.

Danny Kaye

Mr. Kaye will generously contribute his services for this occasion.

The Tanglewood encounter will be Danny's second appearance with the Boston Symphony orchestra. His first engagement as guest conductor extraordinaire, for which he also contributed his services, was in Boston's Symphony Hall on April 3, 1957, when a capacity audience watched, in high humor, the august orchestra caper through a program which ended with the "Stars and Stripes Forever."

Immediately after this first remarkable concert, the 104 tattered and laugh-weary members of the orchestra made Danny Kaye an honorary member, the first and only person ever so honored by the 81-year-old Boston Symphony orchestra.

The Pablo Casals Third International Violoncello competition will be held in Israel beginning September 23, under the auspices of the American-Israel Cultural Foundation, it was announced by Samuel Rubin, president of the Foundation.

The competition will be held in Israel as the result of Maestro Casals' acceptance of the invitation as the result of government. The first competition was held in Paris and the second in Mexico. The American-Israel Cultural Foundation is handling the details of the competition in the United States, and is serving as co-sponsor of the competition in Israel with an Israeli committee, headed by Foreign Minister Golda Meir.

The chairman of the board of judges will be Maestro Casals and he will be assisted by a panel of his own choosing. The competition will be divided into two categories: juniors, those between 16 and 25 years of age, and seniors, those from 26 and 35 years of age. However, cellists who enter the junior category may compete on the senior level, if desired.

It is expected that leading violoncellists from all over the world will be attracted to the competition in Israel. Funds for this competition were raised in New York when Maestro Casals played at a private recital at the home of Mrs. David Rockefeller.

Prizes being awarded for the competition will be broken down as follows: in both junior and senior categories, there will be a first prize of $1,000. There will be two second prizes of $800 each in both categories, and two third prizes of $600 each. The grand prize winner, to be determined by having the first prize winners of both groups compete, will be awarded an additional $1,500.

Inquiries about the competition should be directed to the Casals Competition, Israel, c-o American-Israel Cultural Foundation, 2 West 45th Street, New York 36, N. Y. Travel expenses to and from Israel will be paid by the contestant. Lodging in Israel will be covered by the Pablo Casals Third International Competition Israeli Committee.

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Berkshire Eagle (e)
PITTSFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 28,931
JUN 29 1961

UPI, Fitzgerald

DANNY KAYE and Dr. Charles Munch, music director of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, compare the fine points of conducting in preparation for the famed comic's appearance at Tanglewood Thursday, July 13, when he will lead the orchestra in a concert for the benefit of the BSO pension fund.

2,000 Tickets Sold to Date For Danny Kaye at Tanglewood

TANGLEWOOD — Boston Symphony Orchestra officials said today more than 2,000 of the 6,000 available reserve seats for the personal appearance of Danny Kaye with the Boston Symphony Orchestra here on July 13 have been sold in two days. Only reserved seats are being sold for the famed comic's appearance in the Music Shed with the orchestra.

The seats have been scaled from $3 to $10 and are available at the Tanglewood box office.

Danny Kaye is donating his services for the concert to the Boston Symphony Orchestra's pension fund.

OBSCURED TEXT

98

BOSTON SYMPHONY BENEFIT SHOW

Danny Kaye Thrills 6,000, Drives Musicians Nuts

By DICK BANKS
Observer Arts Editor

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — "I don't know about you — and I couldn't care less — but I'm having the time of my life."

So said comedian Danny Kaye to 6,000 jamming Tanglewood's superb music shed Thursday night for a Kaye-conducted concert for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra pension fund.

In a way, it was a sin and a shame what he did with those magnificent virtuoso musicians. Up went his hands, and they all stood up. Down, and they seated themselves halfway up — and they sort of half squatted.

"Ve vill now play d'polka from Max Strauss, written in 1961," Kaye would say. Then when the woodwinds got poetic, he would gambol in a circle around the podium.

Or: "Now ve vill play a leetle Tscaikowsky something . . . You know dot 'Nutcracker Suite?' Vell, ve're not going to do it."

Kaye's done these pension fund shows around the world from Dallas, Texas, to Israel.

He came on stage with a whole sheaf of batons and dealt them out amongst the first chair players. He signaled for a tone and got it, then broke off two inches of his baton and got a softer tone. Two inches more — still more gentle — until he had no baton and no sound at all.

He started off with the handshaking bit, kept getting deeper and deeper into the 104 piece orchestra until he got to lady flutist Doriot Dwyer. Quiet understandable, he kissed her.

Kaye directed with a back-handed baton. He flipped his right hand up, and a baton went sailing for the ceiling.

He had the orchestra hit the concert "A" pitch, then he made them sing it. And he topped off this bit by having the entire audience do the same thing.

The music you might call dramatic.

"I'm sure the percussionist utterly destroyed a perfectly good set of kettledrums.

Charles Munch opened the concert with a superb rendition of the resounding "Rakocy March" by Berlioz from "The Damnation of Faust."

In an interview earlier Kaye said he will do a motion picture this summer, "Five Pieces of Marie," with Sophia Loren.

"Yes, of course I know my last movie was bad," Kaye went on. "The Metropolitan Opera gives bad performances. Munch gives bad performances. So I hope my next one will be better".

Kaye said he got into this stunt of leading top-flight orchestras for the benefit of their pension funds, "because I like music."

"Then, too, everybody wants to lead a band. Do you know anybody who doesn't want to lead a band?

"I only know eight or 11 pieces. I learn it by hearing.

DANNY KAYE
. . . He Enjoyed It

I can't say to the boys, 'Go back to the third bar before number 81, where you have a triplet.' I can't tell them. I can sing it to them.

"First time I did this, I played the Trish Trosh polka and Stars and Stripes Forever.

"The baton in your hand gives you a sense of neurotic power.

"I started out with 'Stars and Stripes,' and Eugene Ormandy said, 'Perhaps, maestro, that's a leetle too fast in tempo?

"I said, 'Mind your own business.'

"And when I play, there is no coughing and no sneezing. I chase them out of the auditorium. Oh, yes, I've dismissed musicians, too. Once I ended up with nobody but the first violin and the kettledrum.

"I think of myself basically as an entertainer. I wanted to be a doctor. I became what I am because people have to become what they have to become."

He spoke in most serious terms of his documentaries stressing the achievements of the United Nations children's fund.

BACH, MOZART SECTION ENDS

5008 at Sunday Event; 6 Programs Draw Total of 31,354

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The Mozart week-end of three concerts came to an end Sunday afternoon with 5408 persons on hand to hear a well-varied melodious and not-too-exacting program.

[illegible] Denied From Mass

[illegible] only novelty was the [illegible] Davidde Penitente [illegible] Kyrie and Gloria with an Italian text. As [illegible] which went quite [illegible] through its four movements [illegible] Piano Concerto in D Min. [illegible] Seymour Lipkin and the above [illegible] and Susan Ross [illegible] which had been [illegible] der his direction.

Plays With Delicacy

[illegible] concerto and [illegible] he played with delicacy and charm, also with a deal of virtuosity. The exquisite romance was cleanly and quite free from undue sentimentality. The audience reaction was prolonged and well deserved.

The cantata was written as the result of a commission to provide a benefit for the benefit of musicians' widows in Vienna. Time may have been short, but Mozart does from his Mass in C Minor, transforming a mass into a cantata by the simple expedient of adapting the music of the kyrie and gloria to an Italian text. Then in order to pacify his first soprano and tenor, he wrote two new and ornate arias for them.

The sopranos were Ginetta Labianca and Gloria Ciricillo and the tenor was Howard Fried. The three singers were adequate, but hardly distinguished.

Choir Excels

As in last week's performance of Bach's Magnificat it was also the Tanglewood Choir which provided the excitement. It is a good choir well-trained and quite responsive to its conductor, Hugh Ross. It has a particularly fine male section and the singing came through admirably.

Statistics available here estimate the six concerts for the two week ends drew a total of 31,354 persons. The Mozart concerts were plagued by bad weather but they drew 16,170 persons, somewhat fewer than the 19,370 of last season.

SPRINGFIELD - UNION

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUL 15 196[illegible]

MOZART WORKS PLAYED FOR 3491 IN TANGLEWOOD

Crowd Ignores Weather; Series Continues Tonight, Tomorrow

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX—In spite of the damp and misty evening, the lure of Mozart's music drew an estimated 3491 persons to the Tanglewood Music Shed Friday night for the first of three concerts devoted to his works. Dr. Charles Munch will direct all three concerts.

Choice Program

Friday he offered a choice program which opened with the Symphony in C Major, No. 36, and concluded with the Symphony in G Minor, No. 40. Between these symphonies were two exquisite works, the Serenade for Winds and the Adagio and Fugue for Strings.

The opening "Line" symphony started in a subdued manner and really didn't get off the ground until the second movement and it was not until the finale that it livened up to any great degree.

The audience was cordial in its applause, but held its full measure of approval for the Serenade in C Minor for Eight Winds. The work calls for oboes, clarinets, horns and bassoons, two of each in eight distinct parts. It was a splendid performance, rich in texture, wonderfully clear and sparkling with color.

Significant Offering

Called by the composer Nacht Musique, it lacks the atmosphere of conviviality or the many strung out movements which were highly favored in those days, but it remains a significant offering whether or not it was first appreciated.

The Adagio and Fugue in C Minor for Strings is proof of Mozart's contrapuntal abilities, which heretofore had been best achieved in his church masses. It shows clearly that Mozart could assume with ease and acquit himself handsomely within the prescribed bounds. It held the attention of the audience and won hearty applause. One hears it less often than other works.

The G Minor Symphony, composed in Vienna, is cast in a pervasive mood and style. It is a strong, incisive work, which attains its strength through deft and subtle means rather than through massive means.

Finely Proportioned

Dr. Munch has made known his understanding and affection for this music several times at Tanglewood and Friday night he offered a finely proportioned performance, rich in inner strength and detail. The audience reaction was warm and left one looking forward to the programs to come.

Tonight's program will include Concerto for Bassoon in B Flat Major, Concerto for Flute in G Major and Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat. Sunday afternoon the featured work will be David Enitente, a contata for three solo singers, chorus and orchestra. Also on the program will be E Symphony in A Major, No. 29, and the Piano Concerto in D Minor with Seymour Lipkin as soloist.

, TUESDAY, JULY 18, 1961

Seldom Played Works Of Outstanding Composer Heard At Tanglewood

The second weekend of the Berkshire, played by the Chamber Orchestra of the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Munch, was devoted to instrumental and choral works of Mozart. A total attendance of 16,150 braved much inclement weather to hear a favorite composer in seldom played works.

Friday evening's concert included two symphonies. The "Linz," K425 in which Mozart uses tympani with evocative restraint, was gracious and true in performance and direction. The Serenade in C minor, K388, for wind instruments, is a beautifully sonorous octet, but the melodies were not always clear, although the projection was technically perfect. A spirited and sometimes hurried reading of the G minor symphony, K550, in contrast to the almost overly slow Adagio and Fugue for strings, closed the concert.

Cold and a heavy rain should have the spirits of musicians and listeners on Saturday evening. But the first movement of the opening Bassoon Concerto in B flat major, K191 brought on a burst of "bravos" from the orchestra members for the superb artistry of the soloist Sherman Walt. This set the tone for the evening, audience applauding after every movement of this and the flute concerto in G major K313, as brilliantly produced by Doriot Anthony Dwyer. The Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, K297b, with four first-desk players, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Gino Cioffi, clarinet, Sherman Walt, bassoon and James Stagliano, horn, received the same acclaim from a vastly appreciative audience. To a few, the evening, while not lacking in virtuousity, seemed uninspired and a little tiring.

Another symphony, in A major, K201, bespeaking the youth and inventiveness of the composer, started Sunday afternoon's program. Flowing melodies and playful runs, with a pert minuet and a lively finale were enunciated with gentle grace and attentive interpretation. Seymour Lipkin, a sensitive pianist, well-known to the audience, gave a good performance of the D minor concerto, K466. The second movement was especially felicitous, in the interplay between soloist and orchestra. The accompaniment seemed a bit distraught at times, the winds overpowering although this could be in the writing, Mozart tending to use more than his contemporaries. The strings were as usual liquid and "calando." Uncertainty in the tempi, which one expects to be strict in Mozart, with some cloudiness in the pianist's technique, marred an otherwise enjoyable performance.

Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral music, conducted the latter half of the program with his usual absorbed and agitated style. The carefully trained but diction blurred Tanglewood Choir joined the chamber orchestra and portative organ in a moving and unusual cantata, "Davidde Penitente," K469, adapted by Mozart from his C minor Mass for a pension fund concert in Vienna. With an Italian text replacing the Latin, it is oddly religious in feeling, except for two demonstrative arias for soprano and tenor. Solos were handled with marked flexibility and ease by two sopranos with totally different but pleasing timbres Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo. A substitute for William Lewis was operatic tenor Howard Freed from New York, accurate and mellow voiced, with excellent diction. Full of ingenous canonic display, trills and rippling runs, interval jumps and beautiful melodies, it is a fascinating review of interweaving and unison treatment for voices and instruments, though a bit monotonous in some sections.

This weekend the 101-piece Boston Symphony will be heard in an interestingly varied program with Isaac Stern and Adele Addison, soloist. —M.deB. B

OBSCURED TEXT

98

BOSTON SYMPHONY BENEFIT SHOW

Danny Kaye Thrills 6,000, Drives Musicians Nuts

By DICK BANKS
Observer Arts Editor

TANGLEWOOD, Mass. — "I don't know about you — and I couldn't care less — but I'm having the time of my life."

So said comedian Danny Kaye to 6,000 jamming Tanglewood's superb music shed Thursday night for a Kaye-conducted concert for the benefit of the Boston Symphony Orchestra pension fund.

In a way, it was a sin and a shame what he did with those magnificent virtuoso musicians. Up went his hands, and they all stood up. Down, and they seated themselves halfway up — and they sort of half squatted.

"Ve vill now play d'polka from Max Strauss, written in 1861," Kaye would say. Then when the woodwinds got poetic, he would gambol in a circle around the podium.

Or: "Now ve vill play a leetle Tscaikowsky something . . . You know dot 'Nutcracker Suite?' Vell, we're not going to do it."

Kaye's done these pension fund shows around the world from Dallas, Texas, to Israel.

He came on stage with a whole sheaf of batons and dealt them out amongst the first chair players. He signaled for a tone and got it, then broke off two inches of his baton and got a softer tone. Two inches more — still more gentle — until he had no baton and no sound at all.

He started off with the handshaking bit, kept getting deeper and deeper into the 104 piece orchestra until he got to lady flutist Doriot Dwyer. Quiet understandable, he kissed her.

Kaye directed with a back-handed baton. He flipped his right hand up, and a baton went sailing for the ceiling.

He had the orchestra hit the concert "A" pitch, then he made them sing it. And he topped off this bit by having the entire audience do the same thing.

The music you might call dramatic.

"I'm sure the percussionist utterly destroyed a perfectly good set of kettledrums.

Charles Munch opened the concert with a superb rendition of the resounding "Rakocy March" by Berlioz from "The Damnation of Faust."

In an interview earlier Kaye said he will do a motion picture this summer, "Five Pieces of Marie," with Sophia Loren.

"Yes, of course I know my last movie was bad," Kaye went on. "The Metropolitan Opera gives bad performances. Munch gives bad performances. So I hope my next one will be better".

Kaye said he got into this stunt of leading top-flight orchestras for the benefit of their pension funds, "because I like music."

"Then, too, everybody wants to lead a band. Do you know anybody who doesn't want to lead a band?

"I only know eight or 11 pieces. I learn it by hearing.

DANNY KAYE
. . . He Enjoyed It

I can't say to the boys, 'Go back to the third bar before number 81, where you have a triplet,' I can't tell them. I can sing it to them.

"First time I did this, I played the Trish Trosh polka and Stars and Stripes Forever.

"The baton in your hand gives you a sense of neurotic power.

"I started out with 'Stars and Stripes,' and Eugene Ormandy said, 'Perhaps, maestro, that's a leetle too fast in tempo?

"I said, 'Mind your own business.'

"And when I play, there is no coughing and no sneezing. I chase them out of the auditorium. Oh, yes, I've dismissed musicians, too. Once I ended up with nobody but the first violin and the kettledrum.

"I think of myself basically as an entertainer. I wanted to be a doctor. I became what I am because people have to become what they have to become."

He spoke in most serious terms of his documentaries stressing the achievements of the United Nations children's fund.

BACH, MOZART SECTION ENDS

5008 at Sunday Event; 6 Programs Draw Total of 31,354

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — The Mozart week end of three concerts came to an end Sunday afternoon with 5000 persons on hand to hear a diversified, melodious and not very exciting program.

Revised From Mass

The only novelty was the cantata Davidde Penitente which Mozart [illegible] in C to [illegible] its kyrie and gloria with an Italian text. As far as this listener was concerned [illegible] have been unnecessary.

The concert [illegible] a bright, [illegible] work which wended its way quite charmingly through its four movements. The Piano Concerto in D Minor with Seymour Lipkin as soloist and the above [illegible] cantata.

Mr. [illegible] conducted the symphony [illegible] and Hugh Ross directed the [illegible] in using the [illegible] Choir which had been [illegible] under his direction.

Plays With Delicacy

Mr. Lipkin was playing a concerto tailor-made for him. He played with delicacy and charm; also with a deal of virtuosity. The exquisite romance was cleancut and quite free from undue sentimentality. The audience reaction was enthusiastic and well deserved.

The cantata was written as the result of a commission to provide a cantata for the benefit of musicians' widows in Vienna. Time may have been short, but Mozart drew from his Mass in C Minor, transforming a mass into a cantata by the simple expedient of adapting the music of the kyrie and gloria to an Italian text. Then in order to pacify his first soprano and tenor, he wrote two new and ornate arias for them.

The sopranos were Ginetta Lubianca and Gloria Ciricillo and the tenor was Howard Fried. The three singers were adequate, but hardly distinguished.

Choir Exciting

As in last week's performance of Bach's Magnificant, it was again the Tanglewood Choir which provided the excitement. It is a good choir, well balanced and quick to respond to its conductor, Hugh Ross. It has a particularly firm male section and the singing came through admirably.

Statistics available here estimate the six concerts for the two week ends drew a total of 31,354 persons. The Mozart concerts were plagued by bad weather, but they drew 16,170 persons, somewhat fewer than the 19,310 of last season.

SPRINGFIELD - UNION

Union (m)
SPRINGFIELD, Mass.
Circ. 82,263

JUL 15 19[illegible]

MOZART WORKS PLAYED FOR 3491 IN TANGLEWOOD

Crowd Ignores Weather; Series Continues Tonight, Tomorrow

By WILLARD M. CLARK

LENOX — In spite of the damp and misty evening, the lure of Mozart's music drew an estimated 3491 persons to the Tanglewood Music Shed Friday night for the first of three concerts devoted to his works. Dr. Charles Munch will direct all three concerts.

Choice Program

Friday he offered a choice program which opened with the Symphony in C Major, No. 36, and concluded with the Symphony in G Minor, No. 40. Between these symphonies were two exquisite works, the Serenade for Winds and the Adagio and Fugue for Strings.

The opening "Line" symphony started in a subdued manner and really didn't get off the ground until the second movement and it was not until the finale that it livened up to any great degree.

The audience was cordial in its applause, but held its full measure of approval for the Serenade in C Minor for Eight Winds. The work calls for oboes, clarinets, horns and bassoons, two of each in eight distinct parts. It was a splendid performance rich in texture, wonderfully clear and sparkling with color.

Significant Offering

Called by the composer Nacht Musique, it lacks the atmosphere of conviviality or the many strung out movements which were highly favored in those days, but it remains a significant offering whether or not it was first appreciated.

The Adagio and Fugue in C Minor for Strings is proof of Mozart's contrapuntal abilities, which heretofore had been best achieved in his church masses. It shows clearly that Mozart could assume with ease and acquit himself handsomely within the prescribed bounds. It held the attention of the audience and won hearty applause. One hears it less often than other works.

The G Minor Symphony, composed in Vienna, is cast in a pervasive mood and style. It is a strong, incisive work, which attains its strength through deft and subtle means rather than through massive means.

Finely Proportioned

Dr. Munch has made known his understanding and affection for this music several times at Tanglewood and Friday night he offered a finely proportioned performance, rich in inner strength and detail. The audience reaction was warm and left one looking forward to the programs to come.

Tonight's program will include Concerto for Bassoon in B Flat Major, Concerto for Flute in G Major and Sinfonia Concertante in E Flat. Sunday afternoon the featured work will be David Enitente, a contata for three solo singers, chorus and orchestra. Also on the program will be E Symphony in A Major, No. 29, and the Piano Concerto in D Minor with Seymour Lipkin as soloist.

TUESDAY, JULY 18, 1961

Seldom Played Works Of Outstanding Composer Heard At Tanglewood

The second weekend of the Berkshire, played by the Chamber Orchestra of the Boston Symphony conducted by Charles Munch, was devoted to instrumental and choral works of Mozart. A total attendance of 16,150 braved much inclement weather to hear a favorite composer in seldom played works.

Friday evening's concert included two symphonies. The "Linz," K425 in which Mozart uses tympani with evocative restraint, was gracious and true in performance and direction. The Serenade in C minor, K388, for wind instruments, is a beautifully sonorous octet, but the melodies were not always clear, although the projection was technically perfect. A spirited and sometimes hurried reading of the G minor symphony, K550, in contrast to the almost overly slow Adagio and Fugue for strings, closed the concert.

Cold and a heavy rain should have the spirits of musicians and listeners on Saturday evening. But the first movement of the opening Bassoon Concerto in B flat major, K191 brought on a burst of "bravos" from the orchestra members for the superb artistry of the soloist Sherman Walt. This set the tone for the evening, audience applauding after every movement of this and the flute concerto in G major K313, as brilliantly produced by Doriot Anthony Dwyer. The Sinfonia Concertante in E flat, K297b, with four first-desk players, Ralph Gomberg, oboe, Gino Cioffi, clarinet, Sherman Walt, bassoon and James Stagliano, horn, received the same acclaim from a vastly appreciative audience. To a few, the evening, while not lacking in virtuousity, seemed uninspired and a little tiring.

Another symphony, in A major, K201, bespeaking the youth and inventiveness of the composer, started Sunday afternoon's program. Flowing melodies and playful runs, with a pert minuet and a lively finale were enunciated with gentle grace and attentive interpretation. Seymour Lipkin, a sensitive pianist, well-known to the audience, gave a good performance of the D minor concerto, K466. The second movement was especially felicitous, in the interplay between soloist and orchestra. The accompaniment seemed a bit distraught at times, the winds overpowering although this could be in the writing, Mozart tending to use more than his contemporaries. The strings were as usual liquid and "calando." Uncertainty in the tempi, which one expects to be strict in Mozart, with some cloudiness in the pianist's technique, marred an otherwise enjoyable performance.

Hugh Ross, head of the Berkshire Music Center's choral music, conducted the latter half of the program with his usual absorbed and agitated style. The carefully trained but diction blurred Tanglewood Choir joined the chamber orchestra and portative organ in a moving and unusual cantata, "Davidde Penitente," K469, adapted by Mozart from his C minor Mass for a pension fund concert in Vienna. With an Italian text replacing the Latin, it is oddly religious in feeling, except for two demonstrative arias for soprano and tenor. Solos were handled with marked flexibility and ease by two sopranos with totally different but pleasing timbres, Ginetta La Bianca and Gloria Ciricillo. A substitute for William Lewis was operatic tenor Howard Freed from New York, accurate and mellow voiced, with excellent diction. Full of ingenous canonic display, trills and rippling runs, interval jumps and beautiful melodies, it is a fascinating review of interweaving and unison treatment for voices and instruments, though a bit monotonous in some sections.

This weekend the 104-piece Boston Symphony will be heard in an interestingly varied program, with Isaac Stern and Adele Addison, soloist.

—M.deB. B.

Friday Evening, July 14, at 8:30

ARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

SYMPH MAJOR, "LINZ," NO. 35 (K. 425)

I. Adagio; Allegro spiritoso
Poco adagio
Menuetto
Presto

SEREN MINOR,
FOR ES, TWO CLARINETS, TWO HORNS,
AN SSOONS (K. 388)

I. Allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto in canone
IV. Allegro

Intermission

ADAGIO AND FUGUE FOR STRINGS (K. 546)

SYMPHONY IN G MINOR, NO. 40 (K. 550)

I. Molto allegro
II. Andante
III. Menuetto: Allegretto
IV. Allegro assai

Saturday Evening, July 15, at 8:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

CONCERTO FOR BASSOON, IN B-FLAT MAJOR (K. 191)

I. Allegro
II. Andante ma adagio
III. Rondo: Tempo di menuetto

Soloist: SHERMAN WALT

CONCERTO FOR FLUTE, IN G MAJOR (K. 313)

I. Allegro maestoso
II. Adagio non troppo
III. Rondeau: Tempo di menuetto

Soloist: DORIOT ANTHONY DWYER

Intermission

SINFONIA CONCERTANTE, IN E-FLAT (K. 297b)

I. Allegro
II. Adagio
III. Andantino con variazioni

Soloists

Oboe: RALPH GOMBERG
Clarinet: GINO CIOFFI
Bassoon: SHERMAN WALT
Horn: JAMES STAGLIANO

Sunday Afternoon, July 16, at 2:30

CHARLES MUNCH, Conductor

MOZART

SYMPHONY IN A MAJOR, NO. 29 (K. 201)

I. Allegro moderato
II. Andante
III. Minuet
IV. Finale: Allegro con spirito

PIANO CONCERTO IN D MINOR, NO. 20 (K. 466)

I. Allegro
II. Romance
III. Rondo: Allegro assai

Soloist: SEYMOUR LIPKIN

Intermission

CANTATA, "DAVIDDE PENITENTE" (K. 469)

I. Chorus: "Alzai le flebili voci"
II. Chorus: "Cantiam le glorie"
III. Aria: "Lungi le cure" (Soprano)
IV. Chorus: "Sii pur sempre"
V. Duet: "Sorgi, o Signore" (Two sopranos)
VI. Aria: "A te, fra tanti affanni" (Tenor)
VII. Chorus: "Se vuoi, puniscimi"
VIII. Aria: "Fra l'oscuro ombre" (Soprano)
IX. Trio: "Tutte le mie speranze"
X. Chorus: "Chi in Dio sol spera"

TANGLEWOOD CHOIR
HUGH ROSS, conducting

Soprano: GINETTA LA BIANCA Soprano: GLORIA CIRICILLO
Tenor: WILLIAM LEWIS

Mr. Lipkin uses the Steinway Piano

New England Newsclip Agency, Inc.
Box 2078, Boston 6 • RIchmond 2-4200
Journal
LAKEVILLE, Conn.
Weekly Independent
Circ. 2,498
JUL 20 1961

TANGLEWOOD JULY 14
By G. G. V.

Tanglewood on Friday evening was rather poorly attended, no doubt largely due to the fact that Danny Kaye had packed them in the night before. The Boston Symph , got back to the serious bus ss of making music in the fi t of three all Mozart programs.

Of the four works performed, the honors must go to the Symphony No. 40 in G Minor. Certainly one og the greatest Mozart works, the G Minor was given an immaculate yet stirring reading by Dr. Munch and his Orchestra.

The Serenade in C Minor gave eight members of the Orchestra's excellent woodwind choir a chance to show their wares. Messrs. Gomberg, Walt and company acquitted themselves admirably, but the thin texture of the music was hardly suited in the Shed. The Symphony in C Major, "Linz" and the Adagio and Fugue for Strings rounded out the program. The Fugue was given a particularly rousing performance.

We did a little seat hopping during this program to test acoustics in various parts of the Shed. It is no accident that the boxes are located where they are. If you can't afford a box, we suggest seats toward the center either just in front of or ust behind the boxes

TANGLEWOOD CONCERT, JULY 15
By E. G. B.

The Mozart program was lively and charming, touching a more serious vein only at times.

The concert began with the Concerto for the Bassoon in B-flat major (K. 191) with Sherman Walt as the soloist. Every facet of the instrument is called upon in this work, and Mr. Walt handled the difficulties with grace and seeming ease.

Mrs. Doriot Anthony Dwyer, justified her eminent reputation as a flutist in the Concerto for flute in G major (K. 313). Her technical command of phrasing, ornaments and runs was a reliable background for her imagination and artistic subtleties.. At the finish of her inttrpretation, as well as that of Mr. Walt, the members of the orchestra uttered a "bravo" as though with one spontaneous voice.

In a work of greater breadth, the Sinfonia Concertante in B-flat for Oboe, Clarinet, Horn and Bassoon (K. 297 b), Sherman Walt was again the bassoonist: the oboe was played by Ralph Gomberg; the clarinet by Gino Cioffi; and the horn by James Stagliano. Especially gratifying were the musical conversation between the various solo instruments, and the understanding with which the contrasting moods of the three movements were portrayed.

TANGLEWOOD, JULY 16
by J. W. H.

